When Boswell asked what would be the situation of man in the future estate, Dr. Johnson replied, "Why, sir, the happiness of the unembodied spirit will consist in a consciousness of the favor of God, in the contemplation of truth, and in the possession of felicitating ideas." Boswell inquired whether we should see our friends again and Johnson replied, "Yes, sir; but you must consider, that when we are become perfectly rational, many of our friendships will be cut off. Many friendships are formed by a community of sensual pleasures; all these will be cut off. We form friendship with bad men, because they have agreeable qualities, and they can be useful to us; but, after death, they can no longer be of use to us. We form many friendship by mistake, imagine people to be different from what they are. After death we shall see every one in a true light."

The narrowness and selfishness of man shows itself in his beliefs respecting those who are to enjoy the favor of God in the next world. The savage chief expects to have slaves in the next life as he has had in this. Some of the ancient Jews could discover no place in their paradise for Gentiles. And there have been persons known as Christians who were firmly convinced that men and women of pure life and noble achievements would be sent to hell because they could not pronounce the shibboleths of the church. Some of our hardness of heart has been the result of inherited opinions which attribute to faith a magical rather than a spiritual power. False opinions account for the cruel deeds of many generous spirits.

The seer of Patmos saw a great company about the throne of God and in the company were representatives of every nation, tribe, and people. The friend of man will look forward joyfully to the meeting of peoples from all times and all places. Your member of "exclusive" clubs and societies will not like heaven unless he changes his notions radically. Heaven seems to be very democratic. There is just one king over all in the New Jerusalem; all who enter there are his servants. Accident of birth will not put one above another.

"Out of great tribulation." Yes, there it is in the Bible, and it is in human experience. The prize that is worth having costs much. You can vegetate and have the pleasure of an animal, but you cannot have the happiness of a Christian if you choose to avoid painful duty. The first disciples of Jesus were informed of the price they would pay for their salvation. They meet the conditions. The full benefits of the faith they defended can be appropriated only by those who possess their spirit of service. There is much evil left in the world; it cannot be put away by cowards. The brave get their foretaste of heaven while they endure for the sake of the truth that is not yet understood by the majority of men.—[Midweek Service, June 5, Rev. 7:9-17.] S. J.

The Four Factors of Missions

From the early and simple terms in which the missionary problem could be stated in the first days of its emergence it has become an increasingly complicated and extensive enterprise. At first it was only necessary that men and women enjoying the advantages of the Christian faith in the western world should be fired with the zeal to journey to the non-Christian lands and there proclaim the story of Christ. This was a comparatively simple plan. It involved very little machinery, and was almost wholly individualistic in its conception and results.

In those days the church as a whole had no share in missionary effort. It was only now and then that choice and elect spirits were given a vision of the world-wide field and their personal opportunity. But all this has changed in the past half century of missionary work. Today there is a far-stretching chain of mission stations reaching quite around the world. Practically every denomination in Christendom is attempting to interpret the gospel beyond the frontier of its own home lands. Missionary societies have become an administrative necessity. The first simple telling of the gospel story has grown to a highly organized expression of Christian life in terms of preaching, teaching, healing, industrial education, social uplift and political reconstruction. And thus in every way the problem is more impressive and its factors more numerous.

The factors most outstanding are four in number: the supporting churches, the non-Christian peoples, the missionary on the field, and the administrative boards or secretaries. To be sure there are many other factors related to the enterprise, but these are of chief importance, and some study of their characteristics and relationships seems worth while.

The first of these is the church at home. This represents a wide variety of attitude toward the theme of missions. At first it was wholly indifferent and even hostile. The sentiment prevailed that it was no part of the church's business to concern itself with interests beyond its own borders. The commission of Jesus to his disciples was understood to relate only to apostolic effort, and not to any continuance of that function. Insofar as there was any awareness concerning the world of non-Christian peoples there was either total indifference or a fatalistic conviction that God in his own time and way would deal with those outside the church. Little interest was felt in those sporadic efforts at missionary tasks which had been made from time to time through Christian history. Insofar as the efforts of the great missionaries like Patrick, Columba, Augustine and Boniface had laid the foundations for western civilization, they were taken as a part of the divine program. But few were interested in what might take place in those lands which were lumped together under the general name of "heathen," "pagan," or "infidel."

Today of course this indifference is giving way to concern. Enough has been done in the non-Christian lands to awaken the churches to a recognition of a wholly new and impressive opportunity. A considerable body of Christians now have some intelligent conception of the missionary obligation. The stories of those who have labored in the distant lands have come back to them borne either by returned missionaries themselves or in the literature on the subject. Missionary secretaries have labored unceasingly to instruct the churches regarding their privilege and their obligation. The facts of missions are discovered to be among the most interesting of narratives for Christian edification and the stimulation of missionary zeal. The active co-operation of many of the churches in such intimacies as the living-link plan offers has provided a fresh and telling means of general education.

There is in the average life of the church a certain awareness of the fact that missions constitute a necessary part of the regular program of church activities. But most people are neither particularly informed nor definitely interested in the work. There is, to be sure, in most churches which manifest any true concern for the cause, a little group of men and women whose hearts the Lord has touched. They are at pains to learn the facts of missionary advance. They hold themselves as the stewards of God's gifts for the support of the work. They are an inspiration to the minister and the missionaries.

But there is a second class of only partially awakened sleepers. These are the people who rather expect a missionary offering to be taken now and then in the church, but are mildly surprised that so much should be said upon the subject, and are not without hope that this business of missions, whatever it is, may soon be finished and cease to disturb the placid and uneventful life of the churches. These are the dull-witted, heavy, Philistine-like members of the church whose arousal to intelligent participation in the greatest task of the age is the burden of the minister and the missionary secretary.

Then thirdly there must also be named the company of those who through crass ignorance or through gnarled and crooked perversion of ideas are committed to an attitude of hostility to foreign missionary work. These are the people who consider it a waste of money and effort to carry the Christian message to the non-Christian lands. They are sure that it would be better to leave all such in the happy enjoyment of whatever faith they possess, which is probably much better fitted to minister to their needs than any importation from the west. Or they profess themselves to be interested in home missions, but opposed to efforts in remoter regions. Or they insist that they believe in missionary work but disapprove of the agencies by which it is carried on, such as societies, secretaries and the like. Or perhaps they have heard that the cost of missionary administration is a considerable part of the money given, and they are easily persuaded that this false and foolish assertion is true. All these classes make up the host of practical opponents of missionary work, whose awakening and inspiration to participation is the task of the church.

But another phase of the problem relating to the home churches and affecting each one of these three classes is the feeling of proprietorship and authority which the Christians of the home lands assume toward the missionaries and the peoples whom they are sent to reach. It is taken for granted that if the third class of church members just mentioned, those who are opposed to missionary work as it is now conducted, were induced to participate in the enterprise they would insist that the missionaries supported by their money should preach the specific type of doctrine to which they have become accustomed. Of the second class just named, those who are in a measure aroused to interest in missions, the same thing is true. They are not particularly interested in the subject, but what interest they have takes usually the form of zeal for the propagation of their special interpretation of Christianity, however limited and biased that may be. It is the fault of this only partially aroused mass of church members that so frequently the missionaries find themselves hampered by the necessity of propagating denominationalism rather than the gospel.

It is from the first class, the informed, open-minded and enthusiastic supporters of missionary work, that the man upon the field receives the true inspirations for his holy work. Christians of this class have wisdom sufficient to understand that the gospel as the missionary must present it to his waiting people cannot take the specific form in which it has expressed itself in the homeland. It is the marvel of our holy faith that, with a continuous and abiding emphasis upon the redemptive life of Jesus as the interpreter of God and of the highest human excellence, Christianity has spoken in a great variety of ways adapted to the local circumstances and varying conditions of different races and various periods of time. It must ever be so. The Christianity of the mission lands will not put emphasis upon the doctrines and usages which are familiar and convincing in some sections of the church. The gospel in the new lands must take its own way under the guidance of the spirit of God.

It is therefore clear that those who lead in missionary work, both in the church at large and in the local congregation, have before them the unceasing two-fold task of converting the hostile and indifferent people to an intelligent, convinced and enthusiastic support of missionary work, and of showing them that they must not expect the mission churches planted by their efforts to be mere repetitions of the churches at home, but rather fresh expressions of the Christian life under the different conditions prevailing in the far lands. Such arousal of the church to missionary effort, and such deepening of faith in the forward-moving purposes of God is the task of the present time.

Of the other factors implicit in the missionary problem, the missionary, the native convert, and the missionary secretary we shall speak at a later time.

The Suppressed Portion

Rev. J. H. Gilliland, who died a month ago, was one of the most influential preachers of the Disciples in Illinois. He was a rare soul. It is said that he possessed one of the best private libraries of any minister in the state. He was abreast of the best thought of today. His ministry was of a very practical sort, fed, however, by the springs of true learning. He did not obtrude his erudition, but utilized it for the practical ends of the kingdom of God.

His twenty-five years' ministry in Bloomington made him, next to ex-Vice President A. E. Stevenson, the first citizen of that city. His taking off was very sad and very dramatic. He had just finished writing a paper reviewing the past twenty five years of religious life in Bloomington. He was to read this paper at the seventy-fifth anniversary of the First Christian Church that evening.

Before the time arrived he was stricken with paralysis, from which he died in a few days. His paper was read by another pastor to a grief-stricken throng. It treated of religious progress in the local community in three aspects—the material or external, the intellectual and the spiritual.

It is an intensely interesting survey. The Christian Standard of Cincinnati published Mr. Gilliland's paper in two installments. The Standard apologizes for the length of the paper, but says "the installment would not break without loss to the reader, so we use it all."

But the Standard does not use it all. Bloomington people who heard the paper read noted a significant omission. The portion treating of the change that has come over religious thought in the past twenty-five years did not appear.

To many this was the most interesting portion of Mr. Gilliland's splendid address. It interpreted local history as "an arc of that larger circumference" that encircles the entire world. "No church or community," said Mr. Gilliland, "can live to itself, alone; all feel the pulsing tides of scientific, philosophic and religious thought and life. Our problem, therefore, is but a part of the greater problem of our country; hence, our discussion must now take a wider range, for we are in the current of the world's movement." Mr. Gilliland then goes on to state the changes in religious thought as follows:

1. There has been a change of emphasis from the deity of Jesus to his personal worth; from the metaphysical Christ to the historical Christ. Questions like the following are being asked anew and new answers, at least in part, are being given—Was Jesus sinless? Did Jesus work miracles? Did he forgive sins? Did he die for us? Did he rise from the dead? Did he really live at all?
2. There has been a change of emphasis from the death of Jesus to the teaching and example of Jesus.
3. There has been a change of emphasis from the supernatural to the natural; from the authority of the Bible to the Christian consciousness.
4. The modern view of Miracle; Virgin Birth; Resurrection. [See Thompson, Gordon, Warschauer, Soltau, Lobstein, Lake, etc., etc.]
5. There has been a change of emphasis from philosophical to practical materialism; from Christianity to ethics, and humanitarianism; from the message of salvation from sin to a social message; from the conversion of the individual to the redemption of society; from doctrine to life and character.

Taking up the science of criticism as applied to the Bible, Mr. Gilliland set down the constructive results as follows:

1. The very general acceptance of the critical method, which has made the Bible a new book.
2. The composite character of certain books of the Bible.
3. The legendary, mythical, poetical, and human elements in the Bible.
4. The purpose of the Bible better understood.
5. The recovery of the real humanity of the Biblical personages. Abraham, David, Isaac, Jacob, all real human beings. God used them; He has always been shut up to the use of human beings for the execution of his purposes.
6. The belief that the authority of the Bible has not been impaired by the passing of the verbal theory of inspiration and inerrency.
7. That revelation is progressive.
8. That God has been teaching the world by incarnations, and principles, and not by specific rules.
9. That the Bible is not of equal value in all its parts; that it is not a "level Bible."
10. That direct access to the Bible, and the exercise of private judgment in its interpretation, is the right and duty of every individual. That nothing should stand between the spirit of inquiry and the word of God.

Upon these changes in emphasis Mr. Gilliland does not pronounce his own opinion save as his opinion is evidently implied in the form of statement he adopts. It seems strange that the Christian Standard, in professing to do honor to this man of God should suppress this most vital part of his address while professing to print it all. Even in the local community the portion of the address receiving especially full treatment and comment in the daily press was not the portion that dealt with local history but that portion which revealed the rich, progressive and still growing mind of its lamented author.

Editorial Table Talk

A Cumulative Ministry

The twenty-five years of preaching in Chicago by Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus affords a singularly happy illustration of the cumulative power of a continued pastorate. Dr. Gunsaulus is being toasted and honored just now within the modest limits which his reticence will allow. Spokesmen on behalf of various religious and uplift organizations are telling him and the public just what his message and personality have meant to the higher life of the city. In the course of his ministry here he has been called many times to other fields but has steadfastly lived up to the conviction that his life would count for its utmost by being invested permanently in a single community. He is now seeing the fruits of this conviction. In recent years his power has been augmented as if by compound interest. He preaches to possibly the largest regular congregation in America, Chicago's great Auditorium being regularly filled each Sunday morning. A profound spiritual experience came to Dr. Gunsaulus over ten years ago during a serious illness, an experience which lent certitude to his faith far beyond his previous insight. He came forth from that illness to his pulpit and preached on the text, "The time is short." Disclaiming any intention to compete with teachers of literature or science or philosophy, he announced that henceforth he meant to proclaim only the great gospel of Christ in respect to which, as a minister, he was an expert. The time was too short for him to be diverted into any other field, however enticing. As pastor of Central Church his message has been one of great religious power. He is beloved by his fellow ministers of all denominations toward whom he has ever played the role of friend and brother.

Collier's Weekly and the Preachers

The series of articles on some successful preachers written by our good friend P. C. Macfarlane and appearing now in Collier's Weekly, is causing considerable comment. The Continent thinks the interpreter made a sorry failure in his account of Dr. Jowett. It especially resents the sketches accompanying Mr. Macfarlane's write-up. "So far from being portraits, the sketches are not even passable cartoons," says the Continent. This criticism is obviously correct, but it hardly justifies our usually clear-thinking contemporary in reflecting upon Mr. Macfarlane's part of the work. The sketches were not his. The interpretation was his. To portray such a preacher as Dr. Jowett is no easy task and we believe that Mr. Macfarlane has given a very good picture of that conspicuous but reticent man. It is hardly likely that Mr. Macfarlane ever thought of trying "to explain great preachers by analysis of their literary felicity and oratorical charm". He knows ministers and their secrets better than to fall into that snare. There is no doubt that he found Dr. Jowett extraordinarily uncommunicative about his own work and was obliged to fill in the barest outlines. The series thus far has been illuminating. It has lacked the usual gush of sentiment while being not unsympathetic. It is a dubious compliment with which the article on Dr. George H. Combs of Kansas City is headed: "A Preacher Who Was Capitalized." Indeed the whole portrait of Dr. Combs makes the discerning observer wonder whether it was intended as an idealization or a caricature. Whatever judgment one pronounces upon it there is no question that it is the work of a very deft hand.

—The Mission Travel Study Class of the University of Chicago, conducted by Prof. Willett, will leave for the Orient from San Francisco early in September to visit the important mission fields of Japan, China, the Philippines, Korea, Burmah, India, Arabia, Egypt, Palestine, the Turkish provinces of Asia Minor, Greece and Italy, completing its formal classwork in Rome about May 15. In the course of its work the different kinds of missionary activity, educational, evangelistic, medical, industrial, will be studied, as well as the representative stations of the different religious organizations conducting missionary work. The final circular of information is now obtainable by request to Prof. Willett at the University of Chicago. The course promises to be the most important piece of missionary educational work ever attempted.

—One of the episodes that make one pinch oneself to make sure he is really living in the twentieth century is reported in connection with the recent Men and Religion Conservation Congress in New York. It was planned to have a great and impressive union communion service, but such a protest came up from certain Baptist churches in various parts of the country that the plan was abandoned and a union prayer meeting substituted. It was no doubt discreet for those in charge to abandon the communion service, but the incident surely reveals the amazing persistence of provincial and sectarian ideas in the midst of twentieth century light. What conceivable reason can our good Baptist friends give in this late day for their unwillingness to sit at the Lord's table with men who are just as truly Christians as themselves?

—The loose and inaccurate way in which the new editor of the Christian Evangelist reported the utterances of the Kansas City Congress compelled Prof. F. O. Norton to ask space in that paper to correct the statement that he had declared the text of the great commission unauthentic. Dr. Norton's paper was dealing with the clause "baptizing them into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit." This clause he showed was in all likelihood an interpolation. But against the authenticity of the commission itself Dr. Norton did not suggest that any evidence was existent. Our St. Louis contemporary published Dr. Norton's correction. But it has not published the correction of its misstatement of the thesis of C. C. Morrison's paper at the same Congress. In all fairness we believe it should do so.

—The summer quarter at the University of Chicago begins Monday, June 17. An especially attractive program of courses and open lectures has been provided. Several men of prominence from other institutions in Europe and America will be in residence as lecturers and instructors. Indications point to an unusually large attendance of Disciples for one or both of the terms of the summer quarter. Instruction will be given as usual in the Disciples Divinity House. Circulars of information may be obtained on application.

—Where was there spoken a finer sentiment on "Mother's Day" than this by Rev. George B. Van Arsdall of Central Church, Denver? "I am the meaning of my mother. More significant than all she did for me is the gift of herself. It is not that she gave me to the world, but that she gave herself to me. She dared and trusted the meaning of her very being to me—to what I might be. Such faith is the lot only of mothers."

—The Disciples who are accustomed to spend their summers at Pentwater, Mich., are looking forward eagerly to the vacation period. The attractiveness of this spot on the eastern shore of Lake Michigan, within convenient distance of Chicago, has induced an increasing number of those desiring a pleasant and quiet summer home to turn in that direction. A considerable number of Chicago Disciples now have summer homes in Campbell Park.

—Floyd Price Willett, son of Dr. Herbert L. Willett, sailed on Thursday of last week on the Pennsylvania of the Hamburg-American Line for a journey through Europe, Palestine and Egypt, occupying most of the summer. He is conducting a group of travelers who are visiting the important places on this route under the direction of the Temple Tours of Boston.

Sonnet for Memorial Day

By Ida Withers Harrison.

Along the paths of an old garden grows
Full many a homely flower, the iris blue
Vies with the corn flower in its heavenly hue;
Each morn the poppies' polished blooms unclose,
Proud peonies look on lowly pinks, the rose
With fragrant breath the lily seeks to woo.
These blossoms brave no kindly shelter knew
From winter's chill, but met its storms and snows
With patient front;—and so, of them I send
To deck the graves of those who knew no dread
Of pain, or want, or danger—whose sole end
Their country's honor. Tenderly o'erspread
Brave blossoms o'er brave men!—and with them blend
Deathless remembrance of the dauntless dead.

Browning and the Ascent of Man

Poet of the Half-Awakened Soul.

BY JOHN R. SLATER.

IN THIS CENTENNIAL year of Robert Browning, many will bring their garlands of remembrance, wreaths of veneration, crowns of honor. Some will offer the flowers of the fleeting spring, rich with the fragrance of eternity; but best of all is the tribute of the voiceless gratitude of the world. This is the treasure of the humble; this is the incense of the poor, the benedictus of the aged, the trembling thankfulness of all the weak—humble whom he has raised, poor whom he has guided into a rich inheritance, aged to whom he has brought serenity and victory, weak whom he has lifted out of the depths. They know, but they cannot speak; they have learned to look up when the true light passes by. In Robert Browning they have beheld the glory of the imperfect. In his lyrics of the insurgent soul they have heard hope singing before the dawn; and there is no dark mystery of our night where the glimmer of his precedent torch has not revealed "a dim splendor ever on before."

Poet of the Inarticulate Majority.

Because Browning has chosen to be a pathfinder rather than a camp-follower, because he has loved the half-lights as well as the high-lights, he is the poet of the inarticulate majority. He is the poet of the unattained, the prophet of aspiration, the singer of a divine unrest. For the glory of the imperfect is a noble discontent, and it is to this that he leads us all. In every generation there is sure to be heard by the keen ears of youth some voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord. Two generations ago it was the voice of Carlyle and Emerson. Later it was the voice of Matthew Arnold and George Eliot. And one called "Renounce," and another called "Resist" and another "Reveal the hidden soul."

For thirty years and more it has been Robert Browning who has been the prophet of ambitious youth—not so widely as he might have been, should have been, if the world had not quibbled so obstinately over the mere form of his message. But still in many a life the summons of Browning has sounded when it should—in the morning. "Our low life was the level's and the night's—he's for the morning."

Other poets might picture the freshness of a morning like Pippa's golden dawn; others might have drawn the silver grayness of Andrea del Sarto's twilight mood; but Browning is also the poet of noon, the prophet of the day. He is a lover of the sun. He will be about when men are at their common business. The actual interests him not less than the ideal. Dreamers he loves; doers he loves not less. And it is because any eulogy of Browning takes naturally the form of exalting his idealism that we may well pause to note his realism.

We have often been told of his vision of human destiny, of his witness to the truths of religion. These are the goals of man, his ultimate goals toward which the individual strives or not as he may choose, but toward which the race moves irresistibly. But how about the journey? How about those who stumble by the way? To how many is life a spiral stairway climbing a windowless tower to an unsuspected vision of God? To how many is it a groping for the heart of things, a searching for the one grand secret, a drawing inward to the central truth—the centripetal life? To how many is it a whirling away from all centers whatsoever, a centrifugal career which moves ever in tangents away from God, but cannot escape him because he is so strong? These are the things that our poet pondered. Give man time and he will arrive—of that he is sure; but what strange and fascinating adventures of the soul there may be on the way.

There are in Browning few fully awakened souls—few, that is to say, who fully awake before the closing hours of life. Paracelsus and Pompilia and the Pope and many others read the great secret by the light of closing day. Few, very few, read it earlier. The half-awakened soul then, is Browning's chosen province. He has it by right of discovery and exploration. He has mapped and charted it even to the shifting variation of the compass on each meridian. No journey is too hard that leads into a life, with its well-worn trails of habit and tradition and its rare footprints leading into the hills. He drinks at the secret springs of alien hearts; their gods he cannot worship but at their shrines he can always kneel. He may despise their deeds but he can rarely despise them. They are too interesting.

The Idealism of the Realist.

Fra Lippo Lippi, the scapegrace painter, arrested as a midnight roysterer and parleying with his captors, is not a very heroic figure; he may be in fact both contemptible and absurd in spite of his ingenious defence of realism. Nevertheless he yields surprising results in the sphere of soul, where his experience is supposed to be meager.

> "Suppose I've made her eyes all right and blue
> Can't I take breath and try to add life's flash,
> And then add soul and heighten them threefold!
> Or say there's beauty with no soul at all
> (I never saw it—put the case the same)
> If you get simple beauty and naught else
> You get about the best thing God invents:
> That's somewhat, and you'll find the soul you have missed
> Within yourself, when you return him thanks."

How is that for the libertine lay-brother? Imperfect sure enough, and not without a touch of glory. Does Browning, or does he not, love his Lippos better than his Angelicos? It is hardly fair to ask the question, because he for the most part left the Angelicos to those who were ready and able enough to draw them with unsullied halos. A lily that is only one in a garden of lilies, white amidst whiteness, pure in the sun, is beauty indeed; but a solitary lily with its roots in mud and its petals shining through ugliness is more beautiful for two reasons: because it is rare and because it is victorious. Pompilia and Imogen are such flowers. In them the glory of the imperfect takes another form. In the former case we have the imperfect, warring life of men and women conceived and born in iniquity, with the glory shining through. In this case we have the perfect soul in the midst of an imperfect world and the glory shining all around on every side.

In many ways does this interest of Browning in the transitional stages of human progress show itself. In Paracelsus, for example, we have the glory of the imperfect shown in the scholar's thirst for boundless knowledge, a noble thirst but limited; while in the figure of Aprile the poet we get the imperfection of emotion not sufficiently guided by knowledge. In Andrea del Sarto we get the paralyzed will, the self-limited ideal, limiting the perfect technique.

> "In this world, who can do a thing, will not;
> And who would do it, cannot, I perceive:
> Yet the will's somewhat—somewhat, too, the power,
> And thus we half-men struggle."

The Meaning of Human Limitations.

Andrea knows well enough that "a man's reach should exceed his grasp, or what's a heaven for?" And the very fact that he knows it and cannot forget it keeps him from utter degradation. Man is tormented by the infinite. Time and change forbid him to seize again the vanished moment, which alone he can know to have been truly good. What then? Shall it be the melancholy of Swinburne and all the poets who sentimentalize over a faded rose? This is Browning's reply:

> "Nothing can be as it has been before;
> Better so call it, only not the same.
> To draw one beauty into our heart's core,
> And keep it changeless; such our claim,
> So answered—never more!
>
> Simple? Why this is the old woe o' the world;
> Tune, to whose rise and fall we live and die,
> Rise with it, then! Rejoice that man is hurled
> From change to change unceasingly,
> His soul's wings never furled!"

Here, then, is the imperfect under the limitation of time—the impossibility of seizing the moment; and its glory consists in rising on the crest of the wave of change instead of sinking in its trough.

Well we know the other and transcendent glory of which Abt Vogler sings:

> "All we have willed or hoped or dreamed of good shall exist;
> Not its semblance, but itself; no beauty, nor good, nor power
> Whose voice has gone forth but each survives for the melodist,
> When eternity affirms the conception of an hour."

This is the familiar side of Browning's philosophy of failure, of compensation in the perfect life beyond. It has been so often emphasized that there is no need for me to dwell upon it. The point I make is that the glory of the imperfect is not all in the future. Part of the glory of earth is the hope of heaven. The other glory of earth is the struggle of earth. "Why stay we on the earth except to grow?" asks Cleon the poet.

Not a Praiser of Idle Dreams.

The broken arc yields vision of the perfect round, it also yields motion. Both are good; each depends on the other, the ideal on the act, the act on the ideal. This interaction must be emphasized because Browning has occasionally been misinterpreted at this point. Strange as it may seem to those who really know him, he has been called the apologist of failure, the eulogist of the incompetent, the sentimental praiser of idle dreams. Says Rabbi ben Ezra:

"All I could never be,
All men ignored in me—
This I was worth to God whose wheel the pitcher shaped."

"This I was worth to God"—not to the world, not to myself. Here is surely no ground for cheating one's vanity with the idle dream that our aspirations without effort amount to anything in this world or the next. It is no easy doctrine but a great and terrible challenge that sets up as the measure of a man his highest ideals—his measure, his standard, his judgment day; not his credit but his debit, not his assets but his liabilities. Surely the self-deceived who rest in a fool's paradise of sentimentalism shall be delivered at such a judgment into an everlasting bankruptcy. No, it is the glory of the imperfect according to Browning not that the imperfect will be counted by a kindly judge as something other than what it is, but that we shall be judged by our striving rather than by our succeeding in a world where real success is rarely possible.

The philosophy of life under such a view of it amounts simply to this: Live in the sight of perfection; but live also according to your limitations and make them serve your ends. This formula will cover the problem of realism and idealism in art; the problem of soul and body in human conduct; the problem of intellectual limitations in human thought; the problem of revealed and unrevealed truth in religion; the problem of the ideal and the practicable in the Christian religion under current forms; the problem of insurgent democracy in the Italy of Browning's day; and a dozen other situations that might be named. For every one a poem should be read to get the special answer to the general question, How shall we put the most into life and get the most out of it, being such creatures as we are?

Life as the Soul in Action.

What Browning aims at is in the noblest sense a modus vivendi. The more abundant life is his ideal; life lived fully and richly and as clearly as clouds permit. With him faith is a march in the dark with the road unknown. The difference between him and other poets of doubt is that he does not particularly care whether there is a road or not. If there is not he will make one. Anything to get ahead; anything to shorten the halts and delays of the journey.

It is in this splendid restlessness that he complements that other great spiritual leader of our time, Matthew Arnold. With both, life is a great adventure; but for Arnold it is stern and dangerous and often sad and sometimes beset by a mocking self-despair; while for Browning it is full of the robust joys of conquest and discovery, bright with the lure of the future, resonant with bugle and drum. And both are equally for the forward march. Both will abolish frontiers. Both would bring the invisible full into play.

The Transcending of Doubt.

As for doubt, it is to be transcended rather than conquered. Doubt is the largest element in our imperfection, larger than our weakness or our ignorance. The glory of it is that it keeps us going toward the sun behind the cloud, and while we are going the cloud breaks into rifts when we least expect it. Even Bishop Blougram, the worldly ecclesiastic, cannot keep his doubts untouched by faith:

"How can we guard our unbelief?
Make it bear fruit to us? the problem here.
Just when we are safest there's a sunset touch,
A fancy from a flower-bell, some one's death,
A chorus-ending from Euripides—
And that's enough for fifty hopes and fears,
As old and new at once as nature's self.
To rap and knock and enter in our soul."

Yes, there's a sunset touch! When we are sunk in commonplace and sordidness somehow God's wireless flashes warnings to our souls to prove we are meant to be like him. A sunset touch; a touch of the starlit midnight of the northern seas, with the decks awash, and the last boat casting off! "He helped a lady's maid over the rail, waved his hand, smiled, stepped aside and then waited." Who? Oh, only Major Butt, or Colonel Astor, or some other holiday knight of a decadent age! And the band played hymns, so they say. What was the hymn—"Nearer My God to Thee" or the tune called "Autumn"? Accounts differ; but it is generally agreed that they played hymns, and that they were rapidly getting nearer to God.

A World Full of the Divine.

The imperfect sailed on the "Titanic" and glory somehow emerged. It is easy for us to see it there because the stage-setting was impressive. In the commonplace drama of every day Robert Browning saw the wonderful and ever-new divine revealing itself. "There is clay everywhere," exclaims the young sculptor in "Pippa Passes," and out of the clay comes not miriness but a dream. The aspiration of Caponsacchi is:

"To have to do with nothing but the true,
The good, the eternal—and these not alone
In the main current of the general life
But small experiences of every day,
Concerns of the particular hearth and home;
To learn not only by a comet's rush
But a rose's birth; not by the grandeur, God,
But the comfort, Christ."

But enough has been said to make it clear why the dramatic imagination of Browning dwelt on the individual. For it is by individual variations that the species ascends. Human destiny is the power of an endless life. Human history is, therefore, the history of the momentum of soul overcoming the inertia of matter. At every stage it fascinates Browning, not with the detached interest of the mere psychologist but with the eager wonder of the seeker for souls. The good, the bad, and the great majority neither good nor bad, interest him whenever he can see them in the critical moment when life's meaning is registered. If the equation yields a negative quantity he regrets it, of course, but he is far from desponding, because the general sum of things is constantly expanding toward infinity.

Browning's Men and Women.

After the hundred years our poet of the human struggle stands beholding the works of his hands. He stands between two great stairways leading up into the light. On the one, behold his motley company of besotted artists and wrinkled philosophers, his generous thieves and his mocking agnostics. These are on the lower steps, and some would fain turn back but they cannot; partly because he motions them on; partly because they are curious to see what is upstairs; chiefly in some cases, if it must be confessed, because they are pushed upward by the throng below.

Higher up are purer faces and more enlightened eyes; more of soul and less of body. High, very high up, with their faces all aglow, stand three: Pompilia, with the warrior priest beside her and Pope Innocent gazing benevolently down upon them and upon all the climbing multitude below. The Rabbi is there, Paracelsus too, with Aprile hand in hand. Abt Vogler and Master Hugues move dreamily on. Cleon is there, talking at last with St. Paul. David with his harp is there, beside the great bowed figure of a ruined king. Balaustion finds herself in strange company, but Euripides is quite at home. The stately Alkestis leads a still groping Admetos by the hand. Pheidippides, the Marathon runner, is near the top. A girlish figure all in white stands a little apart in the shadow of the curving stairway. Can it be Evelyn Hope? She is with Pippa, and poor little Phene, the Greek model, is just below them.

All these and many, many more I see upon that vast stairway of the world, the great and the humble, the wise and the foolish, heroes and cowards, beautiful and ugly, spotless and defiled, but all climbing, climbing into life. There is no room for angels to ascend and descend upon this Jacob's ladder, it is so full of folks. And there he stands, their creator, casting a fond glance at the men and women of his dreams, but far more absorbed in the stairway across the room. For there are the men and women of to-day. It is the unnamed multitude of all that rise. It is the army of a true salvation, the company of those that are on the way to God. They stumble and turn back but they do not retreat. "How very hard it is to be a Christian." Those who seem to near the top and "look for crowns to fall, they find the tug's to come—that's all."

Upon this spectacle the poet gazes with serene approval. For here and there the people on the two stairways recognize each other and smile a welcome. Some unknown spies Pompilia and is straightway transfigured. Some worn old man reads in the rapt face of Ben Ezra something that brings him peace. And the poet loves to watch them all. Now and then he glances up at the blaze of light above, now and then through the open doors into the outer darkness, but chiefly at the rising columns of the dead and of the ever living.

Is he not still the captain of all brave souls? Wherever the feet of the young men are on the high ways, wherever timid hearts awake at the sound of the trumpet, wherever the watchmen wait eagerly for the morning, Browning is a welcome guest. He makes men capable of doing what they know well enough how to do. There is the literature of light and the literature of power. His is of both sorts. If he is to speak to us of the twentieth century he will surely utter his thought as he did long ago:

"Make new hopes shine through the flesh they fray,
New fears aggrandize the rags and tatters
To bring the invisible full into play."

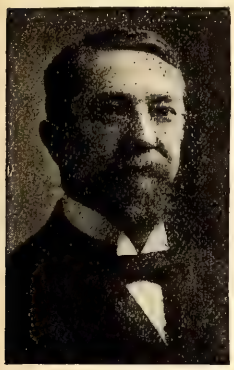
Or, perhaps, now that he is more familiar with heaven than with earth, he will put it in holier words: "If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit."

University of Rochester.

World's Convention at Zurich

Sunday-school Leaders to Meet in Historic City of the Alps

Earth's ends will meet at the World's Seventh Sunday-school Convention in Zurich, Switzerland, July 8-15, 1913. Two thousand delegates are expected to sail from America, with 500 delegates from Great Britain and hundreds of missionaries and others from all parts of the globe. It is believed that a higher point of vision of world reach and world conquest will be attained than anything the more than a century of the Sunday-school movement has recorded.



Dr. G. W. Bailey, President World's Sunday-School Association.

The World's Sunday-school Association, whose purpose has been declared to be "Sunday-school conquest of the world," is coöperative and interdenominational. Its administration is largely in the hands of a group of consecrated Christian laymen who believe the Sunday-school to be the most valuable asset of the Christian church. These men desire to increase the efficiency of the Sunday-school in all lands, and especially in those regions of the world most in need of help. Expert Sunday-school workers are sent, from time to time, to various parts of the globe, to mission fields, to present improved methods of Sunday-school work, including the most approved plans of organization, teacher training, etc. The world's association maintains headquarters in Chicago, and aims to survey the entire field committed to its care, in the interests of the largest possible service.

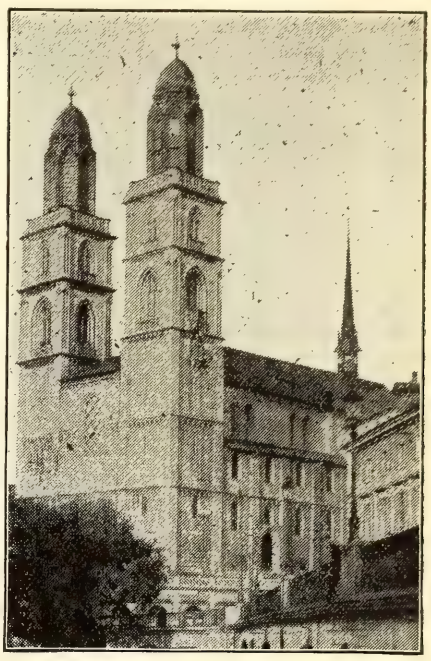
The president is Dr. Geo. W. Bailey, a leading Presbyterian layman of Philadelphia; and the chairman of the executive committee is Mr. E. K. Warren, a prominent Congregationalist layman of Three Oaks, Mich.

The conventions of the Association for conference and inspiration are world gatherings of great magnitude. The meeting in Zurich in 1913 will be the seventh in the list, counting London 1889 and 1898; St. Louis, 1893; Jerusalem, 1904; Rome, 1907; and Washington, 1910. These conventions were the outgrowth of the world's association, perhaps the greatest factor in the organized Sunday-school endeavor of modern times, and whose vision and work have been characterized to be "as big with eternity meanings as any that came to the Apostle John on the Isle of Patmos."

The call for the Zurich Convention inviting "All who are interested in Promoting the Kingdom of Jesus Christ Through the Sunday-schools," says: "At Washington it was unanimously decided to hold the next convention in Europe in 1913. After an exceptionally careful study of the situation, involving a visit to many continental countries by our first vice-president, W. N. Hartshorn, the City of Zurich, Switzerland, was unanimously chosen as the place for holding the World's Seventh Sunday-school Convention. In the selection of the convention city, we believe we have been guided by a wiser than human intelligence."

Zurich is the largest city in Switzerland; the population is 200,000; is charmingly located in the heart of Europe on the shores of the most beautiful of Swiss lakes, at the base of the snow-clad Alps; and is considered the capital of Swiss commerce and culture, the center of art, education and beauty. Bervenuto Cellini, the celebrated sculptor of 350 years ago, declared Zurich what it is conceded to be today, "an exquisite gem, worthy of all admiration."

It was the birthplace of Henry Pestalozzi, founder of the kindergarten system, who laid the foundations of the modern educational methods. In the city are located two of the highest educational institutions of Switzerland: The Federal Polytechnic, and the University of Zurich.



The Grossmunster, Zwingli's Church, Zurich.

As a center of religious history, Zurich appeals specially to pastors and other students of the Protestant Reformation, and to Sunday-school workers who may study with profit many things which relate to the vital concerns of the Sunday-school. Visitors will have unusual opportunity to study not only the life of Zwingli, but other great leaders of the Reformation on the scenes of their most heroic efforts in this interesting Swiss city.

Dr. Herbert A. Manchester, of Boston, in a scholarly article on the leaders of the Reformation who lived in Zurich, says: "They were mighty men of faith, and they waged a noble warfare; they won freedom both to worship God and freedom to study and to know the Word of God. If there had been no Reformation there would be no Sunday-school convention. There would be no great movement to make the Bible known, and many of the things that we hold dearest would be unpossessed. One of the principles for which the Reformation ever stood was the authority of the Bible. It appealed to that above all other wisdom, and it is most fitting that Sunday-schools should study, and it will be a revelation to the power of the Bible to review the history of the Reformation, by visiting the scenes made memorable by the brilliant defenses of the Bible by the early reformers."

Ulric Zwingli, who was destined to revolutionize his native land and become a leader in the Protestant Reformation whose beneficent results have been noted throughout the world, preached his first sermon, in Zurich, New Year's Day, 1519.

The lives of other great men of Zurich, men who walked in stately procession through the chapters of her religious history, may be studied with profit. Bullinger, Zwingli's successor; Lavater, the most brilliant mind Zurich has produced; Brettinger, who introduced singing in the churches of Zurich, founded the present school system and the public library; and Hess, who wrote the first scholarly life of Christ (in 1702) the forerunner of many lives of Christ in the nineteenth century. Miles Coverdale in 1535 printed in Zurich the first translation of the whole Bible printed in English.

The Tonhalle, Zurich, Switzerland, Meeting Place of World's Sunday-school Convention.

A splendid spirit of coöperation is manifest by representative men of the city, the state church and the free churches. The mayor of Zurich, Mr. Robert Billeter, will give an address of welcome.

The convention will be held in the Tonhalle, a stately edifice located in the midst of an attractive garden overlooking Lake Zurich. The main auditorium seats 2,500. The interior is artistically carved and beautifully decorated, and contains one of the largest and finest organs on the continent. There are three smaller halls, seating from 500 to 1,000 each in the Tonhalle, which are admirably adapted to departmental and national conferences. There are also several other halls that may be used for committee meetings. Mr. Hartshorn, who made a thorough inspection of the Tonhalle while he was in Zurich, says: "Never before has an international or world convention had provided for its use more elegant and convenient halls in the midst of such attractive surroundings."

Sunday-school specialists and missionaries from all parts of the world will participate in the program which is being arranged by the committee, of which Mr. E. K. Warren is chairman. While the convention will not formally open for over a year, it has already begun in the hearts and thoughts of hundreds of pastors, superintendents, teachers, and other leaders, and the possibilities of helpful fellowship enroute to the convention are being considered in every part of the Sunday-school world.

The Sower and the Tares

By Edgar White

The dignitary who was to address the old soldiers and the balance of us at the little cemetery of Danfield, was an hour late, because of trains that failed to connect, and I was wandering aimlessly about the flower-decked mounds. On many of them were tiny flags, indicating that the remains of some patriot were there awaiting the final reveille. I was casually reading a slab inscribed to the memory of Captain somebody, when an old gentleman, with gray moustache and imperial, and an armless sleeve, stepped beside me, and looking at the stone, remarked:

"That is for Captain Joseph Eastman. He was blind."

"You knew him?" I suggested, without interest.

"Well, there never was a braver man. We served together."

Observing my puzzled look, he explained:

"Of course, he was not always blind. The loss of his eyesight was both a misfortune and a blessing to him. Sounds odd? If you'll walk over to the bench by the big monument there, I'll tell you about it. Mabel Delmar was the most beautiful girl in Danfield. Martha Jetson was frankly admitted to be the homeliest. Mabel had admirers by the score. Martha had not one. Her mouth was large and her cheeks were entirely too red. She was too short and fat for anything like grace. Mabel was tall, slender, blue-eyed, and with small, regular features.

When Company A, of the Danfield Guards, went to war, every boy in blue left a girl behind him. Captain Joe Hampton, tall, lean-faced, quick-eyed, every inch a soldier, wore the colors of Mabel Delmar. In his knapsack was her photograph, and under it the words in her own hand: "Forever thine." Martha saw the boys go out, waved her handkerchief and wept with the other girls; but none thought of her as among the maidens who had been left behind.

Company A became a small but useful part of the great Army of the Potomac. It did its share in the hot, fierce work of the valley, the heights, the river crossings—everywhere that the nation was assailed. At the roll-call following each great battle, the responses were less and less. Mute guardsmen lay on the field of honor. Other men filled out the company's roster, and e'er the tide turned, the men of Danfield were in the minority. Captain Hampton, now a seasoned veteran, still commanded. Pinned tightly inside his soiled and ragged jacket was the blue emblem of the girl who was waiting for him across the mountains. He wrote to her regularly, and the answers came with the same precision.

The horror of Fredericksburg's bloody plain, the night surprise at Chancellorsville, the glorious victory of Gettysburg, the dark campaign in the Wilderness, the "mine," Spottsylvania—Captain Hampton saw them all, and with his comrades, was beginning to look for the dawn above the dark billows of war. The marching and fighting had made him stronger, and developed him into a perfect specimen of manhood.

Then came Cold Harbor, the saddest mistake of the campaign—of the whole war. The pitiful remnant of the Danfield Guards was there, its captain leading under the gloomy canopy, under which other captains, and still others and others, sought their way through death to the heart of the enemy. The air quivered with the detonation of mighty guns in front, and to the left and right. The enfiladed army swept across a field where no human troops could live. Black of face, red of eye, his blouse open at the throat, revealing the swarthy breast, with its cords of steel, the captain of the Guards staggered through the hell of bursting shells, of stifling smoke, and red death from muskets worked with appalling skill. The earth rocked under the tumult. A long, white blast flashed before his face, he stopped, groped uncertainly, and fell to the earth. Then the light of day went out forever, and all the world became a dark and dreary night.

When Mabel learned that her soldier had been brought home, and that he would never see her again, she took stock of the future. She was yet young, lovely, and could make her choice from the best. After a proper interval, she called to see the blind soldier. In a formal way, she bent and kissed him on the cheek. He impulsively reached up to take hold of her, but she stepped back. Then he understood what that kiss on the cheek meant, and he thought of another kiss that was given in the night when a trusted one had turned.

For a while, she sat there by his bedside, a proper distance away, ceremonious, saying such things as she might have said to any Danfield invalid on whom she was paying a duty call, and then arose.

"I hope you'll soon get well," she said.

"Thank you," he returned. "I think I shall."

She never called on him again. The seed of the sower was in the ground.

Hampton recovered his physical health. His parents had left him the farm, the operation of which he directed successfully. One day, while returning from town, walking in the highway, someone clutched his arm and jerked him hurriedly to the side of the road. a buggy, driven by some tipsy young men rushed by. Hampton appreciated his peril, and turned to thank his rescuer. He was surprised to find it to be Martha Jetson, the homely girl of Danfield.

"Blind men need looking after, Martha," he said. "They will take foolish risks."

"It wasn't your fault," she returned. "They should have looked out."

From that time he often stopped at Martha's little house on his way home. On such occasions, the homely girl would sing or read to him. He got so he took all his letters to her, and employed her to do such writing as he needed. The companionship for which he hungered was supplied by this plain girl whom he had hardly noticed in the days of his strong manhood, and he discovered in her a wealth of tenderness and sympathy which no one had suspected. She, too, had hungered for companionship and compassion, and the knowledge that she was appreciated by this blind man was the greatest happiness she had ever known. It was remarked by some, as a curious thing, that Martha seemed to grow prettier as she grew older.

Five years following the war, found Mabel the wife of George Eastman, a retired business man, wealthy, and well along in years. He had come to Danfield, purchased a large tract of land near town, made a park out of it, erected a handsome home on it, and then selected Mabel as its mistress. Three years later George Eastman, Jr., was born, and in that same year, Captain Joseph Hampton and Martha were married. To them a beautiful daughter came—a daughter with all the features of the mother softened and refined.

Young George became a strong, handsome boy, and young Martha grew into a graceful, attractive girl. She had her mother's kindly disposition, and was loved by everybody in Danfield. The two children were schoolmates in the village school, and then both went away to complete their education, young George to a military academy, and Martha to college. Mr. Eastman died while his son was at the academy.

Their school careers finished, George and Martha returned home, and resumed their school-days comradeship. Mrs. Hampton watched their growing intimacy with doubt. She knew that her husband did not understand the extent to which the two young people were becoming attached, and she did not know whether he would approve of the son of Mabel wedding his daughter. Hampton had never mentioned Mabel's name to her. But the wife knew all about his relations with Mabel, and why they were broken.

As for Mabel, her whole heart and ambition were with her handsome, manly young son. He discussed his career with his mother, as he did everything, and they agreed that he should be a lawyer. There was another thing he discussed with her, his love for Martha. A spasm of something she could not well define shot through Mabel at this avowal, but she offered no objection. She knew Martha as one of the sweetest and most lovable girls of the place, but she dreaded what the blind man might say to the proposed union. The tares were beginning to spring up.

When the Spanish-American war broke out, and George told his mother he had enrolled with the Danfield Volunteers, he was surprised at the vehemence with which she protested against his going out. He expected some objection, but her almost hysterical appeals to withdraw his name quite confounded him.

Mabel had her mind on another soldier who had gone to war, and of the sowing she had done. Now, that she had a son to worship, she believed in the power of God, and dreaded His day of vengeance.

George inherited his commercial father's decisiveness of character. He tried the best he could to console his mother, but his resolution to go out was not to be shaken. He had signed his name. To withdraw it would be dishonorable. He would take good care of himself, and had no doubt he would get back all right, but he didn't intend to run from bullets.

The Santiago campaign found George and his company in the zone swept by the firing from the block-houses and the Spanish ships. It was short work, but sharp and bloody while it lasted. Many a mother's idolized son lay that night with his face upturned to the Southern stars that the American flag might wave over the citadel. George fell near the breastworks, hard hit, but not fatally. When he was able to stand the journey, he was hastened home, under the care of attentive nurses. Mabel was at the train with a carriage and soft cushions.

After fondly embracing her son, the mother took one of the nurses to one side and anxiously whispered.

"What is the nature of the injury?"

"A rifle ball in the hip," replied the nurse. "But he will recover; never fear. He is doing well."

"I know—I know—but will it—will he—"

"Be lame!" returned the nurse gently. "Yes, he will—"

"Oh, my God!"

The mother turned and held her hands to her face. By an effort she recovered herself, and helped them to place George in the carriage.

"Don't you worry, dear," he said; "I'll soon get well under your good care."

The mother choked back a sob, and throwing an arm around his neck, drew his head to her.

She was thinking of the tares she had sown, now growing up all around her.

The returned soldier had not been at home many hours when Martha and her mother called. Mabel, who had been expecting the visit, met them at the gate, and explained that her son was very weak on account of the trip; that he was now in a semi-sleep, and wouldn't they please wait a few days, when he would be some better and glad to see them. Martha and her mother readily accepted the explanation, expressed their good wishes for George's early recovery, and returned home. Mabel did not tell her son that he had had visitors. She was thinking of another day in the long ago when a girl had called that very same way on a stricken soldier, had given him a cold kiss, and had left him forever. Since the tares had started to show their noxious leaves about her, she was beginning to think what that man must have suffered.

An expert surgeon from the city was sent for and he made a critical examination of George's wounded limb. Then he gave Mabel an exhaustive medical description of what it all meant. In short, her son would recover, would suffer no shortening of his days, but would be a hopeless cripple—a lame man—for life!

It was the handwriting on the wall! There could be no concealment now. Martha would have to know, and decide. Day by day, the invalid had called for her, and day by day Martha had waited expectantly for the message. George had now so far recovered that he was hobbling down to his meals, using a stout cane. His limp was pitifully pronounced.

One day she listened as she heard what seemed to be strange voices in the parlor, where George had been reclining on a sofa. With sickening apprehension, Mabel hastened through the corridor. The parlor door was partly opened and she stopped at the threshold unseen.

George was seated on the sofa and young Martha was standing beside him. Her cheeks were rosy and healthy and her eyes were bright.

"If you're feeling all right," said Martha, "suppose we walk out in the yard. It's more pleasant than in the house."

The mother would have cried out her protest, but all her faculties were paralyzed. Before her eyes was the picture of a girl who had looked stonily upon a wounded soldier, and had pierced him to the heart.

Martha held out her hand and assisted the white-faced invalid to his feet. He took a step or two, limping heavily upon his cane. With wild eyes, the mother scanned the face of the girl.

"Throw that old cane away," said Martha, placing her strong, young body by his side and looking up into his face with a sweet smile, "and lean on me. You've got to learn to, you know; and you might as well begin now."

The mother sank to the floor by the door, and buried her face in her hands. The reaper of compassion had come with his sickle, and had gathered up all the tares and cast them into the furnace.

The House of Broken Hopes

By a Writer for the Graphic.

I stood in a great dormitory, so dimly lighted that until a few minutes had passed my eyes were muffled by the darkness. I held my breath, struggling against a feeling of sickness. The moist warmth of many human bodies in a heated room closed about me, so that for a moment I felt a little faint. As my eyes pierced the veil of the dim twilight, I saw that I was in a long room, which was one side of a gallery built round an open shaft in a great hall. Below me were three other galleries, and at the bottom was the floor space of the building. On that floor, and in each of the galleries, ranged side by side, without an inch of space between them, was a large number of black wooden boxes looking like open coffins. And in each of these coffins lay a living man. I was in the dormitory of Medland Hall, Stepney, the only free lodging-house in London.

For a few minutes as I stood in the half darkness I heard only the strange sound of many sleeping men breathing heavily. It was like the noise of some great animal snoring in a field at night. Suddenly the slumbering silence was broken by a thin, hacking cough. Then, as if a signal had been given, a concourse of queer noises rose up at me. A man sneezed violently three times. Somebody's bronchial tubes began to play a piping melody, ending with a gasp. A convulsive shudder shook one of the coffins close to where I stood. A man began to snore with a trumpet nose.

A Quivering Sigh.

From the floor below them came up a long, quivering sigh, as though a soul had been released from the agony of the flesh. Strange, horrible, gobbling laughter, like the chuckle of witches, came from one of the wooden boxes, which heaved mirthfully in the gloom and then was still. Somebody was coughing himself to death. An awful restlessness stirred all these sleepers in the black coffins. Then, as though another signal had been given, silence settled upon them again, lasting until there was the whimper of some poor wretch crying in his sleep. An articulate voice—the first words I had heard—spoke in the darkness. "Oh, my God!" said the voice. A hoarse, rasping whisper seemed to answer the first speaker. It whispered above all those sleeping men the word "Hell!" Once more there was silence.

I walked along the rows of the wooden boxes and looked, with eyes that are still sore at the sight, at those sleeping figures.

Stark Misery.

Men have sung of the beauty of sleep, and I have seen its beauty; but here was the ugliness of sleep, the stark misery of unconscious men haunted by the bad dream of life. In those wooden coffins they lay huddled up in queer attitudes of uncomfortable weariness. One of them, turning restlessly, flung a naked arm over the side of his box. Another's head lolled outside his coffin. Some of them were half uncovered, and above their oil-cloth blankets their bodies were bare and gleamed white in the dimness. Some of them were sturdy men, with the big muscles of the field laborer. Others were so emaciated by long starvation that their skin was drawn tight over their ribs. They were living skeletons. As I looked down upon them in their narrow boxes I thought of the skin and bones I had once seen in a stone coffin dug up from the dead past. Yes, these men were alive. I could hear their breath wheezing and rasping up from their ribs. Underneath their heads lay their property, the rolled-up rags which when daylight creeps into the dormitories, they wil put on again. In those rags, tied up with bits of string, they will pad the hoof along the highways of the richest city in the world, wondering why other people have all the luck in the world, searching, like the Micawbers of misery for something to turn up.

Nothing Will Ever Turn Up.

I stared at the faces of these sleeping men, and I knew that for most of them nothing will ever turn up, except death or a policeman. I had seen those faces before, glaring with hunted eyes along the abandoned streets of night; pallid and bleareyed in the flickering gaslight under railway arches; dazed and despairing between two well-fed gaolers in a police-court dock; prowling about the dust-bins of a city at dawn; turned up to the blue sky from the scorched grass of a London park; looking up with a sudden start of terror as a bull's-eye lantern flashed upon them in a dark doorway; drawn up in ranks outside a casual ward, a doss-house, or a soup kitchen; fierce or pitiful before a board of guardians; hopeless outside a factory gate where "No Hands Wanted" killed another day of hope.

The Downward Road.

I knew these men. As I heard their breathing and their snoring, the ghosts of their past lives flocked about me and told me tales of misery. They were tales of drunken parents and ill-fed children, of vile homes in mean streets, of wretched wives dragging down these men to the vices of despair, of inherited instincts tempting men to sudden passion or to fatal weakness. There were tales of good workmen losing good jobs, through sickness, or a fit of temper, or nothing but ill luck, or one false step leading to a police court charge. There had been no second chance for them. Once in the mire they had no strength to crawl out again. These men had been broken on the wheel and thrown on the scrap heap. As they slept, dreaming or unconscious, the

(Continued on page 22.)

THE HIGH CALLING

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS."

Copyright 1911, George H. Doran Co.

CHAPTER VII.

"You see, Senator," said the Hon. Maxwell, "that the party is not agreed on these bills you are preparing. Take for example that bill, I understand you are the author of it, on public health. As we understand the matter, it is going to work great hardship on the retail dealer, and besides, pardon me, it is so full of fads and absurdities that it will make the party the laughing stock of the state. And there is that bill on public lands and investigating old entries. That will stir up an unnecessary lot of trouble and help to disrupt the party. You must remember, Senator, that while you call yourself independent in politics, you allowed your nomination to be made by the party, and you are one of us and have no right to split the party into factions. More than half these bills you are advocating in the News are of questionable value and all of them, it seems to us, are calculated to make enemies in our own ranks. The thing for you to do, it seems to us, is to stand pat. Wages are good and the people are generally contented. Prosperity is beginning to come back and it is poor policy to stir up matters. I've been through a lot of campaigns and I want to say to you, Senator, that I know the people pretty well, sir, and the people are beginning to feel sore over all this reform business. They are beginning to feel that they can't turn around or do a thing without someone claiming the right to pass a law telling 'em how to do it. The effect of the reform measures you are advocating will be to disrupt the party."

The Hon. Maxwell paused and his two friends nodded assent after his somewhat lengthy talk. Paul's first impulse was to get tremendously mad and tell the visitors to get out, as politely as it could be done in a hurry. Then his sense of humor and of right proportion came to save him.

Maxwell he knew fairly well to be one of the most narrow-minded type of politicians, honest enough so far as that went, but without a shred of real patriotism or any faintest glimmer of sense on matters of public welfare. His little soul revolved in a jerky and contracted orbit about the party. This orbit never took him out of sight of the "party." Under good men and bad in office, under defeat and under victory, under the varying vicissitudes of fortune that his meagre political life had known for forty years, he had never gone back on the party. He had held one or two minor offices in the course of his career and was deeply grateful to the party for recognizing his right to an office. But when the party ignored him and put in some other creature, Maxwell never complained. To change the figure from the satellite and the orbit to a living organism, Maxwell was like Bill Syke's dog; no matter how the party treated him, he licked its hand just the same and showed the same loyalty and affection for the party when it kicked him down stairs as when it fed him at the pie counter. In forty years Maxwell had not learned a new idea or grown an inch in political stature. He was a party man and was proud of it. His one great virtue was that he was honest. He voted regularly for all sorts of thieves and boodlers and scoundrels nominated by the party, but he had in some marvelous fashion known only to his Maker, kept himself clear of all personal bribery and political trickery.

All this Paul knew quite well, and he was not able to despise Maxwell on account of his one redeeming factor. But the slavery that had tied Maxwell body and soul all his life was so foreign to Paul's whole makeup that he could not understand it and he had to repress his natural desire to explode over Maxwell's talk. But he did manage to say quite calmly:

"Mr. Maxwell, I appreciate your plea for the party, but I don't see things as you do. While I accepted the nomination, as you say, at the hands of the party, I distinctly outlined my views at the time and made no pledges that bind me either to the party or to measures, if these measures conflict with my own sense of what is for the best interests of the people. I think the people who elected me understand that I am free to act in that way. And, frankly, that is the way I intend to act. There may be some mistakes in some of these bills. It would be strange if there wasn't. But I believe they are for the good of all the people or, of course, I would not urge them."

Maxwell shook his head doubtfully.

"This reform business has gone too far. My friends here know that. Judge Livingston can tell you how the people out his way feel."

"Yes, sir," said Livingston in a dry, machine-made manner; "Senator, the people in our district are growing restive over the reform business. They want to be let alone. We have too many laws now, laws that interfere with our personal liberty." (The judge grew eloquent.) "Laws that attempt to dictate to us what we shall eat and drink and where to go, and I for one say for my district that these continual efforts to legislate on personal matters will not only disrupt the party, but lead to a counter revolution that will surprise the so-called reform bosses of the state."

Paul looked at the judge steadily. If he could have looked at him with an X-ray eye he would have seen a small sample whisky bottle in the judge's coat pocket, one of the adjuncts of "personal liberty" the judge was defending. Not seeing that, Paul did size up the man for about what he was and answered him accordingly.

"As to legislation that affects personal liberty, these bills you say you have come to see me about deprive no man of any liberty he has a right to possess. But I am ready to confess they do deprive some persons of the liberty to steal the people's land and water power. They do aim to take away the liberty of certain food makers to poison the people, and of certain other food sellers to give the people short weight. Some of these acts are also designed to take from certain persons the liberty to demoralize youth, as for example the measure a number of us hope to get through the legislature regulating bill boards and indecent posters. For years a little company of men has insulted all the people with these public monstrosities. I am frank to say I have no scruples in depriving them of the liberty to do so any more. And as to dictating to the people what they should eat and drink, don't you think the saloon and patent medicine men and the adulterated food makers and the dirty food sellers have been dictating to the people centuries enough, to give us some excuse for depriving them of their long monopoly to deal out sickness and death at wholesale? When you talk of 'personal liberty' it is well to remember the fact that no man has any right to a personal liberty which results in evil to his neighbor or to society.'

The judge turned very red, and was on the point of replying. But Maxwell broke in.

"This is aside from the question, Senator. The main fact you ignore. The main fact is that what you are planning to do will split the party."

Paul lost his temper.

"Let it split, then! I don't worship the party! What is the party by the side of the people?"

Maxwell looked shocked. I think he really felt as he looked. Paul could not have said anything more treasonable.

"Senator, you, will regret those words. Mark me. You will regret it. One of the things I was going to say was——" Maxwell lowered his voice and looked around. "I was going to say that you have it in your power so to shape your own future that the governorship would come to you in two years, or the national senatorship. The party would be willing to reward a man like you——"

Paul exploded again. "Governorship! Senatorship!" he almost shouted while Maxwell looked apprehensively at the open door.

"Do you think I care about them as reward for political slavery?' ' Then he suddenly realized how useless it was to let a man like Maxwell understand.

"Gentlemen," he said good-naturedly, "excuse me. The occasion does not call for excitement. I understand your purpose in coming to see me. It will save your time and mine to say that I shall not change my plans to press these bills even if the result is to disrupt the party. And you are as free to say that as I expect to be in my editorial this evening."

Maxwell nervously interrupted.

"You are committing political suicide, Mr. Douglas."

"That's better than hari kari, eh?" said Douglas with a smile.

Maxwell stared. He had heard of hari kari perhaps, but did not know whether it was the name of a new type of airship or a health food. He went away with his two friends, firmly convinced, however, that the editor of the News was on the road to political destruction.

After Paul had written his editorial for the News he was not certain himself that he had not really done what Maxwell predicted. He had certainly never spoken so plainly and even bluntly on the issues of the campaign, and he knew perfectly well that the Maxwell political type dominated thousands of voters, men who resent any act in politics which threatens to disarrange the smooth running of the machine. In politics it is almost as easy to raise a howl against reform as it is to raise a cry for it. There are thousands of party men in this republic who as long as they can make their bread and butter out of machine politics don't care what price the people have to pay for their bread and butter.

When Paul went home that night he did what he had done for twenty-one years. The minute he was in the hall, he said, "Esther?" with an interrogation point after the name.

Esther was upstairs in the upper hall. She replied in a subdued tone, "Yes, here I am," and Paul ran up three steps at a time to greet her. Marriage may be a failure with some people, but it certainly was not with Paul and Esther who had remained lovers all these years, simply because they had made their married life a joyful, sacred and deeply Christian compact, a genuine union of heart, head and soul. Paul wrote love letters to his wife, sent her flowers and in general courted her in much the same fashion Esther had known when Paul was a struggling reporter. And Esther kept herself bonny for his sake, entered in whole-souled fashion into his ambitions and was not afraid to debate politics with him and keep womanly. One great secret of their joyful, married life, was found in the perfect frankness each showed the other, and also in the blessed fact that each of them had almost a perfect physical constitution, not frayed nor tortured with nerves and sensitiveness.

The minute Paul saw Esther he knew some unusual event had occurred. Paul was quick to detect the presence of any new thing because Esther's expressive face could never hide a great secret. Paul was on the point of asking what it was when his eye was attracted by a commotion going on behind the door of a cedar linen closet at the end of the hall. There was a sudden wrenching and tearing of cloth, then a great Jovian sized laugh, the door burst open and a huge figure stepped out into the hall where Esther stood laughing hard.

"George Randall!" cried Paul, and the next minute he and his old pupil were in each other's arms.

"As big as ever," cried Paul, as he stepped back to look at his unexpected visitor.

"Bigger," said George, grinning. "Mrs. Douglas, if you'll get a needle and thread I'll mend my coat. You see, I just stepped in there to surprise you a minute and I backed up against a hook and it caught right under my collar and tore half of it off. What makes you make your closets so small?"

While Paul was overwhelming Randall with greetings and questions, and Mrs. Douglas was sewing on the medical missionary's coat collar, Randall was explaining his unexpected appearance in Milton.

"You see I've been transferred to Feu Chou Fu, the new hospital there. I've been called home by the board to help raise funds for the plant. I left so sudden I didn't have time to write you and I wasn't certain either that I would come here. But my father! Do you know about what's happened to him?"

"No," said Paul. "I knew he'd been travelling with your mother for her health, but I haven't seen either of them for two years since they went abroad the last time."

"My father is going to be a Christian! He and mother never took kindly to my going as a medical missionary, but last year they stopped to see me at Shaowu I didn't know it at the time, but father was tremendously impressed with the missionary situation. Then over at Ponasang, father was taken ill, and what should happen to him providentially but he had to go to our hospital there. Dr. Wilder fixed up his body and what is more he reached his soul, and father wrote me just before I left Feu Chou Fu that he had found, the light after living in the dark all his life, and at the close of his letter said he and mother were on their way home to Milton and wanting to know how he could best serve the cause of Christ. I hardly slept all the way over to Vancouver for the joy of lying awake thinking of it. A cable from father reached me this morning from San Francisco, saying they would be at Milton next week. They sailed by way of Auckland and Honolulu. So I thought I might as well come and board with Mrs. Douglas and you until they arrived. You can open a can of something, and that will do for me, and I can hang myself up in the closet if you are short of beds.

"But won't father and I have a jolly time when he gets back? I won't ask him for more than half a million to start with to put into the surgical department. Poor old pater! He has never had any fun with his old money. I'm going to help him have the time of his life now spending it for Christ and the Kingdom. My! But won't we have a jolly lot of fun with that money now?"

That evening at the supper table George Randall simply fascinated the whole company with his stories of Chinese life and the victories of the gospel. Esther invited in her brothers, Walter and Louis. Felix Bauer had never seen anyone like Randall, and he sat the whole evening absorbed, listening to the recital of as marvellous a story of conquest as any to be found in the chapters of Caesar, Frederick the Great or Napoleon. And what a conquest! Not war and pillage and pitiful man's ambition for power, but conquest of that great territory called the human heart.

"My, but I wish you folks could have seen what I saw there months ago at Shantung; five thousand people stood up in a public square in front of one of the old temples, no one knows how old, and threw thousands of idols into a heap on the ground and burned them, and then sang in their own language to our tune, 'Anywhere With Jesus I Can Safely Go.' For five days, much of the time through a pouring rain, more than five thousand people met to listen to the gospel of light and life and healing. We rigged up a sort of field hospital, using part of the temple for a clinic, and Walter and Rice and Colfax and I cut off legs and arms and heads of no end of diseased folks and operated for compound cataract and every known and unknown disease, and the Lord was with us. We didn't lose a case, and you never saw or heard such sights in prosaic money-loving America. Why, those people are born again! That whole district is simply awake out of several centuries' sleep. I have the consent of the high powers in that district to negotiate over here for a lot of machinery and stuff for agricultural purposes. And those people are putting up a church at Angfu that will beat any church in Milton for work and worship. Think of that, beloved! In a country that has stood still for twenty-five centuries, worshipping the past and bowing down to nineteen thousand filthy gods, you can hear 'My Faith Looks Up to Thee' and 'All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name' sung by congregations so big that they have to meet out doors. And yet I understand from reading one or two high-browed religious magazines printed in this country that the old gospel has lost its power and that the world must have a new brand of religion of the hermetically canned variety suited to the elevated culture and new thought of the times. But the old gospel seems to do the work in China all right. At any rate it makes real men and women out of animals, and changes sinners into saints. I don't know any test of a religion bigger than that, do you?"

Paul asked one or two questions and started Randall off on an account of a missionary tour into the unexplored parts of west China. Then he spoke of the contemptuous criticism offered by a certain type of globe trotters he had met on his way home. In telling about this his great form seemed to tower up and his great head with its mild blue eyes looked sternly gigantic with righteous indignation.

"There was a bunch of naval officers coming over on the Zarina with us, and some of them were quite fine fellows. But there was one officer who used to get out with the author of a book on the Eastern situation, and they would spend hours criticising the missionaries and laying the blame on them for all the Boxer troubles and the hatred of foreigners generally.

"I didn't know until later on that the reason for the distinquished author's feelings against missionaries was because some of his own personal immoralities had been rebuked by a missionary in Pao Ting Fu and he had been mad ever since.

"His friend, the naval officer (and I was thankful he didn't belong to our country), took great pride in describing his conquests with the fair sex in the different quarters of the globe where he had been on his war vessel.

"Think of that, dearly beloved! Here was a man who when he touched at a foreign port had no more exact knowledge of the work done by missionaries than the knowledge he gained from going to a high-priced ball or champagne supper held a few feet from the shore, expressing the most emphatic opinions concerning the value of a foreign missionary's life and influence! He changed his costume several times a day. And I learned from a midshipman who volunteered the information that the following comprises the regular and compulsory list of clothes a naval officer in this Christian age is obliged to possess and solemnly wear on the proper occasions. Want to hear it?"

Louis, who had of late been begging his father to let him try for a place in a naval academy, eagerly said, "Yes, tell us, Mr. Randall."

"Well, here is a list of this human being's clothes that he must, according to the naval rules, lug around the world with him:

"A double-breasted frock coat of dark navy blue cloth with a sleeve stripe of gold lace a quarter of an inch wide and a gold star, which indicates the line officer. 'Service coat of blue cloth and with the same sleeve lace and a gold foul anchor on the collar.' 'White service coat with gold shoulder marks indicating the rank.' 'Evening dress coat of blue cloth with gilt buttons and sleeve lace.' 'Blue evening dress waistcoat with gilt buttons.' 'Full dress trousers of blue cloth and gold lace a quarter-inch wide.' 'Undress blue trousers, plain.' 'White trousers and many of them.' 'Service overcoat of heavy blue cloth.' 'Cloak of blue cloth.' 'A black mackintosh.' 'Blue uniform cap.' 'White uniform cap.' 'Cork or pith helmet.' 'Sword with sword knot.' 'Leggings.' A suit of rain clothes.' 'Black satin or silk,

(Continued on page 23.)

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison.

Mrs. Harrison will be glad to receive communications from any of her readers offering suggestions concerning woman's welfare, criticisms of articles or inquiries concerning any matters relevant to her department. She should be addressed directly at 530 Elm Tree Lane, Lexington, Ky.

BARBARA'S OPPORTUNITY

By Susan Hubbard Martin.

Barbara sighed as she set the crock of cream on the cellar shelf.

"No opportunities," she whispered; "no inspiration, no changes, just the same old things, day after day. I don't see why Providence set me down on a Western ranch, so far from everybody, giving me no open door. Here I am, young, strong, fairly aching to do a hundred things, and here—I must do nothing. I can't leave father. I wouldn't do that, but, oh, how I long for a wider outlook. How I'd like to help somebody else, to teach in Sunday-school, push things along in church lines. Instead, I must live in a place miles away from any of them."

She sighed again, then mounting the stairs, went up into the kitchen. It was such a pleasant kitchen, too. Most housewives would have rejoiced in it. The sun came in at the wide, clean windows, without anything to hinder it. Broad fields stretched to the south and east, and back of the house to the west circled the mountains.

Barbara was a tall girl of eighteen now, with abundant braids of brown hair and clear, youthful coloring. Such a capable girl as she was, too. She was all father had, and, of course, she wouldn't leave him; but, girl-like, she wanted to do a hundred things afar off. She did not see the opportunities at her own door. And then, as it was nearing dinner time, she forgot her longings in a round of very necessary, healthful work.

Father was, in a way, prosperous, and the ranch-house had many almost luxuries. A telephone, some very pretty furniture, a fine piano, and a good many of the best books. There were fine pictures, too, for father was as good a hand to select a good engraving, or a water color, as he was to raise cattle.

Barbara, too, had her horse to ride, a breed of fancy chickens, that were both a pleasure and a profit to her, and her particular buggy, beautifully upholstered, to drive about in. She ought to have been the happiest of girls and was, most of the time. But of late, she had gotten it into her head that she wanted to go to the city and do things. She wanted to be of service to some one and she imagined that on a ranch there was no opportunity.

At that moment, as she turned from the oven, into which she had just deposited an apple-pie, she heard the sound of wheels, and, looking up, Barbara caught a glimpse, through the window, of two people, young people they were, too, a young man and a young woman.

"I wonder what they want?" she thought, and then she went to the door.

"Could we come in and rest just a moment?" said the sweetest voice Barbara thought she had ever heard.

Barbara gave a ready, glad assent.

The young woman, she was scarcely more than a girl, alighted first, and Barbara noticed at once what a nice face she had, large brown eyes, a sweet mouth, and such a lovely, sorrowful smile. And then Barbara saw that the young man with her looked very ill, indeed. He was thin to emaciation, and staggered as he tried to walk.

Barbara led them into her pleasant living room, and bade them rest, and then it was but a few minutes until the young wife, for Barbara found out that they were newly married, was telling her her story.

The young husband had left his home town to come to the city with his young wife. "He felt there were no opportunities there," she went on, and Barbara winced. Was not that just what she had been thinking in regard to herself?

He found employment in one of the big department stores and, not being used to the confinement, bad air, and long hours, he fell sick. The little money they had been able to save, soon went for doctor bills and the nourishing things he must have. "But," added the young wife, sorrowfully, "we couldn't get nourishing things—at least I couldn't. The milk was poor and we couldn't find any fresh eggs, and so," she concluded, "I borrowed this horse and buggy from a man who has been kind to us. What I want is to get Edgar out on some ranch, and let him live out of doors. If he does this, I am sure he will get well. If he doesn't," the tears welled up in the lovely eyes, and she left the sentence unfinished. There was a pause, the young woman broke it.

"If we could just get into some nice family, where I could help with the work," she added.

Barbara's heart bounded.

Was not this one of the opportunities she had just been longing for? Both so young, too. "Why," thought capable, practical Barbara, "they're nothing but two 'babes in the woods.' What is going to become of them?"

At that moment, father came in, and he heard the story, too.

In one of the intervals of dinner-getting, Barbara contrived to get him to one side.

"Father," she cried, "can't we take them in?"

"There is that little house near the barn that is stored full of old harness and things we don't need. It has two good rooms. They could have that, and she could help me. Father, I've been wanting all morning to do something for somebody else. Here is one opportunity. You'll help me, won't you?"

Father kissed her.

"I think it could be managed, dear," he said, "if you really want to help them. He looks very ill, but good air and sunshine will do wonders. As for her, she is evidently a lady, every inch of her. I feel very sorry for them both. Ask them to dinner, Barbara, and we'll see about it."

And they did see about it, and so quickly that the very next day Barbara had everything taken out of the harness house. She washed the windows herself, and such a good time as she had doing it, too. No one could take a greater interest in that little house than she did. What trips she made back and forth, singing in her fresh, young voice: "Let the Sunshine in," and "When Morning Gilds the Skies."

She put up the white curtains herself at the shining windows, took a rug from one of the upstairs rooms in the house, robbed her own pretty nest of its easiest chair.

Father put up a couple of shelves in the room that was to be used as a kitchen, and Barbara covered them neatly with cretonne. She brought cream from her own stores, butter, fresh eggs, cooked a chicken, and made bread and put on them, finishing up with a neat little array of jellies and preserves. And when the wagon finally deposited the two young people at her door again, Barbara ran to meet them, a smile on her face. If she could only have known what that smile meant to the troubled young wife, I don't think Barbara would ever have complained of her lack of opportunity of helping anyone again. It seemed to lift a mountain from that young burdened heart, bidding her be of good cheer.

Barbara led them straight to the little house she had made ready for them. When the young wife saw the white curtains and the soft rug, and the easy chair, and the room beyond, all ready to go to housekeeping, she could scarcely keep back the tears.

"It's just beautiful," was all she could say, and Barbara never received any thanks she liked so well.

The young husband was so weary, he was obliged at once to lie down, and when he was quietly resting, the young wife went into the house where Barbara was waiting for her.

She was but a girl, herself, and the only thing she could do was to put her arms about Barbara and cry. Barbara patted her on the shoulder.

"You do think Edgar will get well, don't you?" she said brokenly at last.

"Yes." Barbara's voice was infinitely comforting. "I think he will, and you are not to worry about things. We intend to look after you."

The young wife looked at her through shining tears.

"You're the sweetest girl I ever met," she said, "and the most fortunate."

Barbara looked at her rather queerly.

"Do you know it is only a short time since I was lamenting the fact that I had no opportunities here—of doing good, I mean."

The young woman's eyes widened.

"But you don't think so now," she answered, "after what you have done for us."

Barbara smiled again.

"No, I don't think so any more," she answered, almost solemnly.

Spring Fog

I stood upon a hill, and it was spring:
The vale lay hid beneath a snow-white pall
As though beyond recall.
Yet here, a robin singing; and there, his mate, a-wing!
And then through many a sudden rift
I saw rose-radiant islands drift
On ebbing seas,
A new world fashioned swift,
Sunshine, bright grass, and blossoming cherry trees.

—Wanda Petrunkevitch in June Lippincott's.

Child Welfare Work Shows Growth

The Annual Child-Welfare Convention of the Illinois Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teachers' Associations was held at Hotel Sherman, Chicago, May 8, 9 and 10.

The Child-Welfare campaign inaugurated by the National Congress of Mothers is gaining in strength and influence; and the convention just closed has shown a decided growth in the work during the past year. Eighty-one affiliated clubs were registered and delegates from many of them gave fine reports of work being done—the indifference and listlessness of parents that formerly seemed to prevail in regard to the schools is rapidly being overcome because the mothers are becoming acquainted with the teachers and they work intelligently together to make the school a pleasant and beautiful place for the children. In one school the Parent-Teacher Club took charge of the library, repaired the books and put the library in order. They earned money enough to purchase nine pictures for the school; then they had the school house cleaned and made attractive.

One club bought two pianos for the children to use in the school. A suburban club has a rest room and a matron. All the clubs are working along these lines, as well as for the moral and physical well being of the children in the schools. It is the altruistic idea put into practice; for these mothers' clubs are a positive force for the good of the girls and boys of the state. The mothers and the teachers are making changes for the child's welfare.

A very important part of the work is that the mothers are becoming educated in psychology and general knowledge of schools, together with a new understanding of the needs of many children other than their own, by the Mothers' Congress.

Dr. Wm. B. Owen, President of Chicago Teachers' College and Dean L. C. Monin, Armour Institute, gave very instructive lectures on the needs of children and youth, they had excellent ideas as to how those needs should be met.

At the closing session of the convention, Mrs. L. D. Doty of Chicago, was elected president and Mrs. M. B. Blouke, corresponding secretary.

Woman's Doings

—Miss Belle Green, aged 26, is the young woman who acts as J. Pierpont Morgan's librarian, and has spent thousands and thousands of dollars buying rare old volumes for the well-known New York "money bags." Miss Green was originally selected for the position of Mr. Morgan's librarian while she was a student at Princeton, specializing in early printed books.

—A native of Rockford, Ill., is Miss Julia C. Lathrop, whose appointment by President Taft to be chief of the new children's bureau of the Department of Commerce and Labor, has just been confirmed by the United States Senate. Miss Lathrop made her home in Rockford until about twenty years ago, when she came to Chicago, and engaged in settlement work. She has lived here ever since, but she has traveled extensively and studied sociological problems in many places at close range. Her information is therefore of the first hand sort. With her intimate knowledge of a great many subjects concerning children, it will not be difficult for her, according to her friends, to build up an effective working organization in the bureau over which she will preside.

—Women are to vote in the presidential contest of this year in the states of Washington, Idaho, Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, and California. The republican presidential plurality in 1908, in California, was 86,906; in Idaho, 16,459; in Utah, 18,414; in Washington, 47,351; and in Wyoming, 5,928; while Bryan carried Colorado by 2,944. It is already known that the republican national campaigners are to employ a staff of women political speakers for the six states in which women can vote for president, and that the democratic national campaigners contemplate a similar step.

—Mrs. Russell Sage, "the grand old woman of American philanthropy," is said to be dying in New York. It has been six years since her husband intrusted to her keeping $150,000,000. She has in that time created the Sage Foundation, which, as long as time continues, will go on doing its great work to help humanity to help itself. She has fought the loan sharks, and has given thousands of children their rightful heritage of health and happiness. Her charities have had a wide range, and the good that she has done can hardly be estimated.

—The clubwomen of San Francisco have succeeded in getting a police court in which woman offenders only will be tried. It is planned to have a woman bailiff in attendance and to protect the woman prisoners and witnesses as far as possible from the crowds that usually throng police courts.

Women in Journalism

Women will be admitted to the School of Journalism in Columbia University. The first two years of the course collegiate work for the most part will be given in Barnard College, just as a portion of the course will be given for men in Columbia College. The number of women in active journalism is larger in this country than in any other of the callings with which this occupation can be compared. The figures for occupations in 1910 have not been issued, but the total number engaged in journalism in 1900 was 30,098, of which 27,905 were men and 2,193 women. Incidentally, nearly one-half of those listed as authors in 1910 were women.

Friendships

BY C. M. SHELDON.

The purchase price of a friend is to be one.

A friendship that does not cost anything is not worth anything.

The reason we do not have more friends is that we do not want any more or do not know how to make them.

You can spoil a possible friendship by demanding too much for yourself, but not by demanding too much of yourself.

A friend who cannot bear kindly criticism cannot bear any of friendship's real responsibilities and privileges.

Do you want to retain old friends? Here are a few ways:

Keep your promises with them.

Share a few real troubles with them.

Do not expect them to be perfect any more than yourself.

If they belong to other political parties kindly pity their mistaken ideas, and ask them to do the same for you.

Write them a good letter every once in a while; Sunday afternoon is a good time.

Keep a list of their birthdays and remember them.

If you have an automobile and your friend hasn't any, give him a ride now and then.

Lend him money if he needs it, on condition that he does the same to you. It is a false idea that true friends cannot borrow money of each other and retain friendship. They can borrow anything that can be returned.

Friendship can bear anything except insincerity. In that blighting atmosphere it withers and dies.

We need friends in adversity to comfort us; we need them in prosperity to show us how little prosperity is worth without them; we need them in every day life to lighten its drudgery; we need them in our religion to prove to us the nearness of the Brotherhood.

"Old friends are best. King James used to call for his old shoes; they were easiest for his feet."

What We Are All Apt To Forget

That we were all children once.

That politeness costs nothing.

That we should live and let live.

That we should live within our means.

That our lives are what we make them.

That the devil works while preachers sleep.

That others have feelings as well as ourselves.

That a kind word, even to a dog, is never lost.

That a loafer is the most despicable creature on earth.

That every skilled workman was once an apprentice.

That we owe a duty to our fellow-man as well as to ourselves.

That we are judged by our acts and the company we keep.

That man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn.

That child-labor is a blot on humanity and a disgrace to civilization.

That minding one's own business is the most profitable employment.

That while the world owes us a living, we have to go out and get it.—Selected.

Experiments made in Tokyo, Japan, with the wireless telephone have been successful. It has been found possible to converse at a distance of twenty miles. The voices of different persons could be identified without difficulty.

—Senator John Sharp Williams goes in for ducks. He raises tame ones, which is a better idea than shooting wild ones. On his plantation at Yazoo City, Miss., he has a crew of the finest white ducks to be found anywhere, and he takes them more seriously than if they were trotting horses or high-born cattle. His ducks comprise Senator Williams' chief hobby, and he endeavors in every way to make their lives full of joy. He has built them a swimming pond with a nice little duck garage at one end where they may keep their backs dry when it rains, and he feeds them with his own hands. The Yazoo City statesman is also fond of roses, and raises many beautiful varieties.

—Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, where the Rev. Len Broughton of Atlanta, Ga., has begun his ministry, has some interesting American associations. The church, built by the Rev. Newman Hall to perpetuate the work of the famous Rowland Hill at Surrey Chapel, was opened on the centenary of American independence, July 4, 1876, and its most striking architectural feature, the Lincoln Tower, was erected at a cost of $35,000 by a number of American citizens who desired to express their appreciation of the sympathy extended by Mr. Newman Hall and his congregation to the Northern cause during the Civil War. The Stars and Stripes are inwrought in the stonework and the British lion and the American eagle both adorn the angles of the tower.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

J. E. Teany is reported to have begun his work as pastor of the Christian Church at Franklin.

S. E. Fisher, minister at the University Place Church, Champaign, has received a call to Seattle, Wash.

L. E. Chase will become pastor of Palmyra church June first, having resigned his ministry at New Bedford.

A. M. Hale, pastor of Virden church, has been invited to deliver the Memorial Day address in his home city.

Georgetown church has called Frank H. Vernor to its pastorate from Homer. It is understood the call has been accepted.

The church at Lanark, where J. Edward Cresmer preaches, made an offering of $65 for home missions, which is beyond its previous offerings.

At Old Shaws Point, near Carlinville, F. A. Sword conducted an evangelistic meeting of short duration. This was the third meeting of Mr. Sword for this church.

The meeting at Griggsville, being conducted by Evangelist Lew D. Hill and his singer, Mr. Seniff, reported sixty-three additions, with the meeting not yet concluded.

The revival meeting at Macomb, where Allen T. Shaw the pastor is being assisted by the Fife Quartette, had received 108 additions in about two weeks. The meeting was to close in a few days.

Chicago Heights church, where E. D. Salkeld has been pastor for two years, made an offering for home missions amounting to almost a hundred dollars. This is an offering far in excess of that of last year.

J. E. Moyer, secretary of the Seventh District, assisted the pastor, G. W. Ford, in a campaign of money-raising for the church at West Salem. Almost $10,000 was raised and it is purposed to construct a building costing not less than $12,000.

A. E. Underwood has resigned his pastorate at Chapin to become effective the 7th of July. After this time Mr. Underwood will be available for another church, preferably near enough to the state university that graduate work may be carried in school.

The church at Brownstown, where Shoreland Fannon is pastor, was dedicated the first Sunday in May. This building cost about $20,000. Mr. Fannon preaches for this church one-half time, and during his ministry the congregation has enjoyed exceptional prosperity.

Greenfield church has enjoyed an unusual period of success under the ministry of Ivan W. Agee during the past five years. The minister is preaching to large congregations, and the entire church is continuously rallying to his support, and there is optimism for the future on every hand.

R. O. Rogers is in a revival meeting at Johnston City, with the assistance of Ethel Easterly as director of music. The congregations were larger than the church edifice would accommodate, and the evangelists have consequently removed to a tent with a very much larger seating capacity.

An effort is being made by J. E. Stout with the assistance of J. Orville Tiffin and Ira Stout, to revive the church at Chauncey, which has for some time rested under discouragement and ceased holding regular services. It is hoped to encourage the church to employ a pastor for one-half time.

An effort is being made to secure an offering from 95 per cent of the membership of Keithsburg church. Every member of the congregation is being solicited and even though incomplete, the offering for American missions is larger than the apportionment. The pastor here is L. F. DePoister.

O. C. Bolman, pastor of Pekin church, assisted the congregation at Lily and its pastor, Leroy F. Sargent, in a short meeting, which lasted fourteen days and resulted in twenty-two additions, sixteen of the number being on profession of faith. The church had for a long time been discouraged, but with the impetus of the revival and the faithful ministry of its pastor, who was only recently ordained, there has come to possess its members a new spirit of hope and confidence.

Taylorville church, it is learned, has extended a call to George H. Brown, pastor of Austin church, Chicago. This church has been pastorless for about a month since the resignation of M. W. Yocum, who left to accept an Indiana pastorate. It is not learned whether Mr. Brown, who has been in Chicago for only about six months, will consider with any favor the call which has been extended. Prior to his residence in Chicago, he was pastor of a neighboring church at Charleston for five years.

The excellent new $33,000 church at Virden was dedicated May 19 with imposing services. The dedicatory sermon was preached by Rev. E. L. Powell of Louisville, Ky. The building is constructed of brick trimmed with stone, and follows the colonial style of architecture. The Sunday-school room is capable of being thrown into the auditorium, affording a large seating capacity. A number of attractive art glass windows were placed as memorials to present and former members of the church. A pipe organ was provided from funds left several years ago by one of the charter members of the church. On the day of the dedication, all the other churches of the town dismissed their services and joined cordially in the exercises as well as in gifts for the liquidation of indebtedness on the building. The pastor, A. M. Hale, very properly had charge of raising the money at the morning service. A total of $18,000 was asked for, $2,000 of this being in excess of the actual needs, but desired to allow for shrinkage on the pledges. Before the service had concluded, all but $145 of this amount was secured. At the other services of the day no money was solicited to be paid on the building, but at the evening service an offering was received for missions which was reported to have amounted to several hundred dollars. The services in connection with the setting apart of the new house lasted an entire week, and included an organ recital and a Wednesday evening service especially for the men, at which service addresses were delivered by F. W. Burnham of First Church, Springfield; Clyde Darsie, Jacksonville, and the former pastor, H. J. Hostetler, now of Newman. The church at Virden is in a prosperous condition, and with the leadership of A. M. Hale and with its splendidly appointed building will unquestionably surpass any record in its history.

Secretary's Letter.

DeForrest Mullins of Springfield, R. D. 4, is available for a half time work.

Geo. T. Smith of Bethany, W. Va., has accepted a call to Gurnee, to begin June 23.

P. F. York of Hoopeston preaches half time for Ridge Farm, and is available for another half time place.

Please answer our call for statistics at once. Blanks will be mailed May 31, with reply postage prepaid.

J. F. Smith has moved his family to Eureka from Carthage. He serves Burnside and Sciota half time each.

L. F. DePoister of Keithsburg held a meeting with A. F. Norman at New Boston. There were four additions and the church was greatly helped.

We know a good, strong preacher who can be had for supply during August, or he could hold a meeting. We also know of a splendid young woman who could do the work of assistant pastor. Will be glad to give her name and address to those interested.

Chas. D. Hougham's meeting at Gillespie resulted in six additions. The Sunday-school was reorganized, and H. L. Lewis, the new pastor at Girard, will preach for them every Sunday afternoon. They are greatly encouraged and are determined to build up the work.

There are more churches without preachers than is really necessary. It is not altogether the lack of preachers. Many third and fourth rate churches will not be satisfied with any but first rate preachers, and will do without preaching rather than employ a good average man.

Chas. D. Hougham announces his resignation as evangelist of the Fifth district and will be ready for a settled pastorate or supply work this summer in central Illinois.

There have been 24 confessions and 40 otherwise this year at the regular meetings of the First church, Bloomington. Edgar D. Jones is the minister. Their Sunday night services are quite well attended.

The rainy Sundays in May make it all the more necessary to push hard for the May offering for Home-State missions. Remember, no call in November if the churches "double up" on the May offering so we can get along without it. And no church that really does "double up" will be asked by us for the November offering. So now is the time when each church can settle that question for itself.

J. FRED JONES, Field Secretary.
W. D. DEWEESE, Office Secy.-Treas.
Bloomington, Ill.

Chicago

Douglas Park Church dedication came off ahead of expectations on Sunday, May 19. Dr. McCash of the American Society raised $4,529 in pledges, sufficient to cover the Church Extension loan and provide for needed improvements. This church was organized fourteen years ago, but has never been prosperous. Since Mr. Dabney's pastorate began three years ago a debt of $1,600 on a modest and unprepossessing house has been paid, the house sold, the Congregational property purchased for $8,000; and now provision is made for its complete payment. The Sunday-school averages about 150 in attendance, and a good evening congregation waits upon the pastor's ministry. The present house is situated on the rear of the lot, leaving an excellent corner for a more adequate building later. The social center ideal is strongly favored by the membership as the goal toward which the church should press. Mr. Dabney's work is praised by the entire community.

Rev. Vaughan Dabney.

The Ministers' Association recently discussed and passed the following resolutions:

"Whereas the commission on Christian union of the Disciples of Christ has recently held in New York City an informing and fruitful conference on Christian unity with a similar commission representing the Congregational denomination, and

"Whereas the Congregational churches of Illinois in their associational meeting held in May, 1911, passed resolutions looking with favor upon the approach of their people and the Disciples of Christ toward closer co-operation and possible unity, and expressed a desire that their committee on church polity confer with any representative body or committee of the Disciples looking toward a better mutual understanding between the two bodies,

"Therefore, resolved that the Chicago Christian Ministers' Asosciation appoint a committee of five to confer with the Congregational committee on church polity to express to our brethren of the Congregational name our earnest hope for a closer fellowship and to canvass the question of practical co-operation and unity.

The committee appointed consists of Austin Hunter, C. C. Morrison, O. F. Jordan, W. F. Shaw and C. G. Kindred.

Church Life

The Wisconsin state convention will be held September 12-15.

George T. Smith of Bethany, W. Va., has accepted a call to Gurnee and will begin work June 23.

The semi-annual convention of the Southwest District of Wisconsin, was held at Sabin, May 24-26.

Frank Thompson began a meeting at Big Stone Gap, Va., May 26, assisting C. B. Livesay, the pastor.

Ernest C. Bragg, for the past year pastor at Daytona, Fla., has gone to Virginia, where he will locate.

W. M. Groves has resigned his pastorate at Petersburg and Virginia, Ill. C. F. French of Tallula will succeed him about July 1.

Geo. P. Rutledge, of Philadelphia, Pa., will deliver the baccalaureate sermon at Virginia Christian College, Lynchburg, Va., May 26.

C. E. Holt, of Tuscaloosa, Ala., preached at a series of meetings at the court house the week of May 12. The services were well attended.

H. C. McCormack, who has been the successful minister at Norwalk, Ohio, goes to 169th Street, New York City, succeeding I. S. Chenoweth.

Second Church, Warren, Ohio, is at work on a $10,000 addition to the building to be completed this fall. A new pipe organ also is to be purchased.

I. H. Teel, formerly of Santa Cruz, California, has accepted the work temporarily at Grants Pass, Oregon. He is pushing the work successfully.

T. H. Goodnight closes his ministry at Hickory, Wis., the last of May, after many years of service. He will retire to his new home in Madison.

All the Christian congregations of Los Angeles met jointly at the Broadway Christian Church for a fellowship service, the evening of May 15.

L. F. De Poister of Keithsburg held a meeting with A. E. Norman at New Boston, Ill. There were four additions and the church was greatly helped.

Charles D. Hougham announces his resignation as evangelist of the Fifth district and will be ready for a settled pastorate or supply work in central Illinois.

The dedication of the new Christian church in Elkton, Ky., has been fixed for Sunday, June 2. H. D. Smith, of Hopkinsville, will preach the sermon.

An "old-fashioned social" was given in the Central Church, Moberly, Mo., May 7, which was attended by a great number of the congregation and their friends.

H. V. Scholes, pastor of the Oakland, Kan., church, has suffered a breakdown in health, compelling him to ask a leave of absence. He expects to go to California for a complete rest.

A federation of eighteen of the churches at Lansing, Mich., was accomplished May 15. The local organization will be complementary to the Federal Council of churches of Christ in America.

A four-weeks' meeting has just closed at Arrow Avenue, Indianapolis, which resulted in forty-five accessions. M. D. Bryant is the minister. He was assisted by J. E. Slimp, of Yorktown and J. A. Oliver of Upland.

Frank L. Van Voorhis, Wisconsin state secretary, conducted a meeting at Viroqua, with eight confessions, and organized a church with thirty charter members at Janesville. He began a meeting at Soldiers Grove, May 26.

The Christian Churches, city council and other organizations of Toronto, Canada, are preparing to present at the Louisville Convention an invitation to the Disciples to hold the International Convention at Toronto, in 1913.

The church at Cedar Rapids will depart from the usual in church architecture in the new plant which will soon be erected. There will be no steeples and the roof will be flat. The interior arrangements will admit of a large amount of room.

The Fall River, Mass., News reports an enjoyable entertainment given by the First Christian Sunday-school, May 14. A playlet and a musical program were very delightfully given, and a sale of good things to eat followed the entertainment.

J. F. Findley held a two-weeks' meeting with the church at Monte Vista, Col., during May, in which thirty-one were received into the membership. Fourteen of this number came by confession, and all but three were over the age of eighteen.

At Michigan City, Ind., a meeting has just closed which was led by Roy Snodgrass. Twenty-eight people responded to the invitation. Mr. Snodgrass has served this church as pastor, and G. F. Chandler, the present minister writes that he is held in very high regard by the people.

Herbert Yeuell has just finished a series of meetings at Guelph, Ont. Thirty-six persons were won to the church, nearly all of these coming during the last few days. Mr. Yeuell presented the plea and teachings of the Disciples of Christ without denominational bias.

The new Christian church at New London, Mo., was dedicated Sunday, May 19, W. H. Pinkerton preaching the dedicatory sermon. A union congratulatory service was held in the afternoon and an old-fashioned basket dinner was served at the noon hour.

Sixty-seven people were baptized at Monieka, Congo, Africa, April 2. Nearly all were young married people. This is the new station just granted the Bolenge staff. There is a membership of 500 and there are 100 evangelists. The need is imperative and immediate for three medical missionaries.

Albert R. Adams formerly pastor of First Church, Saginaw, Mich., but now temporarily in charge of Second Church, East St. Louis, Ill., has contracted malaria fever. His physicians have ordered him to seek another location, which he will do if he secures a preaching point in a healthier locality.

The convention of the Second Missouri District at Lamonte was well attended, and very interesting. This district is made up of eighteen counties in south central Missouri and has in it some of our strongest Missouri churches. The work in the district is being well organized and the outlook for the future is promising.

H. C. Littleton, pastor of the Christian Church, at Clarion, Iowa, preached May 19, on "The Church and Secret Societies." All the fraternities were invited.

The Knights Templar of Tipton, Ind., observe Ascension day at the West Street church. Special music was provided and G. T. Hoover, the minister, delivered an address to which the public was invited.

George Owens, of Burnettville, has accepted the pastorate of the church at Decatur, Ind. He succeeds J. M. Dawson, who resigned several months ago. Mr. Owens conducted the services at Decatur, May 12.

Plans are maturing for a great State Christian Endeavor convention at Wilkesbarre, Pa., July 9-11. The local board of trade has promised to co-operate with the association committees. Two thousand delegates are expected to attend.

The gains in the Home Missions offering are as follows: First week, $742.98; gains second week, $843.49; gains the first four days of third week, $637.87. Total gains, $2,224.34, eight churches gave the same amount as last year, 62 a little less, 144 more, and 188 gave which were not on the list last year.

At Central Church, New York, J. M. Philputt will speak Sunday morning, May 26, on "Life On a Higher Level." Sunday evening on "The Religion of Lord Tennyson." A chorus of selected voices which is being trained to supplement the quartet choir will sing for the first time at the musical service Sunday evening, June 2.

The revival meeting at the Christian Church, Bloomfield, Mo., which has been in progress the past seven weeks, came to a close Sunday night, May 12. Great interest was manifested in the meeting and it closed with thirty-one additional members, five of whom were baptized. Ira White, Mr. Laughlin and Mr. Burrus were the pastors in charge.

L. H. Stine is prospering in the pastorate of Roxbury Church in Boston. He began his work with that congregation at the first of the year and has already extended his influence beyond the congregation to the vicinity and to Christian circles in the city. He recently gave an address before the ministerial club of Boston on "The Authority of Scripture."

First Church, Huntington, Ind., celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary May 19 by burning the notes representing the remaining debt against the church building. This is one of the youngest churches in the city, only twenty-one years old. It started with twenty-three charter members and now has a membership of 448. W. H. Denison is the pastor.

Instead of the usual mid-week prayer-meeting, G. B. Van Arsdall, the pastor, gives lectures Wednesday evenings on the books and characters of the Bible. This change made two years ago has maintained an average attendance of about 100. January 1, the Sunday evening service was changed to 5:00 p. m., and made a popular one hour service. The audiences have doubled.

The deaconesses of University Place Church, Des Moines, Ia., entertained the elderly members of the church at a dinner Wednesday, May 15, at the home of Prof. and Mrs. Charles O. Denny. Automobiles brought the guests to the home. Those unable to be present were taken their share of the dinner. This has become an annual event looked forward to with much interest. Seventy-five guests were present.

Z. O. Doward, of Grand Island, Neb., after nearly fifteen years' residence in Nebraska, during which time he has been in continuous service as pastor at Grand Island, East Lincoln and Trumbull, removes with his family to Marshfield, Oregon, where he takes up the pastorate of the field there. Mr. Doward was president of the Nebraska Christian Missionary Society for five years and is greatly beloved throughout the state.

Central Church, Denver, Colo., has made an excellent record in the past year. The annual meeting was held two weeks ago and showed that 176 members have been received in the past year and 427 in two years and three months. In the past year the church and its societies gave $2,831.28 to missions and benevolences and expended $12,259.92. The church closed the year with all bills paid and the annual Easter offering was about $1,000, the largest in the history of the church, despite very hard times.

An interesting meeting took place recently at Jubbulpore. Christians of three missions—our own, the American Methodists, and the English Wesleyans—united in a common service. The service was held in the open air, as none of the mission churches was large enough to hold the entire gathering. Dr. Felt, of the M. E. Mission presided; Mr. Grainger, of our mission, preached the sermon; and the Wesleyan missionaries had charge of the communion. Those on the firing line are less troubled by the divisions in the church than are those at home who are not compelled constantly to present a united front to its foes.

Dr. Graham Taylor, president of the Chicago School of Civics and Philanthrophy, will give the Commencement Address at Hiram College Tuesday, June 11, on the theme, "The New Patriotism Demanded of College Graduates." Wednesday, June 12, at Hiram College, a "Home Coming" is to be held especially for students of the Western Reserve Eclectic Institute, their families and friends. Forty-five years ago the coming June the institute closed its doors, to open the following fall to students of "Hiram College." The program for the day includes two or three special addresses at a forenoon session, a dinner for all the guests followed by reminiscent speeches and an afternoon devoted to visiting. Mrs. Garfield and others who are known and loved by the old Eclectic students are planning to be present at the reunion.

The Sunday-school department of the American Missionary Society recently issued programs for use in the Sunday-schools. These programs have grown steadily in favor from their first introduction. The 1912 series have been particularly interesting. From January to June they have treated of the problems of foreign missions. Beginning July 1, they will deal with the problems in the home land. The 1912 home mission series will deal with the topics of Canada, Ministerial Supply, City Missions, Immigration and our Benevolences. It would be well to appoint a missionary committee or superintendent in your school to have charge of this work of missionary instruction. By sending the name of the missionary superintendent or the chairman of the missionary committee to the State or American Superintendent, valuable suggestions may be gained.

Two new Christian churches will probably be constructed soon in St. Louis. The first of these will be the Maplewood Church, ground for which has been broken. The church will cost $15,000. Of this sum no large individual sums were given, all the members having contributed. The church will be completed about November 1. Thomas A. Minyard is the pastor. The other will be the Hammett Place Christian Church, Hammett place and Marcus avenue. The congregation has authorized the building committee to dispose of the present church property and to look for a new site farther west and north. W. D. Cree is chairman of the committee. The need of a new building has become so pressing that the congregation accommodates the overflow in a tent adjoining the auditorium. C. C. Garrigues is the pastor.

C. R. Stauffer, who has served the South Geddes St. Church of Syracuse, N. Y., for five years has accepted a call to the Norwood, Ohio, Christian Church. During the five years pastorate at Syracuse, the membership has grown from 57 to 290, there being 251 additions or an average of 50 a year. The Bible-school has grown from an enrollment of 70 to 500. The church property has been increased from a small chapel valued at $1,000, to that of today on a much better location valued at $16,000. During the five years Mr. Stauffer has served as Corresponding Secretary of the New York Christian Missionary Society and has led the congregation in a successful building enterprise. The Norwood Church, one of the most aggressive of the Greater Cincinnati churches is entering upon a building proposition to cost about $50,000. The new pastorate will begin August 1.

The Christian churches of Jasper County, Mo., will unite in building "a church in a day" at Oakland. Decoration day has been set as the day for the building. Mr. Famuliner, pastor of the Villa Heights church, has taken special care of the members at Oakland, and it is through his efforts that a church is to be built there.

Beginning early Decoration Day more than 100 men will work on the building. There will be several crews of men, each to have charge of a certain part of the construction work. Each crew will have a foreman, and the work is to be so planned that none of the different sets of workmen will interfere with the others. The women of the church will serve dinner at noon and a lunch in the evening. The building is expected to be completed by dark and there will be a meeting in the church that night.

All the Christian churches in the county will take part in the work.

Notes from England

Leslie W. Morgan, E. Brearley and T. S. Buckingham began a twelve-day evangelistic campaign at Fulham, where Mr. Brearley is the pastor, April 14. A report dated April 21, states that twenty confessions had been received. The direct and forceful appeals of the speakers carried conviction to many of their hearers and the company has deepened the spiritual life of the church and widened its influence.

James Small is to carry on an evangelistic campaign in the English churches the coming autumn. This Irish-American evangelist has met with much success in America and will approach the English field with no little knowledge of the best methods in evangelistic work. Above all, he will preach a winsome gospel.

Secretary Stephen J. Corey, of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, is to pass through England on his way to visit the Congo mission field in May, and will speak at several churches, including Liverpool, May 21, Southport, May 22, and Hornsey on Sunday, May 26.

The Promise of Children's Day

"The promise for Children's Day is full of encouragement. Never before were the prospects brighter. We have been almost snowed under with orders for supplies. Words of cheer come from every quarter. Give the children their way and there will be something doing June 2.

"Let the children have the front seat! The platform is theirs also. Make Children's Day glorious in results and great in our history. This is their day. They come to crown Jesus Lord of all. Not only do they bring flowers and songs, but they bring gifts to make Him known among all children.

"Give the children full right of way June 2! The morning and evening services are both theirs. Their unselfish gladness will help to fill the world with joy.

"Glorious Children's Day! Out of its spirit have come missionaries, mission stations and redeemed communities. The influence of this day will grow and abide to the end.

"The children helped to plant our first station on heathen soil. They have stood by the work most loyally from the first. We have good reasons for believing they will do more this year than at any time in the past. They see visions. The great Sunday-school men and women are leading in a victorious campaign. That big Men's Bible Class and that large class of women will do creditable things. They will give large amounts. One class has already raised $130.

"Sometimes the school almost forgets the offering! Think of it! This is as bad as preaching an evangelistic sermon and forgetting the invitation. Magnify and glorify the offering. Talk it. Push it. And never apologize for it."

"The Sunday-schools are requested to forward their offerings to F. M. Rains, secretary, Cincinnati, Ohio, on Monday morning, June 3. Please give the local name of the Sunday-school when different from the post office." STEPHEN J. COREY, Secretary.

Foreign Mission News

D. C. McCallum, writing from Vigan, P. I., reports that they have secured a fine lot for necessary buildings. The lot is 180 feet frontage by 300 feet deep. It is in a good location.

Transylvania University and the College of the Bible gave W. R. Holder a great farewell before his departure to Africa. He reached New York May 17. He says, "All is going well. Will go aboard at nine o'clock." He is full of hope for a safe and prosperous voyage to the Congo.

Mrs. D. E. Dannenberg, Nanking, China, under date of April 16, writes as follows: "Possibly you have heard about the riots and lootings here in Nankin. The looters were soldiers who had not yet been disbanded. The trouble began in the night and lasted until after daylight. When we got up about six o'clock we saw the soldiers killing the looters. Some were shot and some beheaded. In all 300 looters were killed. We think that the trouble is now over. We feel quite safe. There has been a guard of soldiers walking back and forth in front of our house every night lately." The missionaries in China are confronted with many problems in these days of readjustment after the Revolution. They ought to have the careful, thoughtful, prayerful consideration of all the friends of foreign missions.

The Children's Day offering at Hopkinsville, Ky., was taken May 19. It amounted to $440. This Sunday-school ranks high in the missionary service.

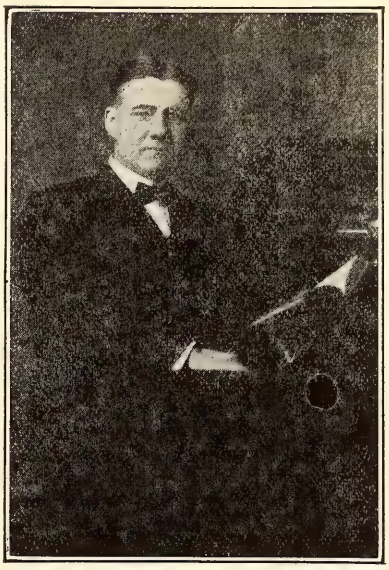
President A. McLean has been delivering a series of lectures before a number of our colleges with great delight and much profit to all who heard him.

The Foreign Society recently received $1,000 from the estate of the late Mrs. Stephens, Claylin, Mo. Let every friend of the work remember in his last will and testament.

Somerset, Pa., Dedicates Splendid Plant

The effort and sacrifice of two years on the part of the members of the church at Somerset, Pa., received its compensation Sunday, May 26, in the dedication of their new church and Sunday-school plant.

Much credit must be given to J. D. Garrison, the pastor, for the erection of this magnificent house of worship. To his exhaustless energy, tireless effort and persistence in the face of difficulties is largely due the fact that this building now stands complete, a modern building that will meet all demands for many years to come.



Rev. J. D. Garrison, pastor Somerset, Pa.

One of Mr. Garrison's characteristics is that he recognizes that old methods, no matter how excellent, will not accomplish all that is demanded today; that church work to be effective must be up with the times. He is not a sensationalist nor visionary, but intensely practical, keeping abreast with the spirit of the times, with eyes open to the growth, development and demands of the future.

With him have worked the building committee, composed of men of good judgment and business ability. They have spent many a long hour going over the plans and no detail of the building was carried out without their approval.

A great growth of potential force that has made this noble achievement of the Somereset Church possible is the consecration to the Master's work of the lives of a host of God-fearing and self-sacrificing women whose heaven confirmed work will ever live after them.

The building is of the newer type of church architecture, massive and dignified. It is modeled after the Grecian Doric style. The material is rich, red face brick with extensive stone trimming, including all window and door sills and lintels, belt course, architrave, dental and cornice, base and coping courses. Two heavy stone columns support the gable of the portico.

A Modern Plant

On the first and second floor there are 18 rooms for the Sunday-school. Accordeon doors, 16 feet high and 39 feet wide, separate the lecture room from the main auditorium. Folding doors separate the class rooms in the balcony. All the rooms can be thrown into one, giving an unobstructed view of the pulpit and making it quite easy for one to hear the speakers from any part of the building. With this arrangement the church has a seating capacity of 960.

The basement contains fuel and furnace rooms, two robing rooms, kitchen and a very large social and dining room. In each robing room there is toilet and basin.

The first floor contains baptistry, pulpit, pipe organ, choir loft, study, ladies' room, foyer, and auditorium 50x50 feet, with bowled floor and circular pews, a memorial window to the "Three Marys," and other memorials.

The Sunday-school part consists of beginners' room, library, seven class rooms and the lecture room. These seven class rooms are convertible into a lecture room and all can be thrown into main auditorium.

The second floor includes balcony over foyer in church auditorium, and eight class rooms in Sunday-school, with a large primary room.

Beautiful Memorial Windows

One of the most beautiful features of the building are its memorial windows, of which there are three.

The indirect electric system is employed. There are large chandeliers in the center of the rooms, but the light is thrown to the ceiling and reflected down. This gives a remarkably soft light, coming nearer than anything yet discovered to daylight.

Two Manual Organ.

The organ is a two manual pipe organ with 811 pipes with 30 stops, as follows: Great organ, 305; swell organ, 464; pedal organ, 42. It has adjustable combinations operated by pistons placed under respective manuals. The pipes range from four to sixteen feet. Special care was taken in the voicing of the organ so as to combine power, delicacy and richness of tone. The woodwork is of best white oak finished in hard oil, the design being in harmony with the architecture of the church. The organ cost over $2,500. It is built in an alcove directly in the rear of the pulpit. The choir sits to the right of the pulpit.

Parsonage Adjoins Church.

A beautiful residence is used as a parsonage. The two buildings are connected and painted so that they have the appearance of one structure and are in harmony. Some of the rooms in the parsonage will be used for young men's reading rooms. There are forty rooms in the church and parsonage combined.

At the Third District Convention held at Dallas City, Ill., May 14-16 one of the most interesting topics considered related to the restoration of the reading of the bible in the public schools. A resolution was passed calling on members to use their influence to secure a reversal of the opinion of the Supreme Court on the subject and to work for the election of men favorable to such use of the bible in the schools.

C. R. Stauffer, of Syracuse, N. Y., has accepted a call to the Norwood, O., Christian Church, to begin work August 1. The Norwood people are building. They have the foundation laid for a $50,000 church, with a Sunday-school seating capacity for 1,000, and an upstairs auditorium of 800. The foundations are laid, and the work of erecting the building will proceed at once.

Ohio Planning Year of Effective Service

The Ohio state convention at Canton, May 20-23, was one of the best that state has had. Speakers of national prominence were on the program and the addresses were of high order. The devotional spirit of the messages was very helpful. In harmony with other progressive states the Ohio convention declared for efficiency as a prime factor in the future success of the work.

Great credit is due Secretary I. J. Cahill, whose leadership and untiring service have, in a large way, made possible a greater Ohio for the Disciples. Associated with him is the state Bible-school superintendent, Myron C. Settle. His work is effective and spiritual. With these two spiritually-minded men to lead the forces the work will not go backward in Ohio.

The addresses by I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., on the work and office of the church officers were very profitable.

C. M. Chilton was a guest from Missouri. Ohio gave him a hearty welcome both as president of the A. C. M. S. and for his great heart and vision, through which came his splendid message on "He shall teach you all things."

The singing was in charge of W. E. M. Hackleman, of Indianapolis and had the spiritual tone usually characteristic of Mr. Hackleman's leadership.

W. C. Pearce, of Chicago, gave his great address in the closing session, Thursday evening on "The Bible in Action." This was Mr. Pearce's first visit to an Ohio State Convention.

The O. C. M. S., has had one of its greatest years. The work done by its workers has not only been of high class but has indeed been effective. New fields have been entered while others have become self-supporting and the work has advanced in every way.

The officers elected for the coming year were: President, W. T. Rothenburger, Cleveland; first vice-president, P. H. Welshimer, Canton; second vice-president, W. D. Ward, Newark; corresponding secretary, I. J. Cahil, Recording secretaries, M. S. Decker, Shreve, and W. F. Wills; treasurer, A. Teachout, Cleveland; John E. Pounds, secretary of education; Traverse Harrison, Lisbon, superintendent of Christian Endeavor work; Myron C. Settle, state Bible-school superintendent. A new board of managers consisting of twenty-five men from the various parts of the state was elected. The next convention is to be held at the First Church, Lima.

The House of Broken Hopes

(Continued from page 13.)

living spirits of those prostrate bodies came out of the coffins and clamored about me, touched me with ghostly hands and whispered frightful things about the cruelty of life. So it seemed to me, and a sense of overwhelming pity took possession of me—a futile and worthless pity, for I could do nothing to help them.

Young Men In Despair.

There were many young men in those dormitories of despair, and I think the sight of them was more awful than that of the old fellows who breathed wheezily through open mouths with toothless gums. It is not good when young men lay down their arms in the struggle of life and crawl into a free coffin for a night's sleep. The failure of old age is less pitiful. That they were here at all was a proof of utter destitution. For there are degrees even among outcasts, and this place belongs to the last degree. The men who go to the Salvation Army night shelters pay two pence, three pence and five pence for a supper and a night's lodging. Even the payment of two pence gives them a certain measure of independence and self-respect. At Medland Hall no charge of any kind is made. There are free coffins for living men, and a supper of hot cocoa and fresh bread. For three nights a man who has nothing but the rags in which he stands may get food and warmth and shelter to give him a little strength and a little hope.

Go Tramping All Day.

Turned out each morning at dawn, he may go tramping for work, and, if he finds it, Medland Hall will shelter him for another week, until he has drawn his first wage. But if, when the third night has passed, he is still without a job, the doors are closed to him, unless three months have gone, and the wolf gets very close to his heels. So to Medland Hall comes every night in the year an army of over three hundred men, weak with hunger, weary with long tramping, agonized for want of sleep, and too much tamed by the lash of life to be fierce, as hungry animals are fierce. They are of all trades and professions, laborers and clerks, acrobats whose limbs have become stiff, and clowns who have lost their mirthfulness, hostlers who have given place to chauffeurs, ticket-of-leave men, engineers, hair-dressers, waiters, cabinet-makers and hawkers. A doctor who once had a West End practice, the son of a British general, the son of a rich Australian who worked his passage to London and found his adventure's end in the streets of starvation; many a man who was once a gentleman, and many poor devils down on their luck, have knocked at the door of Medland Hall, Stepney, and slept in one of the wooden coffins.

—The Graphic.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—a dozen leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor. Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

EVERY QUARTER ADDS TO THE NUMBER OF SCHOOLS INTRODUCING THESE LESSONS.

Announce Louisville Hotel Rates

The Louisville Committee announces that the following rates have been secured from the leading hotels in that city for the International Convention of the Disciples of Christ, October 15-22:

Hotel Henry Watterson—Official headquarters. One block from Armory. Rooms only. With bath, $2.00 $2.50 and $3.00 per day, one person to room; two persons, $3.50, $4.00 and $4.50 each; without bath but with private toilet, one person to room, $1.50; two persons, $2.50. More than two to room, with bath, $1.50 per person; without bath, $1.00 each.

The Seelbach—Two blocks from Armory. Rooms only: Without bath, $2.00, $2.50 per day, one to room; with bath, $3.00, $3.50, $4.00 and $5.00 per day; two in room with one double bed, $1.00 per day extra for each additional person; two or more in same room separate beds, $2.00 per day each additional person.

Fifth Avenue Hotel—Two blocks from Armory. Rooms only: 75 cents, $1.00, $1.. per day. Two in room, $1.50 and $2.00 per day. Three or more in room, 75 cents each, all without bath.

Willard Hotel—Two blocks from Armory. Single room with bath, one person, American plan, $4.00; without bath, one person, $2.00, $2.50; two or more to room, each $2.00, $2.50 per day; with bath, two or more to room, $3.00.

New Tyler Hotel—Five blocks from Armory. Single rooms, $1.50, $2.00 and $3.00. Double, $2.50, $3.00, $3.50 and $4.00; bath, $1.50 extra.

Louisville Hotel (3 car lines)—Four blocks from Armory. With bath, American plan, $3.50, $4.50; European, $2.00 to $3.00; without bath, $2.50 to $3.50 American; $1.00 to $2.00 European. Two or more beds in room, with bath, $3.00 American plan; $1.50 to $2.00 European; without bath, $2.50 American; $1.00 to $1.50 European.

Single room with bath, parlor or sitting room, $4.00 American; $3.00 European. Single room without bath porlor or sitting room, $3.50 American, $2.00 European.

Old Inn (3 car lines)—Four blocks from Armory. Rooms only: Without bath, $1.50 per day; two persons, $3.00 per day; three or more, $1.00 each; with bath, $2.50 to $3.00 per day; $2.00 each for two or more.

Hotel Victoria (2 car lines)—Six blocks from Armory. Rooms: $1.00, $1.50 without bath; $2.00 to $2.50 with bath.

Galt House (2 car lines)—Ten blocks from Armory. Rooms: With bath, $1.50 up; without bath, $1.00 up. $1.00 for each additional person; without bath, two or more to room, $1.00 each person; room with bath and parlor, $4.00 per day; without bath and parlor, $3.00 per day.

Other Accommodations—Other accommodations may be had in private homes, smaller hotels, rooming and boarding houses near Convention Hall. Private homes, $1.00 up for lodging and breakfast, each person.

Meals—Meals at reasonable rates, regular and a la Carte at all hotels. First-class dairy lunches and restaurants within easy reach.

For reservations address Geo. A. Jones, Sec'y, care First Christian Church, Louisville, Ky.

"What did you name him?"

"Bill."

"Why, Bill?"

"Because he came the first of the month."
—Exchange.

The High Calling

(Continued from page 15.)

four-in-hand tie' 'Plain black tie for evening dress uniform.' 'White gloves.' 'Black shoes.' 'White shoes.'

In the pause that followed this reading. Louis looked disappointed.

"Would I have to get all these and take care of them if I went into the navy?"

"That's right, my boy, and not only get 'em but wear 'em at the proper times. My! Think of how you would have to hustle yourself out of one suit into another in order not to break some rule of naval etiquette."

"And think of Louis," said Helen, "who can't find his clothes in the morning when he has only one suit to look after, keeping track of all that. Why, that is enough to give a girl nervous prostration, to say nothing of a boy."

"I guess I don't want to enter the navy," said Louis in disgust.

Everybody roared, and then Randall said gravely:

"Do you know, beloved, that while I pray the Lord every day to keep me from judging my fellow men, I just couldn't for the life of me help passing judgment on a civilized custom which keeps alive all this war fuss and feathers and asking men made in God's image to strut around in all this gilt and lace toggery, when immortal creatures are starving to death by the million for the bread of life. And I just couldn't keep still when day after day I heard on deck this naval fashion plate girding at men and women whose plain shoes he wasn't worthy to black. One day I up and gave him some real information about missionaries. He had to listen, and when I got through, to my great joy, a plainly dressed gentleman corroborated what I said and went me several better, saying that the real awakening of China and Turkey and Japan and India was due to the great work done by the missionaries. During his talk it turned out he was the British Consul at Hong Kong, quietly travelling home by way of America. I haven't had anything do me more good in years than that little incident."

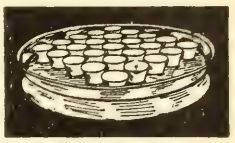
The Douglas family stayed up late that night and two nights following. Then Randall went to his father's, to the great regret of all.

Two weeks after that Felix Bauer, who was getting more out of this visit at his friend's than he had ever experienced before, went into the library and sat down by the long table. The family was scattered, Paul at his office, Esther in the kitchen, Walter visiting some old friends out at the college, Louis not yet home from his uncle's. Felix picked up a magazine and began to read. He was fairly started in a story when Helen came in. Bauer instantly arose and bowed in his slow but pleasant manner. Helen went over to a favorite seat of hers in the corner of the library and sat down, looking at Bauer earnestly.

(To be continued.)

Sir Wilfred Laurier was once on an electioneering tour in Ontario, and every effort was made to stir up religious prejudice. A Quebec Liberal sent this telegram to Sir Wilfred: "Report in circulation in this country that your children have not been baptized. Telegraph denial." The Premier replied: "Sorry to say report is correct. I have no children."

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 27
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE INDIVIDUAL
"Noiseless"
CUSHIONED TRAYS
4 Different Features
WHY?


1st—"Noiseless"—As all cup holes are cushioned.
2nd—Dust-proof—The Trays interlock.
3rd—A short glass—no need of tipping back the head.
4th—Automatic Filler—Fills rapidly and evenly.
Does not mar the sacredness of the service.
Write for booklet. Outfit sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 E. Randolph St., Dept. T., Chicago.

Drake University
Des Moines, Iowa.
COLLEGE OF LIBERAL ARTS.
Four-year courses, based upon four-year high school courses, leading to the degree of A. B., Ph. B., S. B. In the School of Education, included in this college, are courses for Students in Domestic Science.
Primary Teachers.
Kindergarten Teachers.
Grade Teachers.
High School Teachers.
COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE.
Graduate course, requiring three years' work, leading to degree of D. B.
COLLEGE OF LAW.
Three-year course, based on four-year high school course, leading to degree of LL. B.
COLLEGE OF MEDICINE.
Four-year course, based on four-year high school course and two full years in college, leading to the degree of M. D.
COLLEGE OF DENTISTRY.
Three-year course, based on four-year high school course, leading to the degree of D. D. S.
INSTITUTE OF FINE ARTS.
Special courses, based upon such preparation as best fits the student to pursue the study of his chosen course most profitably. The Institute of Fine Arts includes three distinct departments:
Conservatory of Music.
School of Painting and Drawing.
School of Dramatic Art.
For catalogue and other information, address,
THE PRESIDENT,
DRAKE UNIVERSITY,
Des Moines, Iowa.

REMEMBER
CHILDREN'S DAY
For Foreign Missions
FIRST SUNDAY IN JUNE SUPPLIES FREE
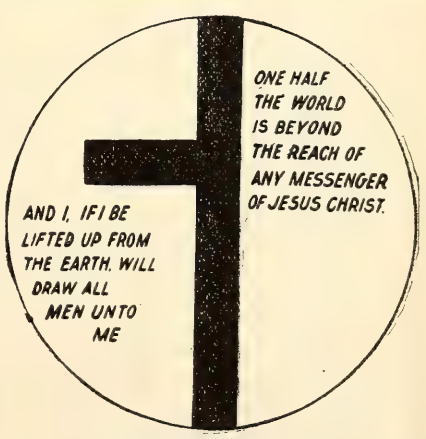
THE UNUSED CROSS.


ONE HALF THE WORLD IS BEYOND THE REACH OF ANY MESSENGER OF JESUS CHRIST.
AND I, IF I BE LIFTED UP FROM THE EARTH, WILL DRAW ALL MEN UNTO ME
The Foreign Christian Missionary Society will furnish Children's Day Supplies for the first Sunday in June Free to those Bible Schools observing the day in the interest of Heathen Missions.
FREE SUPPLIES
1st. Coin Pocket Missionary Collectors. These are a great improvement on the missionary boxes formerly used. Attractive, convenient, suitable for old or young.
2d. Darkness and Light. The new Children's Day exercise by P. H. Duncan. Filled with beautiful songs, exercises, and recitations. Good for older pupils as well as little folks. Adapted to any school.
ORDER AT ONCE. Give local name of Sunday-school and average attendance. Write to STEPHEN J. COREY,
Box 884. Cincinnati, Ohio.

Bethany Graded Lessons

Charles Clayton Morrison, Editor

Now Cover the Entire Sunday-School

As the Bethany Graded Lessons unfold from quarter to quarter it becomes increasingly plain to informed and discerning Sunday-school teachers, superintendents and workers that no private or sectarian publishing house can compete successfully with the great union enterprise supplying these graded lessons to twelve leading denominations.

[The Graded Lessons are approaching completion. The Beginners' and Primary Departments are fully completed. Three of the four Junior grades are complete. Fourth year Junior pupils may use either third year Junior lessons or first year Intermediate. Two of the four Intermediate grades are complete, and these materials may be used for the entire Intermediate Department. For Senior and Adult Departments, Dr. Scott's "Life of Jesus" is provided. Other Adult classes may use Dr. Strong's "The Gospel of the Kingdom."]

The Bethany Lessons surpass all others—absolutely—in every particular in which it is important for lesson helps to excel: In mechanical get-up, in chaste and fascinating art work, in practical adaptableness to the needs of both teacher and pupil, in sound evangelical and scriptural teaching, in rich spiritual insight. Nothing has been left undone that money, intelligence and Christian character could do to make these lessons the acme of excellence for the Sunday School.

EVERY LESSON WRITER IS A RECOGNIZED AUTHORITY IN THE INTERDENOMINATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL WORLD!

Demonstration of Christian Unity

Perhaps nothing has been done in modern times to demonstrate so clearly the essential unity of the churches and the possibility of organic union than the successful carrying through of this great enterprise of an interdenominational series of Sunday-school lessons. There has been no serious conflict among the editors representing a dozen denominations, among them Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists and Disciples. If the churches can unite in what they teach their children, who can doubt that co-operation and union is possible at every other point?

The Bethany Lessons thus afford a signal opportunity for the Sunday Schools of the Disciples to promote Christian Union.

Study the following diagram:

The Life of Jesus

In Fifty-two Lessons

BY DR. LOA ERMINA SCOTT.

A manual for young peoples and adult classes. It is conceded to be the most practicable text for its purpose on the market.

The book grew in the actual experience of teaching. From the moment it came from the press it has been in great demand. Another edition is now being prepared for.

It is just the thing for classes of young people of Senior department. But it is equally well adapted to adults.

Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c.

Write today for a copy.

THE GRADED SUNDAY SCHOOL
Arranged by the International Sunday School Association.

SUNDAY SCHOOL GRADES	DEPARTMENTS	APPROXIMATE AGE	PUBLIC SCHOOL GRADE
1st 2nd	Beginners	4 and 5 Years
1st 2nd 3rd	Primary	6 Years 7 " 8 "	1st 2nd 3rd
1st 2nd 3rd 4th	Junior	9 Years 10 " 11 " 12 "	4th 5th 6th 7th
1st 2nd 3rd 4th	Intermediate	13 Years 14 " 15 " 16 "	8th 1 High 2 " 3 "
1st 2nd	Senior	17 Years 18 " 19 "	4 "

The Gospel of the Kingdom

BY DR. JOSIAH STRONG

A monthly magazine for adult classes and mature young people who wish to study the great vital problems of Social Christianity.

Price 50 cents a year. Single copy 5c.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT

A study of the Hebrew prophets.

No more comprehensive, scholarly, and yet graphic narrative of the moral history of Israel has ever been published. It is an ideal text for adult and young people's classes.

Published now in quarterly form. Price 35c a quarter.

SEND TODAY FOR PRICE LIST, ORDER BLANK AND PROSPECTUS!

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Vol. XXIX June 6, 1912 Number 23

LIKE AS A FATHER

AN EDITORIAL

BY ELLIS B. BARNES.

ORTHODOXY AND HERESY

THE STANDARDS OF CHRIST AND OF CREEDS

BY E. L. POWELL.

CHICAGO

Topics of the Times

Nearly $1,000,000 was contributed to the cause of education by the general education board, founded by John D. Rockefeller, at its meeting in New York last week. Of this sum, $700,000 was appropriated for distribution among five colleges, the largest contribution of $250,000 going to the George Peabody College for Teachers, of Nashville, Tenn., for the establishment of the Seaman A. Knapp school of country life. The other colleges awarded appropriations are: Beloit College, Beloit, Wis., $100,000; Coe College, Cedar Rapids, Ia., $100,000; MacAlester College, St. Paul, Minn., $50,000; University of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y., $200,000. It is explained that the gifts to the colleges mentioned are conditioned on an equal sum being raised by the respective institutions. Aside from the college appropriations, the sum of $210,000 was set aside for demonstration work in agriculture in the southern states; for professors of secondary education in state universities in the South, and to aid the work of negro education in the South. The demonstration work appropriation is $133,000. The miscellaneous appropriations were: For professors of secondary education in the several state universities of the southern states, $33,100; for supervision of negro rural schools in Kentucky, North Carolina, and Virginia, $9,000. The three negro schools—Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va.; Tuskegee Institute, and the Sellman Seminary, of Atlanta, Ga., the sum of $35,000. What may be regarded as the board's most important appropriation, was that for the establishment of the Seaman A. Knapp School of Country Life.

Irresponsible chauffeurs, a decidedly tough class of young men, and other drivers have been running over people at an alarming rate in Chicago during the past few months. The head of the city vehicle department in his report to the chief of police, says that failure to punish offenders against automobile regulations is the cause for the increased recklessness and fatalities. When they send these fellows to the penitentiary, there will be a decided falling off in fatal accidents.

War veterans in America are not slow in taking advantage of the new pension law. More than 25,000 applications for pensions under the new law were received up to noon, May 21. The total number is expected to reach 50,000. "There is no telling," said Commissioner Davenport, "how much the increase of pensions will cost the government. There is one clause in the bill that will cause considerable difficulty in interpretation. We have had thousands of letters questioning that provision. It is the one that provides for $30 a month, $1 a day for an applicant who is unfit for manual labor as a result of wounds or disease incurred in service. It will be difficult to define the word unfit. Whether it shall apply only in cases of total disability, or partial unfitness, cannot be said. Then there are many kinds of unfitness."

The commercial progress of the United States of Brazil during the last year is shown in Marshal Hermes da Fonseca's presidential message to congress. The salient features of the message are that Brazil's foreign trade during 1911 increased by $44,100,705, from $554,817,805 in 1910, to $598,918,510 in 1911. Brazil possessed at the end of 1911, a railroad system of 13,829 miles, and many more thousands of miles of track are being laid.

Commander Luigi Luiggi, inspector-general of the royal Italian engineers, and professor of harbor engineering at the Royal University of Rome, who is in Philadelphia as one of Italy's delegates to the International Navigation Congress, asserts that emigration from Italy to the United States is about to end. Instead of coming to America, the surplus population of Italy is to be diverted to Tripoli. We will not miss them, as there have been too many criminals among them. We can get some one else to build our railroads and cut our hair.

The American Immigration League announces the gift of 13,000 acres of truck farming land in suburban New Jersey, valued at $2,500,000, which is to be parceled out free to deserving immigrants who decide to become farmers. The donor is Montifiore G. Kahn, cousin of Otto H. Kahn, the New York banker. The property is located near Davenport, N. J., midway between New York City and Philadelphia. Certain parts of this land will offer opportunity also for the development of small brick yards and pottery plants. In a statement to the League's officers, Mr. Kahn says: "My idea is to form a complete community in Davenport where immigrants may not only settle, but govern and spread out into all branches—industrial, educational, and agricultural. No settler will have the right to purchase his tract. He will be able, however, to take as long a leasehold as he pleases. And his profits will be entirely his own."

It takes just one minute and forty-eight seconds to close one of the 488-ton electrically-controlled steel lock gates of the Panama Canal, according to the report on the first test of the canal gate moving machinery, recently conducted at Gatun. The great lock leaf—54 feet high, 65 feet long, and 7 feet thick—the like of which has never been seen in any other canal, was held under perfect control and swung without noise or vibration.

The American record for greatest duration of flight of an aviator alone was broken by Paul Peck, of Washington, at Nassau boulevard on Long Island, on May 20. He was up 4 hours 23 minutes and 15 seconds. The previous record, made by Howard Gill, of Baltimore, was 4 hours 16 minutes and 35 seconds.

—That we are consuming our forests more than three times as fast as they grow, is shown by government statistics. This means disaster not far in the future.

—All Congregational ministers in Kansas hereafter will require all prospective brides and grooms to provide health certificates before the ministers will read the marriage ceremony. The Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, the preacher-author, announced a month ago that he would never marry anyone until both the bride and groom had been examined by reputable physicians and health certificates secured. At the Kansas General Conference at Great Bend, Dr. Sheldon introduced a resolution requiring that all Congregational ministers require the health certificates in every case, and the resolution was adopted unanimously.

—During the last six years the Associated Jewish Charities has disbursed approximately $2,000,000 for the support of Jewish charitable institutions of Chicago. The amount already pledged for the present year, beginning May 1, 1912, is $430,000, the largest amount in the history of the organization. Of the nineteen charities which are beneficiaries of the association, the Michael Reese Hospital receives about $100,000 a year, the Jewish Aid Society relief department $110,000 a year, and the Home Finding Society about $40,000.

About People

—Senator Murray Crane, of Massachusetts, has announced that he will not be a candidate for re-election when his term expires, March 3, 1913. Crane, who was formerly the governor of Massachusetts, is fifty-nine years old, and immensely rich. The paper mills he owns are among the greatest in the country. They make all the paper used by the government for the currency, besides doing a tremendous business generally. Besides these interests, he is one of the largest owners of the telegraph and telephone trust. He has been in charge of the Taft campaign and himself was defeated for delegate-at-large to the Chicago convention in the Massachusetts primaries.

—Cipriano Castro, former dictator of Venezuela, will never again take part in South American politics, according to advices received at the state department in Washington. It is stated that Castro is at Teneriffe, Canary Islands, and so firmly in the grasp of the chronic disease from which he is suffering as to make it unlikely that he will ever be able to resume his activities.

—William A. Prendergast, controller of the city of New York, has been selected by Colonel Roosevelt to make the speech placing him in nomination for the presidency, before the Chicago convention. This fact was made public by Lucius N. Littauer, former congressman, and one of the Roosevelt national delegates from New York. Mr. Prendergast has been an active figure in Colonel Roosevelt's campaign.

—Henry Lee Jost, who, at the age of thirty-one, has just been elected mayor of Kansas City, Mo., has made his own way, battling against adverse circumstances, from childhood. His father placed him in a children's home in New York when he was two years of age, being too poor to support the child. Four years later he was sent to Missouri with a party of waifs for whom homes had been found. The farmer who adopted him, encouraged the lad to study, and he finally won his way through the law school.

—Captain Roald Amundsen, discoverer of the South Pole, has announced from Montevideo, his intention to start from San Francisco in March or April, 1913, on an expedition to the North Pole. He will have with him the same men who accompanied him on his last expedition.

—The new minister from Siam, who has just arrived in this country, is Prince Traldos. He is the youngest of all the representatives of foreign countries, being only twenty-nine, and is a first cousin of the king.

—Maud Ballington Booth, "Little Mother of the Prisons," is doing a grand work among those who have been so unfortunate as to get into the penitentiaries and jails of the land. Hope Hall, a home for ex-convicts, has just been dedicated in Chicago. It is operated by the Volunteers of America. Former prisoners of Illinois penal institutions purchased a corner stone, and at their request it was laid by Mrs. Booth. During the past year, the Volunteers have obtained an average of one pardon each day for convicts of the Joliet penitentiary. There are eighteen of these men now living at the home—many others have obtained positions, and have been given a new start in life through the efforts of the Volunteer Prison League.

—Louisiana has chosen two new United States senators. Representative Joseph E. Ransdell, and Robert F. Broussard, of Louisiana, were elected by the legislature last week. Mr. Ransdell succeeds Senator Foster, whose term expires in 1913, and Mr. Broussard will succeed Senator Thornton in 1915.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT . . . . . EDITORS

Like as a Father

TO THE HEBREW WRITER GOD was a father who pitied his children. To the race he will always be more the father than the judge. Judge and judgment are words that sound ominously but the fatherhood of God has been the bright star in the crown of our religion. The world needs mercy far more than it needs judgment. It is because of the mercies of God that we are not consumed; it is his holiness that reveals the enormity of our guilt; it is his wisdom that makes foolish the wisdom of the world; it is his care that meets all our needs as rising tides fill creeks and bays.

* * *

Frederick W. Robertson's sermon "The Glory of the Virgin Mother" will be read by uncounted generations because its teaching not only reflects the heart of a great section of Christendom, but because the worship of Mary, Mary of the broken-heart, has its root in human nature. It is the soul's attempt to find in God something of the mother-love. Our masculine conceptions of God, the judge to the oppressed, the deliverer to the captive, the king of all kings to people who live under kingly rule, the conqueror to the soldier, have led the world to overlook the less public virtues, the tender attributes, and God to millions is little better than the judge whose glory is to execute judgment. But in him we know that justice and love meet in their perfection, and because he is God there must be power combined with the tenderness of a mother's arm. We are his people and the sheep of his pasture.

* * *

It is in Jesus that we find the revelation of God's love for the race. God so loved the world that he gave. Giving is always the expression of love, of the heart that overflows. Jesus in turn gave himself, emptied himself of all that men prized, took on himself the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men. His love went even unto death because there was none other to do what he did. Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends. He knew the world's need, felt its anguish, bore its burdens, and died that the sharpness of death might be overcome for all men.

* * *

That devoted Jewish wife who when her husband was doomed on the sinking ship chose to remain and find her grave by his side is in the line of heroic succession with all those who have laid down their lives at the call of all that is imperial in human nature. She preferred to taste the bitterness of death with her mate rather than to drink the wine of life alone. And I have no doubt that in that sacrificial line from Calvary to the present hour each one has learned how deep was the shadow of the garden, the anguish of the cup, the burden of the cross, the darkness of its noonday, and the glory of its triumph.

* * *

Our mothers and not the theologians are the true interpreters of God. From our mothers came our noblest conceptions of God. With firesides for altars they taught us the sweetest lessons of divine love. The theologies of men change with the passing years, but the lessons imparted in a school of Christian experience, at a mother's feet as a shrine, in the twilight, that dim religious light which God sheds through his world-temple, the lessons of those sacred hours remain. It is the mother-love like God's that pities, forgives, bears the ills with uncomplaining patience, and reveals a mightier love that passes knowledge. I wonder if a mother could pass sentence of doom upon her son because he had made an honest mistake? Would not the love of a mother bear the burden of her son's sin rather than cry out for vengeance? But the unfeeling theologian has almost made us wonder whether our God is as divine as our mothers.

* * *

The friends of natural religion have much to say of the God of nature. They look up through nature to nature's God. But the God of nature is not a God of love; he is a God of law, a being in whom the exclusive theology delights. He knows no pity, his heart cannot be touched by a feeling of our infirmity, he cannot forgive, he cannot save. He is the God of the fit, not the God of the frail; the God of the storm, not the God of the striving. He can lift the mountains from their sockets, give lustre to the stars and color to the insect's wing, but he cannot dry our tears. If in nature we see God's hand it is in revelation that we behold his heart. For through it we know that God is love.

* * *

"I know what mother's face is like,
Although I cannot see;
It's like the music of a bell,
It's like the way the roses smell,
It's like the secrets fairies tell—
All these it's like to me.

"I know what father's face is like,
Although I cannot see;
It's like his footstep on the stair,
It's like his whistle on the air.
It's like his arms that take such care,
And never let me fall,

"And so I know what God is like,
The God whom no one sees;
He's everything my mother means,
He's everything my father seems,
He's like my very sweetest dreams,
But greater than all these."

ELLIS B. BARNES.

Social Survey

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN.

Religion and Usefulness

Both on the side of the old-time religionist and of the new social reformer, there has been hesitancy in mixing up the interests of religion and those of the modern social movement. The president of the American Federation of Labor is quoted as saying, "My associates have come to look upon the church and ministry as the apologists and defenders of the wrongs committed against the interests of the people."

Among the socialists there has not usually been a front attack upon religion but a sneering attitude of disrespect. Marx insisted that the law of economic determinism would put an end to religion since he regarded religion as hitherto but the reflection of the economic order. Bebel said, "Religion will not be abolished or God dethroned. Without attack by force, religion will naturally perish."

While there has been this aloofness upon the part of the leaders of the modern social movement, there has been a similar caution on the part of the leaders in the church. Religious men have thought that the sanctuary was about to give away to the workshop and the place of prayer yield to the gymnasium. They have looked upon social settlements, institutional churches, and all such devices as being dangerous makeshifts to take the place of the real thing. A minister standing in Hull House is reported as saying, "This is all very beautiful, but I wish there was more of Christ in it."

Perhaps no single movement in modern times has done more to make these two kinds of people understand each other than the Men and Religion Movement. From the same platform were presented the claims of the old and the new. The leaders in Sunday-school, evangelism and like interests worked harmoniously with the leaders in boys' and social service. Best of all this matter was fully reported not only in the church papers but in the authoritative organ of the social movement in America, the Survey.

It would seem that we might hope that men will accept the possibility of being religious and useful at the same time.

A Source-book of Democracy

The democratic sentiments of modern times are no new inventions for the race. Their origins are to be found in the Bible. In all literature there is not to be found more insistence upon the rights of the common people than in the charter document of the Christian faith.

It is in the epistle of James that we find the greatest plainness of speech with regard to the snobberies that sometimes exist in churches. We might almost think we were listening to a socialist writer as we read his ringing words, save that he offers us no materialistic remedies. He rebukes those who hold the faith with respect to persons. "For if there come into your synagogue a man with a gold ring, in fine clothing, and there come in also a poor man in vile clothing, and ye have regard to him that weareth fine clothing, and say, 'Sit thou here in a good place,' and ye say to the poor man, 'stand thou there,' . . . . do ye not make distinctions among yourselves?"

Respect of persons is called sin. We think the pew rent system would have had a hard time in James' church. James had but a poor opinion of the rich. He charges them with oppression. "Come now, ye rich, weep and howl for your miseries that are coming upon you. Your riches are corrupted and your garments are moth-eaten." They keep back the hire of their laborers. They are to share the deepest miseries in the judgment because of their oppressions.

Yet James would have the neighborly law of love apply to them as well. James insists upon more than sentimentalizing about the needs of the poor. It does no good to tell a man we are sorry for him unless we give him food and raiment.

It is James who delivers the arraignment against the tongue. Every worried pastor can say amen to this analysis of social misery. After we have been fed and clothed, we make each other miserable by the odious gossip that eats as a canker at our social organism. Each church that is torn with faction, and disabled for the work it ought to be doing should heed the words of James.

Martin Luther rejected this epistle because it had so little doctrine. We rejoice in it because it sounds the human note in a most effective way.

Three Ways of Fighting Social Evil

The first way is palliative. It undertakes to repair the wrong after it has been committed. Like the charities of the Roman Catholic Church it does not seek to inquire into causes. Like the pledge signing campaign in the early days of the temperance reform, it is content if it shall save some from the social miseries that have befallen them. We would not say that palliative work should not be done. Slum boys should have summer outings, even though we are not able yet to abolish the slum. There is need of bread for the poor in hard times, even though we are not yet able to compel justice in the industrial order.

The second way is preventive. It goes to the task in the spirit of the physician. The wise physician who has public spirit is not content to cure every case of typhoid fever that comes to him. He examines the water supply and perhaps advocates a public filtration plant. He is not content to send tubercular people out West. He teaches the people how to avoid tuberculosis. In the same way, there are many social evils that can be prevented, and an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. Divorces can be prevented by better marriage laws and a different social attitude toward courtship. Drunkenness may in some towns be best fought by preventing it through introducing a working schedule with fewer hours.

The third way is to combat evil with good. It is in this sense that the church can make all of its work acquire a social significance. Fighting evil with good is bringing the good into such prominence that the evil is forgotten. The street gang is restless for activity. A club directed by the church with a live man for the head will know how to divert the energies of boys into channels that will be healthful and beneficial to all concerned. Most of our work with children must proceed on this principle. The reform of criminals lies in just such a program as this. Men must think and act and when we teach them the good, we always displace just so much of the bad.

Social Work Among the Unitarians

Though the Unitarians are one of the smallest of the well-known denominations, they have in many ways the best formulated social program, clear-cut and without compromise, that is to be found in the Christian world today.

In the days of their origins, they cherished notions of social service. Dr. Channing said, "It seems to me that we understand better than most Christians that it is the object of our religion to establish fraternal union among all classes of society, to break down our present distinctions, and to direct all the energies of the cultivated and virtuous to the work of elevating the depressed classes to an enlightened piety, to intellectual and moral dignity. To us, it seems to me, this work peculiarly belongs. We ought to be by pre-eminence, Christian philanthropists."

After these noble words were spoken, the Unitarian movement was plunged into dogmatic controversy, more severe than ever came to a religious movement in this country. It had the effect that such controversies always have on a religious movement. The organization was left with a certain factious, rationalistic temper, and in rejecting the older dogmatism became more dogmatic than any. It was Unitarianism in this middle state which induced Jenkin Lloyd Jones to withdraw from the Unitarian conference when he launched a social program on a large scale.

Unitarianism of today, however, has organized a Department of Social and Public Service, with a paid secretary and has put forth over twenty leaflets by eminent authorities in different lines of social work. These leaflets are models of precise statement, often yielding as much as the padded volumes that have been appearing lately in the field of social service. They report institutional churches in many cities with interesting programs. They claim to have the largest and best settlement house in the city of Buffalo. When we think how much this denomination, numerically weak, is doing, we cease to boast of more pretentious bodies who make great parades of membership rolls but are not doing this every-day work of the kingdom.

—Beside their universities and colleges, the Baptists own and control ninety-six secondary schools, valued at $5,285,857, with an endowment fund of $1,981,868. They have in these schools 16,365 students.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

The Newer Evangelism in Methodism

At a time when many of our professional evangelists are thrown into a frenzy by what they call the attacks of the "higher critics" on their work and methods, the Methodist Church, the great pioneer in evangelism, and even sensational methods, comes to the fore with the report from the General Conference at Minneapolis demanding a "newer evangelism." That fact alone should make the fearful calm; it should teach all who regard a criticism of evangelistic methods as an attempt to destroy the faith of men, planned by those who have lost faith in Christianity, that these criticisms have their foundation in fact, and are as widespread in other churches as in our own. Why should evangelists be compelled to revise their objectionable methods by the pressure of public opinion? How much better it would be if they would accept all criticisms from their brethren in a friendly spirit, and profit by suggestions of others? How much better to talk over the situation as it is, rather than to rip and rant and rave, to assign the basest of motives to honest men who are just as anxious to see the world evangelized as an evangelist could be? And how much better to be in the forefront of evangelistic work, revising methods, seeking for the best ways of doing God's work in the world, rather than limping along in the rear, and seeking for better things only when the world positively refuses to countenance methods which would not be recognized as a square deal, even in the marketplace? So we recommend to the attention of evangelists and churches the following from the Northwestern Christian Advocate (Methodist). It is worthy of a careful study:

Not only is the evangelistic note to be in all the ministries of the church; it is also to be in the ministries of all the church. There is an admitted responsibility upon the minister; a renewed emphasis is to come upon the equal responsibility of the church member. The report says, "We also declare our conviction that true discipleship to Christ includes and is tested by the spirit and work of apostleship, so that every layman is thereby commissioned to convey the unsaved his experience of the gospel of Christ by the testimony of his lips as well as by the power of his life." It is true, as the report says, that there is nothing more dispiriting and spiritually enervating than to see the administrative lay leaders of our churches in official position either unconcerned or unresponsive to the pleas of a pastor to coöperate and participate in the direct evangelistic work of the church. But it is quite as true to say that there is nothing more demoralizing than a church membership mute on the matter of God's dealing with them in the providences of the daily life. There is no value in heedless and undiscriminating talk about religion; but there is unmeasurable power and blessing in a reverent and spontaneous witness to the presence and conscious presence of Unseen Power in the perplexities, difficulties and temptations of the life we live by faith in the Son of God. Nor should this witness be restricted to set seasons, though set seasons, when disciples are come together for the purpose, are the best preparation for the fitting word in all seasons. It is the privilege and duty to be instant in season and out of season; in company or with a single soul. The report pleads with the vast membership of Methodism "to adopt the Christ-like habit of winning others to Christ as a life habit, not by impulse nor for a season, not limited to any part of the calendar nor to any exclusive method, but the adoption of winning others to Christ as an essential part of the Christian life, and as a personal responsibility upon all our people, created by their membership in the kingdom of Christ. This," adds the report, "Should be our Methodist practice. Ministers are not released from their soul-winning responsibility, but they cannot and ought not to bear the evangelistic responsibility of our laymen. Every Methodist minister an evangelist; let this be our demand. Yea, more, every Methodist member an evangelist; this is our expectation."

Slovenly Prayer

The following from the Congregationalist and Christian World should help us all to consider the place of prayer in the services of the church. The men who can preach well are legion in comparison with the number who can pray intelligently and scripturally. Many pulpit prayers are merely formal and perfunctory. It may be that God is moved by them, even when the congregation is not; but we are sure so far as the earthly ear is concerned, the prayer might as well not have been spoken. Many of our prayers are verbal leaps into the dark. We have neither a plan nor a goal. The writer often wonders whether his brethren in the ministry ever give the matter of public prayer a thought. The sermon is well studied; the prayer is the inspiration of the moment. There is an unwritten law among us that prayers should never be written; consequently, our best style and thought are reserved for our auditors in the pew. If an address to the President of the United States is prepared with the utmost care, why should not our petitions to the heavenly Father be prepared also? To say that God cares nothing for the form, but everything for a devout heart, is to put a premium on slovenliness in the pulpit. We owe him the best of everything we possess. The prayers of the greatest preachers are epics of the soul; they would be famous for their prayers alone. So we commend to the attention of our readers the criticisms of this earnest Congregational woman.

We have recently opened our columns to discussion of the sermon and its length, and now one of our frequent contributors, Miss Zephine Humphrey, in the May Atlantic offers a text for discussion of length, propriety, and good taste in what is known as the long prayer. Miss Humphrey seems to have had an unusually unfortunate experience in listening to the prayers of ministers. We never remember to have heard such matters as a legacy to the Sunday-school superintendent, Mr. Brown's fever, old Mrs. Simpson's broken hip, "the vague surmises of hidden and quite unmentionable trouble which lurks in the Hawkins family," or the last Johnson baby, referred to in any prayer from the pulpit. We agree entirely with Miss Humphrey that these are matters which in their detailed consideration do not belong in the public prayers of the sanctuary. We are quite ready to concede the point that this general prayer makes a large claim on the intellect, sympathy, and good taste of the minister, and also that ministers being human and many of them imperfectly educated, they do not always rise to desirable levels of good sense and good taste. "The invocation," says Miss Humphrey, "wings its way straight to heaven, but the long prayer goes the round of the pews." That is an admirable definition of what no prayer in the worship of the congregation should do. The result is certain to be distaste or distraction. What Miss Humphrey says of its effect upon her own mind will be true of many if not of most. "I have said that it offends against reverence and humor. Yes, even although, and precisely because, it sometimes quickens mirth. Humor is too fine a spirit not to know its place in the world and to resent any offer of privilege where it does not belong. It really hurts the cause of humor to laugh in church. As for reverence—the good God must be very patient with us, if he sets the long prayer down only to the score of our stupidity." We hope that the offenders in this matter, and since Miss Humphrey has been an attendant on Congregational churches, there must be some offenders—we hope the offenders will note and inwardly digest Miss Humphrey's criticism. She concludes by saying that the whole question of prayer is a difficult one. It need not be difficult if the minister, while sympathetic with the needs of the congregation and the church at large, recognizes the fact that he is speaking to God in their behalf and must speak reverently and simply or he will fail to carry the thoughts and feelings of his congregation with him.

The Presbyterian Assembly

The Presbyterians are criticizing the great and growing expenses of their assembly. The annual budget of the assembly amounts to $105,190. Some of the items as presented at the General Assembly recently concluded at Louisville are:

Assembly commissioners' mileage, $43,000; entertainment, $17,000; salaries, stated clerk, $5,000; assistant clerk, $3,500; permanent clerk, $750; office stated clerk, $4,750; minutes, $10,500; executive commission, $5,000; judicial commission, $1,200; special committees, $3,000; and moderator's expenses, $500.

A new policy was adopted concerning the care of aged and disabled ministers. The ministerial relief and the ministerial sustentation funds were consolidated. Hereafter, the policy of the General Assembly will be to provide for all ministers a definite pension, or annuity, based upon the period of services rendered, and all Presbyterian ministers will be urged to identify themselves with the Sustentation department. Every church is expected to contribute annually to the Relief department, and a permanent endowment of not less than $10,000,000 is to be secured as soon as possible.

In an effort to supply pastors to the 3,000 vacant pulpits, the assembly created a new standing committee on vacancy and supply, which will have its headquarters in Chicago. The committee will serve as a clearing-house, endeavoring by correspondence, which the assembly decided, after debate, should not be confidential, to bring the pastors to churches without pastors.

—At the Methodist Conference, which has just dissolved, a prominent western pastor, was for a while a strong candidate for bishop until the report was spread abroad that he was seen smoking on Sunday. Thereupon his vote immediately fell to below 100.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—SILAS JONES, IDA WITHERS HARRISON, ORVIS F. JORDAN, ELLIS B. BARNES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy, 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

God's Perfect Way

The theme of the eighteenth psalm is Jehovah's unceasing care for the king of his people. The first part of it is a prayer for the deliverance of the king from deadly peril. The peril is described under the metaphor of drowning. The prayer of the king is heard and Jehovah descends upon his cherubic chariot to give aid to his servant. His weapons were thunder, lightning, and earthquake. Then the king praises Jehovah for salvation from peril and for guidance.

Does God always hear the cry of his servants and come to their relief? Does he also visit swift punishment upon those who trample his laws under foot? It is easy to go astray in answering these questions. It used to be thought that calamities like the Galveston storm and the earthquake that devasted Southern Italy were evidences of divine displeasure at the sins of the persons destroyed. We must invite those who still hold this opinion to explain why so few of the wicked are punished by these calamities and why many righteous suffer with the wicked. Outrageous sinners defy God and seem to be on good terms with natural forces. Pious men are not passed by in the devastations of flood and earthquake.

When men venture too close to the volcano for the sake of gain, when they live where the storm and flood may reach them, when they build carelessly and invite destruction, we do not hesitate to talk of human responsibility for calamities. The great ship strikes an iceberg and hundreds of lives are lost: we at once start an inquiry to fix the blame for the loss of life. We do not blame God, we blame men for carelessness and recklessness. The plague visits a city. We look into the conditions of living in order to discover the cause of the plague.

The believer must, however, find a place for God in the ongoing of nature. Its laws are God's laws. Hence they must have some relation to conduct. This relation he sees in their very rigidity. They afford an opportunity for moral life. Man can depend upon the return of seasons and therefore he knows when to sow and when to wait with patient confidence for the coming of seed time. Plants have their ways of growing and man can learn of these ways and profit by his knowledge of them. Some plants are fit for food and others are poisonous. Man knows what to expect from the food he eats. Even the calamities due to natural causes over which he has no control have their moral uses. The writers of the Bible employed them successfully in teaching the men of their day to respect the laws of God. In the presence of some awful disaster the petty and mean ways into which we have fallen appear for what they are. The selfishness that has been eating at our hearts gives way or else it discloses itself in all its ugliness and can no longer be disguised as something noble.

God's perfect way is not necessarily what we have thought it to be. The legalist of old was sure he knew what God was demanding of men. His confidence was born of ignorance. He had a system of rules which he believed contained all the duty of man. He ignored life and its needs. God comes to us with help for the experience of every day. His perfection is such that it can be expressed in many ways to men. The heart of man is made to understand the calls of God. We often charge it with desperate and incurable wickedness because we have set up a formal standard of conduct which has no relation to the experiences of the persons we know and then we call them hard names for being indifferent to the ways of God. They may be more loyal to the king of heaven than we are. Before we cry out that the world is utterly and hopelessly evil we ought to be sure that we know something of God's ways. We need to be told of our sins, of this every honest heart is assured. Our monitor will serve us best, however, if he gives his approval to all activities that have a place in God's plan.

Religion is personal relation. Forgetting this and substituting for experience rules that have been made to guide us in our relations to one another and to God we have formalism and legalism. The cure for legalism and formalism is to return to experience. It is Jesus himself that saves us, not some theory about him or some practice which does not grow out of our relation to him. God satisfies every worthy desire of the soul. We need, therefore, to be free in approaching him. The strains of religion are for our good: it would be a mistake to identify them with God's perfect way; they help us to keep in that way. That way is freedom in Christ. [Midweek Service, June 12. Ps. 18:20-35.] S. J.

The Native Christian

The purpose of all missionary work is the interpretation of God in terms of the life of Christ to the non-Christian peoples. There is, to be sure, an indirect value in the reaction upon the Christian community at home, quite apart from the good that is wrought in the heathen world. If there were no results such as could be tabulated in the reports of missionary societies the task of missions would still be immensely worth while, because of its stimulation of the nobler qualities in the church. But the outstanding ideal of the enterprise is the transformation of heathen lands into Christian communities; the changing of the kingdom of this world into the kingdom of our Lord.

To this work every Christian is committed by the primary acceptance of the doctrine of one God. Monotheism affirms the oneness of deity, and therefore at the same time the ultimate acknowledgement of the one true God by all mankind. The man who does not believe in foreign mission work consents to the assumption that there are races which may be permitted to worship other gods without protest on the part of the Christian Church. But such a man is neither a monotheist nor a believer in the teachings of Jesus. One of the great declarations of the Savior is that which states his universal shepherd care as the bringer of mankind to the Father: "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold. Them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold and one shepherd."

This and the other truths revealed by Jesus are for all men. The gifts of life which the Master came to bring are for no one race or class, but for all. Christianity is not the religion of an esoteric circle, a mystic brotherhood or an inner group. It has great mysteries which only the patient and the pure in heart can understand. But it has no secrets and no favored peoples. The Christian of western lands needs to keep this fact in mind. The Christianity of China or India when it once begins to dominate the lives of those nations will not be the Christianity he knows today. It will take its own free form, and will express itself in new and vital terms.

But when the gospel is made known to the man of the Orient, of Africa or of the Islands, it does not find him without a religion of his own, a religion that in most cases seems to him satisfactory. Sometimes it is a very low form of belief, hardly superior to animism or fetishism. Again it may be a very noble religion, and one of whose history and literature he is proud. It may be a native faith, such as his people have always professed: or it may be the result of missionary effort in the past, as is the case with the majority of Buddhists and the entire Mohammedan world. Furthermore, when the Christian religion confronts either of these two religions, Buddhism or Islam, it is face to face with forms of belief which are almost as aggressive in their missionary activities

Congregationalism Breaking Down

English Free Churches Surrendering Independency

BY LESLIE W. MORGAN.

In view of the question of a closer organization amongst the Disciples of Christ in America, it may perhaps be of interest to "Christian Century" readers to hear something in regard to similar movements in England. The Free churches in England have a stronger passion for independency than even the Disciples of America, if that is possible. It is born and bred in them. Their fathers fought and even died for it, sometimes brought on by slow torture and starvation through loss of employment under religious persecution. This demand for independency, though quite necessary in those days, went somewhat to seed before the reaction set in. The desire for freedom is as strong as ever, but the cultivation of the spirit of charity now demands that freedom should be linked with fellowship. The sense of independency, which may be called the sixth sense in the modern industrial world, has not been without its influence in religious circles. The same forces that are causing various denominations to view Christian unity in a new light, are working toward the unification of the churches within a given denomination.

Decisive Steps Toward Unity.

It is somewhat strange that this year, 1912, should see some decisive steps taken toward closer unity and away from independency. For this year is the 250th anniversary of the "Act of Conformity." It is being hailed in some quarters as the end of independency. The spring meeting of the Baptist Union of England and Wales is being held during this week, and the most important item up for discussion was the carrying through of the sustentation scheme which involves, to a certain degree, the surrender of Baptist independency. The scheme has been before the churches for the past three years, and in that time has been subject to repeated recasting in the endeavor to make it more acceptable to the churches. The scheme as at first presented was rejected, but as revised, it has been accepted by twenty-three out of the twenty-six associations throughout the country, while only 129 churches out of a total of 1,439 have definitely rejected it. It is true that only 766 have definitely accepted it, but then it is to be expected that a denomination with such traditions would consider so audacious a step with "deliberate wisdom," to quote Mr. Shakespeare's ironic phrase.

Surrender of Independency.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, secretary of the union, originated the scheme, and has been working up to this day for the past ten years, and been patiently laboring to secure the acceptance of a system that will prove adequate. He frankly confesses that in his opinion the present scheme is not so good as was the original one, but he is willing to accept it since it is the best that can be adopted with anything like unanimity. In proposing the adoption of the new system he said, "For 300 years independency has pursued its great way, but it has been an iron way, and there can be no doubt that beneath its merciless, although often triumphant car, the weak and helpless have been crushed and bruised, as they have not been under any other ecclesiastical system in the world."

Provide for Pulpits.

One of the strong points of the new plan is that of providing a church for every approved minister, and a minister for every vacant pulpit. Provision is also made for a minimum salary for every minister—$600 for unmarried men, and $750 for married ones is the minimum. For unmarried men, however, to receive a minimum of $600 per year, the church must not pay less than $350 of this amount. In case the church is raising less than this sum they have adopted what is known by Presbyterians as the "half more" system; thus if a church finds $300 the union funds would find only $150 in addition. There is provision that no grants shall be made for more than five years in succession in any pastorate, unless the minister is re-elected at the end of that time. My readers must understand that a minister is not recalled to his pulpit at the end of each year, as in America.

Leslie W. Morgan.

Admission to Ministry.

Naturally the questions, on what condition a man shall be admitted to the ministry, and on what principle those already in the ministry shall be recognized, have come up for discussion. Since the question of making grants was mooted, certain statements have been framed and certain conditions laid down. A minister who is out of a church, for example, and cannot find one for himself, may apply to the central authorities and he will be sent to some pastorless church as its supply with the hope that he may receive a call. If he fails to receive a call after having thus supplied in a given number of churches, he will be stricken from the list. It is thought that a time limit will make it easier to secure positions for the older ministers since the danger of their being left on the hands of the church will be lessened thereby.

Dr. Clifford was put forward to second the proposal. He referred to himself as "a survival of an age which is past; as a fossil from a stratum long since covered by other strata." He declared that he was not speaking simply from observation; he could well remember the time when it was a hard problem to find the money to buy a new book. The scheme, he said, was not perfect or final, but it was adapted to the present situation, and it was the duty of the church to rise to a height of overflowing self-sacrifice in support of it.

Small Salaries of Clergy.

The smallness of the salaries paid to the average Baptist minister is strikingly brought out by the fact that it will require $75,000 per annum to raise the present salaries of unmarried ministers to $600 per year, and of the married ones to $750. To meet this sum a campaign has been started to raise a capital sum of $1,250,000. Of this sum $275,000 has already been secured.

The Congregationalists have been engaged for the past two years in securing a like amount in order to give their ministers a minimum salary of $750 per year. They have secured the larger portion of this amount, and have naturally altered their system in certain features for the administration of this trust fund. Thus has independency entered upon its decline. The Presbyterian system has supplied the model to a certain extent in the framing of both of these systems.

Field for Church Statesmen.

Is it not true that the man who will have the most to do with the bringing about of Christian union in the future is the ecclesiastical statesman, and not the dogmatic theologian; and the way will be prepared for the statesman of the flaming torch held aloft by the man with a social passion, and by the man with missionary zeal. Are not the Disciples of Christ beginning to feel the effects of having produced no ecclesiastical statesman in their entire history? The soil has not been of the right kind. If he had started to grow, he would have been frost bitten at an early moment, if indeed he could have escaped being pulled up as an obnoxious weed at an earlier moment still.

Would it not be well for us to set about re-studying this whole question in view of the proposed world conference on "faith and order," as suggested by the Christian Unity Foundation. As the first lesson, inquiry might be made into the system in vogue amongst our churches in England. It is as different as possible from that in practice in America, due no doubt, to the fact that the majority of our churches have not only been founded by, but are supported in part from, a central fund.

"Wringcliff" Priory Road.
Hornsey, London.

—The earnest and intelligent work of Basil S. Keusseff among the Slavonic peoples of Chicago is beginning to show tangible results. Recently two persons were baptized. Mr. Keusseff feels the need of a better building in which to hold his services.

—O, Henry, beloved by every editor in the country, sometimes was the bane of their lives, but no one could harbor wrath against him. The humorist had promised to write a story for a big magazine, which failed to arrive. Finally the editor went to O. Henry's apartment and sent up a curt note: "If I don't have that story within twenty-four hours, I will come up and kick you downstairs. I always keep my promises." O. Henry promptly sent back the note, "Dear Bill: If I did all my work with my feet, I'd keep my promises, too."

Orthodoxy and Heresy

The Standards of Christ and of Creeds

BY E. L. POWELL

[A digest of a sermon recently delivered at First Church, Louisville, Ky., reported also in the Louisville Courier-Journal.—Editors.]

Dr. E. L. Powell.

What is orthodoxy? What is heresy? What is the standard by which we are to measure the one and the other? Is heresy a matter of creed or of life? Is the standard by which we are to measure orthodoxy the Christ life or the standards and creeds which are man-made?

You will observe that a most interesting discussion is presented to us in the consideration of this topic. I wish to lay down a few propositions which seem to me indisputable.

Certificate of Orthodoxy.

It would hardly be denied that one who is a Christian is orthodox. Yet the story of the heretic reminds us that many who have manifested the spirit and life of Jesus Christ have been brought under this ecclesiastical ban. Who is the Christian? One of the most admirable definitions with which I have met is this: "A Christian is one who believes in Christ, and obeys him to the measure of his knowledge of his will." More than this could not be required as a certificate of orthodoxy. Less than this could not be demanded. One can certainly do no more than to believe in Christ and to obey Christ to the best of his knowledge of the will of Christ. I affirm, therefore, that one who is a Christian is orthodox, and that one who believes in Christ and obeys him to the measure of his knowledge of his will is a Christian.

To place such a one in the realm of heresy is to declare that there is no distinction between darkness and light, between truth and error.

But it may be said that the standard by which we are to determine the orthodoxy or heresy of a given individual is a creedal standard, that according as one conforms or does not conform to the accepted standards of the various denominations he is orthodox or heterodox. I would ask by whose authority such a standard has been erected?

I am not discussing the truth or the untruth of those theological dogmas which make up the creeds of Christendom. I declare only that it is impossible to make them standards by which one's orthodoxy is to be determined unless it be true that more is necessary for orthodoxy than is necessary to make one a Christian. There can be found on the pages of the New Testament no authority whatsoever for placing interpretations of scripture above scripture itself. In the New Testament there can be found no authority for making human deductions from the New Testament a basis of Christian fellowship or church membership, and besides all this, very much of the subject matter of the creeds of Christendom brings before us subjects which transcend the power and capacity of the intellect to grasp. They cannot, therefore, in the nature of things, be considered as necessary to make one a Christian, and therefore they cannot be necessary in order to make one orthodox.

Represent Development.

These creeds are noble monuments of Christian thought. They represent the historic development of the church in the intellectual realm. We can but have for them great reverence and great respect, but shall we say that one is heretical because of his inability to accept as a result of intellectual processes that which may be declared in these creeds concerning the being of God, the Trinity, the decrees and purposes of God, hidden in his own infinite wisdom and counsel? If the acceptance of such truths—if you may understand what they mean—as the consubstantiality of the Father and the Son, or the exact relationship between the various persons of the Trinity—if the acceptance of such dogmas is necessary to orthodoxy, then the whole church is heretical for the membership of the churches knows nothing and can make nothing out of these metaphysical subtleties which even their creators are unable to explain.

There is another reason, and a logical one, why we cannot make these standards of man-made authorization the test of orthodoxy. It is a simple fact, my friends, that no Protestant church in America requires on the part of its members subscription to these creeds in order to hold church membership, and therefore, they are not regarded as essential to Christian life and character. The time was when subscription to them was made a condition of church membership. That time is no more. If, then, the church membership is not required to subscribe to these creeds as a test of their orthodoxy, by what sort of reasoning can it be made necessary for the preacher or the theological professor or the religious leader to subscribe to such creeds in order that he may be saved from the charge of heresy?

It is a simple fact, admitted universally, that these creeds are for the benefit of an elect company, and hence there is no trial for heresy of the obscure individual; there is only a trial for heresy on the part of the leader or preacher.

Christ the Standard.

It is impossible for me to reconcile this curious and paradoxical situation as I think, upon the subject of orthodoxy and heresy. What is the standard by which we are to determine whether or not one is heretical? There is no other name given under heaven or among men whereby we can be saved other than the name of Jesus. The standard by which we are to measure one's soundness or one's heterodoxy is none other than Christlike in its spirit, in its will, in its authority of truth over human lives and human consciences. Christ is the standard.

I refuse to believe that any man is to be placed in the ranks of the heretical whether he be the obscure church member or the prominent pastor, who in his daily life and in his public service is manifesting the spirit of Christ, and doing the work so that all men take knowledge of him that he has been with Jesus.

I would say this much: First, to deny Him is heresy. There has been but one authoritative confession of faith, and that confession of faith has stamped on it the impreimatures of the Son of God himself. It was mentioned by his humble disciple, Caesari Phillippi, when he declared with passionate conviction, looking his Master in the face, "Thou are the Christ, the Son of the living God." As Dean Stanley tells us, out of this affirmative confession has come, by the ingenuity of theological thought, all of the creeds of Chistendom. To deny Him is heresy.

When Paul declared on one occasion, "I have kept the faith," what did he mean? He could not have meant, "I have kept the faith in the New Testament," for the New Testament had not been written. He could not have meant, "I have kept faith in the conclusions of men who have manufactured a satisfactory theology," for the theology had not been born. He could not have meant, "I have kept faith in the ecclesiastical order of the church," for no such order had been prescribed. What does he mean? He means to say in this day, before theology was born, before church councils came into existence, before the Apostles' Creed had been written or the Nicene Creed, with its metaphysical subtleties, had been born—he means to say, "I have kept faith in Him. I have never doubted Him. I have never doubted His authority, I have never doubted His love, I have kept faith with Him and have manifested that faith in the life which I have lived and in the work which I have done. That is orthodoxy and to my thinking it is the only orthodoxy that is worth talking about or thinking about.

Contending For Faith.

When another inspired writer says, "Contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints," he does not mean that a certain definite number of theological planks in a religious platform must be accepted—he means contend for that faith in Christ, the opposite of which is anti-Christ; that faith in him which is appropriated by and is incorporated into the life and develops the beautiful Christian character. Nothing else could be meant, for there was no other faith had before his thought or could have been before his thought at the time that sentence came from his pen.

If one is true to Him, if one obeys Him to the measure of his knowledge of Christ, he is a Christian. No church council without dishonoring itself can call him heretic.

To deny the spirit of Christ is heresy. I lay down that as a second proposition.

If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His. The reverse of this proposition is true; if any man has the spirit of Christ, he belongs to Christ. When the individual or the church substitutes for the spirit of Christ the spirit of hate, of intolerance, of persecution, of injustice to his brother, he thereby declares to whose fold he belongs. Heresy is more a matter of the heart and the life than it is of the head. If one is guilty of treachery in his soul to the Master by harboring pride and selfishness and hate he is heretical. I do not believe that Jesus would ever have passed by without respect and without honor and without commendation those who gathered about him, and who could have entertained views concerning his person and character that were at utter variance to the truth, while at the same time they manifested his spirit and gave forth his life in their service and in their devotion.

Jesus would not regard Thomas as a heretic, although he was a skeptic. He looks upon him as one who needs only further mental enlightment until by and by he shall be brought into his presence fully and completely, declaring in words that are immortal as expressive of high faith, "My Lord and my God."

Heresy to Deny Love.

To deny love is heresy. Not to love moral beauty when you look upon it, to be indifferent to self-sacrifice and to heroism of life when it is brought to your thought and to your mind and to your heart, this is heresy.

It is because of lack of love that the story of persecution, which is one of the greatest heresies of the church, has been written. There would have been no inquisition, there would have been no torquenada, there would have been no club in the hands of ecclesiastics, used in the name of Christ, had the church recognized that love is the fulfilling of the law, and that the whole of the commandment is contained in these two great words, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

The story of persecution in the history of the church is the story of its worst heresy. Through lack of love, men permitted themselves to persecute each other over questions so infinitesimal in their meaning and relationship to love, as the difference between filium que and filio que, whether or not the holy spirit comes immediately from the Father, or whether it comes from the union of the Father and of the Son!

To deny love, I repeat again, is heresy. If the church of Jesus Christ could once get into the high realm of love—not the high realm of intellectual agreement on questions about which there can never be agreement, because there can be no common understanding concerning them—then the day would come when there would not even be the refined spirit of persecution which is inflicted upon the modern heretic.

For what have our heresy trials in these modern days accomplished? They have embittered brother against brother, and have brought no additional security whatever to the faith or to the orthodoxy of the church. The Presbyterian church many, many years ago—perhaps the last heresy trial in its history—lost as scholarly a man and as sweet a soul and as gentle a Christian spirit as ever adorned its membership, when David Swing was given to the world rather than be retained within the provincial limitations of a denomination. The Presbyterain church sent the most eminent Biblical scholar in America, or in the world, out of its fellowship to do a larger work, without stopping to consider the impoverishment wrought by such dismissal from his own ranks. I allude to Dr. Charles A. Briggs.

Inspired by Sad Sincerity

I do not say, friends, that all of these acts on the part of those tribunals that have tried modern heretics have been inspired by the spirit of hate. On the contrary, I be-

(Continued on page 21.)

A STORY OF THE TITANIC

By Mrs. Jacques Futrelle, Whose Husband, a Prominent Writer, Perished

My husband is dead because he preferred his duty to his life. He did right, and I must bear it. In times like that, civilization is gone; we are back to physical conditions. In those conditions women are the weaker, the less able to take care of themselves. . . . Understand, it is not a matter of sex, but just of the weak and the strong. . . .

Jacques and I sailed on the Titanic only accidentally. We had booked passage on the Adriatic. We were delayed and canceled it. Then we decided to go on the Mauretania; but I had heard that the turbines on those fast boats made a disagreeable vibration. The Titanic was sailing on her maiden trip. We thought it a good adventure to go with her. The very afternoon before we started, we made our decision, packed in a hurry, and just got on board. I remember that while we were throwing our last possessions into our bags, I had a thought which made me faint for a second, and I expressed it to Jacques. I said: "I'm a little afraid. This boat is new. She has never been tried out." But he answered carelessly: "Don't you ever worry about that. She'll never be so safe again as on this trip. They're out for a record every way. Besides, those big boats are practically unsinkable."

Because this was the Titanic's maiden trip, our departure was a great occasion. The wharves and the decks of the Olympic and New York, which lay in port, were crowded with people, who had come to see us off. They cheered and saluted as we pulled out; our band played; a band from shore answered. Jacques and I stood by the rail nearest the New York, as we got headway. Suddenly we saw the New York shiver and move; then her cable nearest us snapped, and the stump whipped back on deck, knocking over some people. I saw her begin to swing toward us. Jacques shouted, "Hold fast for the shock!" I gripped the rail. She swung still nearer, and it seemed certain that we would collide; but just when her rail was about to touch ours, she swung beyond our bows. I was only a little frightened. Jacques laughed and said, "Well, she got that out of her system, anyway!" No one on board, it seemed, thought of being superstitious over the little incident. If we spoke of it at all, we just joked about it. We never know our luck when it comes. It would have been so much better if the New York had wrecked us right there in port!

Then came the prettiest voyage I ever experienced. The ocean, all the way, was like an inland lake. Crowds came on the pier at Cherbourg, and at Queenstown; even the peddlers who crowded about the ship with laces, cheered us. The nights were so brilliant that you could see far ahead by starlight. We were very gay. No one was seasick, and we made a great occasion of the dinners. The women got out their new Parisian gowns and the men all dressed.

On the second day, Jacques and I went over the whole ship. I had heard from someone—I've forgotten who—that the Titanic had been put to sea unfinished. I noticed that men were fitting doors.

Just after we boarded, we met Mr. and Mrs. Harris (Mr. Harris had recently made a fortune as a manager of theatrical productions), whom we had known before, and were delighted to find that they had a stateroom in the same entry with ours—amidships on the starboard side of C deck. We four were much together. On Saturday, Mrs. Harris fell and broke her collar-bone. After that, I stayed with her a great deal. Someone had pointed out the Astors to us. Of course, I, with every other woman on board, was curious about them. His height and her smart little figure would have made them noticeable in any circumstances. She was wearing a pretty ermine cap, and we used to spot it all over the ship, for they moved about among us very freely. They were all alone most of the time. Perhaps they would have been rather glad to scrape up a few acquaintances. I used to think so when I saw her glance up from her reading at every one who passed. But, of course, the rest of us felt that it would have been rather presumptuous to make the first move.

Sunday night came. We had started on the last leg of our trip; we were almost home, and eager to see home sights and faces, as people are at the end of a foreign trip. The dinner was the most beautiful I ever saw. We remarked that we might have been in a hotel ashore for all the motion we felt. You had to look out of the portholes to realize that you were at sea. Once we turned and drank toasts to the next table. Not a person at that table was alive in the morning.

After dinner some of the passengers left the saloon for a turn about the deck. They came back reporting that it had turned freezing cold. I poked my nose out of doors to feel for myself. From a casual conversation I caught the one word, "icebergs."

The night was so beautiful and everyone so gay, that I wanted to sit up late; but a little after dinner, Jacques was taken with a headache. I thought it best to go below with him.

I had fallen into a sleepy spell when I felt a shock and a kind of shiver of the ship. It was so slight that it did not disturb anything, but I sat up in bed. I heard the engines pounding below—reversing. For about twenty seconds, I should say, this pounding continued. Then followed another shock, scarcely heavier than the first. We had struck the submerged part of the berg; it had bounded away from us and bounded back to rip out the bottom of the Titanic.

While I sat up, only a little frightened, but still wondering what it all meant, there came the heavy clang of a gong—the signal to close the water-tight compartments. Of the meaning of that, too, I was perfectly ignorant. What frightened me more was a rush of feet on deck. It might be all right, I felt, but it seemed irregular, somehow. I shook Jacques and woke him. He looked out of the door, walked into the passageway, and ended by saying that they had probably changed course for some reason, and that we had better go back to bed. He crawled into his berth again, but I could not compose myself.

The Escape.

As Jacques walked me to the ladder, I begged him again to let me stay, whatever happened.

"Certainly I'll come—just as soon as the women are taken care of," he answered. "Remember, you have two children. You must think of them. Come, you're keeping people waiting. Don't you see, you're spoiling my chances? They won't have me in a lifeboat until they've taken all the women!"

He said good-bye. An officer seized me by the shoulder, crying, "Come—you belong on deck!" There I had my first complete panic. I don't know what I did, but when we reached the deck the officer was carrying me.

The orchestra had come out on the boat deck, where there was a piano, at about the time when they launched the fourth boat. As we made our way across the deck, they were playing "Alexander's Ragtime Band"—to keep us moving, I suppose. Another officer picked me up and fairly threw me into the boat.

We settled on the water with hardly a splash. Then the men began calling for a knife. The oars were lashed, and they had forgotten to cut them loose before they launched. We bumped against the side. The men stood up and held us away with their hands. They must have found a knife among them, for a moment later they were shipping the oars. One of the men in shifting to the other side of the boat dropped his oar-blade on my head. In Jacques' own words, in the very fact that they had put me off the vessel, I must have come to full realization of the truth, for I remember thinking, "This is the end of me, thank heaven!" I didn't seem to understand that a fatal blow on the head would stun me first—it shows my abnormal state of mind.

We rowed away very fast. I begged them to stand by, for I wanted to see Jacques again, but they said something about suction and we went on. At a safe distance, we hove to. It may have been a half a mile, it may have been less.

I never saw such a quiet, clear, beautiful night. It was dead calm, perfectly clear, brilliant with stars. The surface of the ocean was just heaving gently; there was not a ripple.

The Titanic still floated, the rows of lights indicating her decks. We watched numbly to see if she was going to stay up. We talked it over as impersonally as though it had been no affair of ours. We encouraged each other with false hopes, while our eyes told us that the rows of lights were getting nearer and nearer the water. Only when we saw those rows of lights beginning to get aslant did we give up hope and sit dumb.

The rows of lights began to go out by sections, as though some one had gone along the boat turning off the control switches one by one. But the night was brilliant, and they were setting off rockets continually. We could still see her great hulk. She began to settle by the nose. Then came two dull explosions. We saw her break in two. The bow, which had been pointing downward, dipped, turned up again, writhed, and sank with the stern—exactly as though one had stepped on a worm.

There we sat, dumb, moveless, we women, watching the execution of our heroic men.

I think we must have been a little crazy. Rather, I should say, that we were exalted with the very greatness of the tragedy and its heroism. As the Titanic took her plunge, none made a sound. Then a little French woman began to scream in hysterics. It went through us like a knife, and I heard the voice of a sailor say: "For heaven's sake, make her shut up!" That was the only harsh word which we heard from those rough men that night, and he only expressed what we all felt.

About the rest of that night I can tell nothing consecutive. Mostly, I prayed for Jacques's soul and my own—prepared myself for death. The men were always calling out that they saw the lights of a coming ship. I can't tell how often they were deceived by the green lights which Fourth Officer Boxall was burning in his boat as a signal. These were always false alarms; and finally, I paid no more attention to them. Toward morning, I must have fallen into a heavy stupor which resembled sleep only on the surface—within, my mind and soul were going on and on. Always I came back to the same thought—my husband had died heroically. They must have sighted the Carpathia, and made sure of her, long before I realized it. When it did come home to me, I dared not look toward her. But I raised my head and perceived for the first time that dawn had broken—a beautiful, rose-pink dawn. And there, the cruelest, most wonderful sight I ever saw, were three great icebergs—one of them, doubtless, the murderer. From where we sat by the surface they appeared as tall as skyscrapers. The light made their spires and pinnacles glisten like rose quartz. And among them, near and plain, was a steamer, approaching under full steam with her flag at half-mast.—Lutheran Observer.

Methodist Conference Closes Its Work

The Methodist Quadrennial Conference closed May 29. No change was made in the discipline, which places the ban on dancing, theater-going and other amusements. By a vote of 446 to 369, the General Conference decided to retain the paragraph in the discipline. The vote was taken after a strenuous session, at which a number of delegates favored going back to John Wesley's original rule placing the ban on such "amusements as cannot be taken in the name of Christ."

Dr. W. W. Van Orsdel, Montana Conference, said that if Methodism was in sympathy with the spirit of prohibiting dancing and cards, they would not be hurt by leaving the rule in the discipline.

After a week of balloting, the election of the eight new bishops was accomplished. Their names are given in the order of election: Homer C. Stuntz, D. D., Iowa; Theodore S. Henderson, D. D, New York; W. O. Shepard, D. D., Chicago; Naphtali Luccock, D. D., Kansas City; F. J. McConnell, D. D., Indiana; F. D. Leete, D. D., Detroit; R. J. Cooke, D. D., Tennessee; W. P. Thirkield, D. D., Washington, D. C.

Three Bishops Retired.

The retirement of Bishops H. W. Warren, D. H. Moore, and T. B. Neely, was pathetic, and marked by sensational scenes.

The three bishops were retired by vote after the present system of the church had been attacked in eloquent addresses by Chancellor James R. Day, of Syracuse University, who said that the system savored of the "inquisition," and by Rev. Edward C. Strout, an eloquent minister from New Hampshire. These men and others declared that none of the three bishops should be retired; that they were still effective workers in the church. They tried to amend the report of the episcopacy committee and keep all three on the active list. Chancellor Day intimated that there were church politics back of the episcopacy report recommending the retirement of the men.

An Old Man Eloquent.

After the vote was taken, Bishop Moore walked to the front of the platform and addressed the audience. He wore the button of the Loyal Legion, for although he was ordained a minister in 1860, he enlisted as a private in an Ohio regiment, and served through the war, retiring as a lieutenant-colonel.

Facing the men who had just voted to retire him from active service, he said:

"It is better to have your head off and rolling in the basket, than to lie for ten days and look upward at the keen edge of the guillotine, as I have done. I urge you to adopt some system like that suggested by the dean of the Yale law school, for the automatic retirement of bishops. It would save you from the possibility of political temptation and us from that of anguish and humility.

"You have done what you thought was your duty, and I am submissive to your will. You have discovered that I am not effective. I have not discovered it, but your judgment is better than mine. And this is not to be the finish. I shall still be permitted to show you how far the Gulf Stream of my youth can extend into the Arctic ocean of old age."

Bishop Moore's address was frequently interrupted by sobs, and when he concluded the audience rose and gave him the Chautauqua salute. The bishops gathered around him as he left the platform and threw their arms around his shoulders.

The Governor Speaks.

Declaring the great work of the church was to make the country life of the youth more attractive and city life more wholesome, Governor A. O. Eberhart addressed the conference, urging that the establishment of social centers in the country would stop the heavy migration of country young men and women into the cities.

"I charge the church with failure to take up the greatest problem affecting the life of the young people of the country," he said. "It is apparent that the church has not recognized the opportunity to develop the country environment so as to save the boy and girl. In the crowded conditions of the city, where every problem affecting human life demands the attention of the church, we forget that there is a duty toward the country cousins of our city youth."

Sunday-school Gains.

Ten thousand people took part in the Sunday-school anniversary celebration. Bishop McDowell said:

"We believe in the boyhood, the girlhood, the manhood, and the womanhood of the people being in the Sunday-schools. We believe in the text-book of the Sunday-school, which is the Bible.

"The Sunday-school is for the prevention and cure of wrong. The world needs a revival of the Bible as the book of life. We hold no theory about the Bible, but expect these writings under God to bring men to God and to everlasting life. In these Methodist Sunday-schools we expect men to find their way to Jesus Christ. There is no religious life apart from Jesus Christ."

Dr. Blake spoke of the mighty progress of the Sunday-schools in the last four years. Each year 170,000 members had entered the Methodist Sunday-schools, a gain of 700,000 since the organization of the board of Sunday-schools four years ago. He said the Sunday-school was the greatest evangelical agency in the church, and that its supreme mission was to bring boys and girls into a personal knowledge of Jesus Christ, as the Savior. He said 3,000 Sunday-school members give themselves to Christ every Sunday in the year in Methodism.

Missionary Gains.

In southern Asia, the Methodist Church

made a net gain of 52,000 during the quadrennium, making the total membership 261,885, and 190,583 probationers; 15,413 infants and 101,000 adults baptized, according to Bishop Robinson. More than 166,000 pupils attend the 4,000 Sunday-schools, and the Epworth League membership is 23,007. Bishop Robinson said peace reigned throughout India, following the visit of King George.

"At this hour, the gospel has absolutely unhindered access to people and tribes in southern Asia, constituting one-fourth of the world's population," he said. Quoting from Lord Curzon, the speaker said 80 per cent of the people follow agriculture, read no newspapers because, as a rule, they cannot read, and they have no politics. The educational institutions, he said, are crowded by both sexes. The chief aim is to train the youth along Christian lines, and prepare them to become leaders among their people, both from a state and church standpoint.

South American Field.

The Methodist mission field in South America extends from the Isthmus of Panama to the Straits of Magellan, more than 4,000 miles, and is carried on under the flags of eight republics, according to the report of Bishop Bristol. There are more than 20,000,000 Spanish-speaking people in the territory, who depend largely on the Protestant church for advancement in religious and civic life, he said.

"Methodism finds a hearty welcome among the people of South America," said Bishop Bristol, "and seems peculiarly adapted to the Spanish temperament. The preaching, singing, and mode of service appeals to the hearts of the people. They believe in our theology. They love our missionaries. They are true to our church."

The speaker said that one out of every 2,000 population in South America was a Methodist; that one out of every 12,000 in China and one out of every 1,500 in India had joined the Methodist Church, and that China contributes seventy cents per member for the support of the gospel, India $1, and South America, $7.40. He reported a growth of 23 per cent in membership of the church during the last quadrennium, and said that every department of the church had correspondingly advanced.

Missionary Reports.

After giving a maze of statistics showing the advancement of the church in the Orient, Bishop Bashford told of the Chinese revolution and prophesied that it means Christianity for millions of people.

The report showed an increase of church members of more than 3,000 in four years, with more than 2,000 probationers. Four years ago, there were 17,559 members of the church in China, as compared to 20,723 this year, and 13,419 probationers, as compared to 12,888 in the previous report. There was an increase of three hospitals with a growth of 88 per cent in the number of persons treated during the four years. Students in schools increased 42 per cent, and Chinese workers number 28,082, as compared to 16,053 in 1908. Last year, more than 5,000,000 copies of the Bible were distributed, a large per cent being given to soldiers of both armies. There are calls for 16,000,000 more Bibles which the speaker said would be furnished this year.

Co-operation is Satisfactory.

"It may be encouraging to the Methodists of this conference to learn that thousands of our believers were received into the Presbyterian churches without any question as to orthodoxy, the Methodist catechism being accepted as a fair equivalent for the Westminster," he said, "but we have gone forward with the work of co-operation in the medical work, in education, literature, and indeed all lines of Christian endeavor. If these denominations were united in one organization, but little would be gained. So perfect is the spirit of unity and the expression of it, that we are to all intents and purposes one evangelical church."

Gain in Members.

Within the last ten years, the growth of the churches in Korea has been phenomenal, according to Bishop Harris. He said there are now more than 200,000 believers, and many hundreds of thousands who were near Christianity. Bishop Harris said the churches in the last two years have turned their attention more directly to intensive work; that the churches have been overwhelmed with inquiries concerning Christianity, and have been unable to deal with all the inquiries.

Summing up the situation in Korea, he said: "The Protestants have become one body, having one spirit, and moved by one hope, the immediate Christianization of 14,000,000 of people."

Recent Books

ALMAYER'S FOLLY, by Joseph Conrad, is a reprint of 1912 from the edition published in 1895. The story is laid in the Malay Archipelago, a part of the world rarely touched by the writer of romance. It tells of a white man, who came to this far land in search of fortune, and made a rash and fatal marriage with a Malay woman for the treasure he thought she would inherit. The treasure never materialized, and all his dreams and hopes centered upon his beautiful daughter, and the recognition he hoped to win for her from the people of his own race. But the call of the blood was stronger in the half caste girl than all the artificial restraints with which her father would have bound her. She followed her Malay lover to his own country, leaving her father heart broken—seeking oblivion in the dreams of opium, which soon sank into the dreamless sleep of death. It is a deeply tragic story of the problems and antagonisms of race. (Macmillan Company, New York; Price $1.25).

THE LIFE EVERLASTING, by Marie Corelli, is a return to the occult realm which first brought her fame in the "Romance of Two Worlds," "Ardath," and the "Story of a Dead Self." It is an excursion into the sphere beyond the material world, and deals with a strange affair of both mortal and immortal passion. It propounds startling theories of life and death, and will doubtless repeat the success of her former writings in this line, with that large circle of readers who are lovers of the psychic and mystical. (George H. Doran Company, New York; Price $1.25).

THE HOUSE OF HARPER, by J. Henry Harper, is a history of a century of publishing in Franklin Square. The author is of the third generation of Harpers, and he gives an intimate and interesting narration of the enterprise of the four brothers who founded and conducted this notable house. After the starting of "Harpers' Magazine" in 1850, and later of "Harpers' Weekly," "Harpers' Bazaar" and "Harpers' Young People," the history of the firm is linked with what was best in contemporary literature. In these periodicals were published the works of Thackeray, Dickens, George Eliot, Wilkie Collins, Charles Reade, besides the works of many of the later masters of English and American fiction. In addition to high literary excellence in all departments of literature, their publications became pioneers in artistic and effective illustrations—the work of Edwin A. Abbey, and Thomas Nast have never been surpassed in their respective lines of art. The writer would like to bear grateful testimony to her debt to "Harpers' Magazine"—it was from the bound volumes in her father's library that she made her first entrance into the enchanted world of books. The whole book, in binding, paper, printing and illustrations is an example of the best work of Harper and Brothers. (Harper & Brothers, New York; Price $3.)

SOUTHLAND MELODIES, by Ben King. This is a charming piece of book-binding. No one can be ignorant of the verses of Ben King and claim to be well-read. This volume of negro dialect verse with the fine half-tone illustrations will receive a warm welcome. The negro race is full of great human emotions that men of literature are discovering. [Chicago: Forbes and Company. Pp. 128.]

SOME OUTDOOR PRAYERS. By George A. Miller, is a beautiful little booklet, printed in two colors, with a decorative title-page and covers. It is called by its author, "A little ritual for those who sometimes worship in God's first temples." In several prayers, special gratitude is expressed to the Creator for his beautiful out of doors:—"We thank thee for the things that are out of doors; for the fresh air, and the open sky, and the growing grass, and the tiny flowers; for the setting sun and the wooded hill, and the rolling surf, and the brown earth beneath our feet." Such prayers as these will help us to see the beauties spread so lavishly around us at this peerless season of the year, and awake our hearts to fresh praise and gratitude to the Giver of all good. [New York, Thomas Y. Crowell Company. 35 cents net.]

EARLY STORIES AND SONGS. By Mary Clark Barnes, is prepared for new students of English, especially for the large class of immigrants who come to our shores. The book is endorsed by such authorities as Dr. Edward A. Steiner, and Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch. The stories are told in every day language, arranged in pedagogical form. The stories begin with Abraham, the Immigrant, and are all from the Bible; the author says in the preface: "In the United States of America, a nation built most definitely on religious foundations, it is due to prospective citizens that efforts to help them qualify for citizenship should include the communication of some knowledge of that religious consciousness which is a fundamental part of the heritage of our people." [New York, Fleming H. Revell Company. Illustrated, cloth. 60 cents net.]

THE YOKE OF SILENCE. By Amy McLaren. Like her former successful novel, Bawbee Jock, is laid amid delightful Highland scenes, with fine types of Scotch character for its actors. The old Castle of Pittivie, with its Death Tower, overlooking the sea, Marget Robertson, the housekeeper, Sir Andrew Brewster, the laird, Sandy McNab, the fisherman, are all that could be desired for a background. But the love story played in these surroundings hardly measures up to them. A high spirited, highland girl runs away from her rich English husband, because she is jealous of a former friend of his; she has no real cause to distrust him, for he has never wavered in his affection for her; a few words would have removed all misunderstand- but they are not spoken—so months of estrangement and separation ensue, and the yoke of silence is not broken, until a series of accidents bring them together, and they sail off in his yacht, it is to be hoped into calmer seas than their first years of married life. Why do people in novels so often show such conspicuous lack of common sense? You cannot but get a little out of patience with folks who break the tenderest of human ties for lack of a few friendly straight forward words. [New York. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.35 net.]

THE HIGH CALLING

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS."

Copyright 1911, George H. Doran Co.

CHAPTER VIII.

Felix Bauer very seldom began a conversation with anyone and on this occasion he did not venture to say anything first. During his whole stay in the house, Helen had learned that fact about his habits as a talker. He was a splendid listener and that made him popular with anyone who talked to him. If you want to be popular you don't have to be a brilliant talker. Being a brilliant listener is better.

But Helen had a touch of her father's stubbornness on certain occasions. She was not in any sense what could be called a flirt, or a girl who planned, out of a set purpose, to make a conquest or use her powers of attractiveness to disturb the peace of her young men acquaintances. But she was vain to a certain degree, and she knew when she looked in her mirror that she was unusually attractive, as every beautiful woman knows, and Felix Bauer was different from the other young men she knew. She said to herself as she looked across the room at him that he was certainly no fashion plate and was in fact extremely plain looking, all but his eyes, and Helen acknowledged that Walter was right when he wrote that Bauer had the most beautiful brown eyes he ever saw in a human being. When Helen was a little girl she had once seen Phillips Brooks, and she had never forgotten his wonderful eyes. Bauer's were like that. She could not help wondering what sort of people his parents were and what his home life was. The stubborn feeling prompted her to say to herself, "I'll make him speak first. He doesn't need to be so stupid. And besides it is not gentlemanly in him always to wait for the other person to begin."

She was working at some piece of embroidery, which is an advantage in helping one in situations of possible embarrassment to keep up an appearance, at least, of self-possession. And the pattern being a difficult one gave her the excuse of keeping her eyes fixed on her work most of the time. She sat there in the corner absolutely dumb, waiting for Bauer to speak. A noisy little clock on the shelf over the grate ticked away at least three minutes. Bauer opened his lips once or twice as if to say a word, but nothing came of it. He looked at Helen almost appealingly and once he seemed on the point of leaving the room. But Helen's eyes were fixed on her work and the silence was unbroken by any movement.

At last Helen looked up after a longer period than any other, and to her disgust saw that Bauer had picked up the magazine he had dropped when she came in, and had resumed his reading, or at least seemed to have done so.

For a minute she looked and felt vexed. "The horrid creature!" she exclaimed to herself, and then out loud she said in a sweet voice:

"Is that an interesting story you are reading?"

Bauer instantly closed the magazine and put it on the table.

"I don't know yet, I haven't finished it."

"Were you going to?"

"Yes, some time."

Another period was marked by the demonstrative clock and then suddenly Helen said, "Mr. Bauer, I wish you would tell me something about your folks, and your home."

The simple question smote Bauer like a blow in his face. Instantly he said to himself, "Walter has not told the family about me, about the disgrace, about the ruined home." And at first he felt hurt that Walter had not put the family on their guard. It was not fair to expose him to such questions. How could a girl like Henel Douglas possibly be made a sharer in his tragedy? His father had been a small diplomat at Washington. His mother a high spirited American girl whose ambition had suddenly terminated on the eve of her husband's promotion to a higher post of responsibility, through a scandal that involved both her husband and herself. Both of them were in the wrong, and nothing but unusual effort on the part of those interested had kept the affair out of the papers, at least to a great extent, and besides, the numerous accounts of such home tragedies lessened the emphasis placed on this one, so that Bauer knew that the Douglas family, outside of the editor himself and Walter, were not associating him with an event which left him alone in the world to bear a disgrace that seemed at times to overwhelm him.

But while Felix Bauer was simple hearted and clear souled as day himself, he did possess to a remarkable degree the power of self-possession and self-restraint. His soul had already to a certain degree learned the sad lesson of bearing disaster with calm inward poise. Whatever the tragedy might mean to him in the future, he was not so poor spirited as to let it ruin his own development or poison the peace of others. So he was able to say, after what seemed to Helen only a natural hesitation:

"My people were both born in Germany. My mother was the daughter of the American Consul. I was born in this country. That accounts for my being so good a patriot."

"And I suppose it also accounts for your unusually good use of English. Do you know you speak very correct and pure English, Mr. Bauer?"

"No, do I?"

"Yes, that is, what little you speak," said Helen with a smile. "Do you want to know what I asked Walter in one of my letters?"

"Yes," said Bauer, blushing.

"I asked him if you spoke broken English very badly?"

Bauer did not reply to this and Helen came back to the question of his home life.

"Do your folks live in Washington now?"

"Yes, that is"—all Bauer's self-restraint could not avoid betraying something, and Helen looked at him quickly, and her quick eager mind could not avoid detecting something wrong. She would not for the world have been guilty of a vulgar curiosity or an intrusion into another's secret, and she had enough tact to say at once:

"I've always wanted to go to Washington. Father has promised to take me some time. There must be a great deal of happiness there?"

Bauer looked at her, his great eyes calmly sad. Then he quoted:

"'Gluck und Glas wie bald bricht das?'"

Helen did not know enough German to understand.

"Would you mind translating?"

"'Happiness and glass, how soon they are broken.'"

"You mean some kinds of happiness, don't you." asked Helen timidly.

"Yes, some kinds."

"I hope you have had some of the unbreakable kind during your visit here?"

"Yes." But down deep in his quiet soul Felix Bauer was almost saying to himself, "Will it be for me the heart-breaking kind of happiness?"

After another interlude, which the assertive clock took advantage of, Helen said, "I wish you would tell me something about your work at Burrton."

"My work?"

"Yes, your shop work. Your invention work. You know we were all terribly disappointed that you and Walter did not get the patent. But there are a great many other chances to discover things are not there?"

"Well, yes. I suppose there are." Bauer began to wake up mentally. His face took on an alert look and the glow of the born inventor enveloped his whole being. "You see, Miss Douglas, the field of electricity is in one sense limitless. We know so little about it. And I suppose it is true that new things are possible to an extent beyond our imagination."

"You mean inventions?"

"Yes."

"That's what interests me particularly. I should think it would be awfully fascinating to find new things."

Bauer looked doubtfully at her. Helen was quick to detect the slight hint of suspicion as to her sincerity.

"Do you doubt? What makes you?"

"Well, I—it isn't common for girls to care much about such things generally, and I couldn't help——"

Bauer stumbled along painfully and finally stopped, and Helen was cruel enough to enjoy his confusion.

"But I am interested, Mr. Bauer. I really am. And you must believe I am. You will, won't you?"

"Yes! yes!" Bauer flung the last shred of his doubt to the winds and eagerly begged pardon for his distrust.

"All right. Now that we have settled the quarrel, we will be good friends, won't we?"

"Yes," said Bauer, smiling. "If you want to call it a quarrel."

"It was a quarrel all right," said Helen hastily. "Now you must tell me what your ambitions are, what you are really working for. I have wondered often if it wasn't awfully dangerous to be experimenting with electricity, and how do you try new things with wires and batteries and dynamos and —and—things without getting killed several times while you are trying?"

"It is not as dangerous as some other things," thought Bauer, as Helen, in her real earnestness, put her work down and came across the room and took a chair by the table opposite him. If she had been a real coquette intent on making an onslaught on poor Bauer she could not have chosen a more perfect way to do it. For if you want to engage the hearty good will of anyone, ask him rapid fire questions about the one thing he is most interested in and would like to talk about, if his modesty did not forbid.

So Felix Bauer was never in so electrically dangerous a situation in all his life as at this moment when Helen Douglas came over and sat down there with a real eagerness to know about his ambitions as an inventor. For Helen was honestly interested in many things that naturally belong to man's domain, especially in the realm of mechanical invention.

"Walter has told me what you said about making a writing machine that would take a visible spelled word on paper when you talked into it. You don't really think a thing like that could be done, do you?"

Bauer looked at the quizzical face opposite, gravely.

"Do you? How do you dare say what can or cannot be done in the great universe of electricity?"

"But it would throw out a great army of stenographer girls and that would be a pity. Only, you know," said Helen demurely, "Walter could marry one of them and you could marry another. That would take care of two of them."

Bauer stared, and then blushed furiously and finally laughed.

"Walter has been taking my name——"

"Not in vain," interrupted Helen. "I thought your suggestion for the talking machine was fascinating. I don't suppose you are working at that, are you?"

"No. I haven't got that far yet."

"Can you tell me if you are working on some new thing?"

"I don't mind." Bauer got up and pulled a piece of paper towards him and began to sketch something. Helen got up and went to the end of the table where she could see better.

"There, Miss Douglas. This is my idea for a chicken raiser."

"An incubator."

"Yes. You see this dome is glass, very much like those domes the glass blowers make to put over their glass ships and flowers. The bottom here is wood. The eggs are placed on it in even rows. Here is a hole in the bottom through which the electric lamp is put. A thermostat will regulate the temperature to a fraction of any degree. And—that is all there is to it except to try it on the eggs to see if they will really hatch out."

"I don't see how they could help it!" said Helen enthusiastically.

"I don't either. There's only one thing I can see that is essential."

"What is that?" Helen asked eagerly.

"The eggs will have to be good," said Bauer solemnly.

Helen in her eagnerness to see the drawing, had edged around the table and her face was near Bauer's as she bent over the drawing. She stared at Bauer's solemn face a moment and then burst out laughing, at the same time moving back to the end of the table.

"I believe you are making fun of me," she said. In reality there was a part of Bauer's nature which was unexpected. His quiet habits and his slow speech were apt to give an impression of dullness of intellect and lack of mental quickness. Helen was finding out that Bauer was in many ways the quickest of all her acquaintances. And he had a fund of smileless humor that came as a surprise even to those who thought they knew him best.

"No, I was not making fun of you," said Bauer. As a matter of fact, he was on the defensive with his own feelings, trying by any means to beat them down into the lonesome place where they belonged when that radiant face appeared so near his own.

"Have you tried the machine yet to see if it will work on good eggs?" asked Helen, after a pause, during which Bauer drew a few more lines on the paper.

"No, I'm going to make a full trial of it when I go back to Burrton."

"And if it should be a success, I suppose there would be money in it too, wouldn't there?"

"I suppose so," said Bauer indifferently.

"Then you might actually become rich?"

"I suppose I might. A man who invented a little mouse trap, I understand, made a fortune from it. There are all sorts of possibilities in the world of invention."

"Would you care to be rich?" asked Helen absently.

"I might." For the first time in his life Felix Bauer had flash into his soul the power of money to buy, what? Love? Would it be worth anything if it could be bought? And yet women like Helen Douglas, felt the power of money and—and—demanded it in the young man who aspired to be a possible wooer in this age. Was she like all the rest? And if he should some time be rich would that make any difference? And if so, what difference?

"Money is a great power nowadays," said Helen calmly.

"Yes," said Bauer, slower than usual. And at that moment Mrs. Douglas came in.

"Are you willing to show this to mother?" asked Helen.

"Certainly," said Bauer, smiling. "I am sure she will not betray my secret."

Mrs. Douglas, who had instantly taken a great liking to Bauer from the moment of his arrival, was as enthusiastic as Helen and praised the inventor until he was well nigh overwhelmed.

"I need all this encouragement to help me face Anderson. He will probably pick some flaw in it somewhere. He is merciless with all the fellows."

"I don't see what a teacher is for," said Helen indignantly. "Half of the teachers I know pound at the students all the time instead of giving them encouragement."

"They probably need it," said Mrs. Douglas, wisely.

"Mr. Bauer is going to get rich with his invention," said Helen gaily.

"I'll tell you what I will do, if it goes," said Bauer cheerfully. " I'll divide with Walter. We'll manufacture the incubator ourselves and so get all the profits."

"Don't count your chickens before they are hatched," said Mrs. Douglas, and then added gratefully, "I appreciate that thought of Walter. The poor fellow seems to have lost his ambition since the affair of the arc light. I know you will do all you can to encourage him."

"Indeed I will, Mrs. Douglas. I can't tell you how much I owe to Walter. He is like a brother to me."

The minute he uttered the words he caught himself up and half turned, blushing furiously, towards Helen. But she had already started to go out of the library and Bauer was not sure that she had heard him or paid any attention.

Mrs. Douglas, however, had seen his face and his half startled look and deepening color, and her own face grew grave. It did not seem possible to her that anything serious could happen to the quiet German student during his brief stay with the family. And yet, she was a wise and observant woman who did not at all blind herself to the fact that her daughter had natural gifts of physical and mental attractions, which young men like Bauer inevitably feel. And it needed only this one glimpse of Bauer's face to reveal to her quick mother's sense the fact that Helen had attracted him, how far or how deeply for the loss of his own peace, of course she could not tell.

It was partly on that account that Mrs. Douglas welcomed Helen's confidence when, that same afternoon, the girl came into her mother's room and after a few moments of nervous, restless and aimless talk came and sat down on a low chair near Mrs. Douglas and said, "Mother, I want a plain talk."

(To be continued.)

WHAT THE YANKEES DID.

The Rev. Dr. McCready tells the story of two negroes ambling along the streets of Louisville. It was in the days when electric cars were an innovation, and one of the darkies, on seeing the trolley whisk by, asked his partner:

"How you reckon dat kyar gets along?"

"Why, I tell you," answered the more sophisticated negro, "de kyar gets along by dat little wheel dat runs along de wire. The Yankees invented dat 'ere little wheel."

"Well," continued the first darky, lost in wonderment, "the Yankees suttinly are do mos' wonderful people I ever see. Dey come down here and set de niggers free, an' now they set de mules, free, too!"—Brooklyn Eagle.

DEGENERATION.

The tragedies of early married life were illustated in an incident that occurred not long ago in a Baltimore household.

A young wife sought out her mother-in-law with a most agonized expression and threw herself into a chair with an outburst of grief.

"Has anything happened to Henry?" anxiously asked the mother-in-law.

"He's taken to staying out at nights!" wailed the unhappy wife.

"It doesn't seem possible! How long has this been going on? How late does he stay away?"

"Well," sobbed the young woman, "you know he usually leaves the office at five o'clock. Night before last he did not get home until six, and last night he didn't set foot in the house until twenty minutes after six! Oh, what shall I do? What shall I do."—May Lippincott's.

SUPERIOR RELIGION.

A mistress was greatly concerned over the religious welfare of her cook. She talked with her and read the Bible to her, but still the woman was troubled in spirit. At length the cook came home from the negro church happy and satisfied. This was her explanation: "Yo see, Miss Alice, cullud and white folks dey's different. Now de white folks, dey mus' git deir 'ligion outer books; but cullud folks, dey must git deirs straight from de Lord."—The Continent.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison.

Mrs. Harrison will be glad to receive communications from any of her readers offering suggestions concerning woman's welfare, criticisms of articles or inquiries concerning any matters relevant to her department. She should be addressed directly at 530 Elm Tree Lane, Lexington, Ky.

The Mississippi Valley Suffrage Conference

Up to this time, the great victories for woman suffrage have been limited to the far West. California, Washington, Colorado, Idaho, Utah and Wyoming have granted their women the same political rights as men.

In the coming fall, Oregon will submit a constitutional amendment to her voters to enfranchise her women, and if it passes (as it must!) all the Pacific Coast, from Mexico to California, will present an unbroken line of woman suffrage states. The star of empire may take its flight westward, but now, the star of woman suffrage is moving steadily eastward. Four of the states in the Mississippi Valley are now in the midst of amendment campaigns, and this great territory may well claim to be the seat of war.

In order to bring the workers in this central section together for mutual counsel and encouragement, the Illinois Equal Suffrage Association called the Mississippi Valley Suffrage Conference to meet in Chicago, May 21, 22. The sessions were held in the beautiful ballroom of the La Salle Hotel, and representatives from sixteen different states were in attendance, besides a number of distinguished visitors.

Samuel M. Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor was introduced the first morning, and assured the conference that his organization was not academically, but actually devoted to the cause of woman suffrage. He said he had been a suffragist from the time of his earliest conception of truth, and gave the sound advice that the women should not only believe in this doctrine, but be firmly convinced of its ultimate and inevitable triumph; no movement, he said, could win, unless its adherents sincerely and enthusiastically believed that victory perched on its banners.

This was a fine opening note, and every heart there responded to the challenge—success seemed already hovering in the air.

Interest centered on reports from the four campaign states in the Mississippi Valley, Ohio, Kansas, Wisconsin, and Michigan, where amendments to their constitutions, granting suffrage to women, will be voted on by the people at the next coming elections. Ohio was given the precedence on the program, as the vote on her amendment will come at the close of summer, while the fate of the cause in Kansas, Wisconsin, and Michigan will be decided at the general election in November; success in Ohio, therefore, will give prestige and momentum to the fall campaigns.

Mrs. Harriet Taylor Upton, president of the Ohio Suffrage Association, while full of faith in the result, showed that they were taking no chances by leaving any stone unturned. Systematic and methodical work was being pushed over the state, and many speakers from other states were helping.

An astonishingly small amount of money was being spent—there were no salaried workers, except clerical helpers. Some of the speakers were not only giving their time, but their expenses. Ohio asked for no help, but a voluntary offering was made, and pledges and cash given amounting to more than five hundred dollars; two women wished to give their diamond rings, but Mrs. Upton refused to accept such a sacrifice.

Reports from Kansas, Wisconsin and Michigan showed plans and work equally systematic and vigorous. All were arranging for much open air speaking. The point was made, that people who attend meetings in halls were generally already friendly to the cause, and the need now was to reach those who were indifferent or opposed to it—this was best to be secured by open air speaking. All were expecting to use automobile tours, and were looking forward to a busy summer.

Wisconsin seemed to be especially well prepared in the way of county, city and precinct organizations, and the many workers there expressed every assurance of success. At their request, the Conference adjourned to Milwaukee on May 23, and held its closing session there.

Miss Jane Addams, vice-president of the National Association, was faithful in her attendance, and spoke a number of times. On Wednesday evening, she invited all the delegates to dinner at Hull House, and this gracious hospitality was much appreciated by the visitors; it gave many an opportunity to visit that famous settlement, who had never before had that privilege.

Miss Laura Clay, of Kentucky, Miss Kate Gordon, of Louisiana, and Mrs. W. R. Stubbs, wife of the governor of Kansas, were on the program, but were prevented from being present. Mrs. Catharine Waugh McCulloch spoke most interestingly of legislative work, and emphasized the necessity for eternal vigilance, until the measure was safely passed and signed by the governor, and of unfailing good humor and courage, whether it passed or not. Her advice was to part on good terms with the legislators, whether friend or foe, with some such words as:

"I shall be back again next year to ask for your vote—if you are re-elected!"

On the closing day of the conference, the dispatches told of the sentence of Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst and Mrs. Patrick Lawrence to nine months' imprisonment, on the charge of conspiracy to incite others to do malicious damage to property. Some friends and admirers of Mrs. Pankhurst presented a resolution of sympathy with her and Mrs. Lawrence for being treated as criminal rather than political prisoners.

The resolution provoked warm discussion; many feared that its passage might be construed as an endorsement of the militant methods for which Mrs. Pankhurst is supposed to stand. It was felt that on the eve of the greatest suffrage campaign ever held in the Middle West, any action, even remotely suggesting approval of such tactics, might affect the results disastrously. An effort was made to lay the motion on the table, but failed by a tie vote; two amendments were then made to it, which robbed it of any semblance of endorsement of militancy and the motion then passed. A number of the leading workers voted against it, however, not that they were lacking in sympathy with Mrs. Pankhurst, or any other unfortunate woman, but they felt that this was not the place for the expression of personal feeling but for advancing a great cause at a critical stage in its history. I. W. H.

—Having a father, a husband, and a son in the United States Senate consecutively representing two political parties and a continued service of nearly half a century, is the rare distinction which falls to the lot of Mrs. Stephen B. Elkins. Her father, Hon. Henry Gassaway Davis, served in the Senate from 1871 to 1883, and in 1904 was democratic nominee for the vice-presidency. He is now living at the age of eighty-eight. Mrs. Elkins' late husband, Stephen B. Elkins, was senator from West Virginia from 1895 to the time of his death, when he was succeeded by his son, Mr. Davis Elkins, who served for the remainder of his father's term. When the political wheel in West Virginia turns again toward a republican majority, young Davis Elkins will again be candidate for senator from the state of his birth.

—Among the Billy Sunday converts, in the Wheeling campaign, was "Billy" Clemans, as he is familiarly called, the county sheriff. He has since composed a song entitled, "Jesus, My Savior," which he has dedicated to Mr. Sunday. Sheriff Clemans also composed the music, which is said to be peculiarly adapted to the sacred words. The song is soon to appear from a publishing house. The sentiment expresses a clear tribute to saving grace in the man's recent conversion, and the verses are a most beautiful tribute, too, to Mr. Sunday's sort of teaching.

What a Boy

By E. S. Goodhue.

Little Tot
What a lot
You don't know!
Yet how many things there be
That we think you never see
Which you know as well as we!

Blink your eye
At the fly
On the wall!
Make a grab—there you have missed—
You can't hit him with your fist—
Now you're ready to be kissed!

My, oh, my!
Don't you cry,
Doesn't pay;
If you cry, you won't get fat
Like the little pussy cat,
Sleeping there upon the mat!

Rosy, sweet,
Pretty feet,
White and soft!
Why we should imprison those
Dainty little wiggling toes
In old leather, no one knows!

Little Tot
What a lot
You will know,
When to these feet, five we add
(And 'twill really be too bad
Not to keep the ones we had!)

—Christian Register.

The Bible's Appeal

Born in the East and clothed in Oriental form and imagery, the Bible walks the ways of all the world with familiar feet, and enters land after land to find its own everywhere. It has learned to speak in hundreds of languages to the heart of man. It comes into the palace to tell the monarch that he is the servant of the Most High, and into the cottage to assure the peasant that he is a son of God. Children listen to its stories with wonder and delight, and wise men ponder them as parables of life. It has a word of peace for the time of peril, a word of comfort for the day of calamity, a word of light for the hour of darkness. Its oracles are repeated in the assembly of the people, and its counsels whispered in the ear of the lonely. The wicked and the proud tremble at its warning, but to the wounded and the penitent it has a mother's voice. The wilderness and the solitary place have been made glad by it, and the fire on the hearth has lit the reading of its well-worn page. It has woven itself into our deepest affections, and colored our dearest dreams; so that love and friendship, sympathy and devotion, memory and hope put on the beautiful garments of its treasured speech, breathing of frankincense and myrrh. Above the cradle and beside the grave its great words come to us uncalled. They fill our prayers with power larger than we know, and the beauty of them lingers on our ear long after the sermons which they adorned have been forgotten. They return to us swiftly and quietly, like doves flying from far away. They surprise us with new meanings, like springs of water breaking forth from the mountain beside a long-trodden path. They grow richer, as pearls do when they are worn near the heart. No man is poor or desolate who has this treasure for his own. When the landscape darkens and the trembling pilgrim comes to the valley named of the Shadow, he is not afraid to enter; he takes the rod and staff of Scripture in his hand; he says to friend and comrade, "Good-by, we shall meet again;" and, comforted by that support, he goes toward the lonely pass as one who climbs through darkness into light. The mordant wit of Voltaire, the lucid and melancholy charm of Renan, have not availed to drive or draw the world away from the Bible; and the effect of all assaults have been to leave it more widely read, better understood, and more intelligently admired than ever before.—The Century.

A Grand Old Horse.

The best preserved, best cared for and best loved aged horse in Lebanon county, Pennsylvania, where for many decades the output of high grade horses has been large, recently ended his days, painlessly, at the extreme age of thirty-nine. When, in 1877, as a spirited four-year-old, he pranced into Lebanon from the blue grass region of old Kentucky, a keen-eyed observer, noting his beauty of form and graceful gait, remarked: "What a bird of a horse!" and the name "Bird" was forthwith given to the matchless colt.

For the next thirty-five years the thorough-bred lived and labored in Lebanon and was petted and praised by his owner and family. Only once in all this time was he away from his own comfortable stall. After a hot summer's work, he was sent to the country for a vacation, but rich pasture and running water among strangers were not so pleasant to him as the attentions he received at home. He ate so little and showed such signs of homesickness that he was returned at the end of two weeks to his old familiar roof.

Mr. Edwin F. Brightbill, whose knowledge and admiration of this horse are set forth in his lecture, "The Equine Smart Set," wrote a fine appreciation of "Bird" upon the latter's thirty-seventh birthday.

"As might be expected from a Southern equine Colonel, 'Bird' acquired the art of growing old gracefuly and in full possession of all his powers and faculties. He can whinny as musically and munch his oats nearly as greedily as in the days of his colthood; his hearing is acute—the jingle of sleigh-bells or the tap of a fire-alarm will instantly bring his ears and head to attention. His feet are sound; his legs unbowed; his knees unbroken; his joints only slightly rheumatic. His home table is always supplied with pure food—he never eats dusty hay, never had the heaves; he never tasted mouldy corn, nor musty oats; never had the colic. The weight of Father Time has not swayed his back nor broken his spirit.

"In winter 'Bird' sports a blanket overcoat. His summer coat is a dark bay, with black trimmings, fifteen hands, one inch high—this silken top-coat is not marred by white-haired spots, Dame Nature's healing marks of sores and galls, caused by cheap, misfit collars and saddles."—Our Dumb Animals.

—The Chinese women of Shanghai have organized a woman suffrage league and it is reported that a number of highly educated women are studying military tactics, with a view to fighting under the revolutionary flag.

—The queen of Holland has given 300 gulden to the fund being raised by Gen. Booth for prosecuting the work of the Salvation Army in Amsterdam. The queen is very much interested in the work of the army, as she is in everything that may be for the good of her people.

—Nebraska has more women students than any university in the West or Middle West. Kansas has 846; Illinois, 843; Nebraska, 1,785. In the Phi Beta Kappa election, which took place last week, thirty-one of the thirty-eight students receiving the honor were women, but the highest average grade was made by a man.

—Another batch of suffragettes was sent to prison last week by Judge Robert Wallace, chairman of the London Sessions, at the resumption of the trial of women accused of window-smashing during the raids of March 1 and March 4. Most of the women were sentenced to four months' imprisonment, but some of them who had been previously convicted, were given six months, while one who had been twice previously convicted, had the distinction of getting eight months.

Pansies

I'd been a naughty girl that day,
At least, that's what they said,
And so they took my dolls away,
And sent me alone to play
Down by the pansy bed.

I did not know what I should do
Without a single child,
Till all the pansies, white and blue,
Purple and brown and yellow, too,
Looked up at me and smiled.

They said: "Oh, do not feel so sad!
Let us your children be."
Then what a happy time we had!
I quite forgot that I'd been bad,
The pansies played with me.

—"The Little Singer."

The Spice of Life

Old Gentleman (in the park)—What are you doing, my little dear?

Little Girl (with doll)—I'm giving dolly a drink.

"Giving dolly a drink, eh? But the water is runnig down all over her pretty dress."

"Yes, she slobbers a good deal. All babies do."—New York Weekly.

"Johnnie, I will give you a quarter if you can get me a lock of your sister's hair."

"Gimme me four bits and I'll git you de whole bunch. I know where she hangs it nights."

Mr. Johnsing—Say, Mr. Dorman, what am de meaning of dis here line on de ticket whar it says, "not transferable"?

Mr. Dorman—Dat means, Brer Johnsing, dat no gentleman am admitted unless he comes hisself.

"You say your jewels were stolen while the family was at dinner?"

"No, no. This is an important robbery, officer. Our dinner was stolen while we were putting on our jewels."

"I hear ye had words with Casey."

"We had no words."

"Then, nothing passed between ye?"

"Nothing but one brick.'—Washington Herald.

——"Oh, sir," will you please come at once There is three brutes jumping on a poor organ grinder."

"Is he a big organ-grinder?" queried the old gentleman, calmly.

"No, no, sir; quite a little man. Oh, come at once, or it will be too late!"

"I don't see why I should interfere," replied the old gentleman. "If he's a small man then the three men don't need any help."—Exchange.

"Tommy," said his brother, "you're a regular little glutton. How can you eat so much?"

"Don't know; it's just good luck," replied the youngster.—Christian Intelligencer.

EUREKA COLLEGE

CLASSICAL, SCIENTIFIC, HISTORY, SOCIAL SCIENCE, MINISTERIAL COURSES

High Grade Scholarship
Healthful Moral Atmosphere
University Trained Professors
Well Balanced Courses

Good Music and Art Department

Eureka College offers a well rounded education. It is an institution of learning with careful attention to moral and religious instruction.

FALL SEMESTER OPENS SEPTEMBER 9.

Address

Pres. Charles E. Underwood

(Mention Christion Century.)

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

The dedication of the new First Church, Springfield, now in course of construction, has been fixed for June 16.

L. B. Pickerill, who resides at Leland, has received a call to become pastor of Hallsville church, which it is learned has been accepted.

Rosiclare is entering into a revival meeting conducted by James Sharratt and daughter, following the meeting at Brookport, held by these evangelists.

Bellflower Church, where M. O. Dutcher ministers, is planning to erect a new edifice in the near future, and definite steps are being taken to consumate this purpose.

Dr. B. O. Aylesworth, pastor of Chandlerville church, delivered an address before the Missippi Valley Woman's Suffrage Conference in Chicago, during the latter part of May.

R. E. Stevenson was honored with an invitation to deliver an address at the unveiling of a monument to the unknown dead of the Civil War, erected in Farmer City, where he is pastor.

Macomb meeting, held by the Fife Brothers, was concluded with a total of 133 additions. The pastor of this church, Allen T. Shaw, now ministers to a congregation of 500 members.

Allison, where J. E. Moyer preaches, is preparing for a meeting to be held next fall under the leadership of C. L. Organ. This church recently made an offering for home missions exceeding forty dollars.

Lew D. Hill, assisted by Miss Morris, is holding a meeting at Murdock, with two additions the first day. The revival, held by this evangelist at Griggsville, resulted in seventy-five additions. The pastor is J. D. Dabney.

H. B. Gwinn of Lexington, Ky., preached several Sundays at New Philadelphia. On two Sundays of his short ministry there, fourteen additions resulted to the church. Mr. Gwinn has been engaged by this congregation for a meeting next fall.

T. D. Davis, for several years pastor of St. Joseph's Church, has presented his resignation to the congregation. It is not learned where Mr. Davis will locate, but undoubtedly his services will be in demand before many weeks have passed.

The Brotherhood, Central Church, Rockford, recently debated the question of the institutional church, with view to planning their new church in accordance with such service. The men are planning semi-monthly field days to be held in one of the city parks this summer.

Waverly church, where Guy B. Williamson is pastor, will adopt the combination service for Sunday mornings, beginning the first Sunday in June. There will be no intermission between the preaching and communion service following the Sunday-school, and the pastor's sermon will be somewhat abbreviated.

F. W. Burnham, of First Church, Springfield, was the recipient of a novel gift from a mid-week Bible class of women, which he has been instructing for three years. The gift consisted of eighteen medicine capsules each one of which contained a five-dollar bill. Last year a similar remembrance was received by this minister.

A. E. Jordan, who is pastor of LaHarpe Church, is in demand for addresses to Oddfellows' organizations. Within the past few weeks he has spoken to such societies at Augusta, Burnside, Webster and LaHarpe. At his home town, he was chosen to deliver the baccalaureate sermon for the high school and the memorial address on Decoration Day.

Memorial booklets of the life of the late J. H. Gilliland have been composed and printed by the churches of Bloomington and Normal. These booklets contain the last address of this popular minister, in addition to the addresses delivered at his funeral service. The work has been neatly done and serves as a beautiful memorial to be possessed by his multitude of friends.

The second anniversary of the dedication of the church at Shirley was made the occasion for inviting Charles E. Underwood, president of Eureka College, and Edgar D. Jones of First Church, Bloomington, for special addresses Sunday, May 26. President Underwood spoke in the morning on "The Relation of the Country Church to the College." In the afternoon Mr. Jones spoke on "The Glory of God's House." This church is ministered to by Lewis Starbuck, who returned with Mr. Jones from the afternoon service and spoke in the Bloomington Church at night.

The dedication of the new building erected by First Church, Springfield, will take place June 16, with F. M. Rains of Cincinnati in charge of the exercises. The building has been more than a year in process of construction, and probably exceeds in artistic merit and in appointment for a variety of church activities any building constructed by the Disciples in Illinois. The property cost about $130,000, and easily stands at the head of church architecture in the city. The dedicatory services will include a program lasting through an entire week and including two Sundays. A complete program will appear in next week's issue of the Christian Century.

The Sixth District Convention will be held at Deland, June 18, 19. Condensed program follows: Tuesday morning.—"How C. W. B. M. Work Develops the Woman." Report of Auxiliary. Secretary's address, Mrs. Jessie Monser, Champaign. Afternoon.—Devotional, Mrs. Prillman, Rossville. Pastor's hour, every pastor in the district. Junior work demonstration, Mrs. Miller, Rantoul. Evening.—Address, Basil S. Keusseff, Chicago. Wednesday morning.—Conserving Our Country Churches: a. Finding the Men, W. W. Sniff, Paris; b. Need of System in Placing the Men, Andrew Scott, Hoopeston. The Future of Christian Education in Illinois, a speaker from Eureka College. Convention sermon, E. M. Smith, Decatur. Afternoon.—The State of the Cause—J. F. Hollingsworth, Fisher; C. H. Scrivens, Villa Grove; J. H. Wright, Harristown; E. W. Sears, Maroa; T. L. Cummins, Catlin; W. B. Hopper, Bethany. Our Missionary Interests: a. The State Work, J. Fred Jones; b. The State University Work, J. W. Kilborn, Sullivan; c. The Present Need of Christian Endeavor, a round table; d. The Bible-school, a round table conducted by Clarence L. DePew. Evening.—Address, J. F. Rosborough, Clinton. Autos will leave Monticello at 12 noon and 6 p. m.

Secretary's Letter.

J. D. Williams of Macomb preaches for Loraine, Ray and Ripley. He reports one conversion at Ray and one at Ripley recently and growing Bible-schools.

Wm. G. McColley of Shelbyville has two Sundays in August that he can use for supply work or a short meeting, and he also has time for a meeting of twenty-five days this fall or winter. He can furnish a song leader and a soloist, either or both, or come alone.

It is true that we need more preachers, yet we believe pastors should urge young men who desire to enter the ministry first to prepare themselves to do a successful work. Zeal without knowledge spells failure in almost any community today. Even the rural church sets a higher standard for the preacher now than the smaller cities did twenty years ago. This does not mean that every preacher must be a college or university graduate, but he does need a good education, and graduate if he can. Advance with the times in which we live.

There should be no let-up until every church in Illinois has made a good offering for home state missions. Crowd it along. Those churches that "double up" for the May offering will not be asked for an offering in November.

The Normal Church has employed E. A. Gilliland as their regular pastor to succeed his brother, J. H. Gilliland, whose sad death occurred a few weeks ago. The new edifice of the Normal Church is going up rapidly. They are having splendid church and Bible-school attendance.

The statistical report cards and literature have been mailed from our office for all the churches in the state, and we most earnestly ask that they be filled out carefully and mailed to us at once. There will be but this one call for statistics, as the A. C. M. S. will use the same reports that are sent to us. Let us have them promptly so we will not need to ask for them again this year.

The district conventions are in full blast all this month and the field man will try to attend all of them. The programs are excellent.

Geo. R. Southgate has been asked to remain with the Colfax Church another year.

J. Fred Jones, Field Secretary.
W. D. Deweese, Office Sec'y-Treas.
Bloomington, Ill.

Church Life

First Church, Washington, Ind., was dedicated May 19.

Olin Crewdson has take up the work at Missouri Valley.

At Fairmont, Ind., ground has been broken for a modern church building.

The Liberty, Mo., churches are planning a county federation of Sunday-school classes.

The new building at Mechanicsburg, Ind., was dedicated May 26. It has a seating capacity of 500.

The work of remodeling the church at Eldon, Ia., has been completed and the auditorium is being reseated.

H. Campbell Clark has resigned the pulpit at Independence, Ore., May 19, and assumes the work at Carlton.

The Loyal Sons, Streator, Ill., are preparing to back a lecture course. A number of patrons have already been secured.

B. F. Hall, who for seven years has been pastor at Woodbine, Iowa, closed his work June 1, to accept the charge at Atlantic.

The annual convention of the Christian missionary societies of eastern Washington and northern Idaho will be held June 17-21.

Work on the new building of Normal Church, Bloomington, Ill., is well under way. The edifice is being built very substantially.

George F. Bradford, pastor of Central Church, Dennison, Tex., preached the baccalaureate sermon for Carr-Burdette College, May 19.

Christian College, Columbia, Mo., graduated a class of thirty-one, May 22. George H. Combs, of Kansas City, delivered the commencement address.

The men's organizations of Rock Island, Ill., have formed a permanent federation. It is hoped to enlist all the men of the city in the movement.

Mrs. J. Boyd Jones, wife of the pastor of Central Church, Marion, Ind., has recently undergone an operation. The physicians promise that she will soon recover.

Elmer Ward Cole completed four years of service as pastor of Central Church, Huntington, Ind., May 26. The Sunday following he preached an anniversary sermon.

The women of Christian Church, Charles City, Iowa, served a banquet in honor of the women attending the congregational conference there. Thursday they entertained the entire convention.

The congregation at Anacortes, Wash., has decided to build at once. J. W. Baker, of Tacoma, a representative of the A. C. M. S., will take charge and remain with the church until the enterprise is completed.

Salem, O., Church has held a four-days' celebration of the completion of M. J. Grable's ten years of ministry. T. E. Cramblett, president of Bethany College, a former pastor of the Salem church, preached May 19.

Word has been reached The Century of the death of Edward Darst, May 20, in Germany. He was the young son of Mrs. E. W. Darst, and has been with his mother during her stay abroad studying religious pedagogy.

Thomas Cramblett dedicated the new $55,000 church at Somerset, Pa., May 26. The debt on the building was very nearly cleared. Herbert Yeuell addressed the congregation in the evening and continues in special addresses indefinitely.

A "children's church" has been instituted at South Joplin Church. The juveniles are taken into a separate part of the church and conduct a regular church service of their own, patterned after the adult organization but adapted and appealing to the children.

E. L. Frazier has assisted S. L. Jackson, the pastor, in a meeting at Starke, Fla. Mr. Jackson feels that the influence of the church has been strengthened greatly. The meeting lasted seventeen days and four were added. Mr. Jackson expects to hold meetings soon.

The Christian church's Bible chair at Drury College, Mo., will be maintained during the next five years by private subscription by lay members of the Third District, Mo. The convention raised $2,000 and will give $400 per year toward the support of the school.

A community of 1,200 people succeeded in raising $12,000 in twelve hours at Winters, Cal., May 17, and the money will erect a new church there. The campaign was very lively during the few hours it lasted. Mr. G. G. Emery headed it, and was assisted by a number of citizens. Automobiles were used to aid in the quick completion of the soliciting. The largest contribution was $1,000.

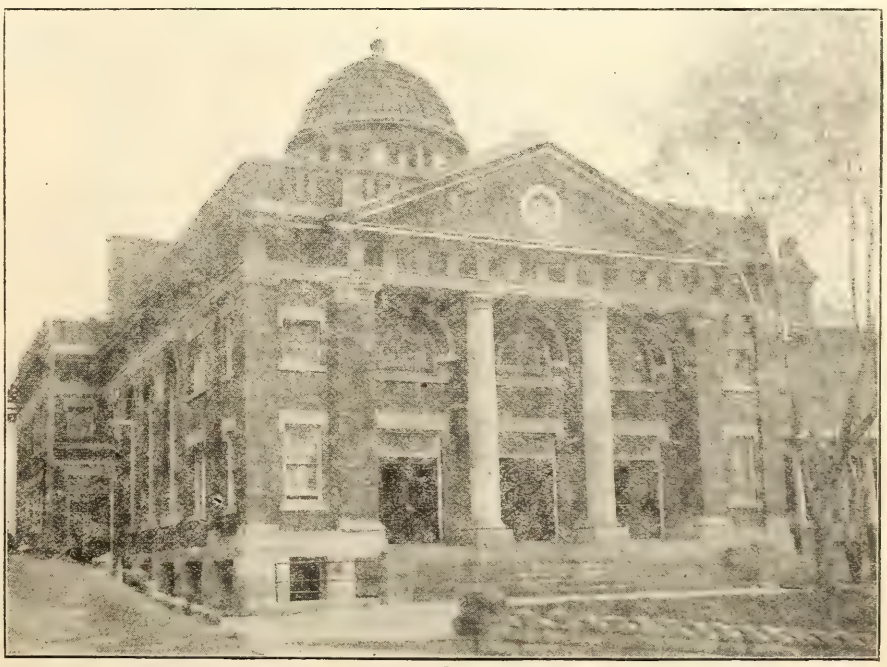
The Southern Iowa Sunday-school Convention was held at What Cheer, May 19. Senator Kenyon and Professor Holden, of Ames College, addressed the gathering. The meeting was one of the largest, if not the largest, church meeting ever held in southern Iowa. Two railroads ran special trains to accommodate the attendants at the day's session. Between 4,000 and 4,500 were on the grounds during the day.

Churches everywhere are rebuilding, remodeling or dedicating plants. At Honey Grove, Tex., the congregation is remodeling a section of the Presbyterian church building to use as a Sunday-school room. Red Oak, Ia., is planning a new plant and has already begun the preliminary work. At Deming, N. M., a new frame structure is in course of erection, and Chesterfield, Des Moines, Ia., has obtained permit for a building to cost $3,500.

Walter Scott Priest, pastor at Wichita, Kan., has been presented with a touring car by his congregation. Mr. Priest has been in Wichita three years. Although the movement started with his church it was not confined to its members. The mayor and other city officials participated, as did Jews, Catholics and members of other religious bodies. The presentation was the spontaneous expression of appreciation of the work he has done in the community.

Bessie Farrar Masden, missionary in India, writes interestingly of the convention of Christian missionaries recently held in Jubbulpore, India. The theme was "Evangelism." The F. C. M. S. and the C. W. B. M. met in joint session and planned a still closer union in the work. Miss Minnie Johnson, the one new missionary, was welcomed. The call of the stations for medical missionaries and the need for strong men for evangelistic work are insistent and pressing.

Of the fourteen or fifteen hundred congregations in Missouri, writes B. H. Cleaver, pastor at Shelbina, scarcely ten per cent have preaching "full time." In the Sixth District, made up of nineteen counties in the northeast part of the state, there are nearly three hundred churches, and only about twenty have a minister located with them and preaching every Lord's Day. Seven or eight counties, having from seven to fourteen churches each, have no church with preaching every Lord's Day, and in some of these there is no resident minister at all. Baptist and Methodist churches, about equal in number to our own, are in a similar condition. An organization of some sort, to conserve the religious strength of Missouri's many rural communities is badly needed. J. W. Street, of Mackinaw, Ill., is president of such an organization in his state, but Missouri's needs seem to be two-fold more than Illinois', in this particular. The problem of the rural church was thoroughly discussed in the district convention recently held.



Newly Completed Building at Somerset, Pa., Rev. J. D. Garrison, Minister.

Nina Palmer at Work in China

Mrs. Laura D. Garst, formerly a missionary in the Orient, says of Miss Nina Palmer: "Her many friends over Iowa will be glad to have a word from her in Nanking, China. It will be remembered that Miss Palmer sailed in December. On account of the revolutionary conditions, she remained in Japan for about a month. From Tokyo she went to Shanghai, where she was till March 2. During that time she was diligently studying the Chinese language in a school that ran there for a few weeks for the accommodation of foreigners wishing to learn Chinese. Unfortunately, Miss Palmer contracted pneumonia and was ill for a few weeks. She was not yet strong when she went to Nanking. The middle of April she writes of her busy life. Her goods have been delayed because of the war, and the Iowa typewriter had not yet been received. It will greatly help her. She studies the language four and five hours a day, which is as much time as her eyes will stand the strain of the chinese characters. The language is very difficult, but fascinating. She, with Miss Lyon, is in charge of about one hundred girls and women in the girls' school. Many soldiers are about, and one of the ladies must be on the place all the time. Miss Palmer takes charge of the music and gymnastic work."

Commencement at Lexington

The present scholastic year of Transylvania University and The College of the Bible is drawing to a most successful close.

The schools are asking one hundred churches and church organizations to agree to pray for, seek out, and help support one student each in preparation for the ministry or mission field next session. Almost fifty new ministerial students, to be selected and supported by churches, Sunday-schools, Christian Endeavor societies, brotherhoods, and individuals have been promised. This campaign was started only last February.

Commencement week the following exercises will be held:

Baccalaureate Sermon, Sunday, June 9, 8 p. m.; A. C. Smither, St. Louis, Mo.

Philothea-Phileusebia Public Program, Monday, June 10, 8 p. m.

Ossolia-Cecropia Public Program, Tuesday, June 11, 8 p. m.

Class Day, Wednesday, June 12, 2 p. m.

Hamilton College Commencement, Wednesday, June 12, 8 p. m. Address: Dr. George Hamilton Combs, Kansas City, Missouri.

Commencement Transylvania University and the College of the Bible, Thursday, June 13, 10 a. m. Address: Dr. George Hamilton Combs, Kansas City, Missouri.

Alumni Dinner, Thursday, June 13, 1 p. m.

The Executive Committees of the University and The College of the Bible have decided to enter upon a campaign to raise $300,000 for buildings, equipment and endowment purposes. A new dormitory is to be provided for, as well as a heating and lighting plant, and other needed improvements on the physical side. By reason of the enthusiasm generated in the campaign which closed last December, it is confidently expected that the new goal set will be reached within three years, the time allowed for getting the subscriptions.

Dr. A. W. Fortune, pastor of the Walnut Hills Church, of Cincinnati, has been appointed to the chair of New Testament Theology, and will enter upon his work next September. A large number of congratulatory messages emphasizing the superior qualifications of Doctor Fortune for this professorship have been received. An announcement of the appointment of a man for the department of Practical Theology will be made soon.

Mr. Wilbur M. Cunningham, a graduate of the university of Ann Arbor, Mich., has been appointed Director of Physical Education of the University. He will have general supervision over the gymnasium and the four college sports, and will be supported by capable assistants.

Responding to the Call

It is my pleasure to record the following responses in cash to the public appeal made for funds to liquidate our indebtedness to the Federal Council:

Rev. M. M. Cochran, Uniontown, Pa.	$ 25.00
C. C. Chapman, Fullerton, Calif.	25.00
W. E. Coffin, Des Moines, Ia.	25.00
R. A. Long, Kansas City, Mo.	25.00
Geo. Rand, Buffalo, N. Y.	25.00
Clifford Wiley, Seattle, Wash.	25.00
Total	$150.00

Many pledges have come from individual churches, pledging support to this fund within the near future.

Many who do not understand this haphazard appeal we are compelled to make from year to year should remember the following facts:

First. That, as a people, we have no governing body who can legitimately guarantee or provide for this fund. It will necessarily remain in this unsatisfactory state until we have a delegate convention. It is not sufficient to say that we will pay this year but will not pay again.

Second. The response cannot come from any treasury of our people as a whole, because not all our people are fully agreed on the value of the Federal Council. The honor of our people is dependent upon those who, as individuals, or as individual churches, are not willing to see the Disciples of Christ withdraw from the one tangible avenue of approach to modern Protestantism.

Third. It is contended by some that it is not worth this amount to us; therefore, relinquish our relationship with the Federal Council of Churches. A casual survey of the last annual report of the Federal Council of Churches will be testimony in itsef to the open mind of the value of this work. It is worth immeasureably more to us as a people as a point of contact with the Christian world. What church among us would not prefer to pay the total sum, rather than to have the Disciples of Christ suffer the reputation of being narrowly sectarian? The account with the Federal Council stands as follows:

Apportionment for 1910	$1,364.00
Contribution, 1910		$ 103.08
Apportionment for 1911	1,364.00
Contribution, 1911		1,791.90
Totals	$2,728.00	$1,894.98
	1,894.98
Leaving balance due	$ 833.02

The apportionment for 1912 is $1,309.00. On this we have paid nothing. As stated before, the Federal Council is willing to forgive the balance due on 1911 and maintain us in good standing, if we meet our apportionment for 1912. We earnestly solicit every friend of this cause to make contribution without murmuring or complaint about the indefiniteness. Because of the urgency of the call we must as firmly say that it will be our duty to repeat this from year to year so long as we do not have some delegate body to be responsible for this fund.

Please direct such gifts to Finis S. Idleman, care Central Church of Christ, Des Moines, Iowa.

Finis Idleman.

Beautiful Plant Dedicated at East Liverpool, Ohio

Among the larger churches which have recently dedicated new buildings is First Church, East Liverpool, Ohio. A new plant has just been erected at a cost of $50,000 and was dedicated May 19.

The success of the church, culminating in a beautiful and useful building, is a tribute to the loyalty of the congregation and the leadership of the pastor, E. P. Wise. Seven years ago the congregation was feeble and struggling. It now is perhaps the strongest in the city of 30,000. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wise are leaders in the best acitvtiies of the city.

A large portion of the church membership is composed of mill hands and potters. It was the commendable and none too common theory of those who planned and executed the building enterprise that those who have less than their share of beauty in their surroundings are those who most need to have it provided in their church building. The new edifice is of exceptional dignity and beauty for a city the size of East Liverpool.

With the galleries, the new church has a seating capacity of a little less than 1,000. The primary department is in the basement, while the Bible and class rooms provide a seating capacity for 1,000 or more.

The building is simple in construction, and possesses a copper-covered done. Six massive columns at the entrance give the church a semblance of Biblical architecture.

The dedicatory services were conducted by Geo. L. Snively. Ten thousand dollars was needed to complete the payment for the building; $12,000 was pledged. A special musical program was given in the evening under the direction of Mrs. Wise, who has been the choir director for several years.

Mr. Snively is continuing in a brief meeting which is being very successful.

Winchester, Ind., Dedicates.

An insistent and driving rain was not sufficient to mar seriously the ceremonies attending the laying of the corner-stone for the new building being erected for Main Street Church, Winchester, Ind. All the churches in the city participated in the event, which was held May 19. L. E. Murray, Indiana State Secretary, delivered the principal address.

The building is to be of stone, one of the finest in Indiana, and affording a seating capacity for a thousand people. It will be a monument to the congregation and a pride to the citizens. The work is being rapidly pushed toward completion.

Beautiful Service at Washington, Ind.

First Church, Washington, Ind., was another congregation to dedicate a new edifice May 19. It is their second dedication within recent years. Fire destroyed the fruit of their first effort a year ago.

M. S. Hastings, who has carried much of the responsibility of the church, delivered the dedicatory address.

In the afternoon, at three o'clock, a communion and memorial service was held.

No subscriptions or donations were asked for at the morning service but a free will offering was received.

—The largest institution in the world for the care of tubercular patients is planned for Denver, Colo., to be supported by the Protestant churches of this city.

New London, Mo., Dedicates

W. H. Pinkerton was the chief speaker at the dedicatory services of the New London Mo., Church, May 19. He will become its pastor in a short time.

A year ago to a day the old church was destroyed by fire. In its place a structure has been built at a cost of $15,000 which is a credit to the entire community. Subscriptions taken dedication day provide ample funds to remove the indebtedness.

Joy on the Congo

When it was definitely decided we could send two new missionaries out to the Congo we at once cabled the good news. The date of our cable was April 5. Under date of April 9, we have the following inspiring letter:

"Your cablegram of the 5th came this p. m. Hurrah for the good news it brought. Thank you more than we can express for your thoughtfulness in sending us the cable, for we were very sad at heart and were wondering if the brethren at home would not hear our cry of need. Now we are more light-hearted, and look forward to opening Monieka with enthusiasm.

"I am sending a canoe to Longa tomorrow morning with the good news, and R. Ray Eldred will send it on at once to Herbert Smith at Lotumbe. It will not get there for a week, but it will lose none of its joy on the way.

"I think the prospects were never quite so bright at all the stations as now and the reports we are now making out will be the best in our history. At Bolenge alone there have been 520 baptisms, putting the membership past the 1,000 mark! I cannot give figures for the other places, but they have all had their best year.

"The Oregon leaves April 20 to bring the Jaggards up from Stanley Pool. They will find a royal welcome awaiting them.

Yours for Africa's new life,

A. F. Hensey."

If we could send two new missionaries to each field just now, it would produce the same joy in every field. India and Japan and China and the Philippines are tired of looking for reinforcements. Shall we not soon speed away new men?

The cry of these overworked men is the voice of God to our churches.

F. M. Rains,
S. J. Corey,
Secretaries.

Indiana Secretary's Notes

At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors it was suggested that the proceedings of the board should be published and that the churches be kept informed of the work being done and proposed. There are twenty-one members of the board. It is provided that all the fourteen districts shall have representation and that ten, at least, shall be business men. An executive committee of seven members of the board meets every month and transacts the necessary business of the association. The full board meets twice a year and on call of the executive committee. The last meeting of the board was held April 2, to hear the reports of the year and prepare them for submission to the annual convention. The terms of the contract with the A. C. M. S., for another year were discussed and accepted and the contract renewed. The state's apportionment of the expense of the publication of the national Year Book was allowed and the remittance of eighteen dollars for this purpose was ordered. An appropriation of $150 was made to the Bloomington Bible Chair work. An apportionment of $300 for Glen Park and Tolleston was deferred for future action. The salary of Bible-school superintendent was raised from $1,500 to $1,650, beginning with June of current year. A motion prevailed to request the national Christian Endeavor Board to return to the state one-half of the amount contributed by our Christian Endeavor societies on Endeavor Day for Christian Endeavor work in the state. The next meeting of the full board will be held on June 3.

M. L. Buckley, from Grand Rapids, Mich., has accepted a call to West Creighton Avenue Church, Ft. Wayne, and will begin June 1. George Darsie, of Akron, Ohio, will be Brother Dutcher's successor at Terre Haute. These men will receive a hearty welcome from their Hoosier brethren of the ministry.

A. Homer Jordan, from Lorain, Ohio, is getting a good start at Greensburg and is in line with the cooperative forces of the state for a forward move. We are always glad to have such men come to us when we are compelled to note changes.

The church at Winchester is pushing the building enterprise under the enthusiastic leadership of their new pastor, George W. Schroeder. The cornerstone was laid with appropriate ceremonies on May 19. The secretary delivered the address and also preached at the morning service.

In the death of M. W. Harkins, of Union City, Indiana, loses one of her most effective preachers and Union City a much loved pastor.

The secretary spent a pleasant day with the church at Eminence, in Morgan County, recently. This is one of our good country churches that would be glad to have a resident minister. They have good preaching but feel the need of a leader and helper in their midst.

Aunt Jane Wykoff passed to her heavenly home on Monday, May 27. Her body was laid to rest in the beautiful country cemetery near Fairview, Rush County. The writer was in charge of the funeral service by her request. She was a charter member of the Plum Creek Church. There her husband, James Wykoff, made the confession and was baptized by the writer.

L. E. Murray, Cor. Secy.

Foreign Society News

R. A. Eldred, Longa, Congo, Africa, says under date of March 31, "Good services today. Highest number in Sunday-school, 225. Church crowded at morning service, eleven baptized today. Reports from outposts very good. Thirty-two evangelists, eight of them with their wives, returned this week to fifteen out-stations. The outlook is good."

A. F. Hensey reports that the steamship Oregon on the Congo, earned $200 for the Foreign Society on a recent trip from Bolenge to Monieka by carrying a cargo for a trading company. This is not a bad record. He reports also a recent visit to Monieka. He says with the assistance of one of the elders of the Bolenge church he baptized sixty-seven on April 3. This puts the membership past 500. He is hoping that within the next few months they will see the opening of this new station and the organization of a separate church. He says that he believes in a few years this will be our largest work."

Herbert Smith, writing from Lotumbe, Congo, Africa, under date of March 31, says "Today we baptized thirty-seven. Two years ago we thought if we could get forty people to attend Sunday-school we were doing very well. Today 295 were present and several others came to the preaching service. A chief from a nearby town came and stayed to see the people baptized in the afternoon. He has been very much opposed to our work here because he saw the heathen life changing. Now he says he will come to church again and if he continues to come, I would not be surprised if he takes his stand for the Master. Another chief has been visiting us for several days. He came to beg for teachers to go to his town. He marveled greatly at our house which Mr. Hedges built. As he was admiring it I asked him if he had such a house in his town. 'Am I Nzakomba' (God) he asked. This is the usual opinion here regarding the white man. Since he has such wisdom they say he must be God. The traders and state officers up this river have built houses only after the native fashion, so the opinion here now is that the missionary must be wiser than either of these. If men only knew what they could do here for Christ, they would not wait for you to hunt them. They would be begging you to give them such a chance for service."

W. S. Priest, minister of the Central Christian Church, Wichita, Kan., says "We believe that our four churches in this city will gladly unite in providing Dr. Jaggard, our Living-link missionary, with a hospital at Monieka, Africa. The cost will be $5,000 and with very little solicitation about $2,000 has been subscribed."

Orthodoxy and Heresy

(Continued from page 11.)

lieve that such action has been inspired by a sad sincerity. I do not believe that any heretic has been punished except by those who were sincerely in earnest in the advocacy of their particular opinions from which this particular heretic differed.

But the lack of love is the explanation of the flimsy charges that are so frequently made against men who are living the Christ life, who are honoring the Master, who are helping to carry forward the kingdom of God, men who by virtue of their very intellectual make-up cannot help themselves in being honest with themselves, in denying or in refusing to accept very many of these theological dogmas which enter into the standards of faith, held and accepted by the nominal few of the respective denominations of Christendom.

To deny love is heresy; to deny in your life the spirit of Jesus Christ is heresy.

To deny Him, the incarnation of all truth and beauty and loveliness, is heresy.

I bring before you two illustrations taken from the New Testament which seem to me to particularly emphasize the thought upon which I am seeking to lay stress. Once upon a time there was a man who was making his way to Jericho from Jerusalem. He fell among thieves and bandits, who beat him up most terribly. He lay there under the scorching sun of an Eastern sky ready to die. There came along that way the representatives of the orthodoxy of the time, the priest and the levite. Measure them by the intellectual standard of their conformity to the church requirements of their time, they were orthodox. They passed by the stricken man on the other side.

No Requirement Upon Love.

It was their opinion that orthodoxy made no requirement upon love, made no demand upon human sympathy, upon the great relationship known as fraternity. It is simply said they passed by on the other side.

There came along that same day a heretic

"17 Cents a Day"

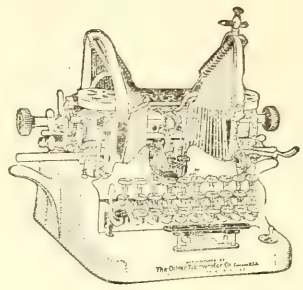
The Plan That Promotes Success

THE "17-Cents-a-Day" Plan of purchasing The Oliver Typewriter means more than promoting sales of this wonderful writing machine. This Plan is a positive and powerful factor in promoting the success of all who avail themselves of its benefits.

It means that this Company is giving practical assistance to earnest people everywhere by supplying them—for pennies—with the best typewriter in the world.

The "17-Cents-a-Day" Plan is directly in line with the present-day movement to substitute typewriting for handwriting in business correspondence.

Ownership of The Oliver Typewriter is fast becoming one of the essentials of success.



"17 Cents a Day" and The Printype—OLIVER Typewriter

The Standard Visible Writer

The Oliver Typewriter No. 5 has many great conveniences not found on other machines.

We even supply it equipped to write the wonderful new PRINTYPE—for 17 Cents a Day.

There is no patent on the "17-Cents-a Day" Purchase Plan.

We invented it and presented it to the public, with our compliments.

The "17-Cents-a-Day" Plan leaves no excuse for writing in primitive longhand. We have made it so easy to own The Oliver Typewriter that there's no need even to rent one.

Just say "17 Cents a Day"—Save your pennies—and soon the machine is yours!

The Oliver Typewriter is selling by thousands for 17 Cents a Day.

When even the School Children are buying machines on this simple, practical Plan, don't you think it is time for you to get an Oliver Typewriter?

17 Cents a Day Buys Newest Model

We sell the new Oliver Typewriter No. 5 for 17 Cents a Day.

We guarantee our No. 5 to be absolutely our best model.

The same machine that the great corporations use.

Their dollars cannot buy a better machine than you can get for pennies.

Make the Machine Pay Its Cost

The Oliver Typewriter is a money-making machine. It helps "big business" pile up huge profits.

Tens of thousands of people rely on The Oliver Typewriter for their very bread and butter.

A small first payment puts the machine in your possession.

Then you can make it earn the money to meet the little payments.

If you are running a business of your own, use The Oliver Typewriter and make the business grow.

If you want to get a start in business, use The Oliver Typewriter as a battering-ram to force your way in!

The ability to operate The Oliver Typewriter is placing young people in good positions every day.

Get The Oliver Typewriter—on the "17-Cents-a-Day" Plan—it will help you win success.

Ask About "The Easy Way"

to secure the newest model Oliver Typewriter No. 5. The Art Catalog and full particulars of the "17-Cents-a-Day" Purchase Plan will be sent promptly on request. Address who is called in the New Testament story the Good Samaritan. He was altogether wrong as the Jews considered the question of what constituted the church. He was an outcast from the Commonwealth of Israel. He was an alien, for between the Jews and the Samaritans there was no dealing. He simply loved his fellowman. He saw the bleeding victim on the highway. He dismounted and approached him and heard his groans. He ministered unto him, he bound up his wounds, he put him upon his own beast and sent him to an inn and said, "Do thou for him whatever is required, and if more in the way of pay is demanded, you need but call upon me." Who was orthodox. Who was heretic?

THE OLIVER TYPEWRITER COMPANY

Agencies Everywhere. OLIVER TYPEWRITER BUILDING, CHICAGO.

I listen for the verdict of Him who reigns as authority over conscience, and I find that he lifted the good Samaritan into an immortal eminence, a man honored of God and crowned by the majesty of love.

The church of Jesus Christ, holding to one of the creeds, to all of the creeds, feebly or strongly that turns aside from the man who has fallen among thieves is branded in the name of love as heretical. It matters not that you shall be able to repeat the Apostles' Creed; it matters not that you are familiar with the Nicene Creed; it matters not that you are acquainted with the Auxberg confession of faith; it matters not that you may quote sentence after sentence in that noble document known as the Westminster confession. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not love, it profiteth me nothing." Though I am as orthodox as Thomas a Kempis and have not love my orthodoxy profits me nothing. If the church of truth, lacking love, shall permit itself to be limited in its great social service by virtue of its denominational differences and its sectarian spirit, then the church is branded in the name of love as heretical. There can be no orthodoxy without love, and there can be no heresy where there is love.

Verdict of Story.

That is the verdict of the Master in that wonderfully beautiful story to which I have made reference.

There comes before my mind, finally, another picture. I believe it to be a figurative representation of the great judgment day; but it holds the essential truths of judgment. The standard by which we are to be judged is the Christ life. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto Me." So the throne is placed and the Judge takes His seat upon that throne and the multitudes—church members among them—stand there to hear the final sentence and the explanation of the whole process brought to their thought and to their conscience. There are those who say, "Lord, Lord, have we not been orthodox? Have we not prophesied in your name, and in your name have we not done many wonderful works? Have we not cast out devils in your name?" And Jesus shall say unto them, "Your orthodoxy avails nothing. Have you done it unto me in the spirit of love, for me, and for me as represented in your fellowmen? I was hungry," the Judge goes on, "and you fed me; I was thirsty and you gave me drink; I was naked and you clothed me: I was sick and in prison, and you visited me." Then the words of the marvelous music, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Therein we find again the standard which shall determine of whose fold we are, whether belonging to those named heretics, or belonging to those named orthodox.

The difference between the two classes is found in the one magical word "love."

I tell you Abou Ben Adhem came nearer being the Christian, if we are to interpret the words of Jesus, than many of those who pride themselves on their orthodoxy and who are willing to sit on some bench of high court proceedings to pronounce judgment upon their fellows, however sincere they may be.

Doesn't Know Dogmas.

Abou Ben Adhem does not know very much about the theological dogmas; he does not know very much about the great intellectual movements—call them higher criticism if you please, or biblical criticism or what not—but he says to the angel, "Write me down as one who loves his fellow man." I would rather take my chances with the heretical heathen who manifests the spirit of Jesus Christ in his life, in his service, in his devotion to his fellow men, than with that man who talks about his orthodoxy and who thinks that the business of Jesus Christ is simply to protect orthodoxy rather than to engage in the aggressive campaign of saving the world from the power of sin and from the influence of sin and from the dominion of sin.

One would suppose from reading the pages of history sometimes that the particular business of the church has been to save its own orthodox life rather than to carry out the gospel of the Master. Throw your orthodoxy to the winds, if necessary, in order that you may go out and carry the love of Jesus Christ unto men and set them free from the bonds of iniquity and bring them into the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

I trust that in this sermon on orthodoxy and heresy I shall not be numbered among the heretics. I should be glad, however, to accept any penalty involved, if you mean by heresy what I mean by heresy. If I am a heretic as I have explained it tonight, then I deserve to be branded. If I am a heretic from the standpoint of theological dogmas, I am in the company, let me tell you, of those who are leading a church that too long has been bound in grave clothes out into that liberty which comes from the magic words of the Master, "Roll the stone from the door of the sepulcher and let Lazarus hear the words, 'Lazarus, come forth.'"

The National Council of the Disciples

As is well known, there is no place in our national gatherings for stimulating interest in social justice and kindred themes that have to do with the vital affairs both of the church and the nation. It is not enough that men shall confess Christ, be baptized, join the church, keep the Lord's Supper and contribute to missions, but there is to go out of our lives a spirit of heroic brotherhood that shall demand juster social conditions, better tenements for the poor, more equitable wages for labor, abolition of war, an education that shall adjust men to the spiritual necessities of the times and drive out the love of oppression.

The Sermon on the Mount is not the vision of an idle dreamer. It is the passion of a heart that has revealed to us our possibilities. Those achievements do not lie on the other side of the tomb. They belong here and now. Social wrongs will never be righted until all Christians come to see that we are brothers, not that we Disciples are brothers to Disciples, or that Baptists are brothers to Baptists, or that Methodists are brothers to Methodists, but that all believers in Christ are brothers to all mankind. War will never be abolished until all Christians come to see that it is an ungodly business from start to finish and that it leaves an irreparable loss in manhood from which nations rarely recover, for the flower of nations has been given as food for the cannon.

A dozen serious problems such as these face us in common with other communions and it is not a matter of choice with us whether we shall try to meet them, but it is sheer necessity. The church was never approaching such critical times—more serious than its conflict with Judaism, paganism, philosophy, barbarism, or rationalism—and only in the fear and power of God can we meet the issues. They will not be solved singly. I mean it will not be a Presbyterian solution, nor an Episcopalian solution, nor a Lutheran solution, but it will be solved in the united council of Christendom. The Disciples have not been given their phenomenal increase to stand aloof in these times in the solution of these great problems. We have a task. We have to make our contribution or be contented, to say the most, with a position in the furthest of the rear ranks. To give place to any of these things we have to organize a side convention for a few hours. That these things should not be fastened upon the American Christian Missionary Society, as other things have been in the past, is eminently proper, but that we should have no place for this growing demand among us is equally improper, for the Christianity of the future is going to deal with these problems and those akin to them more definitely and heroically than ever before.

At the recent New York meeting of our Commission on Christian Union, it was suggested by F. W. Burnham, of Springfield, Ill., that at the Louisville convention this fall the Council on Christian Union revise its constitution by changing its name dropping the words "Christian Union" so as to read simply "The National Council of the Disciples of Christ," maintaining under said Council a Commission on Christian Union as at present and making such other revisions as would allow to be organized under it other commissions as the need may be. Certainly we should cultivate definite views on the great world problems and, in our own gatherings and in interdenominational conferences, seek to find those solutions that will mean most for the solidarity of the race. Besides those boards and committees and commissions already in service among us, it is proper that we have a commission on international peace, on labor, on education and on publicity. Some of the committees already operating, such as that on social service, could come under this council.

The Commission on Christian Union boasts no great achievements, but it has served in bringing the message of the Disciples of Christ to the attention of leaders of other communions and into quarters where it was practically unknown. In every instance it has received a most respectful and sympathetic hearing. Out of these conferences the Episcopalians sent out "The History and Status of the Disciples of Christ in the United States"—a twenty-four page brochure, written and distributed at their expense. Journals of other communions have invited articles from our commission, as had also the secular press of America, through the Church News Association, so that millions have read our message at first hand. Out of a recent conference in New York, President F. D. Kershner, of Texas Christian University, presented a paper on Christian baptism, which is now being prepared for the press and will appear in book form. It will be regarded as among the best, if not the very best thing, ever published on that subject. Numerous addresses have been made, conferences held and we are moving heartily in sympathy with the coming World Conference on Faith and Order. We are seeking to create both a spirit and literature in the cause of Christian Union. We are all busy men and can only give a little time to this, but what is being done in this cause may be done in every other with which we ought to have to do. We have the men, we have the opportunity and the day for action is at hand.

We not only need such a council for what we may contribute in the solution of these problems, but we need it for ourselves. I beg to be forgiven, but we can never fulfill our mission by a provincial policy. If any obligation is more binding upon us than others, it is that we shall touch shoulders with Christians of other communions, that we shall be among the first in every community for co-operation in everything that makes for social and economic betterment. Where one of another communion will go one mile, we must go two. We are pledged to this by the principles of our origin.

An exclusive policy defeats all that we stand for—it misrepresents us, both to ourselves and to others. We especially need a commission on publicity. There is not another communion in America with the numerical strength of the Disciples of Christ that is as little known and as seldom mentioned as we are. Whatever may have been the conditions that brought this, I am not now discussing, but the time has come when among the best and most favorably known bodies of believers in America should be the Disciples of Christ. I am not asking that we as a people be given leadership, for that we do not want, but we have a mission and that mission is to be fulfilled. We have a message and that message is to be delivered. The harvest is ripe. Our Lord reminded us that ripe harvest time is the time for prayer. The devotional life will find the road to conquest. It has done that before, it will do that again.

I have thus written—in no sense dictating, merely giving a suggestion primarily to the members of the Council on Christian Union but expressing at the same time the cry of my own heart and in expressing that, I have expressed the cry of hosts of my brethren in all parts of America. There are great problems that are throbbing in the life of the nation. We are a part of the national life and the throb beats are reddening our cheeks and reminding us that not to angels, but to men and women the Lord is looking for the solution, and only in the guidance of the Holy Spirit shall we find those solutions that are both just and holy.

I am convinced that such a council would not only add efficiency to our great brotherhood, but would likewise increase the efficiency of the Commission on Christian Union by giving to us a larger opportunity of touching the Christian world and being touched by it. These suggestions are made now so that if there is any discussion on them there may be ample time to do so before the convention meets. There is safety in freedom of speech.

PETER AINSLIE.

Baltimore, Md.

Drake University

Des Moines, Iowa.

COLLEGE OF LIBERAL ARTS.

Four-year courses, based upon four-year high school courses, leading to the degree of A. B., Ph. B., S. B. In the School of Education, included in this college, are courses for Students in Domestic Science.
Primary Teachers.
Kindergarten Teachers.
Grade Teachers.
High School Teachers.

COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE.

Graduate course, requiring three years' work, leading to degree of D. B.

COLLEGE OF LAW.

Three-year course, based on four-year high school course, leading to degree of L.L. B.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE.

Four-year course, based on four-year high school course and two full years in college, leading to the degree of M. D.

COLLEGE OF DENTISTRY.

Three-year course, based on four-year high school course, leading to the degree of D. D. S.

INSTITUTE OF FINE ARTS.

Special courses, based upon such preparation as best fits the student to pursue the study of his chosen course most profitably. The Institute of Fine Arts includes three distinct departments:
Conservatory of Music.
School of Painting and Drawing.
School of Dramatic Art.

For catalogue and other information, address,
THE PRESIDENT,
DRAKE UNIVERSITY,
Des Moines, Iowa.

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.

NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business

FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet

THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.
1109 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, U. S. A.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 27
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone
Far Sounding
Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
OUR SPECIAL SELF-COLLECTING Cushioned Tray has no equal. NOISELESS, DUST PROOF, INTERLOCKING. Best for pew or altar communion. Uses short, shallow cup, glass or aluminum (indestructible) no tipping of head. Saves ONE-FOURTH cost other services. Over 12,000 churches use. Send for catalog and "Special Introductory Offer." Thomas Communion Service Co., Box 120 Lima, Ohio

Bethany Graded Lessons

Charles Clayton Morrison, Editor

Now Cover the Entire Sunday-School

As the Bethany Graded Lessons unfold from quarter to quarter it becomes increasingly plain to informed and discerning Sunday-school teachers, superintendents and workers that no private or sectarian publishing house can compete successfully with the great union enterprise supplying these graded lessons to twelve leading denominations.

[The Graded Lessons are approaching completion. The Beginners' and Primary Departments are fully completed. Three of the four Junior grades are complete. Fourth year Junior pupils may use either third year Junior lessons or first year Intermediate. Two of the four Intermediate grades are complete, and these materials may be used for the entire Intermediate Department. For Senior and Adult Departments, Dr. Scott's "Life of Jesus" is provided. Other Adult classes may use Dr. Strong's "The Gospel of the Kingdom."]

The Bethany Lessons surpass all others—absolutely—in every particular in which it is important for lesson helps to excel: In mechanical get-up, in chaste and fascinating art work, in practical adaptableness to the needs of both teacher and pupil, in sound evangelical and scriptural teaching, in rich spiritual insight. Nothing has been left undone that money, intelligence and Christian character could do to make these lessons the acme of excellence for the Sunday School.

EVERY LESSON WRITER IS A RECOGNIZED AUTHORITY IN THE INTERDENOMINATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL WORLD!

Demonstration of Christian Unity

Perhaps nothing has been done in modern times to demonstrate so clearly the essential unity of the churches and the possibility of organic union than the successful carrying through of this great enterprise of an interdenominational series of Sunday-school lessons. There has been no serious conflict among the editors representing a dozen denominations, among them Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists and Disciples. If the churches can unite in what they teach their children, who can doubt that co-operation and union is possible at every other point?

The Bethany Lessons thus afford a signal opportunity for the Sunday Schools of the Disciples to promote Christian Union.

Study the following diagram:

THE GRADED SUNDAY SCHOOL
Arranged by the International Sunday School Association.

SUNDAY SCHOOL GRADES	DEPARTMENTS	APPROXIMATE AGE	PUBLIC SCHOOL GRADE
1st 2nd	Beginners	4 and 5 Years
1st 2nd 3rd	Primary	6 Years 7 " 8 "	1st 2nd 3rd
1st 2nd 3rd 4th	Junior	9 Years 10 " 11 " 12 "	4th 5th 6th 7th
1st 2nd 3rd 4th	Intermediate	13 Years 14 " 15 " 16 "	8th 1 High 2 " 3 "
1st 2nd	Senior	17 Years 18 " 19 "	4 "

The Life of Jesus

In Fifty-two Lessons

BY DR. LOA ERMINA SCOTT.

A manual for young peoples and adult classes. It is conceded to be the most practicable text for its purpose on the market.

The book grew in the actual experience of teaching. From the moment it came from the press it has been in great demand. Another edition is now being prepared for.

It is just the thing for classes of young people of Senior department. But it is equally well adapted to adults.

Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c.

Write today for a copy.

The Gospel of the Kingdom

BY DR. JOSIAH STRONG

A monthly magazine for adult classes and mature young people who wish to study the great vital problems of Social Christianity.

Price 50 cents a year. Single copy 5c.

The Moral Leaders of Israel

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT

A study of the Hebrew prophets.

No more comprehensive, scholarly, and yet graphic narrative of the moral history of Israel has ever been published. It is an ideal text for adult and young people's classes.

Published now in quarterly form. Price 35c a quarter.

SEND TODAY FOR PRICE LIST, ORDER BLANK AND PROSPECTUS!

THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Vol. XXIX June 13, 1912 Number 24

THE CHURCH AND THE SOCIAL EVIL

NOTABLE RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY CHICAGO FEDERATION OF CHURCHES, WITH EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE DAY WHEN EVERYTHING GOES WRONG

BY J. L. GORDON

CHICAGO

Topics of the Times

As the days go by the Rockefeller family do not appear, according to reports in the daily press, to be getting any poorer. Last week John D. himself was worth $900,000,000. Since the "dissolution" of the Standard Oil trust, under the judgment of the Supreme court of the United States interpreting the Sherman anti-trust act, the wealth of Mr. Rockefeller has grown by leaps and bounds. It is reckoned that he is now worth fully $100,000,000 more than before the Supreme court judgment took effect. This is due to the enormous increase in market values of the stocks of many of the former subsidiaries of the oil octopus. One year recently, since the panic of 1907, the income of Mr. Rockefeller reached the extraordinary total of $137,500,000, it was learned from one of the investigators. This was his high water mark; in fact, more than double his ordinary income. From his holdings of Standard Oil stock alone Mr. Rockefeller derives an income of $40,000,000 every year. In 1865, as he has recorded in his autobiography, John D. Rockefeller achieved his first $5,000. Ten years later he was worth $5,000,000, and in 1890 he was reputed to be worth about $100,000,000, which was just the value of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, created about that time.

A large force of workmen have begun preparing the Coliseum for the use of the republican national convention, June 18, in Chicago. The sub-committee in charge of the arrangements have taken formal possession of the big building. It takes nearly three weeks to prepare the structure. The first work undertaken was the construction of the speakers' platform at the south end of the building. After this has been built the chairs will be placed in position and arrangements completed for the seating of the throng. The decorations will be left to the last. The convention hall will contain 11,188 seats. There will be 1,932 seats on the platform, 400 for working newspaper men, 1,078 for delegates, 1,078 for alternates, 3,500 for visitors on the main floor, and 3,200 for visitors in the balcony.

The senate celebrated Decoration Day by passing the annual pension appropriation bill after fifteen minutes' consideration. The measure carried $165,162,500, an increase of almost $13,000,000 over the amount appropriated by the house. The increase includes $12,500,000 for expense caused by the heavy volume of work growing out of the recent enactment of the so-called dollar a day pension law. The bill retained the present eighteen pension agencies distributed throughout the country, for whose consolidation into one agency the house had provided. It also provided for the payment of pensions by checks to the veterans instead of by vouchers. The bill goes to conference between the two houses.

This is the season when the tide of American visitors sets steadily toward the east. According to a recent calculation, American visitors to Europe spend in one season about $60,000,000. Of this London, it is estimated, gets about $7,500,000. And London is not satisfied. The municipal authorities of Paris estimate that American visitors alone in the summer season between June 1 and July 31 spend $60,000 at theatres, $80,000 on taxicabs and a total sum of not less than $15,000,000. Between those dates Paris has from 7,000 to 10,000 American visitors at her first class hotels and 20,000 in other hotels and pensions.

Family conditions in Kansas City are improving, according to W. W. Wright, divorce proctor. This statement is based on a comparison of marriage licenses issued and divorces applied for since Aug. 22, 1911. In that period 2,694 marriage licenses were issued. The number of divorces applied for was 710, making the ratio of unhappy marriages one of every 3.78. A similar comparison two years ago, showed that one marriage of three was unhappy. From Aug. 22 to Dec. 1, the number of divorce petitions filed was divided about equally between husbands and wives. From Dec. 1, to May 1, virtually all divorces applied for were sought by wives, showing, according to the proctor, that economic conditions have more to do with unhappy marriages than any other element. This contention is supported in this instance, he declares, by the fact that many men were unable to obtain employment during the winter and their home provisions were meager.

The annual convention of American dentists in Europe brought nearly all of them to Brussels and also a number of Europeans who hold diplomas from American dental colleges. In dentistry more than any other profession the skill of the American is clearly beyond that of the European. This is so generally admitted that many European dentists go to America for a regular or postgraduate course and proudly display an American diploma. Scant courtesy is paid the American doctor in Europe, and even distinguished physicians from that country might find it difficult to obtain permission to practice in Europe. The American dentist, however, is sure of a chance to make good, and they are eagerly sought as tenants of office buildings. The pioneers of these expatriate dentists were Dr. Sylvester of Detroit, who was the professional attendant of Emperor William, as well as his personal friend, and Dr. Evans, who aided his royal patroness, Empress Eugenie, to escape after the downfall of Napoleon III.

One deplorable effect of the Turco-Italian war is the bold pilfering of the mails in Italy—especially of those from the United States. The Italian Government, doubtless struggling under the onerous task of carrying on the war, seems to be quite unable to insure safe handling of the mails. That this is petty thievery is indicated by the fact that not alone registered mail, but ordinary letters as well are being stolen right and left. Two or three weeks ago the Italian police captured a man with forty stolen letters in his pocket. An American student at the North American College in Rome reports that he receives only half of the letters that his relatives write him. He has lost six letters since January 1, 1912. Americans in Italy, unable to get any satisfaction from the Italian post-office officials, are asking their relatives and friends at home to procure some effective action toward safeguarding this international correspondence.

—Mrs. John Stewart Kennedy has given New York University a Hall of Philosophy in memory of her father, Cornelius Baker, who was one of the early members of the council of the university. He made the first gift of books to the University Library, and gave liberally to the first endowment.

—Nine million women are employed in the German industries, 20,000 of these are employed in mining.

—The king of Italy is openly critical of all that is American, and American women he deems frivolous, vain, and too self satisfied.

About People

—Wilbur Wright the noted inventor of aeroplanes and flier, died of typhoid fever at his home in Dayton, Ohio, last week. He was born and spent his early years on a small farm two miles north of Millesvilie, Henry County, Ind. His father, Milton Wright, then was a presiding elder of the White River conference of the United Brethren Church, and supplemented the meager salary of the preacher of those days by cultivating a few acres of land. Both Wilbur and Orville Wright displayed mechanical genius when mere boys. They engaged for a time in the repair and manufacture of bicycles. They made a financial success of this venture and were able to save a few thousand dollars. A few years later Wilbur's interest was enlisted in aerial flight and he soon determined it could be more dexterously effected by the use of the aeroplane instead of the balloon. So he and Orville, as inseparable as twins, devoted their spare time to the theories and experiments of others in aerial navigation. Together they invented methods of regulating and controlling aeroplanes sailing in the air, and year after year they added to or improved these devices.

—President W. H. Taft pays taxes this year in Cincinnati on personal property to the value of $74,950. The President's bank account in the Ohio city shows $5,650 while his brother's, Charles P., shows only $360.

—William Jennings Bryan, Jr., with his wife and two children, will spend the coming winter in Washington, where Mr. Bryan will enter a law school. For several years they have made their home in Tucson. Mrs. Bryan was Miss Berger of Minneapolis.

—General William Booth, venerable head of the Salvation Army, is probably hopelessly blind according to the surgeons in attendance. Both eyes are inflamed as the result of the recent operation for the removal of a cataract from his left eye, and the inflamation has affected the optic nerve.

—Andrew Carnegie, his wife and daughter have left New York for their annual visit to Europe. Mr. Carnegie said that he would be gone until fall when he would be here to vote, but declined to say for whom he would cast his ballot. "I am no prophet," he said, "so how can I tell for whom I will vote?"

—Miss Eva Booth, commander of the Salvation Army in America has arrived in New York. She has arranged for a farewell tour in America for her father. The tour will be made next spring.

—Edson Joseph Chamberlain, vice-president of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, has been appointed to succeed Charles M. Hays, who lost his life in the Titanic disaster, as president of the road. He is a New Englander by birth and began his railroad career in the Central Vermont railroad.

—The department of psychology at the University of Chicago is mourning the death of its most brilliant student. She was Miss Katherine Elizabeth Taylor, of Sheridan, Wyo., and was but twenty-two years old. Miss Taylor's death followed a heart lesion that overcame her two months ago, when she overtaxed herself in making her way through a blizzard. Miss Taylor was considered a prodigy. At the age of three years she could read with ease. At nineteen she was graduated from the University of Wyoming, and at twenty she had earned the degrees of Bachelor of Laws and Bachelor of Arts. Last September, she came to Chicago to study psychology, and made a brilliant record.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT . . . . . EDITORS

The Day of Youth

IT IS IN THESE JUNE DAYS THAT THE thought of all the world is turning to childhood and youth. Sometime in the early summer there is a festival of childhood celebrated by all the religious bodies and known more or less universally as Children's Day. In some of the churches it is a time of confirmation, when those who have received the touch of sprinkled waters in their infancy are brought into the formal membership of the church. It is a beautiful sight to see these children, the boys in their newest clothes, the girls in white, and often wearing confirmation veils, making their way to the churches which practice this rite, to dedicate themselves thereby to the service of God.

* * *

In the churches of less ritualistic order, Children's Day marks the annual recurrence of the church's recognition of the child in its public ministries. Here the children are given a part in the services of the day. Emphasis is laid upon their importance to the life of the church, and upon parental responsibility for their moral and spiritual culture. It is a time of flowers and singing birds, of music and happiness. Even more than at Easter-time is the child given recognition on this good day of the early summer.

In many of the churches Children's Day is devoted to the celebration of child interest in the children of the non-Christian races. Those who remain untouched by the ordinary considerations which prompt to missionary activity are likely to yield sympathetic attention to the story of childhood sufferings and misfortunes in the far lands, and there is opportunity afforded for the instruction of the children of the West in the lives of their little friends out on the farther marches of the world, where mission schools and orphanages are helping to enrich the impoverished life of childhood.

* * *

More than this, it is a period of the year when the school releases the children and young people from the long constraints of the educational curriculum. All the younger portion of the community looks forward with eagerness and delight to these June days. To the little children commencement time brings the end of the study period and the long joys of the vacation. To those who make up the numbers of the graduating classes the commencement season is one of joy over completed studies, of social reunions, flowers, gifts, music and the entire round of events which mark the closing exercises of school life.

* * *

All these facts compel the attention of the entire community upon this period as pre-eminently the time dedicated to the youth of this generation. Like that company of Greeks who stood upon the shore at Iolcus and watched the departing youths sail out in the Argo to bring back from the distant Caucasus the golden fleece, so the parents and older brothers and sisters of these alert and expectant youths constitute the witnesses who watch with high anticipation the launching of the bark of childhood and youth into the far shining waters of life, and wonder what the coming years shall bring. Children's Day and Commencement time are alike impressive in their urgent summons to the present generation to take inventory of its possessions in the children.

Never was there an age so interested in youth as is our own. Oliver Wendell Holmes lamented that he had been born in a time when children were unesteemed and old age was honored, but that he had grown old in a day when youth had been discovered and old age was forgotten. This whimsical comment upon the modern change of emphasis is significant only as it points to the fact that youth has actually been found out and given its truer assessment by the open-eyed and discerning judgment of the world. And it is Christian civilization that has wrought this change. Nowhere outside of Christianity has youth found due recognition. But in the lands where the cross is revered all the social order is permeated by a growing interest in childhood and youth.

* * *

The study of childhood is the most fascinating of disciplines. The education of the young is the most costly and perennial of responsibilities. The physical life of children is receiving an attention hitherto entirely unknown. The food and clothing of children demands the scrutiny and wisdom of experts. Child literature is the most conspicuous commodity upon the book shelves of publishers. Child games and sports take precedence of all other amusement interests. The moral education of the young begins to occupy the thought of educators and religious leaders as more vital to the republic than any other single concern. The religious training of children in the home and the church is now felt to be an obligation too little appreciated in the past. The physical and moral dangers encountered by youth awaken the alarm and stir the activity of the guardians of virtue. The culture of youth in the graces of truthfulness, courtesy, gentleness, courage, cleanliness, self-sacrifice and reverence, which are the choicest gifts that education and personal influence can bestow upon the younger generation, is now securing the devoted attention of those who cherish the noblest ideals for society.

* * *

In a time like this, so marked by appreciation of the value of youth and the possibility of shaping it to high and holy ideals, the function of parenthood, of teaching and of ethical and spiritual direction become the most imperial and desirable offices which God confers upon mankind.

Social Survey

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN.

The Community Amusement Problem

Almost everybody plays, but different people have different ways. The fable of Aesop, concerning the unbent bow, is in point here. Amusement is just as much one of the fundamental needs of life as food or shelter. Monotony of experience extinguishes personality and even consciousness. Our Puritan forefathers made their greatest mistake in their attitude of wholesale condemnation of amusements. Perhaps this mistake rather than their harsh doctrines on other subjects at last wrought their undoing.

The church of modern times must recognize the amusement interest in life. Instead of preaching a set of don'ts on the amusement question, it must be prepared to furnish some positive guidance. The first thing to be done is to watch the good and bad ways the people of the community have of playing. There are the theaters, some the bulwarks of good morals, some the enemies of civilization. There is the saloon which finds its chief power, not through purveying alcohol but in furnishing amusements of different kinds. The local dance hall is found in most communities, and is pronounced by Mayor Dunne the cause of the downfall of more young people in Chicago than any other agency. Evil agencies furnishing amusement survive often with police protection while the more legitimate amusements are persecuted. It is no uncommon thing to find a city where the police leave the poker joint without any molestation but arrest small boys for playing baseball in the streets.

The church can best serve its community by cultivating sentiment for the public playground. Where this is not to be accomplished, the church must then undertake in some measure to serve the amusement need through her own organizations. A Sunday-school class can quite well organize for an athletic program and a summer camp. The "church social" once sneered at because it was made a means of financing the church, can be revived as an amusement agency for the young people and can be made of the very greatest usefulness. The musical evening, the illustrated week-night lecture, the church and Sunday-school picnic, all these and other agencies can be fostered to counteract the evil amusement interests of the community.

The Economic Value of the Older Men

It has been the style around the large cities of America for the past twenty years to put the premium upon the labor of the young men. Business corporations in many cases have refused to hire men that were past thirty-five. The reasons assigned for such an attitude was that youth possessed more vitality and enthusiasm and would turn out more work. However, it is clear upon reflection that while youth has the advantage of energy and enthusiasm, it often directs its energies badly. The man past middle life, if he has been an apt pupil in the school of life, has learned to operate with a smaller measure of energy and secure a larger measure of efficiency, because his experience enables him to avoid the mistakes of the younger man.

It is gratifying to see corporations which are wise enough to recognize the value of the older man. The stripling just out of college has no opportunity with the Pennsylvania railroad except to wait and learn. It is stated that there are in the employ of that road nearly five thousand men between the ages of sixty and seventy. At seventy employes are retired upon an old-age pension. They have one employe who has been receiving pay from the road for sixty-six years. He has evidently not been retired yet. Some employes resist retirement, even with pension. This railroad does not pretend to be a charitable institution but considers this policy good business. It is to be hoped that other corporations will take an equally wise attitude toward the value of experience in labor.

A Woman Stock-holder Brings Reform

The great car works at Pullman have been the occasion in recent years of many disquieting rumors as to the conditions of labor there. Finally some public-spirited person brought the matter to the attention of Mrs. Joseph P. Bowen, well-known in Chicago for her philanthropic work and a large stock-holder in the company. She employed a man to inspect the works and report to her.

She found that there was only one surgeon looking after the accidents where there should be five. The painting was done under such conditions that the painters were continually being poisoned from the white lead as the paint had to be rubbed down and the dust was not taken care of. Another source of harm to the health of the employes was from the sand blast. Sand is driven with great force against the surface of a steel part so that it may be roughened to take the paint. This sand is exceedingly fine and was allowed to pollute the air of the shops. Another source of disease to the men was the use of hyrdofluoric acid in the glass etching department. The fumes of this acid are very irritating to the nose and throat and many men were contracting illnesses from this source.

The reforms asked for by Mrs. Bowen were safety appliances which would obviate all this sickness and the employment of more surgeons so the men might be properly taken care of. The factory did not have any hospital, either, and men badly injured were often taken to Cook County Hospital when the company was not liable under the law.

When Mrs. Bowen first started her agitation for better conditions one of the company officials suggested she might sell her stock if she thought so badly of the company. She replied that she preferred to stay in and better conditions. However, the negotiations proceeded without hitch for the most part. The reforms inaugurated are for the interest of the company in the long run. This incident illustrates the fact that there is coming to be a growth of conscience on the part of the holders of stocks. Hitherto the stock-holder has seemed to have an impersonal relationship to the corporation. We are coming to see that this attitude of irresponsibility must be abandoned.

Civilizing the Fourth of July

For many years the reports of the accidents happening on the Fourth of July have been a sad aftermath of what was otherwise a happy day. Ordinances were sometimes passed forbidding the use of explosives but these ordinances could not be enforced for lack of public sentiment to back them up. The accident list grew steadily until in 1908 there were 5,623 accidents.

The origin of our Fourth of July customs is to be traced back to John Adams. A century and a quarter ago he wrote that the day "will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival. . . . It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires and illuminations from one end of this continent to the other." He certainly prophesied well, for from this time forth Yankee ingenuity was put forth in devising various noise making devices. Gunpowder came to be supplanted with dynamite in the toys prepared for the children, and the giant cannon cracker came to be an instrument of destruction that took its annual toll of hundreds of young lives.

There was no success made in fighting the older customs for the Fourth of July until some social substitutes were provided. Ordinances were impotent and city councils availed nothing until their activities were positive rather than negative. In the spring of 1909, the department of Child Hygiene of the Russell Sage Foundation, arranged with the Playground Association to hold a conference of Municipal representatives to consider plans for "a saner, safer, Fourth of July." Forty-five municipalities responded. The report of this conference was widely published and twenty cities responded by organizing celebrations along the lines suggested. The result was that the casualties dropped from 5,623 to 5,307. The following year the campaign was pushed more vigorously and there was still further decline. In three years the reform had been pushed to the point where only one-third the casualties were resulting. It is to be hoped we shall soon completely civilize the Fourth.

Occupational Education

The ministry has long since been muck-raked for medievalism. It has been compelled to reform and face toward the light. The school teacher, however, has been immune from criticism until just now. We have scarcely anything more medieval than our system of education, except it be our courts of law. Schools still meet the intellectual needs of another age instead of preparing young people for life in the present century. We need schools that will not set young people out into the world helpless to provide for their urgent necessities, after years of study.

between his religion and his morality. The one was the gift of the Lord; the other has to be worked out, and like all the rest of mankind it is easier for him to announce a gift than to live a life. Of course he may forget his religion and carry off a neighbor's chicken occasionally, but the gnawings of hunger are more insistent than the promptings of conscience. Perhaps there lies dormant in his being the sense of injustice arising from centuries of unrequited labor. Perhaps the grief of ancestors over that and other wrongs, came as a heritage to urge him to take by cunning what was denied earlier generations by force. In the presence of wrong-doing conscience is fertile in justification. This is one of the marks of the unity of the human race.

The negro has been taught to regard religion as a charm or a fetich which will aid him in the time of stress. The white man's habits he may imitate, and many customs he will adopt in their entirety, but the white man's religion is too cold and formal for the black. He will have none of it, nor will he incorporate into his church life any of the finer things of the anglo-saxon's religion. How could he? He doesn't even know what they are. The only religion he sees is what has been current among his people for centuries; and it might be a good thing for our missionaries in Africa to train their converts and then send them to this great land to inaugurate a new era in the thinking and practice of the American citizen of African blood. The problem of the negro's religion in the South is one of the gravest with which that great land has to do. He is at the mercy of the passions of ignorance, untouched, except in the rarest instances, by the refining influences of our Christian civilization.

The manner in which the black people are housed is a great hindrance to their progress. Environment is a subject, so far as the colored race is concerned, which the South has scarcely considered. The hovels and the cabins are virtually prisons of the soul. A philanthropy which would build proper dwellings for the colored people of every community, to be conducted under municipal care, would be a great step toward the salvation of the colored race. The difference between their civilization and ours is the difference between paint and whitewash. The latter is good enough for the outbuildings—and the cabin.

The house in which a man lives determines the man no less than the man determines his house. A glance at the negro quarter in every village of the South will tell the tragic story of want and degradation. It is a long and bloody climb from the cabin to the castle, and just as far from the rude meeting house to the cathedral. The majority of people are badly handicapped with hereditary defects or bad environment. The negro has both. Others can change their environment; it is next to impossible for him to change his. He must live in the squalid quarter, or take the cabin, if he is a farm-hand, in the country. There he lives alone, and he never lives there long, either as an individual or as a family. He is gregarious on any soil.

The negro's soul has been saved, and is saved every winter; no race on earth has as many souls snatched as brands from the burning, or as often, as has the colored race. But religiously he has made no progress in a hundred years. If he has, the imagination will stagger under the attempt to conceive what he was at that period. And remember I speak of the emotional negro, and he comprises a large class. When he tries to rise he meets with little encouragement, and when he falls the law is severe. Leavening and purifying influences turned in upon him in large measure are the only means possible now to improve his condition. From what source they are to come is the problem.

Here is an opportunity of the first magnitude for the growing company of those who believe that social salvation is a part of the program of Christianity.

The Day When Everything Goes Wrong

By J. L. Gordon

"The Day When Everything Goes Wrong," is the day when your philosophy of life breaks down. Such a tragedy calls for a mental reconstruction. Nervousness is a sign of nervelessness and indicates a mental disorder rather than a physical disarrangement. The problem is psychological. The disease is mental. The man has lost control of the reins of life's forces because he has lost the focus of things. Wrong thinking is the mother of wrong doing. God governs the rock by gravitation, the tree by a natural law, the animal by instinct and man by reason.

Reason is a mental process which results in a certain type of mind, therefore, we read in the Great Book concerning those who are "spiritually-minded," "carnally-minded," "high-minded," "sober-minded," and "feeble-minded," "single-minded," and "double-minded." You can be whatever you have a mind to be. There is one person you must learn to manage—Yourself. You can train your eye to see—ask the artist. You can train your ear to hear—ask the musician. You can train your hand to construct—ask the mechanic. You can train your voice to emphasize—ask the orator. You can train your face to reveal—ask the actor. You can train your nerve to obey—ask the tight-rope walker.

He Has Nerve.

Ten thousand admiring observers remark and affirm that he has "nerve." All men have "nerve," but this man has it in perfect control. Nerve-control is the secret of happiness. Don't let your conscience play with you, or your digestive apparatus befuddle you, or your imagination beguile you, or your own peculiar temperment deceive you—be master of yourself. Remember, there are two of you—yourself and your sub-self. Talk to yourself as a horseman talks to his horse—"Steady! Steady!" Don't use the whip on your own soul. Talk to yourself. I am going to talk to myself for forty minutes. In talking to myself I will be talking to you. In talking to you I will be talking to myself. I am not sure which needs the discourse the most, but when you inwardly and subconsciously remark: "That fits the preacher," the chances are that the illustration is intended for you. So watch! Don't sleep! Listen:—

Remember your own troubles always seem the greatest. No tale of woe is quite as sad as yours. Destiny has reserved his choice bits of tribulations for you. The gods seem to have an evil eye on you. You were certainly born under an unlucky star. For no matter how much or how well you plan, "things go wrong," and there are days when "everything goes wrong." This is your experience—and your neighbor's—and mine. So say we all. There is no trouble like ours! But trouble is not peculiar to any class, calling or profession. Where there's work, there's worry—or the tendency to worry. The captain of the aeroplane, floating through the viewless atmosphere of the skies, has discovered that there are "holes in the air." I imagined that he would be "above" such a thing as "trouble," but he is not. There are no exceptions, we all have our share of circumstantial misfits. William E. Gladstone, at the height of his fame, exclaims: "I am leading a dog's life." Dr. Charles F. Deems said that his conception of heaven was "a place where there are no more letters to write." Said Sir James Simpson, the famous English physician: "I am weary for a real jaunt, without a sick patient lying at the end of it." There is no work, place or position in life without its "worries," annoyances, perplexities, anxieties and surprises.

A King's Heart.

Plato said: "If we could examine the heart of a king, we would find it full of scars and black wounds." Dr. Benjamin Rush, of Philadelphia, used to say to his medical students: "Young men, have two pockets, a small pocket and a large pocket; a small pocket for your fees and a large pocket for your annoyances." And this was half a century before every man could own a household medical encyclopaedia and be "his own physician."

According to the universal concensus of opinion there is only one profession without friction, concern and anxiety, and that is the preacher's. A preacher's work is simplicity itself. If he knows how to "draw an inference," "draw a crowd," and "draw his salary," all the problems of existence are solved for him. Who would not be a preacher? And yet there are members of the ministerial profession who look pale, worried, and "much troubled about many things." Trouble is the universal complaint. Even children have their troubles. Your child is just as much worried about his little tin horn as you are about the grand, square or upright which adorns your drawing room, and one is about as useful or as useless as the other. I presume your boy can get as much music out of his battered trumpet as you can extract from your superb parlor instrument. His trouble is as real as yours. One would imagine that you might see a reflection of your own temperament in the disposition of your child and laughing at his troubles, smile at your own; but no, you are only a child of a larger growth—your troubles are real, your child's imaginary, and so the world moves on.

And Yet Keep Cool.

Consider how many people there are who carry great burdens and yet keep cool. There is a world of meaning in Emerson's phrase: "Energy is repose." Anybody can get excited, but the man who is sure of himself is the incarnation of composure. Wellington uttered his military behests to his subordinates in a tone which bordered on a whisper. If agitations swept his soul nobody ever knew it. The great man is the man who has become master of himself. When a candle is burning it yields light; when it is sputtering it yields smoke. Smoke is wasted illumination. Nervousness is a sign of strength, but it is not strength. "It is a fundamental mistake to call vehemence and rigidity strength! A man is not strong who takes convulsion fits; though six men cannot hold him." It took four men to hold Napoleon in his death convulsions. There is a strength which is weakness. Worry has killed many a great man, but it never made a man great. Repose is the master-sign of a great soul.

A Man's Disposition.

Remember that a man's disposition means more than his occupation. "Temper," said Bishop Watson, "is nine-tenths of religion." It is nine-tenths of everything. Temper is temperament. Your temperament is your way of looking at things. The blind soldier of Liverpool wore a placard on his bosom which read:

Battles	6
Wounds	4
Children	5
Total	15

The music of the soldier's hand organ always brought a good offering. Sydney Smith, when closing a letter to a friend, remarked: "I have gout, asthma and seven other maladies, but otherwise I am very well." The preacher who announced the hymn: "Count Your Blessings One by One," had a blind man in his congregation who muttered, musingly, "I can't do that, I should never get through." There are sightless men who can see and full-orbed mortals who are blind. Roxana, the wife of Lyman Beecher, had very little to fear when she wrote. " * * * What I fear more than all is my extreme propensity to see every thing in the most favorbale point of view, to clothe every object in the brightest colors, to make all nature wear the face of hope and joy."

A Pessimist.

But we are not all blessed with such sweet and charming dispositions. Would that we were. Robertson of Brighton remarked concerning himself: "Deficiency of hope is the great fault of my character." Large caution and small hope, phrenologically, produce a pessimist. When Mark Twain heard of the death of Matthew Arnold he smilingly observed: "Poor Matthew, he will go to heaven and it will not please him." Some folks are never satisfied—never surprised—never pleased—never gratified—never amused—never moved. They are blinded by the light, chilled by the breeze, tormented by the heat, annoyed by the rain and bored by the world. They are never so happy as when they are absolutely miserable. When they sing, they sigh.

Better Than a Thousand Pounds.

Dr. Samuel Johnson affirmed that the habit of looking on the bright side of life was better than "a thousand pounds a year," and Robert Louis Stevenson, whom "death had by the heels," went a step farther and said: "To be happy is the first step to being pious."

A little gold amidst the gray;
That's sunshine;
A little brightness on the way—
That's sunshine;
A little spreading of the blue,
A little widening of the view,
A little heaven breaking through—
That's sunshine.

A little looking for the light—
That's sunshine;
A little patience through the night—
That's sunshine;
A little bowing of the will,
A little resting on the hill,
A little standing very still—
That's sunshine.

Remember that the body bears a close relationship to the brain. When the brain runs the body, the man is calm, when the body runs the brain, the man is nervous. Carlyle's health gave out when he was writing an essay on the life of Oliver Cromwell and Maurice remarks: "Carlyle believed in God down to the time of Oliver Cromwell." When Dr. J. W. Alexander was asked the question: "Do you enjoy the full assurance of faith?" his answer was: "I think I do, except when the wind is from the east."

Keep your physical frame in tune. In tune with the infinite? Yes, but first of all in tune with yourself. Don't kill yourself by overwork. If you can't, you can't and that's an end to it.

"Ah," says the successful business man. "Keep your correspondence up, Mr. Preacher, keep your correspondence up!" I might, if I had a score of underpaid stenographers to do my bidding, but the success of my pulpit efforts depends on a certain measure of daily, mental concentration. Letters or no letters, I'll preach. To use an Emersonian expression, I am "primarily engaged" to my pulpit. God has not called me to conduct a correspondence school but to preach. Humanity first, pulpit preparations second and desk details when the mood is on. I would rather be a live preacher with a full church than a dead preacher with all my letters answered. Understand? But there are letters which I answer at once—the letters of the broken-hearted.

Eliminate It.

Eliminate the things concerning which it is absolutely useless to worry. No man ever gave way beneath the burdens of today—it's tomorrow and its burdens which break the soul. There are two unlucky days—yesterday and tomorrow. The past is gone and gone forever. Tomorrow has not yet arrived. Yesterday and tomorrow are sleeping dogs—let them lie. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. Three years ago William Howard Taft remarked to a circle of his boon companions: "When I consider all that has come to me of success, prosperity and good luck, I wonder, with trembling, if there is not to be some great misfortune to offset it all,"—and now Theodore is after him with a big stick. Trouble had to come, he was looking for it.

Remember, too, that there are first class troubles and second class troubles. If you are going to have worries, have big, large, fine, decent, respectable, aristocratic worries—worries which are worth while worrying about. Rescue life from its littleness. Near the desk of a business friend of mine I found a billboard of suitable proportions installed on which the captain of industry had tacked up bits of paper reminding him of "The Ten Most Important Things" on which he was determined to concentrate his mind during the current month. Save yourself for the big propositions.

Suppose the very worst should happen, the world would still go on. All things work together for good—for everybody. The Titanic, the best ship ever built, has gone down, but we are to have better ships, better sailors, better life boats, better sea captains, better citizens and better millionaires.

A Beautiful Picture.

I stood in an old English cathedral. The dying glories of the setting sun had kindled myriad forms of fiery beauty on every western window. For a thousand years worshipping humanity had stood beneath those arches. Beneath the resounding marble floor there lay the coffined dust of bishops, rectors, priests, curates and choirmasters. One generation after another had come and gone and the shadows of decades, generations and epochs lingered darkly in unfrequented cloisters and silent nooks. And I stood and thought of the meaning of the years. What mighty throngs had gathered here. What slender audiences had sat in loneliness when the enthusiasm of other days had passed away. And there had been broken-hearted priests who had morned over the sad remnant of days more glorious and choirmasters whose music had rolled through empty aisles and under echoing arches which canopied but a faithful few—but now all are gone, and memory reigns. These faithful ones sleep well. Their bones rest silently. And centuries have come and gone—are coming and going—why worry? The clan has become a kingdom, the kingdom an empire, the empire a conquering race and the cross on the flag of a thousand splendid conflicts floats over all and God is in the heavens and all is well on earth. Why worry?

Serene, I fold my hands and wait;
Nor care for wind, or tide, or sea;
I rave no more, 'gainst Time and Fate,
For lo! My own shall come to me.
I stay my haste, I make delays,
For what avails this eager pace?
I stand amid eternal ways,
And what is mine shall know my face.

The Pantheism of St. Francis

Maurice F. Egan, writing in the June Century Magazine on St. Francis, founder of the Franciscan order of monks, brings to view some interesting facts of the life and ideals of this unique figure in history.

He did not dare to aspire to be a priest, says Mr. Egan. Theology he revered, but learning that did not concern itself immediately with the glory of God he detested. One might make poems, but it was better to live them, and one should only make the poems he could live. Besides, in his belief, books were as nothing compared with men and the things of nature. To get nearer to Christ was to get nearer to nature. He loved poetry, but it must be the poetry of the heart, not of the academies.

All things were of God; to misuse a book or to tread on a written sheet was wrong, for in the book or on the sheet might be the name of God or at least the letters that formed His name.

In the eyes of Francis, Pan had been blessed by Christ. Paganism—what was natural and good in paganism—was Christian. The worm in the soil was a symbol of the humility of Christ, the lily of his purity, the birds of his goodness and love, the ravening wolf and the avaricious brigand his creatures who were suffering, because the Lady Poverty was despised, and they were left by the proud of the earth to starve or to steal. Francis was a pantheist of the highest pantheism.

Poverty to Francis meant entire liberty to love God and God's creatures. To renew the youth of Christianity was his desire, and by this to give more glory to the risen Christ, who had died in the arms of Lady Poverty. He had no quarrel with riches or with rich men. In his idea of the world, Dives had a place, but Lazarus was the more to be honored because he was poor. Francis was firmly convinced that the poor would always be on the earth, and that contentment and peace could come to every human being only by honoring and loving poverty.

The Family Bread-Getter

By Ruth Everett

She was not alone good looking but she looked good. Just the same I hesitated about giving her employment, although we, with most of the other stores, had advertised for help in most every department.

The work just before and for a day or two after the Christmas holidays is trying to a degree. More than half of the time the customer does not himself know what he wants; there are others behind or at the side of him who are in the same or a worse frame of mind. All are struggling to get close to the counter, some politely, others rudely. To neglect or seem indifferent to any one means to lose a customer and make an enemy for the house.

The hours are long, the heads of departments are exacting, they have to be. They are on the keen lookout for signs of neglect or insubordination on the part of the employes.

Moreover, the girl before me did not look strong. I was afraid that she could not stand the strain, and so I told her.

A sweet blush overspread her face as she said, "You are mistaken, sir. I am perfectly well. I may not look strong but I can work, and work hard. My father is not rich and never was, and as I am the oldest of a large family of children I have always had to work."

"But that was different," I said. "You helped your mother but there was no one standing over you to see that in every hour you accomplished the work to which two hours should have been allowed."

"Try me, sir, only try me. I am sure I will please you and the salesladies. I need the work, sir, I need it very much, indeed."

There was a choke in her throat and a tear in her eye. That conquered me, and I engaged the sweet little thing to serve as an extra cash girl during the holiday rush, telling her that we probably could not keep her on after that time. That was years ago and our great department stores did not have the labor-saving systems they have now.

As opportunity offered I watched this "extra" I had taken on. Somehow my heart went out to the sweet child, and I wanted her to prove worthy. I also asked the saleswomen and men about her.

"She's all right. Quick, correct and obliging."

That's what I heard on every side. They all spoke well of her and seemed to like her, so she stayed on through the rush of the Christmas holidays. How I did hate to send the little thing away! But business is business. There was a slump and trade was unusually dull. It was against the rules of our firm to send an old employe away if it was in any way possible to keep such an one.

There being no help for it, I had the little thing come to my office, where I told her, as kindly as possible, that we were just doing no business at all, and I would have to let her go. Again, as when I had my first talk with her, those pretty eyes were flooded with tears, and the child's lips trembled as she said:

"Oh, sir, don't send me home. I like to work here and I'm sure the ladies and gentlemen all like me. I won't charge you anything. I'll work for nothing. Only let me stay. Please do."

I was more than a little taken a-back. She had told me she needed work; needed it very badly; but now she was anxious to work in our place without any pay. I simply could not understand it, so I said:

"But, my child, you need to be earning money. You told me so yourself. I will do what I have seldom done. I will give you a letter of recommendation, which may help you to get a place where they will pay you."

"I would rather stay here, if you please, sir. I would rather stay here for nothing. You will let me, won't you, sir? It has been a long, hard, cold winter. There's been such a lot of strikes and so many people are out of work. Only the rich can buy things, and I'm afraid I would not get work with wages. Do let me stay. I'd feel awful blue and lonesome if I had to be at home all day. And mother—poor mother."

She so filled with tears and sobs that for a moment she could not go on; then she said:

"Just let me stay one week longer. Please do, sir. If business improves in other places it will improve with you. Then you'd need me and could pay me. I feel at home here and I want to stay. It's awful to go where nobody knows you. They all know me here and like me. Just one week more! Just one week more! I won't charge you anything."

I don't think I was ever more confused in my life. To fathom that seemingly sweet child's motives I could not, to save my life. To my shame I now confess to you that with that sobbing, sweet creature before me, I said:

"Can it be possible that this girl is a thief? Can it be possible that she is playing an adept's confidence game on me? That she is working on my sympathies with her tears and blushes and pretty face and robbing us every day? The holiday rush is a good time for anything of that kind. Has she won the love of all on the floor that she might the easier steal?"

I consented to keep her another week. "I would do my best for her," I told her. But I made up my mind that I would watch her. I would not say anything to the store detectives; I would just keep my own two eyes on her ten fingers; and that, too, from the time she came in in the morning until she should go home for the day.

The first thing that attracted my attention was that the sweet child brought a satchel with her every morning, presumably filled with her lunch. The bag was pretty big, but I forced myself to say that the family was poor and perhaps that was the only thing they had. That morning, while the child was busy with her duties as cash girl I went to the room in which the things of the girls were kept. There I unlocked the sweet girl's hat and coat closet and took a look into that bag. It was perfectly empty. I went back to the floor and sauntered around where I could, generally, having an eye on my young friend.

The dear child was just as attentive to her duties, had just as sweet a smile for me and everybody else as if she were receiving the biggest salary of anybody in the house.

We now have commodious dining rooms for our employes, but in those days we didn't have any such a thing, and the girls ate their lunch in any old way. Sometimes a saleslady would just stay behind her counter and snatch a bite when and how she could. They were allowed half an hour at mid-day, of course relieving one another.

When I first began watching my sweet child, I would notice her dart behind a counter from time to time, if the saleslady's back chanced to be turned, or she was talking with another employe.

In and out, like a flash, would go my sweet child. She would secure and secrete something in a petticoat pocket, a something which she invariably picked up off the floor. After a time my sweet child would disappear. Evidently she had gone to put her stealings in that bag.

I fairly shivered. To get possession of anything of value, in the way she was working, it was manifest that a vast number of our employes were the confederates of my sweet child, for the little thing was working a big territory. As I figured it out, our salesladies evidently selected the goods, which they would wedge up carelessly and throw on the floor, where, by pre-arrangement, the sweet child could find the package and carry it away, all those concerned depending upon our love for and our confidence in the sweet child.

As you may suppose, I was anxious to trap those who had led my little cash girl into temptation. So, for some days, I paid no attention to the things taken; I made no effort to seize them. I just let the sweet child carry her lunch bag to and from the store without any seeming interference. But what I did do was this: I followed the little thief to her home that night. She walked, and I tell you it was a long distance for her to tramp twice a day.

Of course she had that lunch bag with her, and of course it was full.

For more than a week I watched, always seeing the same thing. If the child had any confederates they were certainly playing the game down fine; for, aside from the fact that everyone in the house loved the little thing, and would give her a pleasant word, an apple, banana or even a few pennies for some favor done, I saw nothing.

Disgusted with myself generally speaking, and especially with my abilities in the detective line, I made up my mind to seize the goods; so I burglarized the little one's locker one afternoon just before closing time. The satchel was full. I secured it and took it to my private office, where I locked the door before opening the bag.

My! My! Oh, my! Will I ever forget my sensations as I emptied the contents on the top of my desk.

It was full of bits of food.

Nothing else.

Well, I could have cried with shame and disgust at myself, for my miserable suspicions. Still more could I have wept with pity for that child whose pride and love had made her wear such a brave, sweet face for so many weeks.

Having called the heads of the house to my private office, I showed them the display and told them the story of the sweet child who had begged so piteously to be permitted to work for nothing. We all knew that there was within that little body a soul pure enough and strong enough and brave enough to earn the best love of both God and man.

It was agreed that they, the heads of the firm, should be where they could see her and hear her story from the little one's own lips without embarrassing her with their presence.

The moment the dear child entered the office, seeing her emptied bag on my desk, she realized that further concealment was impossible. Again the soft eyes were flooded with tears; again that pleasant voice was choked with sobs, but she plunged bravely into her own defense.

THE HIGH CALLING

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS."

Copyright 1911, George H. Doran Co.

CHAPTER VIII.—Continued.

"A plain talk" in the Douglas family meant heart secrets, and Mrs. Douglas knew at once what Helen wanted.

"Hide nothing," said Esther, smiling, and patting Helen's head cheerfully.

"Hide nothing," repeated Helen, with a faint smile; which meant that the utmost frankness was going to be shown on both sides.

"Mother," said Helen, after a pause of some length during which her mother calmly went on with her sewing. "How old were you when you were married?"

"Not quite twenty-two."

"And how old was father?"

"Twenty-six. Almost twenty-seven."

"Were you very much in love with him?"

Esther let her work fall from her hands into her lap, and looked out across the room over her daughter's head. The passing of the years had not dimmed the love light in Esther's eyes nor faded the glow of the love look on her face.

"I can't tell you how much I was in love with him. He was the whole world to me."

"More than your own father and mother?"

"Yes, more."

"More and different?"

"Yes, more and different."

There was another pause and Helen put her hand up to her mother's. The girl had not yet looked up. Her eyes were cast down and she seemed very thoughtful.

"Mother, do you think I will ever feel that way? As you did?"

Mrs. Douglas was startled by the question, in spite of the fact that from Helen's babyhood the utmost frankness had existed between them. She wanted a few moments before she spoke. Helen was still looking down, but her hand tightened its hold on her mother's.

"Yes, Helen, I would not wish you any greater happiness than to love as your mother did."

"But men like father seem very scarce."

Mrs. Douglas could not help laughing, and at that Helen looked up soberly.

"You know they are, mother," said Helen almost indignantly. "Just look at that Randolph boy. And—and—Mr. Damon. I don't believe there are any young men like father was when he was young. Wasn't he very handsome?"

"He certainly was, and he is now."

"And didn't he talk sensibly? Didn't he know how to say things?"

"He didn't say anything very wise or deep while he was courting me," laughed Esther. "I would not dare say how many foolish things he said. I don't remember all of them."

"Mother, you know what I mean. The young men nowadays can't talk any. They don't know half so much as the young women. Why, I feel superior to all the young men I know."

Mrs. Douglas looked amused.

"And I could never marry an inferior man. I would just despise myself and him, too. But why should I get married at all, mother? Why can't I just be a physical training teacher all my life?"

"I don't want you to marry an inferior man. You would just despise yourself and if you do not love in a natural way someone who is altogether worthy of you, you ought never to marry at all. What has made you think of it?"

Helen did not look up, and after a long pause Esther said gently, "Hide nothing?"

Then Helen looked up suddenly and burst out: "That horrid Mr. Damon proposed to me last night! I went with him to the organ recital and he was very nice at first, but on the way home he made a fool of himself and tried to make one of me. I told him I wouldn't marry him if he was the only man left. Why, mother, he is ten years older than I am, and he has false teeth and I believe he wears a wig and he makes a living selling rubber goods!" And at that Helen burst into a flood of weeping, laying her head down in her mother's lap.

When she was cried out, Esther said: "Mr. Damon is a good man, or I wouldn't have let you go with him. But I had no idea he was thinking of you that way. Of course he is out of the question. Not on account of the false teeth, the wig and the rubber goods, for women marry men with those encumbrances every day and are happy, but for other reasons."

"Mother, did you ever have any other proposals besides father's?"

"Yes, I had three while I was in college."

"At my age?"

"I was two years younger."

"That makes me feel better some; but I don't want such things to come to me. It frightens me."

"Daughter, you probably know you are more than good looking. Do you?"

"Yes," said Helen, in a low tone.

"It is a great gift, but it is a dangerous one. You must use it in the right way."

"Mother, I do try. I am not a flirt, am I, mother?" Helen looked up appealingly.

"Look right into my eyes, mother, and see?"

Mrs. Douglas looked and with a sigh of relief saw there as pure and womanly a soul waiting development as ever lived.

"No, thank God, Helen, I believe you realize what your beauty might mean to bless or to curse. But sometimes the hurt comes in spite of one's self."

There was a long pause and then Helen said timidly, "Mother, you are thinking of someone in particular. I have tried to be very careful. I had to be kind. But how could I know—"

"You mean Felix Bauer?"

"Yes, mother."

"Do you mean he has spoken to you in so short a time?"

"No, no, mother, not spoken. Only, only, looked at me. You don't blame me, do you, do you, mother?"

Helen began to cry again, but in a different way from the outburst of before. She cried softly and Mrs. Douglas could feel the girl's hand pressing her arm convulsively.

She was really puzzled to know what to say in spite of the evident fact that Felix Bauer had simply yielded to the inevitable through no fault of Helen's or anybody's. At last she said:

"Do you feel superior to Mr. Bauer?"

Helen raised her head and blushed as she looked up.

"Why, no, that is, of course, he knows German and I don't, and he knows a lot about electricity and I don't and—and—"

"He's not much of a talker," said her mother.

"No, but on that account he avoids saying so many foolish things. And he is very interesting, and, and, good. But he is only a poor student and it looks now as if he might grow up to be nothing but a manufacturer of incubators to raise chickens."

"Which is almost as bad as rubber goods," murmured Esther.

Helen did not reply. After a while her mother said, "Tell me just one thing, dear, if you can. Do you care for Mr. Bauer?"

Helen bent her head and warm color flowed over her cheeks, then she looked up.

"No, mother, not that way."

Mrs. Douglas sighed and said to herself, "Poor Bauer. He will have to outlive it somehow. I hope his studies will help him out."

That was what Bauer was saying to himself back in Burrton after that eventful Christmas vacation. He had parted with the family in a cheerful fashion, but all his self-possession and restraint and feeling of utter hopelessness regarding Helen could not prevent his giving her a look that told his story as plain as day when he said good-bye. Helen had gone upstairs and cried half the forenoon at the memory of Bauer's face. But Bauer did not know that. Neither did he know that the very fact of his silence had made Helen think favorably towards him. He had at least succeeded in securing a place in Helen's exclusive list of possible lovers, for she was obliged to confess as the days went on that she missed Felix Bauer, and that she could not say of him as she could of all her other admirers that she was superior to him.

It might have gone badly with Felix Bauer at this crisis in his life if an event had not occurred which compelled him to come to Walter's assistance. This event was as unexpected to Walter as anything could be. And the suddenness of it smote both the friends for a time into a condition of mutual dependence.

The President of Burrton followed the custom in other schools of inviting some well known speaker to have charge of the chapel services for special lectures or religious addresses. When the announcement was made that Dr. Powers, the eminent scholar and theologian, would preach at Burrton on a special date, Walter and Bauer both planned to go, and when the time came they found themselves in the audience with one of the largest crowds that had ever gathered at Burrton Chapel service.

The address was on the subject of "Modern Belief." As the speaker went on, Walter, who had at first not paid close attention, began to fasten his whole hearted and minded interest on the statements that were being made. As the talk went on, Walter felt as if all the ground of his religious faith was slipping out from under him. The speaker gradually unfolded a universe of religious thought from which all the miracles were excluded. There was no reason, he said, for believing in the superhuman or the wonderful. Everything in the Bible could be explained on natural grounds and what could not be explained was either a mistake or a misapprehension on the part of the writers. God was defined as a power and all personality taken from him. Christ was only a superior man who said many things not agreeing with the facts of modern psychology. Much of his forecast of the future had been discredited. There was no such thing as a resurrection and a future existence was very problematical.

When the address was over, Walter sat like one dazed and did not rise to go out. Bauer whispered to him:

"Are you sick?"

"No," said Walter with an effort. He rose and went up to his room and Bauer, who did not know what was the matter, went in with him, as the two friends invariably spent their Sunday evenings together.

But on this occasion Walter almost stunned Bauer with a request made in a low voice.

"I want to be alone, Bauer, if you don't mind."

Bauer rose at once.

"I am on hand to serve you, Walter. Don't forget?"

"No," Walter id abruptly.

Bauer went out, and Walter went into his bedroom and got down on his knees.

That same evening at Milton, Mrs. Douglas had just gone up to her room, and as her custom had been for years, she had kneeled to pray for her children and especially for her absent boy.

Over both mother and son the darkness brooded. Only the stars shone through it.

CHAPTER IX.

Walter Douglas was not what would be called ordinarily a religious young man. That is, he was not pious, in the sense that he was a lover of prayer meetings and church gatherings. He was a member of the Congregational church at Milton and had joined it from the Sunday-school when he was twelve years old, growing up in the church like any average boy whose father and mother were members. He had a tremendous respect for his father's and mother's religious life and example and would probably have been willing to die for their faith if not for his own. For the rest, he had grown up in the home atmosphere, which from his childhood had been deeply reverent towards the Bible and the superhuman element.

The effect on his mind, now, of the address he had just heard, was very much the same as if someone far above him in education and age had attacked his father and mother, bringing forward a great array of argument and proof to show that they were unworthy of his love and confidence. Walter's mind could not have been more disturbed by such an attempt than it actually was by what had been said that evening, undermining his lifelong confidence in Christ as a divine being, and the superhuman and miraculous as part of his own life.

He was stunned by it and at first his only desire was to be alone. As the night wore on, this desire gave way to a longing for counsel from someone who would answer his questions and relieve his mind of the terrible uncertainty which had invaded it. And it was at least a strange comment on the teaching force in the Burrton school that Walter at this crisis could not think of anyone to whom he cared to go with a religious doubt. There were plenty of men at Burrton occupying responsible places as professors or instructors who knew plenty of mathematics and physics and electricity and engineering and science. But not one that Walter could think of who knew or cared about a student's moral or religious character. The president was a keen, wide-awake, sharp man of affairs, but as Walter thought of him he shrank from the idea of going to him with a real heart trouble or with a genuine mental difficulty. He would as soon have thought of telling his personal griefs or sorrows into a phonograph. And yet President Davis of Burrton was a church member, a highly educated gentleman, a great money getter from rich men, and had the reputation in the educational world of being a success as such school presidents go. He could extract half a million for Burrton from some great pirate of industry, but he did not know how to extract a poisonous doubt from a tortured mind like Walter's, or, better yet, instill the balm of healing faith into a spirit that had for the time being lost its God and its heaven. Great thing, our boasted education is, isn't it? How many of our cultured, highly developed university men are all head and no heart! And yet in the history of this old world who would dare say that in the long run it does not need more heart than head, or at least an equal division of each, for its comfort, its happiness and its real progress?

Walter, going over the list of possible men who might help him now, thought of the pastor of the Congregational church in Burrton. This man was a strong, earnest pastor, a tireless worker and an interesting preacher. But here again Walter had no one to blame but himself that he did not feel well enough acquainted with this man to go to him with his personal religious questions. He had been to the church several times and he always liked the Rev. James Harris, but like so many students who are attendants and workers in their own churches, Walter on coming to Burrton had found it easy to lapse into lazy Sunday morning habits. After he had a late breakfast and read the Sunday morning Daily Megaphone, it was generally too late to go to the Sunday-school and it was easier on stormy Sundays to curl up on a lounge and read a novel, or on pleasant Sundays to stroll out to the lake two miles away and get an appetite for a big dinner. Then an afternoon of sleep or visiting or walking out used up the rest of the day for him. One of the topics he had avoided with his mother on his recent visit home had been his Sunday program, and he recalled even now the earnest wish she had expressed that he would get to work in the Sunday-school when he went back to Burrton. No, he had been so indifferent to all church matters while a student that he could not bring himself to go to the minister, he was too much a stranger to him, and this was a matter that seemed to call for a friend.

"Oh, I wish mother was here!" he exclaimed out loud.

And then because he felt so hungry for comfort and so eager to relieve his mind of its burden, he went over to his writing desk, and wrote a long letter to his mother.

When he finished, it was after one o'clock and he went to bed and slept as if exhausted, but to his dismay when he awoke, his depression and fear were there to greet him and he found himself waiting for his mother's answer almost as if her letter were a reprieve from a sentence of death.

A part of this letter will reveal Walter's excited and even chaotic feeling.

"The bottom seems to be dropped right out of everything, mother. Of what use is it to try to do right when there isn't any likelihood of a future and no personal God and no Redeemer, and no standard for conduct? The doctor said we could not depend upon Christ's own statements about his own resurrection. How then can we trust Him for any statement He made about Himself? The fellows here in Burrton who have money to spend and do about as they please, the fast set that drinks and carouses and gambles and gives the chorus girls wine suppers seem to be pretty happy. They don't worry over the matter of sin or moral responsibility or going to church or getting serious over the condition of the heathen or the wrongs of the world, or the 'high calling' you are so fond of calling my attention to. And why should I be any different from them? Mother, does it pay to be religious? It seems to me religious people are always sober, dull people, always talking reform and disagreeable things and never having much fun. But I want you to help me, mother, no one else can, if you can't. I don't seem to be able to pray any. Why should I pray, if there isn't any superhuman, nothing but a force somewhere? I am just groping in the dark and it's awful dark. And I don't know a soul here to help me any. Bauer—well—I never said a word to him on religious matters. I don't know whether he is a Catholic or what he is. And I don't know any minister in Burrton well enough to go to him. And the teachers here don't care about the students' religious life, or if they do I never saw any signs of it, at least not enough to show where to go now.

"Mother, I can't tell you how I feel over all this. But I'm just about down and out. If what Dr. Powers said is true, it seems to me we are living in an awful world. It isn't the world you and father believe in or you taught me to believe in, and I can't understand it. Oh, mother, help me, won't you, if you can! Walter."

Now his letter reached Mrs. Douglas on the anniversary of her marriage. She was planning as she always did to make the day bright for Paul, had invited her brothers, Walter and Louis, and was going to make it a great family gathering.

The boy's letter smote her heart as nothing in all his experience had ever troubled her. She managed to get through the evening without betraying her feelings, but when her brothers had gone home, and Helen and Louis had retired, she showed the letter to Paul.

He read it and then looked up at Esther.

"You are the one to help him through this," he said. "You are the only person who can do it right now. But you are tired with all the events of the day. Hadn't you better wait until to-morrow?"

"No," Esther said positively. "He is waiting. When a soul is drifting down like his, it is a case of rescue."

"Dear," said Paul, quietly, "I don't have any fears for him. He has too good a mother to make a wreck of his religion."

"He is my son," said Esther proudly. "I would not be worthy of the name mother if I did not have confidence in the eternal things of redemption. I will write him to-night. But you must add to my letter, Paul. He needs us both."

"I will," said Paul, gravely. He was more disturbed over the letter from Walter than he cared to acknowledge to Esther, but he managed to conceal his feelings for her sake.

Esther went up to her little corner room,

(Continued on Page 23.)

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison.

Mrs. Harrison will be glad to receive communications from any of her readers offering suggestions concerning woman's welfare, criticisms of articles or inquiries concerning any matters relevant to her department. She should be addressed directly at 530 Elm Tree Lane, Lexington, Ky.

CULTURE, CHARACTER, SERVICE

A Word to the Girl Graduates.

To most of you, as you look back over the hard work you hav done to earn this place of yours, this day seems the finish and crown of your efforts—and in a certain limited sense it is; but every ending is but a new beginning, and what you have accomplished in your college course after all is but to train and prepare you for your true start in life.

It is to be hoped that you have not only faithfully performed your allotted tasks, but that in so doing you have acquired a studious habit of mind, and a genuine love of learning; your life of study should not end with your graduation, but you may and should be a student all your life. Culture is a life-long thing, and each one should aim to keep her mind open and alert for the acquisition of new truths. Cultivate the sweet, serene companionship of books individually, and form clubs or societies for collective study, and gain the impetus and inspiration that contact of mind with mind gives.

The Efficiency of the Mature.

Only use can keep the brain awake—like the unused hand or arm, it soon weakens, if it be not exercised. Use makes it keener and brighter as it grows older; the trained mind is never satisfied to be dormant, but is constantly pressing forward after new things. Age cannot wither its activity. Plutarch began the study of Latin at seventy and Dr. Johnson commenced to learn Dutch at the same age. Sophocles wrote a great tragedy when past four score, and Goethe completed Faust at the same ripe age; Dryden published his famous translation of Virgil when sixty-five; there came a lull in the public life of Gladstone when he had reached his three score and five years, and he devoted the six years of his retirement to literary and historical work, and published seven volumes in that period. The list might be indefinitely extended, but these will suffice. While there is no urgent need for any graduate to plan now what she will do at seventy or eighty years of age, yet there is use for the thought that one may be a student all of her life, and make it, from beginning to close, a growth in knowledge.

Character.

But there is an even higher culture than that of intellect, and that is the culture of character. "Intellect must stand below character to a man. It is a good thing to have a sound body; it is a better thing to have a sane mind; but it is better still to have that group of decent and virile qualities which we sum up as character."

There is nothing essentially moral in science and mathematics—the moral nature must be cultivated with the mental nature, or the result is abnormal development—and that is always to be deplored. To have a big head and a small heart is as unlovely as lack of proportion in the physical members.

No Male and No Female in Character.

The same eternal elements which go toward character building in men are necessary for women also—there is no masculine and no feminine in the great fundamental virtues. We usually exhort young men to be strong, to be honorable, to be courageous—I would ask the same of young women. We usually urge young women to be pure, to be gentle, to be patient—I would ask the same of young men. Character demands the same standard of conduct for both—purity and gentleness of men, and courage and honor of women.

No One Can Spoil My Life But Myself.

A familiar verse gives us a thought that is not always included in the group of qualities that we sum up as character:

"It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishment the scroll;
I am the master of my fate,
I am the captain of my soul."

Or, to reduce it to plain prose, no one can spoil my life but myself.

This truth is more vital than may appear at first thought—especially when applied to women. A woman is still regarded by many as a clinging, dependent creature, whose life is made or marred by the objects of her affections. How often we hear such expressions as these: "Her worthless husband broke her spirit, her reckless son ruined her life," and our sympathies always go out to her, and we justify her for giving way under her burdens. We should all sympathize with the sorrowing, but it should be a compassion which braces and uplifts, which puts one on her mettle, and makes her long to be and to do her best under difficulties.

Misfortunes, sorrows, rightly borne, are a means of growth, both for character and service. If one has had business losses, it opens up an avenue of helpfulness to others who have suffered in a like way. If death has stolen your dearest, it gives you the right, which can be earned in no other way, of "bringing to other souls the cup of strength in some great agony."

Nay, even if something sharper than death, wrong doing—sin committed by your best beloved has pierced your soul like a sword, are you the only one? Are there not others whose hearts have been wounded by such transgressions, to whom your counsel might give courage to look life in the face again?

This may be an austere note to sound at this auspicious time, but I would urge you, be strong! No matter what comes to you, meet it bravely—to be weak is miserable. And hold fast to this truth, that nothing can ruin your life except decay of your moral nature, which ends in alienation from God and from good. That rests with you alone.

The Greatest of These is Service.

As you go forth from the shelter of school life, there comes not only the duty of continuing the culture begun there, not only the higher duty of culture of character without which mind culture is of no avail, but the crowning obligation of applying these gifts to life. To get a good thing and hug it to oneself is miserable, or miserly, which is the same thing—it is the use of it that ennobles it. To study for the sake of study is to be a bookworm—a poor, useless creature. Unless knowledge is used to help others, it is ignoble and selfish.

And so I come to my last word, the golden word, Service. And now abide these three, Culture, Character, Service—and the greatest of these is service.

It is said that fully seven millions of women are now engaged in the more than three hundred trades and occupations open to them; the majority of these wage earners are following industrial pursuits, but a large number are finding employment in the learned professions. Two-thirds of all our teachers are women, and thousands are following law, medicine, journalism, and religious work, both at home and on the mission field.

Surely, there is no nobler call than that of a home maker, no higher ministry than to make of the home a visible pattern of the heavenly home—a place where childhood is trained for useful service in the great world, a haven of rest and refreshment for the busy toilers who go forth each morning to earn the daily bread.

Nor is the home only for those under its roof. It should be a center of uplift and inspiration to the neighborhood and the town. It is no longer isolated and independent as in more primitive days, but there is the closest interdependence between home and city. The material needs of the household lead us straight to the City Hall, its moral atmosphere is vitally affected by the municipal and state administration.

Woman as a wage earner, woman as a social and religious worker, woman as a home maker—all lead us, soon or late, to woman as a citizen. Woman suffrage is in the air; the victories of recent years, the vigorous campaigns waging today, make it certain that the ballot will soon be in the hands of every woman in the land. Make yourself worthy of the great responsibilities and opportunities for service that it will bring!

The life of our day is a full and crowded one; should not every one, heir to so goodly a heritage, bear her part in its battle, and blush to have the question asked her, "Why stand ye here all the day idle?"

I would commend to you then, in entering on the rich and complex life of today the prayer of the knight of the New Chivalry, as he starts on his pilgrimage:

"Spirits of old, that bore me,
And set me meek of mind,
Between great deeds before me,
And deeds as great behind,

Knowing Humanity, my star,
As forth of old I ride,
O help me wear with every scar,
Honor at eventide!

Forethought, and recollection,
Rivet mine armor gay;
The passion for perfection
Redeem my falling way.

Oh, give my youth, my faith, my sword,
Choice of my heart's desire!
A short life in the saddle, Lord,
Not long life by the fire."

I. W. H.

Woman's Doings

—Mrs. David Beach, who has been walking from New York to Chicago, has finished her journey. She started on April 10, and walked into the city hall at Chicago on May 28. She declared she was in better health than when she began her tramp. Mrs. Beach's route lay through Newark, Buffalo, Erie, Cleveland, and South Bend. She encountered no serious difficulties on the way. Her principal food was dried cake, made of prunes, figs, and raisins, mixed with wheat and oats. She lost little weight on the 1,071 miles.

—Mrs. Mary Allen, matron of the Park Row station, Chicago, and for twenty years an employe of the Illinois Central road, has been placed upon the retired pension list of the company. She is said to be the first woman to receive a pension from a railroad.

—Dr. Mary Mills Patrick, president of the American College for Girls at Constantinople, has arrived in New York on a short visit to her native country. At the present time, there are 250 students, Bulgarians, Armenians, Greeks, Persians, Turks, Jews, Hungarians, and Germans, in the college. These girls all live in dormitories built after American plans, and mostly with American money. Mrs. Russell Sage, Miss Helen Gould and John D. Rockefeller have given large sums to Dr. Patrick for her work. As a rule, the girls wear European clothes, and the academic cap and gown.

—Miss Mabel Boardman, of the Red Cross, is working for the erection of a building in Washington to commemorate the services and sacrifices of the women of the civil war. The present plan is to have this building cost about $600,000, half of it to be contributed by the United States, the balance to be raised by private subscription.

—The wives of many prominent democrats were present at the "harmony breakfast," given at Rauscher's in Washington recently. The affair was a celebration of the 140th birthday of Dolly Madison, who made a decided hit while at the White House. Upon a dais sat Mrs. Champ Clark, wife of the ranking democrat in official life, who was toastmistress of the occasion. Upon her right sat Mrs. William Jennings Bryan, and at her left Mrs. Judson Harmon. Other women at the speaker's table were Mrs. Norman E. Mack, Mrs. Oscar Underwood, Mrs. Robert C. Wickliffe, Mrs. Henry D. Clayton, Mrs. Eugene N. Foss, Mrs. W. G. Ralston, of Indiana; Mrs. Martin W. Littleton, and Mrs. Henry Rainey, of Illinois. Mrs. Grover Cleveland, the only woman living who presided over the White House in a democratic administration, declined to be present. Mrs. Woodrow Wilson was absent because of a sprained arm, and Mrs. Alton B. Parker because of serious illness. Mrs. W. R. Hearst, who was to have responded to a toast to the press, was unable to be present.

The Idle Woman

The great majority of men and women in a country like ours, can be found busy from morning until night. But there is an idle woman in the land. Sometimes she is in a boarding-house, and does not have enough to do to keep up a proper balance of interests. She loses her bearing; she loses even her heart sometimes, and gets tangled up with "mashers" and other creatures who have large capacity for making the world worse for wives of the leisure class. If she does not get into the divorce court, she does well. There would be fewer divorces if some women had enough to do to keep them out of mischief. But don't misunderstand us. We are not generalizing about boarding-houses.

Again, this idle woman may be in her own home. A servant, or to be strictly up to date, a "maid," does her kitchen work, a milliner makes her hats, a dressmaker twines the fashions around her form, and a nurse takes care of her babies, if there should happen to be any. She is not employed, generally or particularly. She has days on her hands. Frequently, she makes the state of her health both a plea for idleness and a matter of business. It furnishes her occupation; and incidentally, does the same thing for the family physician. To have him come around every morning, helps her to begin the day. And when she is not on his hands, it is not difficult to have a case of some kind among the children.

A very busy and noted woman remarked that the medicine which some women needed was more work; that they did not have enough to do to keep them well. When a woman does not work enough to keep her mind off her little aches and pains, or to keep up a circulation of the blood which will send the little red throbs of life out to the cuticle, how can she expect to be well? Of course, there are women who are worked to death; and they have our heartfelt sympathy. But human life was ordained on a plan of industry, and women cannot ignore the plan without suffering for it. There are physicians who could say to women patients: "Madam, you do not need medicine. What you need is to put on a gingham apron, roll up your sleeves, and work a while every morning."

And the prescription would prove a benefit to the rest of the family. There are wives who could improve the whole household regime by getting down to business a little more industriously themselves. Brains count in the kitchen as well as elsewhere. In fact, the kitchen is very near the seat of war. Somebody has said that more divorces begin in the kitchen than anywhere else. We do not accept this assertion in the full; but it has considerable provocation. Men do not like bad breakfasts, and still less spoiled dinners. And it will not do to lay all these things on "the help."

There are women who go to clubs to discuss the servant problem, who ought to be at home solving it. What is the use of getting together to talk so sharply and smartly about the "maids" when nine women out of ten could put things to rights by giving more attention to the kitchen themselves?

A pretty story was told in one of the magazines a few years ago, about a bachelor man in the South who made the remark that he would marry any girl who could make good white bread. The remark took wings and sang songs in the ears of all the maidens of the surrounding country. And one morning, a pretty girl came timidly into the man's store and began a conversation with him, supposing that he was the clerk. She mentioned the remark, and asked if there was anything in it. Upon being assured that the man undoubtedly meant it, she blushed a little, and then shyly remarked that she "could make good white bread." The man promptly fell in love with her, and when Christmas came, there was a wedding. Good white bread goes a long way, even with men who do not make it a bill-board on which to advertise for a wife.

And there is that dreadful matter of dressmaking. Why don't more women learn something about it themselves? There is nothing in this mundane sphere in which a large part of the sex are more interested than dress, and yet how few women know how "to cut bias and gore in the back." Inasmuch as a beautiful dress is a picture and a piece of art, it is just as smart to study this kind of art as to poke around the art galleries and daub canvas with feeble imitations of old masters. A good young husband is worth more than an old master who has been dead for centuries, and if it were not for the terrifying effect of dressmaker and milliner bills, there would be more young husbands.

But somebody replies that dressmaking is mechanical work. So it is; but that is no objection to it. Some of the smartest young men in America are studying mechanical and electrical engineering; and they are changing the face of the industrial world. They are proving that a man can be "mechanical and cultured, a designer and maker of machinery, and a scholar, a power in the shop and a force in the nation." Women can also master the mechanical side of their life and still be cultured and scholars. They can turn dry-goods into dresses of beauty, and be better off than their sisters who sit idly down and dream of the impossible.

A writer in a woman's column of a big daily paper, exhorted young women to study the art of carrying the head properly. "Lifting the chin," he said, "and at the same time throwing back the head, is an admirable thing for any woman to practice."

So it may be for a woman who does not have much in her head, or anything else to do; but heaven help us, when the girls and women all take to wiggling their heads up and down before mirrors! If that is what all this culture and vast increase of education among the sex is bringing us to, deliver us! A woman who keeps her head level and her hands fairly well employed, can trust to her chin to keep itself reasonably well-poised.

But there are other things which the idle woman does. She overdoes on clubs. She is busily idle, and does not know what is the matter with her. She wears out her nerves and herself, and there is no return for her activity. It is time for her to make a more careful study of profit and loss in life.

A Rainy Twilight

By Florence Hines.

Outside in the streets the slow rain drips,
And the sky is all a soft dull gray,
And into my heart, like music steals
The old time love of a rainy day.

The fire in the grate burns clear and red,
Flickering softly across the walls,
Till pictures and books are warmly fair,
Wherever that shifting radiance falls.

But my thoughts go roving beyond the hills,
To a wide old orchard with low stone wall,
Where apples lie red in the tangled grass,
And above in the branches the sparrows call.

And a child with a strangely familiar face
Gathers the apples and laughs in the rain;
I close my eyes while the slow rain-drops
Sing on with a curious low refrain.

Goodbye, little girl in Arcady,
The orchard, the apples red and wet
Are only a part of that mystic past
That thrills my heart with the old joy yet.

I cannot find you except in dreams,
Would not, if I could, go back to you,
But I covet your joy in the dripping rain,
In the days when all the world was new.

—In the Drake Delphic.

Illinois Department

State Office, 24 Illinois National Bank Bldg., Springfield

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY is a national religious paper published by the Disciples of Christ in the interests of Christian unity and the Kingdom of God. While its circulation is nation-wide and impartially distributed among all the states, it recognizes a special obligation to the State of Illinois in which it is published. It desires particularly to serve the cause of Christ in Illinois by publishing its significant church news, by interpreting its religious life and by promoting the ideals of the Disciples within its borders. To this end the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY maintain a state office at Springfield, the capital and central city. It is the purpose of the state editor to study the whole field of Illinois, visiting all the churches, reporting his observations and pointing the churches to ever higher ideals. Pastors and church workers are requested to co-operate by regularly sending items of news, clippings from local papers, parish papers, weekly leaflets, occasional paragraphs of sermons and any other information that will give to the state editor all the data for reporting and interpreting the progress of Christian work in the state. All communications to the editor may be addressed, 24 Illinois National Bank Building, Springfield. All business communications should be addressed to the Chicago office.

C. R. Gains, of Bowen Church, delivered an address recently at Denver during the Township Sunday-school Convention.

The Eastern Illinois District Christian Endeavor Convention will hold its sessions June 13, 14, at First Church, Danville.

J. Newton Cloe, pastor of Mt. Pulaski Church, delivered the Memorial Day address in the public square, to a large audience.

J. E. Pritchett, who has been pastor at Metropolis, has accepted the church at Mt. Vernon, beginning his new ministry the last Sunday in May.

J. H. Stambaugh was the Memorial Day orator at DeLand. He was also called upon to deliver the baccalaureate sermon for the High School graduates.

Milo Atkinson, minister of Centennial Church, Bloomington, is preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons this month on "The Sermon on the Mount."

Colfax Church is prospering under the ministry of George R. Southgate. On one Sunday during the month of May there were six additions on profession of faith.

The churches at South Arthur and Louisville, ministered to by H. H. Shick, are prospering in an unusual way with frequent additions. Thirty-four have recently been reported.

Carterville Church has re-employed its pastor, R. O. Rogers, for a period of three years, with an increase of salary. Mr. Rogers is to hold a revival meeting at Lauder during the month of June.

First Church, Springfield, has definitely decided on the date for the dedication of its new edifice. It was reported last week that this would be held the third Sunday in June. It has now been determined for the fourth Sunday, June 23.

The convention, of Sixth District, will be held at DeLand June 18-19. An excellent program has been prepared. Those coming on the interurban system will be met at Monticello at noon, and at six o'clock in the afternoon. A large number of delegates is confidently expected.

In the effort to secure a new church at Atlanta, a total of more than $7,000 has already been raised in subscriptions. The responses are so cordial that practically all doubt has been dissipated as to the possibility of achieving the desired building. The pastor here is Robert H. Newton.

Gibson City Church, where L. O. Lehman ministers, observed its annual Missionary Day May 19. Mrs. Royal J. Dye was present at both services, speaking in the morning on "The Work at Bolenge," and in the evening, giving the last in the series of vocational addresses, on "The Missionary." The day is reported as full of enthusiasm. Pledges amounting to $732.50 were secured for missions and benevolence, and others yet to give assure the aim of $750, the largest offering in the history of the church. Mrs. Dye's addresses were said to be a great blessing to the church, and such as would bear fruit for years to come. The Sunday-school here had plans for Children's Day with an attendance of 350 and $100 as an aim for the offering.

E. E. Hartley, minister of Flanagan Church, is making a sincere effort to acquaint the children of his congregation with the preaching services. The plan adopted is novel but may prove to have some advantageous features. During the first half of the morning service the children are present with their parents. This part of the worship includes all except the sermon, not excluding the communion. Immediately prior to the sermon, during the offertory, the children depart from the auditorium and are joined in separate rooms by capable teachers, who instruct them in the regular Junior Endeavor lesson, which is concluded simultaneously with the sermon, so that they can be accompanied to their homes by the parents and other members of the family. Whether this particular experiment proves successful or not, there is certainly merit in an effort to cultivate a habit of church attendance on the part of children. There is a rich hymnology that children should come in early life to appreciate and no one will question but that a habit of church attendance is beneficially formed during one's childhood days.

Secretary's Letter.

Frank H. Vernor has closed his ministry at Homer and is now at work in his new field at Georgetown. He reports a fine interest in the church and Bible-school.

F. Boyd held a short meeting with the Mt. Summit Church in Randolph County, and one young man made the good confession. He says if a good evangelist will go in there for the free-will offerings a great work can be done. It is the only church we have in the county. Address J. Husband, Chester, Ill., for further information.

Sword and Kay will begin the fall evangelistic campaign September 1, at Toluca, and will be at Armington during October.

H. H. Jenner, Long Point, reports the Home-State offering larger than the combined offerings last year. That means they will not be asked for the November offering. A large number of our churches are doing the same, a good way to reduce the number of offering days.

The Villa Grove mission is doing well under the ministry of C. H. Scriven. Two were added recently.

The State Society is supporting a most excellent enterprise in the University of Illinois at Champaign, which we call "Student Work." Two splendid young people, Miss Mildred Seyster and Mr. Carl Colvin, are employed to work among the young women and young men respectively, and their reports are most encouraging. We are urging Endeavor societies and organized Bible-school classes to take hold of this work and help to support it.

Fred Galiger has resigned his work at the East Side Church, Decatur, and is open for another engagement.

Pastors and churches desiring supply ministers to take pulpits during the summer months should communicate with the state office.

District conventions are being well attended this year and the programs are well up to the standard.

The First Church, Bloomington, took their annual offering for missionary work June 9. Their plan is to have one great rally for missions each year and apportion the amount raised to the various boards. At this writing we have not learned the amount subscribed.

J. FRED JONES, Field Secretary.
W. D. DEWEESE, Office Sec'y-Treas.
Bloomington, Ill.

The Family Bread Getter

(Continued from page 13.)

"Yes, I see that you have found me out: but I did not think it was wrong to take what would have been swept up and thrown away. And we, they at home, all of them—You see, my father's union has been on a strike nearly the whole winter. Father is a teamster and he tried to get work somewhere, for he knew that we would all suffer and perhaps die if he was idle. But the union men called him a 'scab,' and they beat him and kicked him; he was all covered with blood when he got home and was nearly dead. Mother was so frightened that she told my father that he must not try to get that kind of work any more; for he would surely be killed. She said she would work and I could work, if we could find anything to do. Very few people would hire a woman with a nursing baby, no matter how cheap she would work, so poor mother got very little to do, and I could get nothing."

"Then—" she could not go on for a moment for her sobs. "Dearest mama was discouraged; awfully discouraged. She looked so sad and sick, and she was sick, for she was half starved all the time. And then the baby got sick—and—and the baby died. The strike killed the baby.

"Then you advertised and I came to you. You do not know it, but of all those applicants I was the first one to arrive. Father got the paper just as it came wet off the press and he and I stood before the door until it was opened. That was an awful day. I was so afraid you would not take me, but you did. Oh, I was so hungry! I saw a saleslady throw the bit of her sandwich that she did not want on the floor. I was such a silly fool I could not ask her for it: but we're all just like that at our house. Mama says we can go hungry and not mind it so awfully much, but we cannot beg or tell our troubles to strangers.

"I watched my chance to slip in behind the counter and get the food the saleslady had thrown away, and just as soon as I could, I ate it. That gave me the idea that I could, by watching around the floor, get other discarded bits, and that's what I did.

"That night I was not hungry when I got home, but the rest of them were: and there wasn't a single mouthful of anything in the house to eat.

"Mother's wedding ring and father's watch and all our little trinkets had gone to the pawn shop early in the strike. Then the clock went, and finally everything that we could possibly do without.

"Yes, father got a little money from the union, but mother said that, come what there might, the rent must always be paid: it must be paid even if we could not eat. We just had to have a place to sleep.

"That night of the first day I worked for you, mother had to send the dear, little baby's clothes to the pawn shop. Father got a quarter on them, and upon that twenty-five cents, the seven of us had supper and breakfast. Since then, about all the food we have had, is what I have picked up from the floor of this store; and what my wages, when I had wages, could buy.

"Mother is so weak from hunger and from grieving for the baby, that she can't work. Father walks the streets all day long hunting for work; and every night he stands in the line to get his half loaf of bread, which he always brings home. Sometimes he gets an odd job and half a dollar or so, but nothing steady. Everybody says that there never was a time when there were so many good, sober, industrious men out of employment: men who are willing to work but can't get the work to do.

"Now you know why I did not want you to send me away. Now you know why I was willing and anxious to work without wages. It was not really for nothing, for I was sure of being able to pick up a little food here every day, and they were all so hungry at home.

"I didn't think it was wrong, sir, indeed I didn't, and I didn't think you or anybody would mind. I tried so many times to make myself ask the ladies for the bits they threw away, but I was such a proud little fool that I couldn't."

Then she stopped.

"You are a brave little girl. You are a noble child!" said the head of the house. "Here, you saint in the flesh, go home. Tell your father to report for duty at our stables tomorrow morning. Get all your belongings out of pawn, get a good supper and a good night's sleep; then come to work tomorrow. Henceforth, as long as you need it or want to stay with us, you shall do so on a salary."

SPANISH GYPSIES.

One of the things to attract the notice of every traveler that visits Spain, is that strange race which he finds scattered here and there in small groups in the remote rural districts or near the great centers of population. It presents a type that can be mistaken for no other in the Spanish dominions. The lips thick, the eyes large, black and piercing, the hair long, black and straight, the complexion olive-tinted, the Spanish gypsy, whether encamped in a sheltering ravine or under the arches of an aqueduct, or in the shadow of an overhanging cliff, is indeed Spanish, because born in Spain, but in all else he is a gypsy. Time was when Spaniards of the true blue blood called gypsies "New Castilians," or "Egyptians," or "Moorish footpads"; but while their traits have undergone no change, their name is now definitely gitanos, or gypsies. Between fifty and sixty thousand is the number of them now in Spain, says America. Most of them have no fixed abode; but in some parts, and notably in Andalusia, there are several small settlements, for towns they can hardly be called, where these wanderers have taken possession of caves in the mountain side, whence they sally forth to tell fortunes and to filch. Wherever they are, they are inclined to be quarrelsome among themselves, and to enforce their arguments by means of wicked-looking knives, which they wield with great dexterity.

Church Life

Cecil B. Carpenter reports that five were added June 2, at Princeton, Ill.

Sixth District, Kansas, held the annual convention at Vining, May 27-29.

F. B. Thomas, pastor at Mattoon, Ill., will leave his work there this fall to enter the evangelistic field.

Harry Minnick, the state secretary, of Worcester, Mass., is recovering from an almost fatal illness.

Nicholas Zulch, pastor of Flora Church, has resigned. He plans to take up studies at Butler College this fall.

H. H. Peters, of Eureka College, who has been supplying at Arthur for some time delivered the Memorial Sermon for the old soldiers there.

The sixteenth annual convention of the Fayette County Sunday-school Association, was held at McConnellsville, Pa., June 11, 12, and presented an excellent program.

F. M. Coffey, representing the labor unions of Lincoln, Neb., gave an instructive address on the workings of trades unionism at the Christian Church, Sunday evening, May 26.

The Christian Endeavor Society, of Central Church, Anderson, Ind., entertained the societies of that district, which include Hamilton, Boone, Clinton, Tipton, and Madison Counties, June 11-12.

The church at Springfield, Mass., closed a series of meetings June 2, resulting in forty confessions. G. A. Reine has been pastor of this church for ten years and his work is deeply appreciated.

The church at Doland, So. Dak., where Chas. A. Thornton ministers, is engaged in a successful meeting, with Richard S. Martin as evangelist. There is possibility of a new church being erected in the fall.

Capitol Hill Church, Des Moines, Ia., of which H. E. Van Horne is pastor, has inaugurated a whirlwind campaign to raise the $50,000 needed to erect a new building. Teams have been organized and only members of the congregation are being canvassed.

Albuquerque, N. M., is engaged in a heated controversy over the re-establishment of a red-light district. Prominent in the fight is "The Door-Knobber" a little four page paper edited by Hermon P. Williams, pastor of the Gold and Broadway Christian Church.

The Foreign Society reports that liberal responses are being made to the Children's Day call and urges the schools to stand by the work during the month of June. Receipts for the first three days amount to $4,573, a gain of $1,100 over the corresponding days last year.

Harry G. Hill, who recently resigned from Third Church, Indianapolis, preached his farewell sermon June 2. Mr. Hill will continue to reside in Indianapolis. He will be succeeded in the Third Church by T. W. Grafton, of Jackson Avenue Church, Kansas City.

A special program was given under the joint auspices of young men's clubs of St. Paul's Methodist Church, and the Christian Church of Helena, Mont., May 31. These clubs are made up of young men from fourteen to eighteen years of age, but the membership is not confined to the church.

The adult Sunday-school classes of Lincoln, Neb., are making a concerted effort to increase the work, and hope to double the membership in the near future. Arrangements are being made for lectures and addresses on the movement, and the effort has behind it the employees of the local Y. M. C. A.

Lowell C. McPherson is engaged in a series of evangelistic meetings in New England which have thus far resulted in more than 300 accessions. "Help the American Society as the basis of all missions" is one message of his. His meeting at Lubec, Maine, resulted in fifty additions, and Mr. McPherson may return later in the summer for a few weeks.

Reports from Vermont Square Church, Los Angeles, Cal., indicate the rapid and healthy growth of that congregation. Last October, Bruce Brown conducted a series of meetings resulting in sixty additions. Since that time twenty-nine families of Disciples have moved into that community. They have a good building and have funds in sight to complete its payment, but the congregation bids fair to outgrow the building. R. H. Carter is the minister. He is alive to his opportunities and is doing an excellent work.

New Church Building, East Liverpool, Ohio.

H. A. Morgan has accepted the work at Lompoc, Cal.

The Oklahoma State Convention was held at Ada, June 10-13.

R. D. Chinn of Vandalia, Mo., has accepted the work at Hays Creek Church.

M. L. Pontius will act as pastor indefinitely at Central Church, Peoria, Ill.

C. L. Milton resigns his pastorate at Lawrence, Kan., after a ten-year ministry.

The Fife Brothers' revival at Macomb, Ill., resulted in 135 additions. Allan T. Shaw is the resident minister.

Clarence A. Hill resigned at Chicago Ave., Columbus, Ohio., May 19, to the regret of the entire congregation.

Allen Wilson is conducting a series of meetings at Macon, Ga., which are growing in strength and interest.

E. H. Simmons, Jasper City, has assumed charge of the pulpit at Cherokee, Kan., leaving the field at Jasper City.

L. T. Faulders has given up the pastorate at Billings, Mont., and takes the work at South Lawrence Church, Wichita, Kansas.

O. L. Cook has resigned the pastorate at First Church, Hutchinson, to enter the general evangelistic field. He removes to Hiram, Ohio.

Herbert Ryder closes a ministry at Centralia, Wash., July 7, which has been very successful. The tangible results have doubled and a $15,000 building has been erected.

An elaborate production of Carl Reinecke's "Enchanted Swans" was given June 10, by the choir and children's chorus of First Church, Atlanta, Ga. The proceeds will be applied to the organ fund.

An interesting union meeting was held by the young people of the various churches of Marion, Ohio, May 26. Representatives of the different organizations took part in the program.

D. L. Harden is making plans for the erection of a new church at Pleasant Hill, Ore., to take the place of the old one which has been in service for 37 years. The building is planned to cost about $1,800.

A contract has been let for the erection of a $31,000 building at McLean College, Hopkinsville, Ky., to replace Rush Hall, destroyed by fire February 2.

Bernard Gruenstein has resigned the work at Selma, Ala., and expects to leave June 15. His plans for the future are not matured. The church has enjoyed a successful year during Mr. Gruenstein's pastorate.

A new church has been built for the disciples worshipping at Liberal, Kansas, where S. G. Bond ministers. Geo. L. Snively of Lewistown, Ill., will assist him through the dedication ceremonies June 23.

Morris M. Blair is leading the congregation at Ensley, Ala., in a successful work. During three months past the membership has been greatly augumented and the Sunday-school has doubled. Plans are perfected for a $12,000 building to be completed before winter.

The financial report of First Church, Portsmouth, Ohio, shows a complete freedom from all current expense bills. It is hoped soon to pay off a note of $1,250, and the church now is in better financial condition than it has enjoyed for years. Ben Leichner is the financial secretary.

R. W. Abberley, A. C. M. S., evangelist, reports seventy accessions resulting from a twenty-five day meeting at Beckley, W. Va., forty by profession of faith. William Leigh was song leader. In the absence of a regular minister, Principal E. W. McDiarmid, of Beckley Institute, assisted the evangelists.

One hundred and one were added to the church during the meeting recently held at Sixth Church, Indianapolis. Melville Putnam was the evangelist, and G. H. Clarke is pastor.

On June 11 eight preachers were graduated from Hiram College. One of these is under appointment to go to China and the others have all located with churches in the home field.

W. L. Fisher of First Church, New York, is supplying for First Church, Seattle, Wash. This is the pastorate which Joseph L. Garvin resigned to accept the presidency of William Woods College, Missouri.

Students of Illinois State University, who have attended the University Place Church, Champaign, were entertained at a delightful reception at the home of Dr. and Mrs. W. M. Honn, Thursday evening, May 30.

O. G. Hertzog, of Hiram, Ohio, has recently returned from an eighteen months' visit to Chinese and Japanese mission fields. He made this trip on his own responsibility and at his own expense. His only daughter is the wife of one of our Chinese missionaries, Dr. E. I. Osgood.

Young people of all the churches of Chattanooga, Tenn., met at First Church, June 10, to complete a federation of the different young peoples' societies. A joint committee from the B. Y. P. U., the Christian Endeavor and the Epworth league has been at work for some time arranging plans for this federation.

Island Church, Wheeling, W. Va., has formed a personal workers' committee, consisting of all the members of the church. The congregation has been divided into teams. Chas. F. Hutslar, the minister, hopes greatly to increase the membership and conserve the results of the recent Billy Sunday revival.

M. S. Buckley has resigned his work at Franklin Street Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., and began his pastorate at West Creighton Avenue Church, Fort Wayne, Ind. Mr. Buckley has held unusually successful pastorates in Cincinnati and Cleveland, spending five years at each church, and is planning an aggressive campaign at Fort Wayne.

The congregation of Warwood Church, Wheeling, W. Va., celebrated the first anniversary of their new building in a distinctly novel and useful way Memorial Day. Besides an impressive service, volunteers painted the building, graded the lawn and set out flowers. Dinner and supper were served for the workers, and the entire day was spent in the work.

Ten years ago the Foreign Society began work in the Philippine Islands. We now have thirteen American or English workers on this field beside many native helpers. We have 58 organized churches and 35 Bible schools soon to develop into organized churches. The membership of these churches at the end of last year was 4,643. There were 771 Baptisms during the year 1911.

A joint board representing the different churches of Lincoln, Neb., is considering the erection of another church building on the property, now owned in partnership by the churches, at Seventeenth and South Streets. At the present time there are few churches in that section of Lincoln and the expansion of the city in that direction makes the proposal very attractive. There is a large constituency of Disciples in that vicinity.

The Kentucky Bible-school Association and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions will conduct a School of Methods at Morehead, using the buildings of the school, June 17-23. Morehead is sixty-five miles east of Lexington on the Chesapeak & Ohio R. R. All roads have granted a special rate of one and one-third fare, plus twenty-five cents, for round trip. Board and tuition for one week will be only $5.00. Bible-school experts will be there to direct studies.

The annual convention of the Texas Christian Missionary Society met at Houston, May 13-16. The attendance was large, and notwithstanding the fact that Houston is well to the south of the state, more than 300 out of town delegates were present. One of the features of the program was the series of devotional services conducted by Hugh McLellan, of San Antonio. The program was of unusual strength. The visiting speakers were Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, John Booth, F. M. Rains, I. N. McCash, Robt. M. Hopkins, R. P. Shepherd, G. S. Inman and J. H. Mohorter.

George Darsie leaves an important and notably successful work, closing his pastorate at High Street, Akron, O., to accept the ministry at Terre Haute, Ind. In his seven years' ministry at Akron, Mr. Darsie has preached 580 sermons and personally conducted five evangelistic campaigns. The average Bible-school attendance has increased from less than five hundred to about nine hundred. The men's class has a membership of over three hundred. With the aid of the 1,230 people Mr. Darsie has brought into the church, the Foreign Mission offering has been doubled; a like sum has been given to Home Missions. The church has lately established a named loan fund of $5,000 to assist weak churches through Church Extension. Two lots have been purchased on which will be erected two new churches as branches of the High Street Church.

A unique and beautiful service was instituted in "Flower Day," at First Church, Atlanta, Ga., June 2. It is expected to be made an annual event.

Each member of the congregation brought an offering of flowers. The church was beautifully banked and decorated with these floral offerings. There were floral anthems and hymns by the choir and the pastor, Dr. L. O. Bricker, delivered a "flower sermon." At the close of the morning service the flowers were distributed among various committees and carried to the hospitals, Home for Incurables, Old Ladies' home, city prison and other institutions.

Beckley Institute is a mountain school of the C. W. B. M., and is doing most excellent service for the young people of the hill country. A high spiritual tone pervades the work and already twelve counties are represented in the student body. A class of eleven young people was graduated this week, Peter Ainslie delivering the commencement address and Mr. Abberley the baccalaureate sermon. A new church will be erected at Beckley in the near future.

Word received from E. Jay Teagarden, Danbury, Conn., president of the New England Christian Missionary Society, brings the information, that owing to the continued sickness of the secretary, Harry Minnick of Worcester, Mass., his resignation has been accepted. All correspondence concerning the New England work should be addressed to the newly appointed secretary, John F. Kyes, 88 Park Ave., Worcester, Mass.

Edward B. Bagby, until very recently pastor of First Church, Fort Smith, Ark., has accepted the work at Twenty-fifth Street Church, Baltimore, and preaches his first sermon there June 9. Mr. Bagby is identified closely with the Disciples in Washington, D. C. In 1891 he organized a small mission church on Capitol Hill, which, under his direction, grew into a congregation of 1,000 members and later became Ninth Street Christian Church. He retained the pastorate fifteen years, and then accepted a call to Circle Christian Church of Cleveland. His health became impaired and he resigned. After a rest, he took charge of the church in Fort Smith, Ark., where he has had a successful ministry.

W. R. Warren Selected to Lead Ministerial Relief

W. R. Warren, at present editor of the Christian-Evangelist, has been tendered a unanimous call by the Board of Ministerial Relief to the secretaryship of the society and has accepted. Mr. Warren will remain with the Evangelist until September 1, after which time he will enter heartily into the work of Ministerial Relief.

As centennial secretary for three years Mr. Warren led the brotherhood in the planning and preparation for the great Pittsburg convention. His two years' experience as general business manager for the Christian Board of Publication, his genial spirit and wide acquaintance all give him special fitness for this particular and important ministry. His confidence in the brethren, their confidence in him, together with the claims of Ministerial Relief, will open the door everywhere for his coming.

For some years the growing responsibilities of the work have made it evident that the Board of Ministerial Relief needed a strong man in the field to press the claims of this ministry upon the brotherhood that it might be better understood, and in consequence receive its proper support. The board has been earnest and careful in its consideration of this proposition, and its hesitation has been on the ground of the necessarily increased expense. But the demand prevails, the needs of the work continue to grow, and in Mr. Warren the board feels it has found the answer to the needs.

Attractive Program for Bethany Assembly

Bethany Park Assembly at Bethany Park, Indiana, July 25-Aug. 18, has arranged an attractive program for its third session.

Of great importance will be the summer school of Sunday-school methods, which will be in session from Aug. 6 to Aug. 16. Gary L. Cook, Indiana Sunday-school superintendent, will be dean of the school and instructor in religious pedagogy.

The following well-known Sunday-school and mission workers have been selected as members of the faculty of the school: Dr. Robert Perry Shepherd, St. Louis, Mo., instructor in Bible work; Elmer Ellsworth Snoddy, head of the department of philosophy, Hiram college, instructor in Sunday-school psychology; Miss Florence Miller, Louisville, Ky., instructor in missions; John E. Pounds, minister and adult class specialist, Hiram, O., instructor in work of adult department; Dr. Isaac Taylor Headland of China, instructor in missions; Miss Henrietta E. Stoy, Livingston, Tenn., instructor in elementary division work.

Candidates for graduation are required to present notes covering thirty lectures as the requirements for graduation. There were eighty-seven graduates last summer out of a class of more than 200 that took the course.

The preachers' week, that proved such a success when it was instituted last year, will be conducted this summer in conjunction with a church officers' conference.

The dean of the week will be W. C. Morro, dean of Butler Bible College, and the instructors and lecturers will be W. J. Lhamon, S. S. Lappin, R. P. Shepherd, C. M. Yocum, O. E. Kelley, William Mullendore, J. Frank Hanly and Dr. E. H. Lindley.

Others who will speak at Bethany this year are R B. Von KleinSmid of DePauw University, E. E. Elliot, secretary of the National Brotherhood Association; Miss Virginia Brooks of Hammond, Ind., and Elmer Ellsworth Snoddy of Hiram College.

The season will close with a two days' brotherhood conference under the direction of E. E. Elliot, secretary of the National Brotherhood Association, and Robert N. Simpson of New Albany, Ind., president of the Indiana Brotherhood Association. During the conference lectures will be given by C. C. Nelson, L. A. Beard, C. C. Wilson and W. R. Motley.

Offer Prize for Home Missions Articles

The Home Missions Council, representing twenty-seven home missions boards is offering attractive money prizes for the best article on a series of articles relating to home missions. Home Mission week is to be celebrated by the Protestant churches of America from Nov. 17 to 24. The committee having this matter in charge is desirous of securing a series of article on the twelve subjects which are to be presented each week during the three months' preliminary period. Twenty-five dollars will be paid for the best article on each of the following subjects: The Negro, Spanish Americans, The New Frontier (The West and the South), The Immigrant, The Problems of Country Life, City Problems, Women and Children in Industry, The Saloon and Temperance Reform, Social Movements Arising out of Present Day Social Conditions, The Church as a Social Agency, The Church as a Religious Force, The Churches in a Uniform Program of Advance.

These articles are to be used in the religious and the daily press and should be written in a popular manner. Their importance from the standpoint of the church should be distinctly brought out and they are to be limited to 1,500 words. The final date for receiving these articles is August 1.

Full particulars as to details will be given upon request by Charles Stelzle, Executive Secretary, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Commencement and Inauguration at Eureka

Eureka College, Eureka, Illinois, graduates her senior classes June 1. A season of unusual interest has been planned, beginning Sunday, June 14, with the Baccalaureate by Burris A. Jenkins of Kansas City.

A feature of the week is the installation of Charles E. Underwood as president. The program is as follows:

Sunday, June 9.

11:00 a. m., Christian Church, Baccalaureate Sermon—Burris A. Jenkins, Kansas City, Mo.

7:30 p. m., Christian Church, Sacred Literature Exercises—Pres. Charles E. Underwood.

Monday, June 10.

8:00 p. m. Tabernacle; "School for Scandal" —Sheridan. Public Speaking Department.

Tuesday, June 11.

8:00 p. m., Chapel, Inter-Society Contest.

Wednesday, June 12.

9:00 a. m., Room 1, Burgess Hall, Meeting Board of Trustees.

10:00 a. m., Chapel, Preparatory and Commercial Department Exercises. Presentation of Certificates. Address, Silas Jones. P. M., Art Room, Burgess Hall, Art Exhibit.

2:00 p. m., Athletic Field, Annual Field Day

8:00 p. m., Chapel; Concert School of Music.

Thursday, June 13.

10:00 a. m., Tabernacle, Senior Class Day Exercises.

2:00 p. m., Christian Church.—Installation Address, J. H. Garrison, St. Louis, Mo. Inaugural Address, Pres. Charles E. Underwood. Alumni reunion and dinner.

8:00 p. m., Lida's Wood; President's Reception.

Friday, June 14.

10: a. m., Tabernacle. Fifty-second Annual Commencement. Address by Prof. Edward A. Ross, University of Wisconsin. "Sub-surface Tendencies of American Society."

From the Indiana Secretary

1. The annual report is being mailed to all preachers. Read it and see what is being done by the state association and what is proposed for this year. Only the actual work of the association is reported. Next year a supplementary report will be published of other missionary and evangelistic work. In order that this may be what it should be the assistance of the preachers will be necessary. Any missionary work done by local organizations or churches or individuals should be reported. New churches organized or new buildings should be reported.

2. It is very important that we have a correct list of our preachers. The Year Book of 1912 contains some errors in spite of all our efforts to secure accuracy. Will not you look over the list of preachers and if you see any names that should not be there, or if any are omitted that should be there, please give me the information. Please do this now before you forget.

Commencement Scene on Drake University Campus.

3. The state convention adopted as our watchword for the year "400 contributing churches and $10,000 for Home Missions." In order to reach this we must enlist 175 churches that did not contribute last year. We have about 500 preachers in the state. There are probably 800 churches that would want to be classed as favorable to co-operative work. It ought to be easy to go beyond the mark set by the watchword. But it must be done by the preachers if it is done at all. Every church should have an opportunity to give. If you did not take the offering in May will not you do so in June. Take the offering and send it to A. C. M. S. Carew Bldg., Cincinnati.

L. E. MURRAY, Cor. Sec'y.
416 Majestic Bldg.,
Indianapolis, Ind.

Commencement at Bethany

The exercises of the 71st Annual Commencement of Bethany College, Bethany, W. Va., began June 9, with the baccalaureate sermon by President Thomas E. Cramblet in the Bethany church.

Thursday, June 13, is Commencement Day proper. Two sessions will be held during the day; one beginning at 9:30 a. m., and one at 1:30 p. m. The class address will be delivered by Judge L. T. Farr, of Lisbon, O. In addition to the salutatory and valedictory, eight members of the senior class have been chosen to deliver orations. In the evening at 8 o'clock will be held the anniversary of the literary societies.

The past year has been, viewed from every standpoint, the very best in the history of Bethany College. The Central heating and lighting plant has been installed, supplying heat for ten buildings. The Oglesbay Hall of Agricuture and Science, costing $80,000, is rapidly nearing completion. It will be ready for use before the opening of the next session in September. Work upon the college farm has made rapid progress.

The graduating class is made up of forty-three young people.

Drake Holds Annual Exercises

The commencement season at Drake began with the baccalaureate sermon by the chaplain, Charles S. Medbury, Sunday, June 9. Wednesday, June 12, Theodore Perry Shonts delivered the commencement address and degrees were conferred. The program was as follows:

Sunday, June 9—

Baccalaureate sermon, church auditorium. Sermon by Chaplain Charles Sanderson Medbury, 3:30 p. m.

Sacred concert, church auditorium, conducted by Dean Holmes Cowper, 8:00 p. m.

Monday, June 10—

Senior play, university auditorium, 8:15 p. m.

Tuesday, June 11—

Annual meeting of Board of Trustees in president's office, 10:00 a. m.

Senior Class exercises on campus, 2:00 p. m.

Alumni frolic and costume parade on campus, 3:00 p. m.

Class reunions, 5:00 p. m.

Alumni banquet, women's gymnasium, 8:00 p. m.

Wednesday, June 12—

Commencement exercises, church auditorium. Address by Dr. Theodore Perry Shonts, New York City, 9:30 a. m.

President's reception to Seniors, trustees, faculties and friends, at 2718 University Avenue, 2:00 p. m.

Commencement at Hiram

The program for the forty-fifth commencement season of Hiram College covers a briefer period than its predecessors, but undoubtedly surpasses any previous commencement.

The ceremonies were observed after the following order:

Saturday, June 8.

7:30 p. m. Literary Society Commencement.

Sunday, June 9.

10:30 a. m. Baccalaureate Sermon—President Miner Lee Bates.

7:30 p. m. Anniversary of the Christian Association. Address, Dean Florence W. Fitch, Oberlin College.

Monday, June 10.

10:00 a. m. Annual meeting of Board of Trustees.

7:30 p. m. Opera "Patience," Hiram Vocal Society. Francis J. Sadlier, director.

Tuesday, June 11.

10:00 a. m. Commencement Exercises.

3:00 p. m. Alumni Meeting.

4:30 p. m. Alumni Dinner.

7:30 p. m. Entertainment, "The American Citizen," Alethean and Hesperian Literary Societies.

Wednesday, June 12.

Eclectic Home Coming Day.

10:00 a. m. Meeting of Eclectic Institute Students and Friends. Address, "Alemeda Booth" by Hon. Virgil P. Cline, Cleveland, Ohio. Address, "Hiram Boys in the Struggle of '61-65." Prof. E. B. Wakefield.

12 m. Eclectic Home Coming Dinner with reminiscences of the early days, C. C. Smith presiding.

Commencement Program.

Song, Francis J. Sadlier.

Address, "The New Patriotism Demanded of College Graduates." Professor Graham Taylor, President Chicago School of Civics and Philanthropy.

Song, Francis J. Sadlier.

Presentation of class by E. B. Wakefield.

Conferring of degrees.

Benediction.

Those receiving degrees this year are: Bachelor of Arts: Charles E. Burns, Louis P. Clark, Anna E. Darby, Orville T. Lytle, Frank R. Van Brocklyn, Hiram N. Van Voorhis, William A. Young. Bachelor of Philosophy: Grace Cook, William F. Hennessy, Ruth M. Raw, Mabel E. Reed, Hallie B. Thomas, Helen L. Works. Bachelor of Science: Orville F. Barcus, Helen N. Erb, Harry S. Moffit, Edwin Spencer, Cora B. Turner. Master of Arts: Merritt O. Johnson, James A. Long.

Temple Seminary Commencement

The eighth commencement of the Temple Seminary has marked a definite epoch in the history of this institution. Not only did the seminary have the largest number of graduates at this commencement—twenty-two, and representing six different communions—but it had the largest attendance and the greatest enthusiasm. One of the most pressing needs has been a separate house for the work of the seminary, for up to this time, we have been using rooms in the Christian Temple, but through the liberality of friends we have been able to secure a splendid piece of property on one of the leading streets and while we have not secured enough to pay for it, we have gotten together enough money to purchase it and will complete the payments later. It is situated three squares from the Christian Temple and our plan is to make it a center of Bible work for the city, as well as a center of social service work.

EUREKA COLLEGE

CLASSICAL, SCIENTIFIC, HISTORY, SOCIAL SCIENCE, MINISTERIAL COURSES

High Grade Scholarship
Healthful Moral Atmosphere
University Trained Professors
Well Balanced Courses

Good Music and Art Department

Eureka College offers a well rounded education. It is an institution of learning with careful attention to moral and religious instruction.

FALL SEMESTER OPENS SEPTEMBER 9.

Address
Pres. Charles E. Underwood
(Mention Christian Century.)

Drake University
Des Moines, Iowa.

COLLEGE OF LIBERAL ARTS.
Four-year courses, based upon four-year high school courses, leading to the degree of A. B., Ph. B., S. B. In the School of Education, included in this college, are courses for Students in Domestic Science.
Primary Teachers.
Kindergarten Teachers.
Grade Teachers.
High School Teachers.

COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE.
Graduate course, requiring three years' work, leading to degree of D. B.

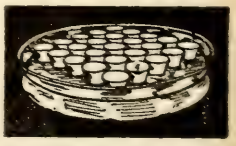
COLLEGE OF LAW.
Three-year course, based on four-year high school course, leading to degree of L.L. B.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE.
Four-year course, based on four-year high school course and two full years in college, leading to the degree of M. D.

COLLEGE OF DENTISTRY.
Three-year course, based on four-year high school course, leading to the degree of D. D. S.

INSTITUTE OF FINE ARTS.
Special courses, based upon such preparation as best fits the student to pursue the study of his chosen course most profitably. The Institute of Fine Arts includes three distinct departments:
Conservatory of Music.
School of Painting and Drawing.
School of Dramatic Art.

For catalogue and other information, address,
THE PRESIDENT,
DRAKE UNIVERSITY,
Des Moines, Iowa.

DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE INDIVIDUAL
"Noiseless"
CUSHIONED TRAYS
4 Different Features
WHY?


1st—"Noiseless"—As all cup holes are cushioned.
2nd—Dust-proof—The Trays interlock.
3rd—A short glass—no need of tipping back the head.
4th—Automatic Filler—Fills rapidly and evenly.
Does not mar the sacredness of the service.
Write for booklet. Outfit sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 E. Randolph St., Dept. T., Chicago.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 27
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

The address to the graduating class was delivered by Dr. A. B. Kinsolving, Rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, which was a most practical and beautiful presentation of the necessity of Bible reading and attention to the best literature of the world. At the banquet the crowd was beyond the accommodation and nine short speeches made up the evening program. The addresses were delivered by business men, preachers, church workers, one a professor in a college and the other a banker.

This three years' course of Bible study has been a great power of usefulness in this city and there is no place where the Disciples need to center their work so much as in the great cities. Here is a city perhaps more strongly Roman Catholic than any city in America and the only possibility of correcting the errors of the Roman Catholic Church is by a diligent and frank teaching of the Scriptures. Baltimore affords an opportunity to the Disciples as perhaps no other large city in the East and our advancement is steady and permanent. It is expected that next year, having our own Bible house, the seminary will open with a largely increased attendance and will enter upon a more efficient field of service than ever before. We had 100 students last session. Some of these come several miles to the night classes, one came twenty miles and all this shows an undeniable hunger for the Word. It is the greatest necessity of this age to give the Bible to the people and especially in these great centers of population which are destined to control the affairs of the nation. PETER AINSLIE.

Baltimore.

The High Calling

(Continued from page 15.)

where she had a sewing table and a writing desk. When she had shut herself in there she spread Walter's letter out before the Lord.

That meant that her simple mother faith said to God, "Oh, my Father, I need wisdom now to write this letter. My boy, my first born son is in need of Thee. But he has turned to his mother for help. Show me how to say the right thing. For I can not do it without thy help."

And then without any hesitation or fear of the final result, Esther wrote to Walter. It was a sacred letter, but a part of it belongs to this narrative.

"You must not forget, boy," Esther went on after cheerfully reminding him that he was not the only person in the world to have such an experience; "you must not forget that religion is a universal thing, and that it is a cry of the heart for God. It is not a matter to figure out like mathematics, but it is an answer to the real longing of the soul for a divine life in the world.

"You must not forget, either, that your faith does not depend on what someone else says, but upon the actual needs of your own life. You know that you need God. You know that you are wretched now because you are afraid God has been taken away. Isn't that a sign to you that your simple faith as you have been taught it here at home is a real and necessary thing? What Dr. Powers said (and you must remember you may not have understood his full meaning), what he said has not changed the everlasting facts of sin and moral responsibility and the facts of the plain right and wrong of the world. And when it comes to the resurrection and a future life all we can do is to take Christ's word for it. He knows more about it than Dr. Powers knows. Your mother is no theologian and no great scholar, but when it comes to taking Dr. Powers' word as against Jesus' own statements about himself, I don't hesitate, and you ought not to. Jesus is the way and the truth and the life. Just trust him. It is what thousands of souls bigger than yours have done and they have found the light as you will. We are praying for you, father and I. Father can give you better reasons than I can, perhaps, because he knows more, but listen to me, boy, to your mother, whose heart goes out to you at this time. You don't have to answer all the hard questions of religion all at once. Some of them can bide for an answer. But, oh, plant your feet down on the rock, Christ Jesus! Abide with him and your soul will not be lost. He will not let you go wrong. He came to give you abundant life. The love of God is greater than all other things. Trust simply and don't be afraid. Get to work in the Sunday-school and church. Doubt can not live in the atmosphere of doing God's will every moment. Perhaps one reason you have been so overthrown is because you have neglected your church and religious duties since you left home. Pray; trust; act; live for others; listen for God's voice; be true to the high calling. It is the only real and living way for you. And the prayers of your mother go out to God for you now and always. Walter, you are God's child before you are mine. Go to him at once and ask his help as you have asked mine. May He bless you as I can not. Lovingly and prayerfully,

"Mother."

Mrs. Douglas was so eager to get her letter off that she did not wait for Paul's added word. But two days later Paul wrote quite at length, in much the same fashion, taking up one or two points Esther had not touched.

(To be continued.)

Uncle Ezra: "Do you think the money young Eph Hopkins made down in New York will last him long?" Uncle Eben: "Not much! He's going at an awful pace. I was down in the general store last night, and young Eph was writing hundred dollar checks and lighting his cigars with them."—Puck.

"17 Cents a Day"

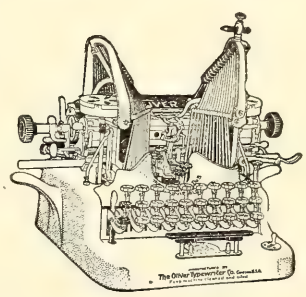
The Plan That Promotes Success

THE "17-Cents-a-Day" Plan of purchasing The Oliver Typewriter means more than promoting sales of this wonderful writing machine. This Plan is a positive and powerful factor in promoting the success of all who avail themselves of its benefits.

It means that this Company is giving practical assistance to earnest people everywhere by supplying them—for pennies—with the best typewriter in the world.

The "17-Cents-a-Day" Plan is directly in line with the present-day movement to substitute typewriting for handwriting in business correspondence.

Ownership of The Oliver Typewriter is fast becoming one of the essentials of success.



"17 Cents a Day" and The Printype OLIVER Typewriter

The Standard Visible Writer

There is no patent on the "17-Cents-a Day" Purchase Plan.

We invented it and presented it to the public, with our compliments.

The "17-Cents-a-Day" Plan leaves no excuse for writing in primitive longhand. We have made it so easy to own The Oliver Typewriter that there's no need even to rent one.

Just say "17 Cents a Day"—Save your pennies—and soon the machine is yours!

The Oliver Typewriter is selling by thousands for 17 Cents a Day.

When even the School Children are buying machines on this simple, practical Plan, don't you think it is time for you to get an Oliver Typewriter?

17 Cents a Day Buys Newest Model

We sell the new Oliver Typewriter No. 5 for 17 Cents a Day.

We guarantee our No. 5 to be absolutely our best model.

The same machine that the great corporations use.

Their dollars cannot buy a better machine than you can get for pennies.

The Oliver Typewriter No. 5 has many great conveniences not found on other machines.

We even supply it equipped to write the wonderful new PRINTYPE—for 17 Cents a Day.

Make the Machine Pay Its Cost

The Oliver Typewriter is a money-making machine. It helps "big business" pile up huge profits.

Tens of thousands of people rely on The Oliver Typewriter for their very bread and butter.

A small first payment puts the machine in your possession.

Then you can make it earn the money to meet the little payments.

If you are running a business of your own, use The Oliver Typewriter and make the business grow.

If you want to get a start in business, use The Oliver Typewriter as a battering-ram to force your way in!

The ability to operate The Oliver Typewriter is placing young people in good positions every day.

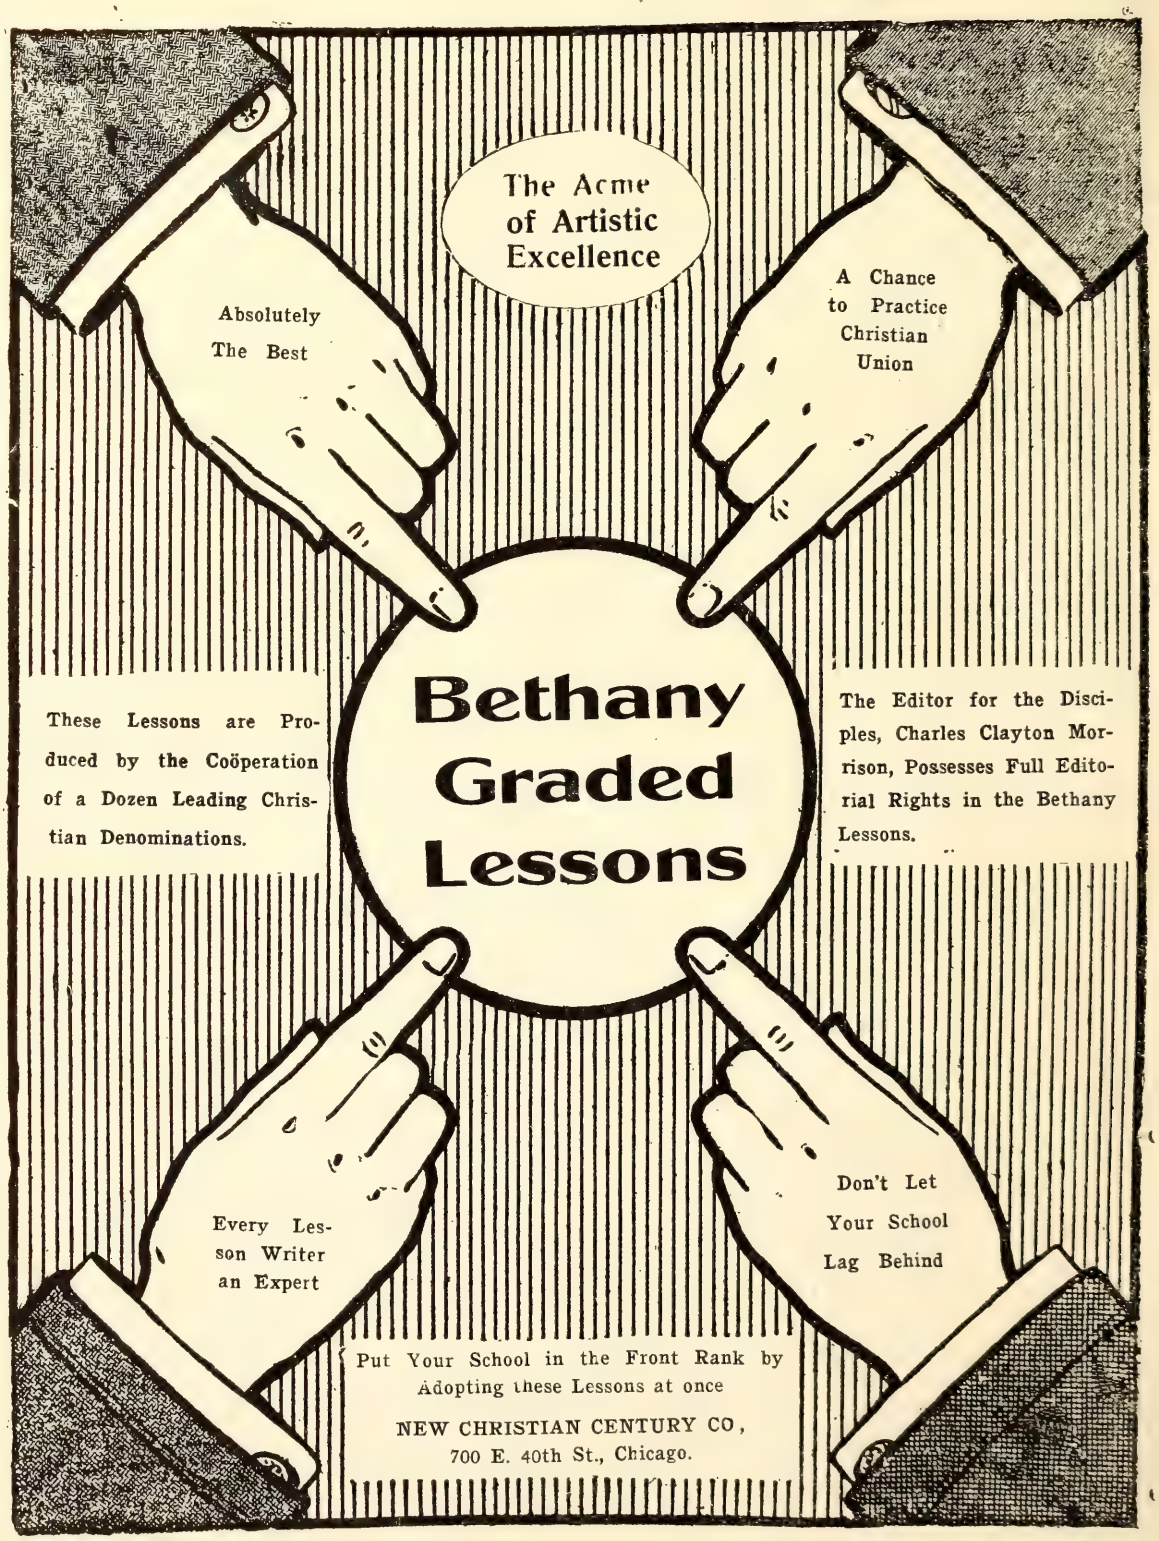
Get The Oliver Typewriter—on the "17-Cents-a-Day" Plan—it will help you win success.

Ask About "The Easy Way"

to secure the newest model Oliver Typewriter No. 5. The Art Catalog and full particulars of the "17-Cents-a-Day" Purchase Plan will be sent promptly on request. Address

THE OLIVER TYPEWRITER COMPANY

Agencies Everywhere. OLIVER TYPEWRITER BUILDING, CHICAGO.



The Acme of Artistic Excellence
Absolutely The Best
A Chance to Practice Christian Union
Bethany Graded Lessons
These Lessons are Produced by the Coöperation of a Dozen Leading Christian Denominations.
The Editor for the Disciples, Charles Clayton Morrison, Possesses Full Editorial Rights in the Bethany Lessons.
Every Lesson Writer an Expert
Don't Let Your School Lag Behind
Put Your School in the Front Rank by Adopting these Lessons at once
NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO,
700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Vol. XXIX June 20, 1912 Number 25

PUT YOURSELF IN HIS PLACE!
BY ELLIS B. BARNES

HYPOCRISY, A UNIVERSAL FAULT
BY G. CAMPBELL MORGAN

THE HARPER MEMORIAL LIBRARY
AN EDITORIAL

CHICAGO

Topics of the Times

That wireless telegraphy is one of the inventions that the world cannot possibly do without, becomes more and more evident every day. There cannot be too many of these life and property saving stations. Twin wireless stations to communicate directly with London, will be built along the New Jersey coast within a year, according to an announcement made by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company of America. The first station, the announcement says, will be erected within nine months near Belmar, N. J., on a site of 550 acres purchased today. The second station will be at Toms River or Barnegat, and will be tuned to a key different from the first, so that messages to either station may be received and sent simultaneously without interference. The distance is 3,100 miles, and the estimated cost of the plants will be $750,000 each. The announcement also states that options have been obtained upon similar sites at San Francisco and Honolulu, and that it is planned to construct a plant in the Philippine Islands, which will communicate with the one at Honolulu. The company would thus be enabled to send messages from London to the Philippines by way of the United States.

New York City has gotten out of the hands of the grafters and boodling politicians who disgraced its name so long. Mayor Gaynor thinks so, anyway. He said the other day to his city officials: "I am almost proud of myself that I either by blunder or intuition selected the men who now control the city government. There is not a breath of suspicion among all the five million people in our city that any member of the city government is doing other than his best or that there is a dishonest man among you. Your work is an object-lesson to the whole nation."

There is another use for moving pictures besides amusing and entertaining children with bulging eyes, and older folks with small, flat pocketbooks. Moving pictures are to be used by the Central of Georgia Railroad, a Harriman line, to teach the elements of railroading to the more ignorant of the employes, many of whom are negroes and illiterate. It is believed that substituting pictures for text-books, they can be taught to perform their duties more intelligently. Almost every detail of train operation can be shown effectively on the screen, and the pictures can be run over as many times as may be needed to teach the processes thoroughly.

The problem of controlling the amusements of young folks is one of the great ones of the day. Lindsey, of Denver, thinks he has solved it. Let us hope so. An ordinance based on the result of a dozen years' observation by Judge Lindsey, establishing a wide censorship over all forms of public amusement for the protection of young men and women, was drafted last week in Denver, at a conference between Mayor Arnold, Police Commissioner Creel, and Judge Lindsey. No girl under eighteen will be allowed in a public dance hall after 9 o'clock unless accompanied by her parents. All young people must register on entering such places. The regulations exclude unattended children from moving-picture houses except on holidays and after school hours. None under sixteen will be allowed after 7 o'clock.

The Sears, Roebuck gift of $1,000,000 for farm development, was a popular one. One hundred and sixty counties in various states, thirty of them in Illinois, have made application through the crop development committee of the Council of Grain Exchanges for a share of the gift. There has been no distribution of the fund as yet, but many of the counties which have made application, are now organizing to secure their share, and will qualify to do so in the near future. Probably the first to qualify and receive its share of the fund will be Peoria County, Ill. The Commercial Club of Peoria has nearly completed its organization, and during the Illinois State Grain Dealers' Convention, held in Peoria this week, the club will elect a ways and means committee and appoint a farm demonstrator. The club now has $15,000 subscribed and the money will be devoted to farm development and good roads. Much interest is being manifested by farm publications throughout the country in the progress attained by the different counties and some have asked for weekly reports.

The most worthy system of pensioning employes is growing rapidly. A minimum pension of $25 a month and a maximum of $100 a month are the principal features of a new pension system which the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company have announced at Boston that it would put into effect July 1. After twenty years of service, an employe of the company may be pensioned for disability at sixty; at sixty-five he may retire upon a pension at his own volition; and at seventy retirement is compulsory, unless the board of directors decide to make an exception. Employes are not called upon to make any contribution toward the maintenance of the pension fund.

The engineering work of the United States for the reclamation of the arid lands of the West is receiving the close attention of numerous foreign governments. Representatives who were sent by France and Germany are enroute to the West to study the work the reclamation service is doing there. An itinerary has been arranged for the visitors, who will devote several months to a tour of observation. The French government is represented by the director-general of waters and forests, and his assistant, while there are four German visitors. Engineers and agricultural experts from Russia, Italy, England, Austria, Central and South America, and Australia, have inspected many of the large irrigation projects in the West.

—Michael D. Olbrich, a Madison lawyer, who has been chosen to place Robert M. La Follette's name in nomination for President at the republican convention, is only thirty years of age. He was graduated from the University of Wisconsin in the law class of 1905. While in college, he was a leader in debating and oratorical contests. He is a member of the law firm of Aylward, Davies, Olbrich & Hill. Mr. Olbrich was recently a delegate to the state convention from Dane County, Wis.

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.

NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business

FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet

THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.
1109 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, U. S. A.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 27
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone
Far Sounding
Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

EUREKA COLLEGE

CLASSICAL, SCIENTIFIC, HISTORY, SOCIAL SCIENCE, MINISTERIAL COURSES

High Grade Scholarship
Healthful Moral Atmosphere
University Trained Professors
Well Balanced Courses

Good Music and Art Department

Eureka College offers a well rounded education. It is an institution of learning with careful attention to moral and religious instruction.

FALL SEMESTER OPENS SEPTEMBER 9.

Address

Pres. Charles E. Underwood

(Mention Christian Century.)

Drake University
Des Moines, Iowa.

COLLEGE OF LIBERAL ARTS.
Four-year courses, based upon four-year high school courses, leading to the degree of A. B., Ph. B., S. B. In the School of Education, included in this college, are courses for Students in Domestic Science.
Primary Teachers.
Kindergarten Teachers.
Grade Teachers.
High School Teachers.

COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE.
Graduate course, requiring three years' work, leading to degree of D. B.

COLLEGE OF LAW.
Three-year course, based on four-year high school course, leading to degree of L.L. B.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE.
Four-year course, based on four-year high school course and two full years in college, leading to the degree of M. D.

COLLEGE OF DENTISTRY.
Three-year course, based on four-year high school course, leading to the degree of D. D. S.

INSTITUTE OF FINE ARTS.
Special courses, based upon such preparation as best fits the student to pursue the study of his chosen course most profitably. The Institute of Fine Arts includes three distinct departments:
Conservatory of Music.
School of Painting and Drawing.
School of Dramatic Art.
For catalogue and other information, address,
THE PRESIDENT,
DRAKE UNIVERSITY,
Des Moines, Iowa.

WILLIAM WOODS College
School where girls WHO KNOW want to go
FULTON, MO.
Girls do NOT miss the College Flavor here.
Our illustrated, interesting new catalogue tells all the story. Ask for it.
Address: J. L. Garvin, President Box C
Chartered Controlled by Christian Church

The Christian Century

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT . . . . . EDITORS

Put Yourself in His Place!

NO MAN CAN BE JUST UNTIL HE SEES with his neighbor's eyes.

Neither can he be tolerant until he meets with the congregation of the bigoted, nor reverent until he hears the scoffing of the scornful

One of the troubles with the world is that the majority never get away from their own cabbage patch; they never hear any language save that wherein they were born.

* * *

There was a time when even the American looked on the foreigner as a foe, and the American laughed at the folly of the Chinaman who called him a "foreign devil." What was absurd in him was patriotism in us. When we became acquainted with him we saw how similar the hopes and the aspirations of both nations were. Then began the first stirrings within both of the universal brotherhood. We sat in the same seat with him, and he saw as well as did we that the terms "foreigner" and "devil" were hardly appropriate appellations for either.

* * *

In political circles it was an unwritten law that what the other party did was a challenge to the opposition. It did not make much difference whether it was right or wrong; the measure must be opposed. We are outgrowing that heresy. Men are weighing measures, and lining up for them or against them according to their merits, not according to their authorship.

* * *

In the sphere of religion the same blind spirit has animated us all. We are shy of any practice unless it bears the proper image and superscription, denominationally. The Baptist authorities can kill the wisest measures if only it can be shown that they originated in Methodist circles. And all others may do the same thing. This is to sit in the bigot's seat, and never to vacate it.

* * *

Disciples know how to do things of this sort so well that but one illustration need be pointed to. This is the subject of Federation. It was not fathered by the wisdom of the wise, and, consequently, it was denounced as a sectarian measure. Other measures have met a similar reception.

Time will show that the sectarian and the bigot need only to cross the street to be converted to many measures that now bear the imprint of heresy.

* * *

The world moves slowly from the umbrella stage of existence to that of the life under the skies.

The little canopy is good enough for us, so runs the tale, because it was good enough for our fathers. And we steadfastly remain in our own place, see within their range of vision what they saw, and never become able to understand why the other fellow is such a constitutional fool.

* * *

Much of the heat of debate and the waste of words could be saved if we all paused long enough to borrow one another's eyes for a few moments. Every student must have wondered at the ease with which an opponent's armour could be pierced in debate when it was supposed that the armour was invulnerable; and the piercing would have continued on either side indefinitely if the positions of both had remained fixed.

* * *

But what ends most debates is a new point of view.

* * *

For that reason discussions on baptism are no longer popular. It has been found that the same arguments could be repeated on both sides and the same goal reached with monotonous regularity. Our generation has the same convictions on this subject as the preceding, but we have ceased hostilities because we have stopped long enough to see what all must finally come to see, namely, that there are two sides to every question. If we can't agree with our neighbors we will not continue a war which promised no good. It will be better to fly a flag of truce.

* * *

That we shall some day get much nearer to each other than we now are there can be no doubt. We shall even find ourselves, by a most natural process, agreeing on the things which are most generally believed. Theologically we shall move along the line of least resistance, and in every other sphere the same rule is bound to hold. And that line will be the more easily determined when we consider the position of our neighbors, not for the purpose of combating the errors that we may find, but to weigh their arguments as well as our own.

* * *

And such a course may help us to discover our own weakness as well as their strength, and bring us all to the point where the weakness must disappear under the law of the survival of the most fit.

In the meantime we should all pray that our eyes may be anointed with eye salve that we may see what is good in others, and what is not good in ourselves.

For it requires only logic to see their weaknesses, but grace to discover our own.

* * *

Our own truth we take for granted, and likewise our neighbors' errors, but the just man will try to discover the pure gold in every system, and will labor to purge himself from any dross.

ELLIS B. BARNES.

Social Survey

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN.

America and Mammon

As we start reading the New Testament to get Jesus' attitude toward our social questions, we are struck with his attitude of distrust toward riches. He declares unequivocally, "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." Luke represents him as saying, "Blessed are ye poor" and "Woe unto the rich." The parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus represents his idea of the indifference of many rich men to the suffering proletariat. He bids men, "Lay not up treasures upon earth." He insists upon the high spiritual ground "For a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." He is impressed with the difficulty of saving rich men, "It is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." He tells the story of the foolish rich man who was going to pull down his barns and build greater. His conversation with the man who wished him to arbitrate a dispute over an inheritance indicates his unconcern for these matters of property.

Jesus himself was consistent with his teaching. He had not where to lay his head. He sent Peter fishing when there were taxes to pay. He was ministered unto with the substance of certain rich widows. In death he was buried in another man's tomb.

It is in the name of this master that we have built luxuriously appointed churches. In these churches the poor to whom Jesus ministered are frequently not welcomed. In these temples rich men worship who stand at the very antipodes of Jesus' thought. Even though we make all the allowance possible for the rhetorical quality, the hyperbole, of much that Jesus said, there can be no doubt that Jesus was utterly opposed to the spirit that actuates much of our American enterprise. With him spiritual things are first. With us, there is the ideal of making our fortune first and seeking the consolations of religion in old age.

It is not to be wondered at that money-mad America, who in the service of Mammon has sacrificed her good name with shoddy goods sent abroad, is unwilling to follow Jesus more closely. Either Jesus must call America away from commercialism as the chief interest in life, or religion in the end will perish. Jesus and Mammon are enemies.

Child Labor and Race Welfare

Child labor is an evil in many ways. We must consider in the first place the physical welfare of the child. England found that child labor and the labor of mothers was bringing such rapid deterioration in the physical standards of the nation that they were not getting the right kind of material for the army any more. Hence even Tories in England were ready to mitigate some of these evils. The child that goes to work at tender years is stunted in body and made an easy prey for disease.

In the second place it is evident that child labor takes the child out of school much earlier than should be. In a republic the intelligence of the citizenship is of greatest importance and we of all nations of earth have most reason to dread the increase of the army of illiterates. No surer way of making us a nation of undeveloped people mentally could be devised than the robbing of our children of their childhood.

We must take into account, also, the moral welfare of children. Children must play. It is the law of their natures. When they are put to work at tender years they are made the more susceptible to the moral evils that threaten all growing children. Sometimes the very employment itself is such as to contaminate the young. The work of the messenger boy in the city is fraught with great peril. Especially is the night messenger often sent on errands so shameful in their nature as to be a peril to the boy, and to places of whose very existence he should be ignorant.

Child labor means racial degeneracy, the perpetuation of poverty, the enlargement of illiteracy, the disintegration of the family, the increase of crime, the lowering of the wage scale, and the swelling of the army of the unemployed. Upon each of these indictments volumes might be written.

In addition is the sentimental consideration which has flowered out of our Christian attitude toward the child. The same kindliness which will not permit a child to go without Christmas toys ought to protect him the year around and guarantee to him the fullest enjoyment of all that is good in the race heritage.

The City Missionary Work in Chicago

No more typical missionary development is taking place anywhere in the world than in Chicago. A few years ago each of the denominations had a missionary society which struggled along arousing interest to raise funds for the conversion of Chicago to a given denominational view-point. Then came the modern social standard which is revolutionizing mission work the world around. City missions came to take on increasingly the social method. The Presbyterians organized the Industrial League which employs the unemployed in the repair of second hand goods, donated to the league. The league is self-supporting. A model lodging house and home for Persians was brought into being.

The new social view-point, however, did not permit the wasteful competition of the former times. A co-operative Council of City Missions with equal representation from Baptists, Congregationalists, Methodists and Presbyterians, was formed. This organization is now the symbol of evangelical mission work in Chicago though not disturbing the autonomy of the co-operating organizations.

Investigations and surveys bring statistics to all of the five denominations with great saving to each. Friction is eliminated. Over-lapping has been wholly prevented since the formation of the organization.

The council is now considering the launching of a union mission to care for all the Chinese of the city and to be financed by the five denominations jointly. Since the social view-point has been adopted in city mission work, the foreign mission enterprises are launched not upon the basis of easy proselyting but upon the basis of social need. Instead of spending large sums of money to proselyte German and Swedish Lutherans, the societies are now concerned with the redemption of the Slavs, and other needy races, difficult to evangelize but possessing human problems the most urgent of any.

This transformation is typical of what is going on in missions the whole world over. Just as the ministry of Jesus was not simply the preaching of sermons, but the exemplification of the brotherly attitude in life, so modern missions wishes to serve as well as convert.

A Cause of Illiteracy

We have in the United States six million people who cannot read and write. This army is being recruited by the child labor practiced in a number of the states. One child out of every seven in this country between the ages of ten and fourteen is not in school. The abolition of child labor is especially the work of an organization known as the National Child Labor Committee. This organization is eight years old and since its organization there have been new laws passed in thirty-nine states. These laws are in many cases inadequate but they are reaching out toward the goal. Only four of the southern states have laws forbidding the labor of children under the age of fourteen. In the north, only New Hampshire still allows labor before fourteen.

What is involved in the absence of adequate restriction is vividly expressed by P. P. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education. He says: "In the Carolinas I have seen children under ten years of age working their lives away in the mills. Their pale faces haunt me still. I saw little boys eight years old drinking black coffee at midnight to keep awake until the end of their shift at four or five o'clock in the morning. Then they went out of the hot, steaming, noisy mill into the cold air of the morning to their homes probably for a little fitful sleep and a drowsy, joyless day, only to come back at night and grind again through the long, dark hours."

"In four states—Ohio, Oklahoma, Illinois and Michigan," says Florence Kelley, "there is no provision made to lift the burden upon the widowed mother by giving her, as her right and not as the dole of a private charity, an allowance out of public finances on condition that she stay in her home and keep her children at home and in school as the state requires." As Jean Gordon, of New Orleans, puts it, "Certainly the mother does as much for the country in rearing her children as the veterans did in killing her sons."

The bypath of partisanship lies dangerously near to the highway of denominationalism. May the day be far distant when a Christian will cry, "Church—my church!" instead of "Christ—my Christ!"

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Concerning the "Decadent Church"

We have become so accustomed to the recurring cry that the church is losing its hold, that it is decadent and, by the inexorable law of evolution must atrophy and pass away because it is becoming no longer of service, that a clear, ringing note on the other side is welcome indeed. The United Presbyterian, in the editorial reprinted here, speaks boldly in the first sentence, and then definitely tells why it believes that the church is increasing in influence and service.

We believe that the church is producing a finer type of character than at any time in its past history. The church is giving more in service and money than ever before, and these princely offerings mean increase of faith and love. Now, it is impossible to give statistics as to increase in faith and love. These are mighty additions that cannot be numbered, weighed or stated.

There never was a time when there was such a multitude of lay preachers in all denominations. From every business, profession, rank and class, great numbers of men and women are going everywhere preaching the gospel of the Son of God. There never was a time when the sermons preached were more able, more interesting, or more directly concerned with a lost world and a mighty Saviour. There never was a time when the church affected so directly and with such telling force the vital problems of the race, nor when the church was nearer the masses than now. When did the history of the church ever reveal a time when it was so burdened for the deliverance of the oppressed and for the salvation of a lost world? Is not the missionary spirit which has swept through the Christian kingdoms of the world like a flame of fire the wonder and glory of this age? When did the church in all its history have such throngs of volunteers to preach the gospel of Christ throughout the whole world as now? Did even apostolic days witness a finer devotion, a more splendid heroism, a more deathless, dauntless courage than has been witnessed in these days in which men and women, filled with the Holy Spirit of God, are carrying the cross of Jesus Christ around the world? Was there ever a time when the Church had so kindled the fires of democracy in the souls of all men as now, and is it not true that the essential democracy born at the foot of the cross of Jesus is now seizing all hearts? Thrones crumble and the people rule; the scepter is passing from the hands of the kings into the hands of all; philanthropies are increasing beyond all computation, and the spirit of brotherhood, born in a world-wide ministry of the Lord Jesus Christ, is writing the doom of war in the stars of every sky.

Was there ever a time when the church had so deeply stirred the political, business, and social life of the world as in these times? Has it not set in motion the most tremendous and thorough housecleaning ever witnessed, and is it not almost solely due to the church that the wicked in high places have suddenly discovered that there are teeth and claws in the moral law? Was there ever a time when the church furnished a more exalted or more capable type of leadership, and is it not true that whether working inside the church or alongside the church practically all the great moral leaders of our day received their education, ideals, impulses, and visions inside the church? Never was there a time when there was a keener interest in the religious question or when the religious question was more markedly the dominant leading question. The spirit of the early church, thank God, is with us still, and new Acts of the Apostles are being written every day. The spirit of the Church of Jesus Christ is aggressive, dominant, virile, enthusiastic, prayer-centered, all-conquering. The spirit of the church of Jesus Christ has passed far beyond its ancient boundaries, and is changing as fast as may be the kingdoms of this world into the kingdoms of God. The church of Jesus Christ has gone abroad, and is establishing itself in the souls of all men. The morsel of leaven is leavening the whole lump. As we said in the beginning, say now and ever hope to, we have no inclination or disposition to sit down in the shade of the juniper tree.

Unitarians and Church Union

There are several bodies for which the advocates of Christian union have no message, and the Unitarians are one of these. They are as far from the center of the present agitation of that question as are the Christian Scientists; no provision has been made for either one in any overtures that we have seen. As the subject is better understood, we shall find that if doctrinal standards are to be the tests, union must extend over a small zone of Christendom, embracing only families of churches; and the larger unity can be consummated only by the agreement to disagree doctrinally, and to work together in cultivating the fruits of the spirit, and promoting charities and benevolences. The union on a basis of deed is much nearer to us all than a union on a basis of doctrine. It is by deeds that the world is to be Christianized—by their fruits ye shall know them—but the emphasis which has been placed on doctrine hinders any united effort to make real the fine ideals of the gospel. The systems which have been built up during the Christian era cannot be overturned in a day; so in all the discussions of union we must bear in mind that time and patience are two great factors in the problem.

There was a time when Unitarians worked in our ranks, side by side with the pioneers, but that was while many of our convictions were fluid. The formative process doctrinally has closed with us, and our propaganda seems to be limited to those who are evangelical in faith. It would be interesting to know what message we have for the liberal churches. The following from the Christian Register (Unitarian) will show the attitude of that body toward the evangelical churches:

Now in this movement, where are we of the so-called liberal faith? Is there any place for us inside the pale of united Christianity? That the lines that were once sharply drawn between orthodox and Unitarian are becoming less distinct than they were in the good old fighting days, is a matter of common observation. But it is also a stubborn fact that, if the great majority of Christians can agree to adopt any simple and comprehensive statement of faith, all those who can in any sense accept, will be inclined to do so, although by so doing they cut themselves off from open fellowship with those who cannot accept the terms of fraternal association.

What, then, are the terms and what will liberal Christians have to say to them? One indication of the nature of the uniting creed is to be found in the language of a resolution adopted by the House of Clerical and Lay Delegates of the Episcopal Church in America. It is proposed to extend an invitation to "all Christian communions throughout the world which confess our Lord Jesus Christ as God and Saviour" to unite with the Episcopal Church. This invitation is supposed to state the irreducible minimum of Christian doctrine. It is needless to say that such an invitation expressly excludes all Unitarians, as it is intended to do. What then? What follows? Early Unitarians were very fond of the phrase, "Our Lord Jesus Christ." But no one of them regarded him as God. That he was a divine being was a belief fondly cherished by them as it is today by their descendants and successors. They use the word "divinity," however, as not synonymous with deity. For this use there is abundant authority in the New Testament. "As many as are led by the spirit of God, they are sons of God" is only one of many passages in which the hopes of the early disciples were set forth. We know that it will be said that such sayings refer to the redeemed, the sons of God by adoption. But, even so, this leaves us the assurance that all men are potential sons of God and "joint heirs with Jesus Christ." So far, all Unitarians will gladly go, but to accord to him the rank of Supreme Deity, would be to them an impossibility.

Again we may ask, if such a brief creed should be adopted, what then? Evidently all that would be left to us would be a place beside the great majority of the human race who do not and cannot say that Jesus Christ is the only Saviour of the world, or that he is in any exclusive sense divine. That he is identical with the Supreme Being who fills all space and is dominant throughout the universe of suns and planets, of nebulæ and starry systems, is a statement that for a time may unite those who hold it, but will in time become a bar to union and fellowship. In no spirit of antagonism, then, but with an earnest desire to co-operate in all the newly opening ways of human fellowship and mutual service, we may patiently wait for the better bond of union and fellowship that is surely coming. So many things have been put aside and forgotten before the thought of union was possible, that we can afford to wait a little longer until the process is complete.

A Merger of Boston Baptists

The problem of unifying work in fields that overlap each other in denominational circles has been solved in a conspicuous instance in the union described herein by the Congregationalist and Christian World. The Clarendon Street Church is associated with the ministry of Dr. A. J. Gordon.

No better piece of team work on the part of Boston Baptists has been begun in a half century than that upon which sixty-two churches in the metropolitan district have just put their seal of approval. It contemplates the union of the Clarendon Street Church and the Bowdoin Square Tabernacle in a new edifice in the South End section, and a union of the First Baptist Church on Commonwealth avenue and the Warren Avenue Church at the edifice of the former, with the establishment of a Sunday evening evangelistic service near Symphony Hall, to be conducted by Dr. Herbert S. Johnson, for which a fund of $40,000 is already available. The work at Bowdoin Square, the center of a district teeming with a foreign population, would be carried on as a mission. The Seamen's Bethel, it is suggested, shall be related to a strong church such as Tremont Temple, and in the Roxbury district, in the course of the next five or ten years, union should be effected between the Ruggles Street and Dudley Street Churches. Here, then, is a bold and statemanlike plan affecting six historic churches and one or two missions, which together comprise the bulk of the Baptist strength in the city. The number of churches would be practically cut in two in the course of a decade, but their continuance on a strong basis and their wider usefulness are to be thereby guaranteed, while no section of the city, to which they have been ministering, is to be left without adequate provision from the Baptist point of view.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—SILAS JONES, IDA WITHERS HARRISON, ORVIS F. JORDAN, ELLIS B. BARNES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy, 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

Our Christian Journey

The narrowness of the Christian is that of life and growth. The living plant selects its food from the material about it. It does not accept anything and everything its roots and leaves happen to touch. The dead has no power of self-direction. It is subject to the play of forces without it. The Christian, like the plant, is discriminating in the use of his material. He grows by the use of what he finds in his environment. He has an aim and he selects for his spiritual food what will build the sort of character he has chosen as his ideal.

The narrow way proves in the end to be very broad. The way to discover what is worth while is to do something that is worth while. It is not so much what we do as the manner in which we do it. The farmer who devotes himself to farming until he knows what success in that occupation is, understands the feeling of all who succeed in their chosen occupations. By attention to the place which his calling holds in relation to the work of other men, he will be able to appreciate the value and dignity of all kinds of labor. One who attemps to be farmer, lawyer, preacher, doctor, and politician will never do anything as it ought to be done, and consequently his judgment of the worth of men and of their labor will be faulty.

The Christian man is interested in all sorts and conditions of men. Every variety of experience demands his attention. He tries to look the world in the face. If there is sin in the world he sees it and he endeavors to act according to the requirements of a situation in which sin has a place. He acknowledges that pain and sorrow are a part of human experience. Restraints imposed upon man by the material world are recognized. In fairyland we may disregard mechanical and biological laws. The Christian lives where mechanical laws operate and must be obeyed. Sin, pain, sorrow, and the material world are interpreted by him in accordance with the mind of Christ.

The narrowness which consists in ignoring facts and denying the value of elements of experience which the great majority of men have found valuable, obscures the issue between religion and irreligion. When the preacher of religion belittles the achievements of science, he invites a contest which is unnecessary and which will result to the disadvantage of the faith he thinks he is defending. To discourage the study of physiology and hygiene on the ground that disease has no physical basis is a good way to convince the critics of religion that faith is superstition. The denial that evil exists is, to the man of common sense, evidence of an unbalanced mind rather than of superior wisdom. His experience is such that he cannot deny the sin of his own soul. If our theory does not fit his explanation of his experiences, we must be careful not to deny the experience when we offer to substitute for his explanation a better one.

It has been said, and there may be now living those who still say it, that the virtues of the heathen are splendid vices, that the good in the non-Christian religions is of the devil, who uses seeming good to deceive men and thus retain his hold upon them. Men have thought they had to deny all value to the actions of the unconverted in order that the power of Christ might be magnified. Nowadays, this view is not a part of the working theory of the church. It was a corollary of the doctrine of total depravity and it has gone the way of that doctrine. The Christian distinguishes between sin and goodness; he does not call goodness sin merely because it appears in unexpected places or in connection with beliefs which seem to be antagonistic to Christian faith.

Our recognition of goodness wherever it is found must not be taken to mean that we are willing to let the world go on its way without instruction from us respecting what goodness is and how God, the source of all goodness, may be found. As Christians we are bound by the strongest ties of fidelity and honor to defend and teach the Christian view of life and duty. We do not admit that all ideas of God are of equal worth nor that salvation can be obtained by one religion as well as by another. For us there is one way of salvation and in it we hope to see all the nations walking. The grace and truth which we have seen in Christ are needed by all men. We are glad that many whose knowledge of God and of his mercy is less than ours have characters worthy of admiration. This is all the more reason why we should assist them to greater knowledge. [Midweek Service, June 26. Matt. 7:13-14; John 16: 1-15.] S. J.

A Noble Memorial

It is six years since there passed into the larger life the greatest figure which the educational world of this generation has known—William Rainey Harper. A scholar of rare distinction, a teacher of untiring and contagious enthusiasm, an executive of astonishing resourcefulness, and most of all a Christian gentleman of rare and princely character, Dr. Harper's death struck the great circle of his acquaintance and fellowship with astonishment and dismay. To those who had known and loved him it did not seem possible that he could share the fate of common men and yield to death's approach. Long after he knew beyond a question that his days were numbered, those who were of the group of his nearest friends still hoped that his great will might defeat the oncoming enemy. And when he died it was as if the shadow had fallen, and the most inspiring voice of the generation was hushed.

It was natural that when the shock of surprise and grief had spent its force, and his comrades were able to take up, though with weaker force, the burden he had carried long and nobly, there should be raised the question of a fitting monument to so profoundly significant a personality. Of course the University of Chicago was itself his monument. Upon any one of its buildings might have been inscribed the words that run around the dome of St. Paul's in honor of Christopher Wren its architect, "Si quaeris monumentum sui, circumspice," for surely any one who looks about the Quadrangles of this magnificent seat of culture beholds the memorial of its builder. Yet the desire to enshrine his memory in some fitting edifice was irresistible. For this purpose the gifts of his colleagues, students and friends poured in at the mere mention of the purpose. Two years ago the million dollars which the trustees of the university deemed the suitable amount to be used for this purpose was secured. The founder of the university contributed a large proportion of this fund, but those who had companionship in the giving were a great company. Nor was it a point of question as to what form the memorial should take. No building could more appropriately interpret the spirit of Dr. Harper than a library. It was right that he who had been ever the teacher of the Word, whether of human wisdom or divine inspiration, should find his lasting monument in a building dedicated to the preservation of the Word.

And so the stately edifice rose from month to month along the southern border of the university grounds. It was in June two years ago that the corner stone was laid, and last week the keys were delivered into the keeping of the director of libraries. The building is a magnificent structure, preserving the best traditions of the gothic style, in which all of the university buildings have been planned. In addition to its many offices and rooms for seminar and study there is the main reading room, a spacious and high ceiling apartment, beautifully lighted by the great windows which form the chief architectural features on the north and south sides of the building. Here and in the stack rooms will be housed that already very large and constantly increasing collection of books which now forms, with the Newberry, Crerar and Public Libraries, an essential part of one of the most elaborate and carefully planned aggregations of books possessed by any city in the world. When to this stataement there is added a reference to the admirable collections possessed by the other institutions of education like Northwestern University, Chicago Theological Seminary, McCormick, Western, the Lutheran and other Divinity Schools, it is easy to see that the careful planning and close co-operation of these many book collections furnish in Chicago a magnificent body of literature for specialized and research work in almost every field.

The Harper Memorial Library as It Appeared Just Before Completion.

In outward aspect Harper Memorial Library is not less impressive than in its uniqueness and completeness of library facilities. It is flanked by tall towers at either end, each of which rises into four pinnacles surmounted by the appropriate gothic devices of the mitre and the castle. The south facade forms an impressive architectural elevation along the Midway Plaisance, while the northern portal opens into Harper Court, the three sides of which are formed by the Haskell Museum, the Library and the Law Building. Moreover these three structures are connected architecturally by cloisters on the level of their third floors, so that by passing through these "bridges of sighs," as the Venetian would call them, one can make the round of the three great library collections without leaving the shelter of the stone walls.

In looking at this great monument to a great spirit one feels that Dr. Harper has in some true sense come to his own. Here in the Gray City, near to the spot where for a few brief days the White City stood, lives the man who made possible the new features of educational progress, not only in the great central section of the nation but throughout the union. On this spot and in the hearts of thousands who felt the pulsations of his throbbing life he lives immortal.

> Immortal! Word that quickens mortal breath!
> It names him whom our hearts remember still,
> Our man of deeds, our father young in death,
> Master at last of even his mighty will.

The services by which this noble memorial was dedicated included appropriate utterances by Prof. Small for the university, Mr. Richberg for the alumni, Mr. Legler of the Chicago Public Library, Mr. Coolidge for the architects, and President Angell of the University of Michigan. The poem was read by Prof. Lewis, the author of the "Alma Mater" hymn. A great company of people gathered in Harper Court, in the perfect radiance of the June day, to do honor to the memory of the university's first president, and from the platform erected in front of the central portal of the Library in Harper Court it was easy to lift the eyes to the magnificent structure on which the name of the honored dead was sculptured, and whose every feature seemed to speak with eloquence of the imperishable value of his life.

> "His name is here. Even now
> The long light finds it on the scriptured wall
> While June is whispering a requiem
> Beneath the oak trees. Ah, she wonders there
> That brows should be so pale beneath the locks
> Death could not silver. But his heart is here!
> No box of bronze, no precious relic-case
> Can hold the heart of him in little room.
> This is his reliquary, this, too small.
> If here we house but dust, then here he lies
> Splendid in still companionship of dust.
> As in Sheol the glimmering kings of old
> Rose to receive their peer when he stood there
> Become as one of them, and he lay down
> Companioned largely in that oldest gloom
> A king with kings, weak silence crowning all,
> So rests he with the best we had, the kings,
> Whose pale sway holds us when we know it not."

And so enshrined afresh in this impressive mausoleum which holds not merely his ashes but the memories of his potent life and the symbols of his power as student, author, teacher and inspirer of the race, he reposes in the abiding love and reverence of those who knew him and felt the touch of his great personality. In what high enterprises of the larger life he now uses the powers of which he was so prodigal while here we cannot know. But surely unemployed he could not long remain. In the thought of such a life as his the hope of immortality becomes increasingly convincing. Surely there would be some tragic error of wastage in the universe

if death could quench the fires of such a soul. Like One greater than all others, death could not keep dominion over such a life. And so he lives, not only as a member of that "choir invisible, who live again in minds made better by their presence, and whose music is the gladness of the world," but also in the high employments of the life eternal, where all the values of the brief and unperfected efforts made in time are wrought into the imperishable strand of the eternities.

"Hebraic-minded in Teutonic frame,
Great toiler, builder great, and greater friend,
Creative hope, aspiring like a flame,
Wielder of power to power's most noble end,
Live! live in us, brave spirit, teaching still
The broader vision and the braver act.
And in that valley of the staff and rod,
Teach us the hero's will,
Who smiles from lips by human anguish racked
And dies firm trusting in a loving God."

Editorial Table Talk

Fighting a Brutal Fight

Attention is urgently called to the effort which is being made to force through congress a measure which will minimize the evils of the prize-fight, and which in actual practice will do much to discourage the staging of such exhibitions. It will be recalled that two years ago on the Fourth of July a prize-fight for the "world's championship" took place between a white man and a Negro. That was practically at the time of the real beginning of the "sane Fourth" movement. Yet never in all our history was a more vicious mode of "celebration" followed. Thousands of men from every part of the country went to see that exhibition. Hundreds of thousands of people eagerly waited for reports of the contest. In the months which followed, millions of patrons of motion-picture theaters in many sections of the country were treated to views of that brutal event. There are many fathers and mothers, good Christian men and women, who would under no circumstances witness such a match, much less allow their children to attend a prize-fight. But if the children patronized motion-picture theaters two years ago they could scarcely have failed to see that match—see it in all its degrading reality after they had been forced to see the descriptions of it in its details in the newspapers. Those parents would not have permitted their children to go to that match, but they did allow promoters to bring the match to the children. Another prize-fight for the same title is to take place between a Negro and a white man on July 4, next. It is scarcely possible that the fight can be prevented. Thousands will probably again attend the duel. But it is possible to prevent the fight from being brought to us—and to our children. A bill has been presented in congress which makes it "unlawful to send or receive, by mail, railway, express, water service, or in any other manner, from any state, territory, or the District of Columbia to any other state, territory, or the District of Columbia, or to bring into this country from any foreign country, any film or other pictorial representation of any prize fight or encounter of pugilists, under whatever name, or any record or account of betting on the same." Any person violating the provisions of this may be punished by imprisonment for not exceeding one year or a fine of not exceeding $1,000 at the discretion of the court. It will take a strong pull, a united pull, to pass the measure, and popular action must be prompt. Petitions to representatives favoring the measure should be sent at once. For the sake of common decency, for the sake of the children in our homes, and in order to discourage this desecration of the day which commemorates the beginning of our national freedom, let us do all in our power to bring about the passage of the measure now.

"All There is to Practice"

A shaft of light is thrown upon the complacent thought system of Dr. J. H. Garrison by a single sentence used in his "Easy Chair" report of the Men and Religion Conservation Congress held in New York recently. Describing the continent-wide movement as a massing of Christian forces for the wider interests of the kingdom without reference to denominational interests, Dr. Garrison says, "This eight months' campaign was 'practicing Christian union', that is, all there is at present to practice, and that is a great deal."

If a Methodist or Baptist had spoken the words which we have put in italics they would have had little significance except as indicating how much work those who plead for Christian unity have yet to do. But coming from a Disciple of Christ they are highly significant—and ominous.

Such words register a lapse from our original position to the position of a denomination among denominations. The inter-denominational ideal has been substituted for the *un*denominational ideal. These inter-denominational enterprises like Men and Religion, Dr. Garrison says, are as much of Christian union as we can hope to practice now. At some remote future time, perhaps, we may be able to practice more of Christian union, but not now.

How sharply this style of thinking contrasts with the thought system of Thomas Campbell! With him and with the Disciples in their earlier period the regnant conception was the insight that Christian unity can be practiced now, and it was their purpose to practice it. They could not tolerate a complacent partial practice of Christian unity. The one distinguishing note of the Disciples' message has been the prophetic announcement that Christian unity was possible now to every Christian soul and to every Christian church that wished to practice it. This message was a lonely voice in a wilderness of sectarian indifference. The inert church responded in words not unlike those used by Dr. Garrison. Such words from him give occasion to wonder whether Dr. Garrison's strenuous advocacy of Federation, and his association with imposing looking "Commissions" on Christian unity have caused him to abandon the essential Disciple plea. Has our leader been disillusionized?

—That usually lucid writer, William Durban, recently expressed himself in criticism of the movement for the practice of Christian union. A very peculiar twist in his thought was revealed. He argued for what he calls "close membership" as follows: "I believe that there is a heavenly wisdom in the appointment of bounds that may not be broken; in the organization of communities that are not of the world though in it; in the refuge provided for penitent, weary, devout spirits by the creation of Christian churches from which the vain and godless world is excluded. The church of Christ must not make its boundaries coterminous with those of the world." What man of straw can Mr. Durban be thrusting at? To all that he says in that vein every advocate of Christian unity will agree. It has not come to our attention that any one desired to break down the wall between the church and the world. Such unity would certainly not be Christian. The contention of those Disciples who take seriously their plea for Christian unity is that all walls of division between members of the Church of Christ ought to be broken down; and that all walls of division which separate some churches of Christ from other churches of Christ ought to be broken down. It is singular how many irrelevant issues are raised in the discussion of the simple thesis that a church of Christ ought to extend the hand of fellowship to any person whom Christ has already received into his fellowship.

—Rev. A. B. Jones, of Liberty, Mo., one of the youngest minded of the older men among Disciples, was honored by William Jewell College at its recent commencement with the degree of Doctor of Divinity. In conferring the degree President Greene spoke of Mr. Jones' long, studious and eventful life as a minister of the gospel, of his work as an author and writer, and of his achievements in the realm of Christian character. For many years retired from active work in the ministry, Dr. Jones' personality still retains the glow and glory of the old days of Proctor and Longan with whom he was intimately associated in the deeds and discussions of the classic period of Missouri's Disciple history. That the institution choosing thus to honor him should be located in the same community in which Dr. Jones resides shows that the appreciation in which he is held is due not only to his public life but to that gracious and vigorous quality of character which even neighborly intimacy cannot discount. And for this he is now receiving the congratulations of all who know him.

—Dr. J. M. Buckley, whose retirement from the editorship of the New York Christian Advocate is the most important event in religious journalism the past year, was always prominent as a debater on the floor of the quadrennial conferences of the Methodist denomination. In reporting the Chicago conference some years ago a facetious newspaper writer said that "Dr. Buckley was in session at the Auditorium"!

—Judging from the fury with which the Christian Standard rages it is apparent that the detection of its purpose to suppress a portion of the Gilliland address is somewhat disconcerting.

Hypocrisy, a Universal Fault

"He Began to Say Unto His Disciples First of All, Beware Ye of the Leaven of the Pharisees, Which Is Hypocrisy." Luke 12:1.

BY G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

Human nature is full of contradictions. The same man is conscious of love and of hatred. In the same personality the most remarkable courage, and the most amazing cowardice co-exist. The same individual experiences in his own life the force of virtue and of vice. How men hate hypocrisy, and yet how much there is of it in the world! And all this is as true of the saint as of the sinner, using those words as we commonly use them. It is to be noticed that the words of my text were addressed by our Lord to his disciples "first of all." That is the introductory emphasis. He was speaking in an atmosphere of hostile criticism. The Pharisees had been opposing him. They had manifested their hypocrisy in the most remarkable manner, and he turned to his disciples, and said to them first of all, in the presence of this manifestation on the part of the Pharisees, "Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy."

Stirred His Anger.

That hypocrisy is hateful, we are all agreed. That it is a subtle peril threatening even the friends of Jesus, is evident from the fact of this explicit warning. That it is one of the most prolific sources of the destruction of human life, is evident from the fact that it constantly stirred the anger of the Lord, and called for his severest condemnation. Speaking generally, I should be prepared to declare that the only occasions upon which words that burned and scorched fell from the lips of Christ, were the occasions when he stood in the presence of hypocrisy. He was never angry with a sinner overtaken in some vulgar and venal form of sin; but hypocrisy stirred his anger to its very depths. There must be a reason for this.

Divesting our minds of all prejudice, let us attempt to understand the nature of the peril against which our Lord warned his disciples upon this particular occasion, and against which his anger so often manifested itself; and let us do so by a threefold inquiry. First, what is hypocrisy? Secondly, why are men hypocrites? Finally, what is the issue of hypocrisy?

Playing a Part.

When we ask our first question, the answer is perfectly simple in certain ways. Hypocrisy is the playing of a part in which the player has no real part; or in other words, it is acting under an assumed character. That is hypocrisy.

But let me immediately say, that the calling of an actor is in itself absolutely and entirely legitimate. The actor is an interpreter, an interpreter of literature; and therefore an interpreter of human life, as human life is represented in literature. The good actor will help men to understand Hamlet, as the ordinary man cannot understand Hamlet by reading the page.

The condition of good acting is threefold. The actor who would interpret King Lear to an audience, must first entirely forget himself. Self-abnegation is the fundamental qualification for good acting. He must, in the second place, understand King Lear. He must in the third place, abandon himself with passion and energy to the expression of King Lear. That is true in all acting. The actor is not King Lear, but he must forget that he is himself, and imagine he is King Lear. This man is not King Lear, but he must take time to understand him; his frenzy, his agony, his madness. He must get into the very spirit of King Lear, and then he must let himself go.

Now follow me. In serious and actual life there is a difference. Hypocrisy is the misuse of that art. Hypocrisy is the acting of a part with intent to deceive; and the difference between acting which is legitimate, and hypocrisy, is the difference between interpretation and misinterpretation.

Two Kinds of Hypocrisy.

Now let us approach our inquiry from another standpoint. What is hypocrisy in the sense of the text? It might be dealt with in very many ways, but in this hour, I shall confine myself to two forms in which hypocrisy is manifested today. There is the hypocrisy that imitates goodness. There is the hypocrisy that imitates badness.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan.

There is the hypocrisy that imitates goodness. I think I need not tarry with it long. Alas! we are all familiar with the man who is attempting to make other men believe that he is good, while in very deed he is bad; the evil man who adopts the pose of goodness, observes the habits of goodness. He speaks the language of goodness; and yet at the center of his being, there is the desire for evil. In hours that are secluded and safe from human observation, he indulges in the secret practice of evil, and in the deepest fact of personality the spirit of the man is evil in itself. The man is evil; he practices evil; he desires evil; but before his fellowmen he hides these essential things of his being.

As to Badness.

But there is another form of hypocrisy. There is the hypocrisy that acts badness. In this case, I begin by speaking of the man himself. In the heart of the man that I have in mind is a sincere desire after goodness. Indeed, he will secretly practice deeds of goodness, and the tone and temper and spirit of the man in the profoundest fact of his humanity, approximates with desire toward goodness; but he acts before men as though he were evil. His speech is the speech of evil, the very habits of his life are the habits of evil, the attitude that he maintains is the attitude of evil. He affects to laugh at religion, in spite of that underlying desire after goodness, that profound and deep wish in his heart for the highest; he is always attempting to make men believe that he has no sympathy with these things, that he is given to evil, and that he loves evil. That is hypocrisy as certainly and as undoubtedly as is the other.

But while these attitudes are equally perilous, the influence of the man who while desiring goodness affects badness, is more terrible upon other men than the influence of the man who being evil, pretends to be good.

Why Hypocrites?

From that I turn immediately to the second question, so closely related to it. Why are men hypocrites? I shall give the first answer, in order that I may lead to the second which is the profounder one. The surface answer is this: The inspiration of hypocrisy is the fear of man. That is always the reason for it. Find me a man who is imitating goodness and attempting to make men believe that he is good; the real meaning of his action is that he is seeking the approval of man, and underneath that search for the approval of man lies something meaner yet, even more wicked.

But now let us go a little more deeply into this matter. I meet young men constantly who are hypocrites in this respect. In the deepest of them, which sometimes you touch in a moment unexpected to themselves, there is an admiration, a desire for goodness; and yet they masquerade in the mask of wickedness. Why? There is only one answer, the fear of man which brings a snare. They are afraid to confess goodness because they fear the scoff of humanity, afraid to confess to the underlying desire for goodness, because they fear loss of some kind in relationship with their fellowmen. This is of the essence of cowardice.

Fear Man.

But now let us go a little more deeply into this matter. Why does a man fear a man? There is but one answer, and if Solomon gave us the first declaration in his proverb when he said, "The fear of man bringeth a snare," then David in one of his psalms gave us the profounder answer when he said: "There is no fear of God before his eyes." Why is a man afraid of man? Because he does not fear God.

Or else, and perhaps this is but the other side of the same truth, the hypocrite is defying his government. Hypocrisy in the last analysis is sin against God, and sin against humanity. Hypocrisy is a sin that breaks Christ's first commandment, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." Hypocrisy consequently is a sin that violates his second commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Why are men hypocrites? Because they forget God, and are therefore afraid of their fellowmen.

The Issue.

Finally, what is the issue of hypocrisy? The answer is found in the text, and in its context. The answer is in the actual words of warning, "Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees which is hypocrisy." Our Lord did not merely say, "Beware of hypocrisy, which belongs to the Pharisees," but "Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy." Leaven transforms secretly, silently, surely, all that it touches, until it changes it into its own nature.

And therefore, as a sequence from which there can be no escape, not only is the issue of hypocrisy this leavening of the life; it

(Continued on page 15.)

THE HIGH CALLING

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS."

Copyright 1911, George H. Doran Co.

CHAPTER IX.—Continued.

"You say in your letter to your mother that you feel the bottom has dropped out of everything. Why? Because a stranger to you who has some reputation as a public speaker has made some statements which destroy your faith in religion.

"Do you think that is a very sensible thing for you to do—to let a man you have never seen before come along and in one address take from you the faith of years? Would you let a man you didn't know destroy your faith in your mother so quickly? Would you simply take his word for it, because he said so?

"You must remember, Walter, that some of the finest theologians and scholars in the world believe in and teach the miracles and a personal God and a personal divine Christ and a personal resurrection. I don't mean old fashioned scholars, but men who are up to date, who rank with the best in the thinking world. If Dr. Powers does not believe in the resurrection there are other men, better scholars than he is, who do. You have no right to let one man's statements be final for you.

"You say again that you don't see what is the use of being good, and you ask if it pays to be religious, citing the example of the fast set in Burrton, who, you say, seem to be pretty happy, and free from anxiety about others, etc. Walter, do you know that is the most terrible thing that can be said about a human creature? That he is satisfied like an animal with an animal's appetite and passions, and careless of anyone else or of the world's moral needs? The flies that buzz over a battlefield have the same indifference for the agony and struggle going on under them. And would you even now while under the depression you describe, really care to risk your life by becoming like the men in the fast set? Don't you know that they are sowing the wind to reap the whirlwind?

"The main facts of life always remain the same. We may learn more about the facts, but we can't change the real nature and needs of mankind by any belief or absence of belief. Even if there were no God and no future and no miracles and no Jesus of history, sin would be sin and its harvest the same; goodness and right and virtue would always be the same and their harvest the same. But men can not live without God without living in hopeless despair. Walter, what did Christ come into the world for, if not to do for us the very things we really needed and were dying to get? He revealed God to us. Made the future plain. Showed man his duty to his neighbor. Brought light and life and joy into the world. The Christmas season we have enjoyed together ought to show you (and it will when this cloud has gone from your heart) that the world owes more to Jesus Christ than to any other being. The best conditions in the world are found where Christ has been most honored and his teachings best obeyed. The wrongs of the world are being righted in his name. And the kingdom of God is taking the place of the kingdoms of physical might.

"All this, your father and mother believe, could not be true if Jesus were a mere man. It is the presence of the divine and superhuman, not supernatural, but superhuman, which has made all this redemption of the world possible.

"Walter, trust in God. Believe in Christ. Pray. Seek the light. Keep doing right. Get to work for others. All the inventions in creation are not worth anything if your own soul has no motive power and no track to run on. Religion is as natural as eating and drinking. Prayer is as natural as sleep or work. And I believe with all my might that my feelings are as trustworthy as my reason when both are exercised in a healthy, happy way.

"I haven't any fear for you. It is too bad you can not get help from some of the teachers in the school. There must be something wrong with the management of an educational institution when the teachers know everything except the moral needs of the students.

"Can't your friend, Bauer, help you? You say you have never talked with him. Try it. From one or two talks I had with him while he was with us I gained the impression that he was deeply religious. Affectionately, your father,

"Paul Douglas."

Both of these letters reached Walter about the same time and he read and reread them and received vast help from them, more than he himself knew at the time. But he could not throw off the feeling of depression and fear that seemed to haunt his spirit. He longed to talk the thing over with someone and the day after his father's letter came, he resolved to take Bauer into his confidence. He had never talked with him on any serious questions except when Bauer had confided in him about his home troubles, and the occasions were rare and only occurred at times when Bauer was so tortured with lonesomeness that he could not endure it any longer and fled to Walter as he did that night in the shop, when he first appealed to him for his friendship.

They had gone up to Walter's room together, and had just finished a discussion over Bauer's incubator and the arrangement for the thermostat when Walter said suddenly:

"Felix, I can't talk this stuff any longer. I want to take up something else, if you don't mind. Of course, you've noticed I've not been up to the mark lately, haven't you?"

"Yes." Bauer blushed as he said it. He had noted Walter's condition, but if truth be told his own state of hopeless feeling towards Helen had absorbed him to such an extent that he had not paid the attention to Walter's feelings that he otherwise might. No one quite so egotistic as your hopeless lover. The world of Bauer revolved around the star of Helen, and the rest of the universe, including Walter, was for the time being not counted as there. With Walter's trouble now made more apparent to him, Bauer's mind at once waked up and stood ready alert to listen to him.

I might as well confess that Dr. Powers' address two weeks ago knocked the props out from under me. What he said cut under me like a great engine that destroyed my faith."

"You mean your faith in God?" asked Bauer, in a tone almost of horror.

"Well, no, not that exactly. I don't think anyone could reason me out of a belief in God. But when Dr. Powers got through I felt as if all the God he believed in was a kind of electrical force, a little bigger unit of amperes. A sort of international ampere, so to speak, but not much more."

"Do you mean that you can't say 'Our Father' any more?"

Walter was silent half a minute. When he looked up at Bauer his face was haggard.

"I haven't prayed any since that address. What is the use of prayer if God is a machine?"

"But if God is a machine, who made the machine?"

Walter stared. Bauer went on.

"And if God is only high power electricity or force, who made the high power or force? One machine can't make another. And a machine that really thinks and plans, is not a machine but a Being."

Walter did not answer. He was brooding. Finally he said: "Do you really believe in miracles and the superhuman and the resurrection and future and—and a Personal Redeemer and all that?"

"Do I?" Bauer did a thing Walter had never seen him do before. He got up and began to walk the floor.

"If I didn't believe in a Personal God who loves me and in a Personal Redeemer who saves me and in a future life which is going to develop me, I might as well be just an animal and be done with it. What advantage have we over the animals if there is nothing to it but flesh and blood and eating and drinking and dying?

"But I simply take my stand on what Jesus did and said and was. I don't go back on that and try to philosophize much, though I can give answers all day long for my religious faith. I wouldn't give anything for it if I couldn't reason it out. I've been through all the books—Kant and Hegel and Straus and Feuerbach and Schopenhauer and Schleiermacher and no end. My father was steeped in all the old world philosophies. I don't think they ever helped him any. At least not to make a better man of him. Why, Walter, do you know your father and mother are the products of Christian faith, and there isn't anything finer in all the world. Where would you go to find a human being who was nearer the perfection of all noble, unselfish, beautiful traits of character than your mother, who is the product of a simple Christian faith?

"My father and mother have always sneered at simple faith. They are sceptics. What has their scepticism ever done for them? Today they are both——" Bauer choked, and after a long pause, during which Walter looked at him sympathetically, he said quietly:

"I had to have something different from their Godless scheme of life or I believe I would have gone mad. And, thank the Father, I found it. If I hadn't I'd been worse than the fastest of the fast set here. I wouldn't have stopped short of the vilest. I would have been a crowned head of beastliness. And nothing saved me from it but Jesus Christ. Could a man have done that? Could anyone have done it who didn't believe in a future and a spiritual life?"

Bauer came back to his chair and sat down. Walter seemed much impressed by what he said and the way he said it. At last he remarked thoughtfully:

"You never told me anything of this before. I never understood you felt so, or had such a faith."

"No, I've kept my light under a bushel. But man's religion is the most sacred thing about him. Why don't we talk more about it? I don't know unless with me it's been an excess of sensitiveness."

"I understand and thank you, Felix," said Walter after another long silence.

During the days that followed he had many more talks with Bauer, all of which did him vast good. Bauer, once he had opened the door of his soul, threw away all reserve and invited Walter into the very holy of holies.

They also had plenty of argument. But Walter was no match for the German student, who in his long hours of solitary existence, had managed to do an astonishing quantity of reading and posted himself on all sorts of difficult subjects with the German habit of exactness and thoroughness in matters of detail, so that he soon had Walter hopelessly beaten when it came to debate over religion and its office.

Finally Walter began slowly to regain his buoyancy and before the spring vacation he had found a standing place for his faith and a reason for his religion, so much so that he said to Bauer one Sunday evening after they had come up to the room after hearing Mr. Harris at the church: "Felix, I almost believe I could be a preacher. I believe I almost have a message."

Bauer was immensely pleased.

"You are going to come out all right. You couldn't help it with such a mother."

And yet, strange as it may seem, at that very moment Walter's mother was passing through a crisis that was testing her Christian faith even more severely than Walter's had been tested. There could be no doubt at all but that Esther's pure and steadfast soul would win the victory; but oh, the heartache of sorrowing motherhood! Will it ever cease?

Louis Douglas had been for several months a source of anxiety to both Paul and Esther. As winter wore on he complained more and more of school. One evening he broke out in such a torrent of appeal to his father to let him give up his studies that Paul compelled himself to think of the boy as his first duty and reproaching himself that he had paid little heed to him on account of political matters, he listened to Louis that evening and in a pause of his flood of words asked the boy to come into the library and have it out seriously.

The legislature was in session and Douglas was overwhelmed with committee work, with shaping up bills, and winning converts to his ideas of reform. He had anticipated opposition and difficulties of various sorts, but the actual thing that confronted him was so much greater than he had supposed possible that he almost let go at one time, in disgust, and vowed he would never enter politics again. Next day he was back in the game to stay. But from the beginning to the end of the legislative session he was blocked in nearly every effort he made for clean, honest reform of old, corrupt and selfish party devices. In his soul he knew, and those who knew him knew, that he was heart and soul for the good of the people. The measures he wanted put into law had no possible self-seeking in them. He was clean and upright in every detail of his private and public life, yet he faced every day facts like these:

The other paper in Milton contained columns of abuse, or misrepresentation and of downright charges of self-seeking against him. Man after man in the party that had asked him to run for Senator came to him to beg him to desist from his fight on corporations that broke the laws and charged the people prohibitive prices for the necessities of life. Party worshipers like the Hon. Mr. Maxwell besieged the committee room pleading for harmony, meaning by "harmony," a slavish compromise with the greed and influence of money and power that might help the party if they were let alone. Letters flooded him from all parts of the state begging him or threatening him to leave well alone. Some of the very men who had, during the election campaign, promised to stay with him and help push his bills, lied outright, broke their promises and called him a deserter and a party traitor. Old friends who had stood by him for years, left him and in some cases became his bitterest enemies. Bill after bill framed with only one great-hearted purpose to benefit all the people went through the grinding process of detraction, of villification, of amendment and final defeat. A little handful of members rallied around him. But the greed forces of the entire state were on the other side. The selfish corporations, the highwaymen of commerce, the whiskey powers fighting for their lives to maintain the license system of the state, the gang of thugs that lived on the gambling house and the barter in human blood in the sale of virtue and the degradation of boys and girls, all fought him. The newspapers that print liquor and other questionable advertisements, the miscroscopic men who made a living by appointment to little political dirty jobs, the horde of hungry office seekers who didn't know "America" from the latest vaudeville ragtime, the plunderers of the treasury who live without any visible means or support except what they boldly stole from contracts on public works, the princely robbers who are the crowned heads of special privilege, whose wives and daughters figure in the society columns as leaders in those useful callings of bridge whist and select receptions, the great and ignorant mob of pygmies who never had the capacity for a political idea bigger than their own diminutive measurement, the newspaper and magazine hacks who live on abuse of everybody who has a high ideal, all joined in the whoop and chase after Douglas of the fourth district, branded him as a fakir, an idiot, a senseless dreamer, an egotist, a demagogue, a party traitor, a knocker, and every other objectionable kind of disturber of the peace, meaning by "peace," the peace of those who are let alone by reformers to rob the state, degrade politics, enthrone injustice, keep the party in power and re-elect themselves.

And this is the kind of thing the preacher urges his high spirited young men to confront if they go into public careers. Do you think American politics could be made more attractive to the strong men of this nation if some of the abuse and personal sewer methods were eliminated? Do you think all this gutter spattering is necessary to reach conclusions and arrive at a final better condition for the nation's life? Do you think that even if discussion and defence of opinion are necessary in the settlement of great public affairs, it is also in order to question a man's purity of purpose, his patriotism and his personal devotion to a great ideal?

Paul's whole nature was stirred by what he was going through and his absorption in the matters nearest his heart was so complete that it was with no ordinary shock he came to realise that his own son was in a critical condition. As a father he reproached himself for neglecting the boy under the plea of trying to reform the state. And when he began to question Louis that night he rapidly noted the lad's physical condition and took account of his manner which, the more he studied it, was not at all reassuring.

"Tell me, now, Louis, what you want. Begin at the beginning and hide nothing."

Louis looked sullenly at his father.

"You haven't time to listen to me. You never have."

"Yes, I have. I'll take it." Paul felt more self-reproach every minute he eyed Louis. And as he looked at him he could not help thinking of how much the boy resembled in many ways Esther's brother Louis, who used to give him such concern.

"Well, father, I want to quit High School. I don't like it. I hate it."

"Why? Tell me honestly now. I can't help you unless you give me the real facts."

"I don't like the teachers. They nag me. I hate them."

"Hate them? You mean all of your teachers?"

"Well, most of them. They criticise me and make fun of me. Miss Barrows showed what I wrote about tuberculosis to every other teacher in the school."

"Go on," said Paul, after a pause.

"I can't get the English. I don't understand the long definitions. I am not cut out for a scholar."

"Have you tried?"

"Yes, I have. But the harder I try, the worse it is."

"What lessons are you carrying?"

"English, algebra, physics, manual training, German and chemistry."

"Tell me now," said Paul, good-naturedly, "which one of these studies you hate the least."

Louis laughed. "I don't like any studies."

"But which one would you choose first if you couldn't help yourself?"

"Manual training."

"What do you do in that?"

"Oh, I plane and saw and glue up boards and make things."

"What things?"

Louis hesitated. "You'll laugh."

"No, I won't." Paul felt more like crying than laughing as Louis eyed him doubtfully.

"Great God!" he felt like saying to himself. "Here I have been so busy with everybody else's affairs that my own son is afraid of me."

"Well, I finished a writing desk the other day. I was going to give it to mother for her birthday. I brought it home last night."

"A writing desk! Let me see it."

"It's in my room," Louis said with some hesitation.

"I want to see it," said Paul. He rose to go up stairs and had got as far as the hall when the telephone rang.

"Go on. I'll come as soon as I answer this," Paul said, and Louis hurried up stairs as if he wanted to get there some time before his father.

The man at the other end of the telephone wire was an angry committeeman at the State House.

"I say," he exclaimed in a strident voice that clanged into the receiver like a personal insult. "When are you coming down? We've been waiting here over an hour."

Paul made a lightning decision and answered. "I can't come down tonight. I have a very important engagement elsewhere."

(To be continued.)

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison.

Mrs. Harrison will be glad to receive communications from any of her readers offering suggestions concerning woman's welfare, criticisms of articles or inquiries concerning any matters relevant to her department. She should be addressed directly at 530 Elm Tree Lane, Lexington, Ky.

SHAKESPEARE AND THE BIBLE

I. THE FULNESS OF TIME.

[This article is the first of a short but very interesting series prepared by Ida Withers Harrison on "Shakespeare and the Bible."]

Those of us who believe with Hamlet that "there is a divinity that shapes our ends," believe also that God is in the majestic course of all religion, history and social progress in our race.

In our teaching of the advent of the Lord Jesus Christ, we claim that the greatest event in the world's history came in its perfect and appointed time. The chosen nation, after the long discipline that its stubbornness and wilfulness made necessary, was at last grounded in its worship of the one true God. The dispersion of the Jews made in every city of note a nucleus of Jehovah worshippers, whose presence was a protest against idolatry and heathenism. False religions were crumbling and men were longing for something better to satisfy their immortal souls, than man-made gods, and fantastic philosophers. It was a time of peace in a world given over to war—a time when the new gospel could be spoken and writen to the known world in one universal tongue, the Greek, when the travelers of Jesus Christ could have the protection of the law of one universal government, the Roman. And did not Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles, which means the apostle to the world, claim that he came by divine will, when he wrote, "the good pleasure of God separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace."

The student of history, who goes to it with ripe culture and a reverent heart, can find the man, the movement, and the hour matching each other with a perfection that bespeaks a wise and controlling hand. And I have faith to believe that great voices sound their messages in their fulness of time—voices in literature, as well as in history and social progress. It certainly seems that with Shakespeare's writing the bright consummate flower of English literature was planted and burst into its rare and beautiful bloom in the very fulness of time.

Greene, the historian, says of the times of Shakespeare, "that the sphere of human interest was widened at this time as never before or since, by the revelation of a new heaven, and a new earth."

A New Heaven and Earth.

The Protestant Reformation was hardly forty years old when Shakespeare was born. It opened the word of God to the world, that word that for centuries had been literally buried in dead languages, in Hebrew and Greek and Latin, and accessible only to scholars and churchmen. When Tyndale translated the New Testament into English in 1526, we read "that groups met here and there to read in a great book of heresy all one night, certain chapters of the Evangelists in English." This opening of the word of God to all broke the authority of pope and cardinal, by showing that every man could have direct access to his Saviour and his heavenly Father, without following the tortuous road of intercession through priest, and saint, and Virgin. This new heaven of spirit and thought was accompanied by a new vision of the material universe for it was only in the latter part of the sixteenth century that the discoveries of Coperincus were brought home to the general intelligence of the world by Kepler and Galileo.

There was literally a new world, for Shakespeare was born but seventy years after Columbus weighed anchor on the shores of the West Indies. He lived in the days when that daring seaman, Francis Drake, first sailed around the globe, when Raleigh and Cortez brought news of strange lands and stranger peoples—when dreamland ceased to be dreamland, and no marvel or adventure that befell lady or knight was stranger than the tales weather beaten mariners from unknown seas were telling every day to merchants on the streets.

New Birth of Nationalism.

To these large and world wide sources of poetic fervor was added a new birth of nationalism, almost worthy to be called patriotism, when patriotism was almost an unknown virtue. The "spacious days of great Elizabeth" witnessed a growth of the nation in stability and power; its culminating event happened in Shakespeare's young manhood in the victory over the Armada, which brought not only deliverance from Spain, but the rolling away of the Catholic terror, which had hung like a cloud over the people since the dark days of Bloody Mary.

New Birth of Literature.

Added to these, or as a result of these favoring circumstances, there was a new birth of literature in the days of the Virgin Queen. Since the time of Chaucer, two hundred years before, no voice had spoken in the English tongue worthy of note; the world of thought was untrodden forest, full of unknown paths upon which the new poets could enter—all was fresh and full of enchantment. And they found an audience hungry for their messages. Before this, the dominant figures in English history had been statesmen and warriors, but these were now dwarfed by the greater figures of poets and philosophers. A nobler presence than Cecil in Elizabeth's antechamber was the singer, Edmund Spencer, who laid his Faerie Queen at her feet—a greater than Walsingham was the young philosopher, Bacon, musing over the problems of his Novum Organum.

And this native English literature was enriched by the choicest new-found treasures of the literature of other lands; before the end of the century, the greatest historians and poets of Greece and Rome, as well as the great Italian writers were translated into English. Chapman's version of Homer was printed at this time—that version which opened a new world to Keats long after and he wrote on first reading it,

"Then felt I like some watcher of the skies
When a new planet swims into his ken,
Or like stout Cortez, when with eagle eyes
He stared at the Pacific—and his men
Looked at each other with a wild surmise,
Silent, upon a peak in Darien."

Doubtless Shakespeare, who like Keats, knew small Latin and less Greek felt like him, when this classic world of gods and heroes was opened to him in this splendid translation.

The Rise of the Drama.

But the distinctive literature of the Elizabethan age was not to be poetry like Sidney's and Spencer's, or philosophy like Bacon's, or ecclesiastical polity like Hooker's, it was to enter a new and distinctive arena of its own.

What the essay was to the world of the eighteenth century, what the novel and the daily paper are to the men of our day, the drama was to the times of Elizabeth and James; there were no newspapers, no magazines, no prose fiction—the drama was the only form of intellectual recreation; there they learned history, they found criticism, they heard comments on current events. The queen was its splendid patron; when she took those journeys among her subjects of which she was so fond, her progress from country castle to country castle was celebrated by a succession of plays and interludes. How vividly Scott has painted the pageants the Earl of Leicester arranged when she visited him at Kenilworth.

But while royalty and nobles and scholars patronized the stage, yet it was the people who created the drama. The theater was often the courtyard of an inn, or a mere booth, such as is still seen at country fairs.. Much of the audience sat under the open sky—a few covered seats in the galleries, which ran around, formed the boxes for wealthier spectators, while the nobility sat upon the actual stage. Rude as it was, all the world was there. It was not until the middle of the queen's reign, about 1580, that a public theater was erected—before its close, in 1604, eighteen playhouses existed in London alone.

It seemed inevitable that at this time writers of this new and favored literature should appear; so we find in the interval between the beginnings of English drama, and the closing of the theaters by the Puritans, about a half century, fully fifty dramatic poets—a number of them of the first rank. It was the very fulness of time when the one peerless and unapproachable figure in English drama and verse should make his entrance on the stage of life.

All things combined to make his message complete; the new national consciousness found utterance in his splendid series of historical plays; the opening of the literatures of other lands doubtless inspired his French, Italian, Greek and Roman dramas; and the discovery of new worlds and new peoples exalted his conception of man beyond racial and sectional lines, and gave that touch of universality to his characters that makes them kin to the whole world, and to all times.

I. W. H.

Sanitary Apartments for the Poor

About three years ago Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Sr., decided that one of the best ways to fight the spread of the white plague would be the erection of sanitary homes for the poor. Therefore, she selected a site on the East River, New York, taking in most of the space between East Seventy-seventh and East Seventy-eighth Streets, and had plans drawn for a type of apartment building that may well serve as a model for the world. The buildings are now completed and are said to be beyond criticism from a hygienic or any other point of view.

The entire roof space of the structures is given over to gardens and playgrounds, covered and uncovered, and loggias where tenants may enjoy the sunshine and fresh air at all times. Access to the roofs is obtained by means of the open-air stairways which adjoin every suite of rooms. The stairways make each apartment a unit communicating with the others only through the open air, and thus the dark, ill-ventilated, disease-breeding interior halls of the ordinary tenement building are eliminated. The staircases are protected from rain and snow by glass louvers, which project from each story.

The apartments are in suites of three and four rooms; two bedrooms, a kitchen and bathroom being rented as one suite, or three bedrooms, a kitchen and bathroom. The rooms rent for from one dollar and twenty-five cents to two dollars a week per room, so that a family small enough to live comfortable in two bedrooms and a kitchen would pay three dollars and seventy-five cents per week.

The electric lighting, as well as the heat and water, is included in the rent, the only additional charge being for the gas used in cooking. Meals will be served at cost in a special restaurant.—Popular Mechanics.

Woman's Doings

—The Senate has voted to give Mrs. Schley's present income is only about $420 a per month pension. It is said that Mrs. Schly's present income is only about $420 a year.

—Mrs. Ellen Spencer Musey, dean of the Washington College of Law, has the distinction of being the only woman law school dean in the world. She further is famous for her knowledge of law, and for her work for the uplifting of the conditions of women and children. She framed the Musey act, which, in the District of Columbia, gives mothers equal rights over minor children with the fathers, and gives married women the right to control the money they themselves earn.

—The estate of Mrs. Caroline W. Astor, widow of William Astor, and long the leader of New York society, amounted to little more than $100,000, according to the final accounting of surviving executors filed in the supreme court of New York. Col. John Jacob Astor was one of the executors.

—Seventy-two widows, sixty-three of whom lost their husbands in the Titanic disaster, have already received or will soon receive nearly one-half of the $150,000 fund raised by the Red Cross emergency relief committee at New York. A Miss Flood lost nine relatives on the sinking ship.

—Maud Ballington Booth says she cannot explain why there are comparatively so few women in prisons, not being able to decide whether it is due to the high character of the women, or the presence of men on the juries. The last-named reason is easily the explanation of the small number of women in the jails and penitentiaries of the land. Men juries positively will not convict women murderers.

—Miss Abby S. Mayhew, for eighteen years director of physical training for women at the University of Wisconsin, has accepted a similar post in the Chinese republic, the work being conducted by the Young Women's Christian Association. Miss Mayhew is going out under the auspices of the National Christian Association of the United States.

—The Russian duma has adopted a bill permitting women to practice law.

Church Life

Work has begun on the new building at Kearney, Neb.

Property has been purchased and plans adopted for the erection of a $25,000 church at Red Oak, Ia.

George W. Holden has resigned his work at Clinton, Ky., and will take work in Transylvania University this fall.

The little son of J. H. Bryan, State Sunday-school Superintendent of Missouri, was drowned at Galena, Mo., June 11.

The Sunday-schools of Pikes Peak region, Colorado, held their annual convention at Third Church, Colorado Springs, June 18-20.

Carey E. Morgan, pastor of Vine Street Church, is preaching a profitable and practical series of sermons on "Problems of Everyday Life."

The Northeastern Iowa District Convention came to a close at Waterloo, June 7, and was followed by the state Sunday-school convention.

J. A. Lytell, formerly pastor at California, Pa., and at one time district evangelist of Illinois, has accepted a call to First Church, New Castle, Pa.

Special services at Central Church, Huntington, Ind., celebrated the completion of four years' ministry there by the pastor, Elmer Ward Cole.

W. H. Applegate completed a year's work as pastor of the Goldfield Church and moved with his family to Braymer, Mo., to undertake the work there.

Two men's classes at Decatur are studying and discussing social problems instead of the usual lessons. They are those at Central Christian Church and First Methodist.

First Church, Seattle, has extended a call to Loren Fisher, who recently resigned from First Church, New York, to continue the work which he had undertaken temporarily.

Commencement week at Keuka College, Keuka Park, N. Y., began June 18, and will continue until the twenty-fifth. Joseph A. Serena delivered the baccalaureate sermon and Z. T. Sweeney the commencement address.

Russell Thrapp has completed six months of very successful work at First Church, Los Angeles, Cal. One hundred and thirty-two people have been added at regular services. The home offering wil reach $650 and the foreign, $1,450.

R. S. Robertson resigns the pastorate at Humboldt, Neb., removing to Dode City, Fla., where he has bought a home. During the eighteen months of Mr. Robertson's work a $10,000 church has been built and the work is in excellent shape.

The church at Liberty, Mo., Robert Graham Frank, pastor, will co-operate with twenty other churches or parties, agreeing to pay $100 each to liquidate the deficit of $2,000 in the state missionary work. Already more than half the sum has been pledged.

Bruce Brown, pastor at Fullerton, Calif., is supplying the pulpit of Wilshire Boulevard Church, Los Angeles, during his vacation. This is the church of which W. C. Bower was recently pastor. Its Sunday-school recently passed the 200 mark. S. J. Chapman is the superintendent.

After many years of talking and planning the church at Cedar Rapids, Ia., has at last adopted plans for a new house of worship which it hopes to have completed by June, 1913. The house will be one of the first in that city of beautiful churches. The congregation is vigorous and resourceful, and the pastor, Walter M. White, is an aggressive and competent leader.

A reception to the new members was recently held by the church at Creston, Iowa. The occasion afforded a good opportunity for the membership to become acquainted with twenty-six new members recently received into the fellowship of the church. The various departments of the church are in a flourishing condition. The prospect for aggresive work is bright. O. W. Winter is the pastor.

Since J. E. Davis began his leadership of Central Church, Spokane, 48 persons have been added to the membership. Mr. Davis says that "Mr. Russell Morrison, brother of the editor of The Christian Century is the choir director and is doing valuable service. He has organized a chorus of about seventy-five voices in the Christian churches of the city and on the Lord's Day evening preceding July 4 will render a patriotic recital."

Missouri preachers of the Sixth District are to get together for a heart-to-heart study of their local and co-operative problems July 9 and 10, at Shelbina. This conference was planned at the recent convention at Clarence. Their "retreat" plan follows that of the Seventh (Mo.) District, where the sessions at the Camden Point College during vacation have proved very helpful. The officers of the Sixth District "Retreat" are: W. A. Shullenberger, Mexico, President; W. G. Alcorn, Monroe City, Vice-president; B. H. Cleaver, Shelbina, Secretary and Treasurer.

There is an increased gain for Children's Day for Foreign Missions. During the first twelve days of June the Sunday-schools sent $15,909, a gain over the corresponding time last year of $6,364. This is really a great gain. It is hoped this increase will continue and we believe it will. The Sunday-schools seem to be taking more interest than in former years. Reports of great enthusiasm come from every quarter. The number of schools sending offerings during the first twelve days of June is 784, or a gain over the corresponding time last year of 213. This is most encouraging. The secretaries are hoping for 4,000 contributing schools this year and $100,000 before September 30. Last year the Sunday-schools gave $83,041. If they keep up at their present rate, the $100,000 is assured.

James Norvel Crutcher, of Neosho, Mo., recently submitted seven questions to the business and professional men of the community. 1. Must a man deceive in order to succeed in business? 2. Are the principles which underlie the present business life opposed to the teachings of Jesus? 3. Can a man succeed in business on the basis of the golden rule? 4 Can ministers of the gospel help in the solution of problems created by social unrest? 5. Why do not more business and professional men take an interest in the work of the church? Do you think it is because they hesitate to apply rules of absolute honesty and personal righteousness to themselves? 6. How may we make the work and services of the church more attractive to men? 7. Is a man hindered in business by the fact of his Christian life? The Neosho Ad Club attended the service in a body when these questions and answers were considered and the big auditorium was crowded.

Young men of First Church, Louisvile, Ky., have formed an Efficiency Class which devotes its attention to study of social problems. Col. Henry L. Stone, general counsel of the Louisville and Nashville R. R., recently addressed them on "The Railroad Companies' Views of Intemperance."

Tolbert F. Weaver, of Houston, Tex., has closed his work as executive secretary of the Men and Religion Forward Movement there and has entered the evangelistic field. He recently closed an excellent meeting at Almeda, Texas, and then organized a congregation with twenty-five members. A. F. Sanderson assisted.

The Des Moines Sunday-school institute closed its year's session with two very able lecturers, one being Dean Shailer Mathews, of the University of Chicago, and the other being J. P. Rowlison, of Tiffin, Iowa. The address of Dean Mathews dealt with methods of Bible study, and Mr. Rowlison gave one of the most polished and scholarly presentations of Jesus as a teacher, illustrated with Bible readings, that has ever been heard in this city. His time should be kept fully employed by the teacher training classes and men's brotherhoods throughout the country. The enrollment of the Des Moines Sunday-school Institute for the year was 235, with an average attendance of 180 each Monday evening. This enrollment came from 41 Sunday-schools, representing 12 denominations. The second annual session will open October 14.

New York Convention at Keuka Park

The New York state convention at Keuka Park, N.Y., June 25-28, has provided the following program.

Tuesday, June 25—

The Type of Preaching Our Churches Need —Harry N. Green, Dunkirk.

The Message Demanded by This Age—Fred M. Gordon, Brooklyn.

The Preparation the Preacher Needs for This Age—L. N. D. Wells, East Orange, N. J.

Commencement of Keuka College.

Address by Hon. Z. T. Sweeney, New York.

Wednesday—

"The Challenge of the City"—Dr. E. A. Long.

Address by representative of A. C. M. S.

Address—Arthur Braden, Syracuse.

Address—C. A. Brady, Rochester.

Address, "The Problem of the City Missionary Society in the Metropolis"—Jos. Keevil, Brooklyn.

Address, "Missions in India"—C. E. Benlehr, Damoh, India.

Convention sermon—J. M. Philputt, New York.

Thursday—

Book study, "Teacher Training Course"—D. C. Tremaine, Williamsville.

Address—R. H. Miller, Buffalo.

Address—Robert Hopkins, Cincinnati, O.

Session of the C. W. B. M.

Session of the Brotherhood.

Brotherhood address by H. A. Denton, Troy.

Friday—

"Christian Endeavor the Open Door of Opportunity"—F. J. M. Appleman, Upper Troy.

"Christian Endeavor Needs"—C. H. Plopper, Buffalo.

"Christian Endeavor Efficiency"—F. A. Higgins, Tonawanda.

"Efficiency of Officers"—D. H. Bradbury, Syracuse.

"Efficiency of Committees"—Walter A. Hopkins, Gloversville.

"Efficiency of C. E. in Social Service"—D. R. Matthews, Rochester.

"Efficiency of C. E. as a Factor Towards Christian Union"—C. W. Clark, Watertown.

"Let Us Build"G. W. Muckley, Kansas City, Mo.

"The Country Church and Its Problems"—G. A. Miller, Washington, D. C.

"The Spirit of the Convention"—B. S. Ferrall, Buffalo.

Commencement at the Colleges

COTNER.

Forty-four diplomas and certificates were granted by Cotner University, Bethany, Neb., at its recent commencement. Charles A. Finch, pastor of First Church of Topeka, Kas., was commencement orator. Chancellor Oeschger speaks of him as "the Henry Ward Beecher of Cotner alumni." Cotner closed its year with all bills paid and a small sum in the treasury, this for the first time in its history. The heroic struggle of this school to maintain itself makes one of the romantic pages of American college history. It seems now that its adequate support by Nebraska Disciples should be forthcoming. Large plans for increased endowment and equipment are now being projected.

OKLAHOMA CHRISTIAN.

Commencement exercises at Oklahoma Christian University were held June 2 to 6. The baccalaureate sermon was preached by Walter Scott Priest, pastor of the Central Church, Wichita, Kas. The commencement address was delivered by J. H. O. Smith of First Church, Oklahoma City. On Thursday afternoon, June 6, a mass meeting was held in the university auditorium. The meeting was attended by students, alumni and friends of the university. The attendance of business men of Enid at this meeting was especially gratifying. President Zollars in an address showed what had been accomplished during the five years of the school's history, and set forth possibilities and prospects. Briefly stated, the school during its five years has built a faculty of twenty members and a student body of 350. The college has a well equipped plant worth $150,000, $25,000 of productive permanent endowment, and a temporary endowment that is paying about $4,000 per year. Degrees have been conferred as follows: Master of Arts, 10; Bachelor of Arts, 38. Diplomas have been granted in the department of Fine Arts, 32; Business, 65; High School, 13; besides special diplomas, 17. The total number of graduates is 205. Many business men spoke enthusiastically and hopefully of the future of the school. The alumni announced their purpose to endow a chair to be named the "Zollars Chair," in honor of the president. The board of trustees hopes to increase the permanent endowment $100,000 by June, 1913, and add $100,000 more by June, 1915.

HIRAM.

Hiram College Commencement, June 8-12, marked the close of a year that in several respects has been a notable one. The enrolment of regular college students has never been so large. While the outgoing class of twenty is smaller than in some previous years, there is a marked increase in the lower classes. Next year's class will more than double that of this year; while the regular college classes have doubled in five years. A notable action of the year has been the discontinuance of the preparatory classes. There has been a small falling off from that cause but much less than was expected. There has been marked gain in efficiency. Next year the college abandons the three term system for the semester system.

President Bates' baccalaureate sermon on Sunday on "The World's Need and its Challenge to College Men and Women," was a powerful plea for service. In the afternoon eleven young men were set apart for the Christian ministry in a beautiful tender service conducted by J. E. Pounds, minister of Hiram church. Some of those ordained will eventually enter the foreign field. The following are the men ordained: F. S. Burns, Marion J. Bradshaw, Harvey C. Bream, Ralph D. Fifield, Louis P. Clark, J. A. Long, Benj. F. Leach, Charles J. Pardee, Dana S. MacDonald, Paul Stevenson and Hiram N. Van Voorhis. The commencement address on Tuesday was delivered by Prof. Graham Taylor, of Chicago Commons, on "The New Patriotism Demanded of College Graduates." Dr. Taylor stirred men's souls as few speakers ever heard at Hiram.

What was, in some respects, the climax of the week came Wednesday with the "Eclectic Home-Comnig." Hiram College was organized in 1850 as "The Western Reserve Eclectic Institute." For seventeen years it did not aspire to college functions. This was the period of Sutton, Hayden, Garfield and Almeda A. Booth. It was a period of remarkable development. Of the thousands who in the Eclectic period studied at Hiram, the names and addresses of over seven hundred are known. They belong to nearly every state of the Union. They are men and women from sixty-five to eighty-five years of age. One hundred and ten of these boys and girls of the "old guard" gathered on Wednesday. Of the teachers of that early period—Hayden, Munnell, Dunshee, Everest, Rhodes, Hinsdale, Atwater—not one made a deeper or more lasting mark than Miss Almeda A. Booth. Hon. Virgil P. Kline of Cleveland, delivered an eloquent and appreciative address on her life and services. At the banquet following the morning address it was ascertained that representatives were present from all the seventeen "Eclectic" years. They came from as far south as Tennessee and as far west as Iowa, and Kansas. A movement was inaugurated looking toward a suitable memorial for Miss Booth.

Illinois

Third Church, Danville, received seven additions to its membership on a recent Sunday. The pastor is S. S. Jones.

During the last two Sundays in May, there were seven additions at Kankakee Church, where W. O. Livingstone is pastor.

Sunday, May 26, there were three additions to Pittwood church, where S. H. Kuntz is pastor. All three additions were by confession.

Evangelist J. E. Stout held a revival meeting at Chancey, where there were ten additions, with a re-organization of the church and a pastor secured.

The high school commencement address at Waynesville, was delivered by Robert Sickles, pastor of Illiopolis church. Mr. Sickles had been heard in Waynesville on a previous occasion, and both times his message was received with great satisfaction.

B. L. Wray, an employee of the Home Society, as an evangelist, assisted W. T. King, pastor at Lomax, in the ordination of W. H. Cross. Mr. Cross graduated last week from Eureka College, and is already in the employ of the church at Lewiston.

Havana Church has recently re-modeled and beautified its edifice and the re-dedication service was in charge of Evangelist George L. Snively. More than enough money was raised to meet all requirements and during the day there were ten additions on profession of faith. The pastor here is Ralph V. Callaway, who is proving himself a man of power with this congregation.

The address on "Twenty-five Years of Religious Life in Bloomington, Ill.," prepared by J. H. Gilliland, has been put into tasty book form by the four churches in Bloomington which he had served. It will be recalled that the address was finished a few hours prior to a stroke of paralysis which fell upon its author, inhibiting his reading it at the seventy-fifth anniversary of First Church, for which occasion it was prepared.

E. A. Gilliland, who has been supplying temporarily the pulpit of Normal Church, has been called to become its permanent pastor, to succeed his brother, J. H. Gilliland. Mr. Gilliland was formerly pastor of Lincoln Church, and for several months following his resignation there was in the evangelistic field, during which time he held several most successful meetings. Normal church is fortunate in being able to induce him to take up the work of his stricken brother, and there will be no question regarding the successful termination of the task to which the former minister's hand was set.

E. T. McFarland was loaned by the Rock Island Church of which he is pastor, for a missionary meeting, which was held at Rapid City in the same county. The meeting resulted in seventeen additions, all but four being on profession of faith. This is an old congregation with more than fifty years of history. Up to the beginning of the meeting there had been no preaching serviees for considerable time, and the church had practically ceased to exist, with the exception of a Ladies Aid Society and the Sunday-school. It is hoped by the impetus given from the meeting that a pastor will be employed and the work take on new life.

First Church, Springfield, Dedication

First Church, Springfield, is about to enter into occupancy of its great new building. The structure is complete, after more than a year's labor in its erection, and will be dedicated Sunday, June 23. In connection with the dedication there will be services lasting through an entire week, being concluded June 30.

The Disciples' brotherhood has few if any more imposing edifices. From an architectural standpoint it is not excelled. Any city in America would be graced by such a noble pile. The Gothic design has been followed to the minutest details. The new sanctuary induces reverence and worship and will be a source of inspiration to those who gather there.

On dedication Sunday F. M. Rains, of Cincinnati, will be in charge of the services. The dedication will take place in the evening, the dedicatory prayer being offered by the pastor, F. W. Burnham. In the afternoon a union communion service will be held with Judge Charles P. Kane presiding. Monday evening will be given over to history and reminiscences. Tuesday will be Church Felowship Day, with addresses and greetings from various pastors and churches. On Wednesday evening a Disciples' Camp Fire, participated in by local and central Illinois Disciple churches. Thursday, Woman's Day. Friday evening, dedication of the organ, and a recital by Clarence Eddy of New York. On Saturday evening will be held a reception for the men of the church, with a dinner for all workmen who have participated in the construction of the building, followed by a musical program for these men and their families.

A very cordial invitation is extended to all friends of First Church to enjoy the pleasures of dedication day and the exercises of the week following.

Chicago

C. C. Morrison preached for Linwood Boulevard Church, Kansas City, June 9, while the pastor, Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, preached the baccalaureate sermon at Eureka College.

Pastor George H. Brown, of Austin Church, declined the call extended him by Taylorville Church. Mr. Brown's people strongly urged him to do so. Under his leadership the church is making encouraging progress.

The final ministers' meeting of the season was addressed last week by Dr. H. L. Willett who told of his plans for the Mission Study Travel Class which he is to conduct through the oriental mission fields next fall and winter. The class sails from San Francisco, September 7.

Monroe Street Church had "A Gala Evening" last week in the interest of Chicago missions. The evening opened with a dinner in the church parlors and ended with an entertainment in the auditorium. The event was successful in every way. C. C. Morrison has been supplying the vacant pulpit there recently.

The sorry scandal caused by the disruption of the church at Waukegan, twenty miles north of Chicago, and the subsequent contest in the courts for the church property, seems happily in a fair way to be wiped out. The suit has been withdrawn and the two congregations are exchanging courtesies by proffering and accepting invitations for occasional joint meetings for worship in each other's buildings. It is hoped by all who have at heart the interests of the cause of Christ that these two groups may be brought into one family again. Waukegan church was one of the most vigorous Disciple churches in this vicinity a dozen years ago. It has been reduced to two hands full. The ministers, E. E. Faris and A. L. Cole, both of them studying in the University of Chicago, are prayerfully working to cultivate a Christian feeling on the part of their respective congregations.

Secretary's Letter.

H. F. Kern has accepted a call to remain with the Belle Plain Church, in Marshall County. The work is in good condition.

J. E. Cresmer, of Lanark, writes us that he will close his work there August 1, and expects to leave the state. We are sorry to lose him.

Some Illinois church has a chance to get an excellent man for pastor—J. W. Robbins, 9 Rose street, Swampscott, Mass. He was formerly an Illinois man.

Only sixty-eight Illinois churches sent their May offerings to the Home Society during the month of May. Many are holding off in the hope of increasing the amount by collecting pledges, and that is alright. But push it along and send it in soon as convenient. We hope at least 350 churches will respond liberally to the home mission call, remembering all the time that one-half the money comes back to Illinois. If any church wishes to eliminate the November offering it can do so by the "double up" plan for the May offering, that is, equal to the home and state offerings combined.

Gilbert Jones of Lovington held a meeting at Johnston City with twenty-eight additions including a number of substantial men. A new board of officers was elected and Bro. J. J. Hudson was employed as their minister.

I must remind you again of the statistical report of your church. If it has not been done please fill out the card we sent you and mail it at once. This is very urgent.

L. H. Hooe, who recently took the work at Augusta, is well pleased with his new field and the work is in a prosperous condition.

Geo. H. Brown has decided to remain with the Austin Church, where he is doing a splendid work.

H. H. Jenner, of Long Point, was elected secretary of the Fourth District. It is understood that the Streator mission will continue to be supported this year, and also some help will be given the Third Church (colored), Bloomington.

W. D. Deweese, Office Sec'y-Treas.
J. Fred Jones, Field Secretary.
Bloomington, Ill.

Hypocrisy, a Universal Fault

(Continued from page 9.)

is also the revelation of the evil. What was the next thing that Jesus said? "There is nothing covered up that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known." That is the inevitable sequence. We may act in order to deceive men for a while, but presently, inevitably, surely, irrevocably, the fact will be manifest; and if the inner fact was badness, and you acted goodness, the principle of your action will be manifest, and that badness will be manifested; and if the inner fact was goodness, and you acted the lie of badness, the principle of your action will destroy the inner fact of your goodness, and that also will be manifested. The issue of hypocrisy is manifested ruin.

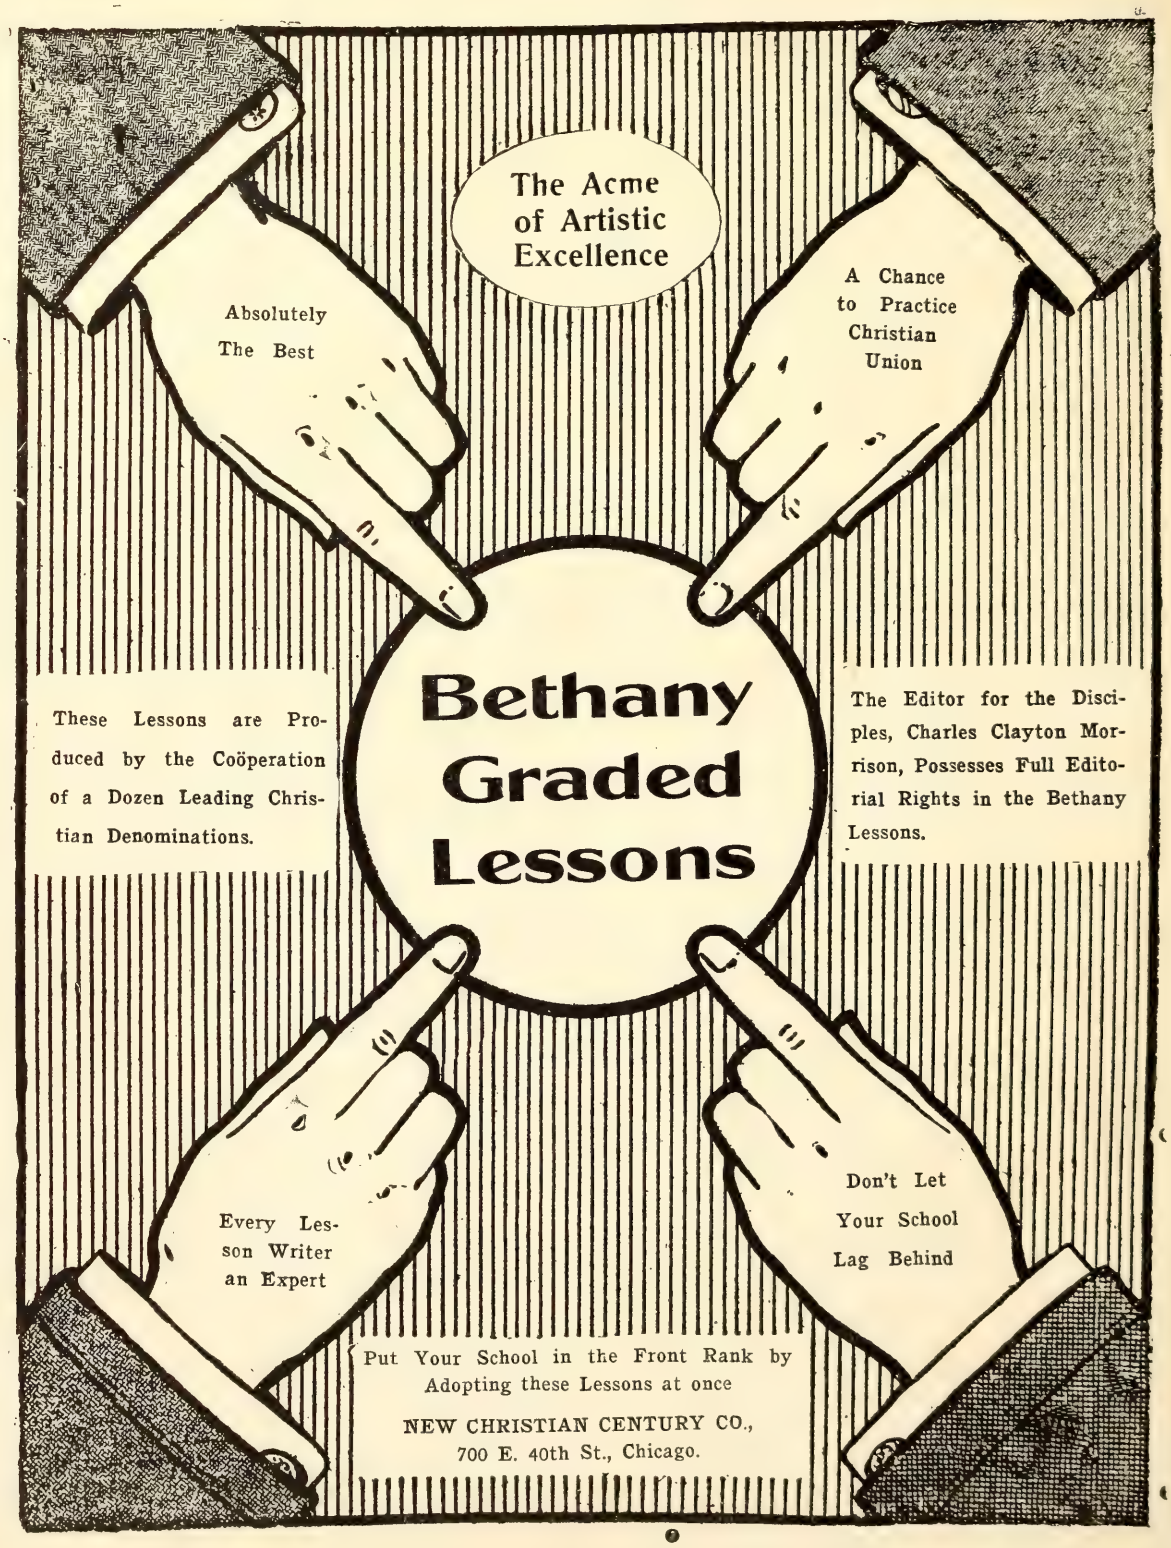
Argue the Other Way.

There may be some who, listening to this meditation on one of the most searching words that ever fell from the lips of our Lord, will say, Yes; we agree; we agree with the preacher. It is quite true that there are hypocrites in the Christian church; therefore, we will abandon all profession of goodness. Why not argue the other way, and say: There are so many people who desire to be good, and only act their badness, that we will abandon all badness? I have never heard anyone argue that way! Therefore, when a man tells me he is not going to be good because of someone who is not honest, he also is a hypocrite; for that is not the real reason of his badness.

What is the final argument? Oh there is but one argument for the human soul! It is not the argument of reason compelled, it is not the argument of emotion stirred. There is but one final argument; it is the argument of the Lord Christ himself! Behold the man who could say, "I am the truth." In him was no hypocrisy, no acting, no pretence; he was clear, transparent, simple, honest. In beholding him, learn the shame of hypocrisy.

He brings a man into such relationship with God, that his fear of his fellow man is cancelled, and he flings away the masks, and lives in right relationship with God. His cure for hypocrisy is simple, but it is complete.

If without sign or sound or confession made to men, we will follow him, then with our life related to God we shall have done with hypocrisy forever.



The Acme of Artistic Excellence
Absolutely The Best
A Chance to Practice Christian Union
Bethany Graded Lessons
These Lessons are Produced by the Coöperation of a Dozen Leading Christian Denominations.
The Editor for the Disciples, Charles Clayton Morrison, Possesses Full Editorial Rights in the Bethany Lessons.
Every Lesson Writer an Expert
Don't Let Your School Lag Behind
Put Your School in the Front Rank by Adopting these Lessons at once
NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.,
700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Vol. XXIX June 27, 1912 Number 26

THE HEATHEN INVASION OF AMERICA

BY JULIA HUMES

"TROUBLERS OF ISRAEL"

BY ELLIS B. BARNES

CONGREGATIONALISTS AND DISCIPLES DRAWING TOGETHER

REPORT OF JOINT COMMISSION CONFERENCE

CHICAGO

Topics of the Times

Chicago, with its awful conditions as far as the labor world is concerned, is being investigated by the federal government, and it certainly needs investigation, fumigation, and a few other things. Charles W. Ellis, special agent of the department of commerce and labor, is at present in the city, making an inquiry into certain lines of work. A number of other agents will follow him. The clothing industry in Chicago, one of the predominating manufacturing lines, will be the object of one investigation, it is said. The probe will cover all of the main industries in Chicago and surrounding territory. Conditions at West Pullman, in the Pullman car works, the steel industry at Gary, Ind., and the lumber affairs in this district are among the special affairs that are to undergo careful research as far as labor is concerned. The furniture manufacturing industry is also included in the list. Investigations sometimes bring results. Chicago is certainly in need of the results.

The noted old city of Baltimore is ready with smiling face to meet the hosts of democrats who are going to nominate a presidential candidate about June 25. The number of visitors is expected to run up toward 100,000, and the city is said to be spick and span ready for callers. Many of the streets leading from the convention hall to the railroad stations, have been repaved. The street railway company has laid special tracks and loops to handle the crowds, and ordered sixty new cars at a cost of $300,000. At night the stranger will have no difficulty finding his way to the convention hall. He need only gaze upward and follow any of the three great beams of light which will be focused on the Fifth Regiment Armory from three parts of the city. The appropriation for this special lighting is $15,000. The convention hall itself will be a blaze of lights, the ribs of the curving roof being outlined by 10,000 electric bulbs. The block of Bolton street leading to the main entrance of the hall, will be brilliant with a colonnade of electric lamps on pillars fifty feet apart. The portico of the city hall will be outlined with electric bulbs and some of the city's principal monuments will be treated in the same way. The hotel committee reports that none of the hotels has raised cafe rates, and that room rates will run as low as $1.50 a day. This sounds as though someone was "spoofing," to be English, or as they call it, "kidding" over here. It seems too good to be true.

There is no reason why the people of Illinois should not have plenty of meat to eat, for the state leads in the meat packing industry. The packers, however, are not in the business to feed people, but to get their hands on as much of the coin of the land as possible. There were 1,641 slaughtering and meat packing establishments in the United States when the latest census was taken. Recent statistics show that 108,716 persons were engaged in the industry, of whom 1,659 were proprietors and firm members, while the average number of wage-earners was 89,728. The capital invested amounted to $83,249,170. The expenses were $1,366,887,000, of which the officials received $4,915,326, and the wage-earners $51,644,730. The value of products was $1,370,568,101, while the value added by manufacture, the difference between cost of materials and the value of products, was $168,740,317. Illinois, with an average number of 26,705 wage-earners, with $45,618,899 in value added by manufacture, and $389,594,956 in value of products, was far ahead of the next state in rank.

The Playground and Recreation Association of America carried on a good work last year. According to its year book, new supervised playgrounds were opened in forty cities last year. Nineteen cities authorized bond issues for recreation grounds to the aggregate amount of $4,000,000. Donations of land, the value of which aggregated $118,000, were made in twelve cities. The year book estimates that $2,750,000 was expended last year for administration playgrounds. The popularity of these recreation spots is evidenced by the statement that in 1,460 playgrounds, the average daily attendance during the months of July and August, was 670,359. In some cities, the playgrounds were open in the evenings, and in forty-one of these, the average evening attendance was 32,495. Forty-six cities reported 218 schoolhouses used as recreation centers, and in forty-seven cities, organized efforts were made to promote public athletics through public school athletic associations or other school organizations.

At the convocation exercises at the University of Chicago the other day, in Harper court, 533 degrees were given. Fifty-three of the degrees were given to doctors, forty-three to masters, 282 to bachelors and 155 to associates and candidates for the two years' certificate of the college of education. The number of degrees was said to be the largest ever conferred at a convocation of the university. Secretary of the Treasury Franklin MacVeagh was the orator of the day.

The democratic house has refused to appropriate an additional sum for the preparation and mounting of skins collected by Colonel Roosevelt on his African hunting trip. Former Speaker Cannon sought to have the $250,000 appropriation for that purpose increased to $325,000. This was defeated.

There has been some reform as the result of the dreadful Titanic disaster, but whether rigid enough, it remains to be seen. Ocean steamships entering American ports in future, must be equipped with lifeboats sufficient to carry at one time every passenger and member of the crew, according to new regulations adopted by the steamboat inspection service and approved by Secretary Nagel. The act of congress appropriating $300,000 with which army transports are to be equipped with lifeboats and rafts, to accommodate all persons and members of the crew transported on them, has been signed by President Taft.

The outlook as regards Europe's participation in the San Francisco Exposition in 1915, is highly gratifying, says Chief Director Frederick J. V. Skiff, who is in Berlin conferring with the head of the German permanent exposition commission and other officials. "In all the countries I have visited," said Mr. Skiff, "I have found the interest in the exposition to be deep and widespread. In Berlin, as in London, Paris, and Vienna, I am bombarded with requests for information about the enterprise and with inquiries regarding floor space, transportation, and method of installing exhibits. In business circles in Berlin, it is said that Germany is practically certain to take part officially in the exposition in spite of the prevailing disinclination to participate in further enterprises of the kind.

The estimate that $1,000,000,000 worth of manufactures will be exported in the current fiscal year, made by the bureau of statistics, seems likely to be justified. The official figures show for the nine months ending with March, $730,000,000 worth of manufactures exported, these figures being $74,000,000 in excess of those for the corresponding period of the preceding year. As the exports of manufactures in the year ending June 30, 1911, were valued at $907,000,000, the figures at hand seem to clearly indicate that the total for the current year will pass the billion dollar line.

About People

—William T. Stead, the well-known journalist, who went down with the Titanic, left his estate valued at $65,000, to his widow. His writings he left to his oldest daughter, Estelle.

—George Wingfield, of Reno, friend and business associate of the late Senator George S. Nixon, has been appointed United States senator until the meeting of the Nevada legislature in January, 1913. At that time the legislature will elect a successor to complete the unexpired term extending until March, 1917. Mr. Wingfield is known as the "Napoleon of Nevada finance." He began his career in Oregon, where he employed himself at anything legitimate to make a living. His real career began when he arrived in Tonopah shortly before the big boom that made the Nevada gold mines famous. At the first glitter of gold in Goldfield, he became interested and judiciously invested in stocks.

—J. M. Putnam, of Oklahoma City, Okla., who tried to get the state legislature to remove the capital from Guthrie to Oklahoma City, told on the witness stand the other day how he lost $10,000,000 that he never had. Several years ago, Putnam came to Oklahoma City with $80. In a few days, he got an opportunity to make a cash payment of $80 on a lot. In a short time, he sold the lot at an advance. He repeated the operation, and kept on repeating until within six months, he had made several thousand dollars. Then he began to buy lots outright. He became a plunger. Next year he turned his attention to outside property. In 1910, Putnam owned thousands of acres northwest of Oklahoma City. He had for some time been agitating the removal of the capital from Guthrie to Oklahoma City. He proposed to locate the capital on a tract of land in the center of his holdings northwest of the city and then sell the lots around it. The legislature, which met in the fall of 1910, in Oklahoma City, refused to accept the Putnam site for the capital. So Putnam's land, which he valued at from $1,000 to $10,000 an acre, went back to the value that it bore when it was a farm.

—Thomas A. Edison has not made a gift of $2,500,000 to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology as reported. Mr. Edison is constantly besieged by people applying to him for donations to charitable and educational institutions. "People come to me and ask for $5,000 or $10,000 for this or that," said the electrical wizard. "I don't give it to them because I can use it better in experiments that are likely to work out something of great good for mankind."

—Prof. Frederick Starr, of the University of Chicago, has departed on a six months' expedition to West Africa. His party will carry facilities for extensive photography, with a regular camera, a stereoscopic camera, and a moving picture machine. Especial attention will be paid to native arts and industries, religions, and folk-lore. Coming out at the mouth of the St. Paul River, the coast towns of the America-Liberians will be visited. Professor Starr is a special commissioner of the Panama Exposition of 1915.

The Christian Century

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT . . . . . EDITORS

"Troublers of Israel"

ART THOU HE THAT TROUBLETH Israel?" was Ahab's petulant query of Elijah. "I am not he that troubleth Israel," was the bold prophet's reply, "but thou and thy father's house have troubled Israel." In the age-long struggle between righteousness and unrighteousness, between the people and privilege, between Ahab and Elijah, the king has laid the responsibility for the troubles of the times upon the shoulders of the prophet, and the prophet has laid them upon the shoulders of the king. The prophet knows that the king is corrupt, and hopes to cure the corruption by depriving him of his throne; the king proclaims the folly of the reformer, and hopes to cure it by depriving him of his head. The weapon of one is the sword; public opinion is the lever of the other. The battle between Ahab and Elijah is always joined; the weapons are always the same; the tragedies are the same; and the victories the same. Ahab dies; Elijah cannot die.

* * *

The troubler of Israel is ever a nuisance; there can be no question about that. All Elijahs must live in the wilderness and in a cave, of necessity. The reforming Elijah of today, as in every day, loses in companionships as he grows in boldness. The business men shun him, and soon find a pretext for an open break. The authorities from the pound-keeper to the king doom him to social extinction, and hand him over to the tender mercies of that modern guillotine, the cartoon. The regulars of every name and party hiss their hatred at him. The pickthanks of the town perform their little offices of spite in the interest of those whose dignity must be upheld. The prophet is persecuted in a thousand ways known only to small minds, while his persecutors kneel at the seats of the mighty to receive their reward. There is always an immense assortment of brickbats, clubs, anonymous letters, newspaper clippings drenched with billingsgate, at the mouth of Elijah's cave.

* * *

But the troubler is a very busy man. He turns peaceful seas into stormy billows; philosophic heads he makes to reel at the revelations of guilt; the smoothest path he sows with snares; he thwarts many lofty ambitions; he throws rude alarms into circles of polite complacencies and turns the light of investigation toward many hands that hoard ill-gotten gold. But the time is long before there is any popular uprising, any crying for justice. People laugh at the crazy prophet; the oldest settler remembers that his father had a whimsey in the brain.

But forward he goes in his work, keeping his conscience sensitive though the conscience of his age remains as placid as marble. While his soul is vexed at the wrongs, corrupt practices, the invasion of the people's rights, the community about him is indifferent and insensible to the evils. He is like a wave dashing itself against a rocky shore. To his charge that things are bad comes the reply that they have always been so. When he says they have been so too long, he is defied, cursed and then killed. Such is the story of every Elijah who makes of reform a serious business.

* * *

In politics, a little while ago, when a reformer appeared they called him a "mugwump," which was equal to a sentence of doom. But, in time, mugwumpery came to be a science, and many converts flocked to its schools. By one of the curious turns of fortune we have forgotten the rise of mugwumpery, hiding it out of sight under the nobler word "independence," as dear old Nature hides by her delicate tracery of green the unsightly stump that proclaims the despoiling hand of man. We have glorified the insurgent, natural successor to the mugwump, the sneered at, the despised, the butt of all the wits of a quarter of a century ago—and now the greatest force in the nation. That was one struggle in which Ahab left the throne for the cave, and Elijah left the cave and took his place on the throne.

* * *

Religion does not move as rapidly as politics, but it does move. Here the reformer is just as unwelcome, just as busy, and just as troublous as anywhere else. As in politics, we call him names and try to dispose of him in any manner short of actual violence that will not subject us to police interference. We preserve the habit of enrolling him with the dreamer and the heretic. He has even been classified by some of our officials with the parasites, but that was at a time when the prophet's efforts were bearing fruit, and Ahab's finances were in a bad way. Elijah is always troubling Israel and persisting in disturbing the ancient order.

Some day we may be ready to hear the voice of the prophet; some day we shall be more likely to follow his policies and ignore the policies of Ahab. Like the king we may be crying out against the intrusions of the prophet, and we may ask to be let alone. But the troublers continue with us. And they will, so long as the notion prevails that all questions of importance have been settled, that we have little to learn, that we must distrust the scholars, be suspicious of the growing literature of reform and conciliation, and like Mahomet burn the libraries of Alexandria because "if they contain whatever is in the Koran they are not needed; if they contain anything not in the Koran, they are infidel."

* * *

Elijah will compel us to ignore the shouting of sects when great issues are at stake, and to take counsel with the principles of science. And the truth we seek can be found at last only when we agree to follow the light of reason, acknowledging the limitations of the human understanding so that we must often walk by faith and not by sight, seeking for the things which will edify, cultivating at all times a high regard for other souls who differ from us, knowing what a tremendous part heredity and environment play in the life of all men, and, as a famous Jew recently said, developing a real brotherhood in life that will hold us together as men are held by the brotherhood of death.

This is to possess the spirit and power of Elijah.

E. B. B.

Social Survey

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN.

What the Liquor Traffic Is Doing For Us.

From many unbiased sources we hear the witness against the alcohol traffic in this country. Jane Addams indicts the saloon as being the mother of prostitution and says that as long as the saloon-keepers and brewers profit so greatly from the sale of liquor in these dives, they will desire to continue the unholy alliance.

Alcohol is breaking down the physical vitality of the American people. Dr. T. Alexander MacNicholl is authority for the statement that chronic diseases have doubled in this country in the past thirty years. The number of insane and feeble-minded has increased three times as fast as the population. During the past five years, the birth rate has fallen off in this country one-third.

Not only has the physician reason for being opposed to the use of alcoholic drinks but the economist as well. In recent years a method has been discovered for making beer from corn. It is stated on good authority that sixty per cent of all the corn raised is now consumed in the production of alcohol. The increase in the price of meat is doubtless due in considerable measure to the increased consumption of corn in the business of the brewer and distiller.

Fortunately while this increase is going on, successful efforts are being made in many parts of the country to control or to eliminate this waste. The largest no-license city in the world now is Rockford, Illinois, which with its fifty thousand inhabitants is without saloons again. The first week after no-license went into effect there were eleven arrests as compared with over forty the first week of the license regime two years ago. Much of the south has come under state or county prohibition.

In all these sections it is found that no-license laws can be enforced like any other laws when the community is sufficiently aroused to a sense of their importance. The Prohibitionists have kept up the agitation for forty years. That is well. The Anti-Saloon League, however, is the organization that actually gets the legislation. It is the latter organization that is most bitterly hated and opposed by the brewers. We accept their judgment of its importance.

The Automobile As a Social Problem

The popularization of a new invention is always an interesting process. This is usually done by making the article a fad as in the case of the bicycle which was once the hall-mark of aristocracy but is now the every-day conveyance of the artisan. The automobile, however, has been decidedly the most popular toy that has ever come to America.

Whether it is to be superseded after a while by the flying machine or some other sensation, is not yet to be prophesied. However, we have several distinct social problems arising from this American insanity over rapid locomotion. First of all, we must consider the economic effect of the enormous investments in this industry. We are not able to discover accurate statistics with regard to this, but knowing the price of automobiles, it is easy to conceive that the indulgence in this luxury has had a profound effect on the whole economic life of the American people. Homes have been mortgaged to buy the car and when it was worn out, the possessor has been known to end life with his own hand.

However, the most serious problem of the automobile is the rapid increase of speed accidents. The Chicago city council is now at work on new ordinances to protect the citizens. The machines driven in the city now are capable of speed as great as express trains achieved a generation ago. The express train ran on a track and we knew where to find it. It was controlled by a man educated for his job. The automobile driver, however, may either be a licensed chauffeur or a senseless joy-rider. In the latter case, women and children are run down on the streets, and perhaps the joy-rider himself plunges the car and its inmates into the river as happened in Chicago recently.

No man would want to oppose the application of new inventions to life but the toll of lives taken should not be larger than necessary. Personal freedom must be sacrificed for the social good and the law must compel care to be driven by responsible people who know the nature of the dangers they continually face.

The Unemployment Commission.

Last winter it was currently reported that there were, in Chicago, 125,000 men out of employment. The situation became serious enough for Mayor Harrison to appoint a commission headed by Professor Henderson to look into the whole question. That committee is now about to make a report to the mayor of their findings. They consider the matter of unemployment a social phenomenon that must be dealt with by a larger political unit than the city. They propose to abolish many functionaries now under state salary and combine them into one department. The next of the recommendations is as follows:

"We recommend to the governor and legislature the creation of a department of labor (or industrial commission), whose duty would be to enforce the laws now enforced by the state factory inspector, to collect labor statistics now under the charge of a separate bureau, to administer the laws of arbitration in labor difficulties, to direct the state labor exchange (already recommended by the commission), and supervise all private employment offices."

Christian Socialist Objects To Party Leaders

The Christian Socialist is a very live party journal that promotes the socialist cause among church members. The editor, Dr. Carr, is a former Methodist minister and the various staff writers are also preachers in many cases. Christian socialists are not a separate organization but only a group of people voting the regular socialist ticket who hope to square socialism with the Christian ideal.

It is interesting to note in a recent issue of the Christian Socialist a keen arraignment of a great socialist leader by the name of Barnes. This man is charged with immoral conduct and it is claimed by the Christian Socialist that his continuance in office will confess to the world that the party is committed to atheism and free love.

Barnes was once national secretary of the party but was removed. He has recently been appointed campaign manager for this year. We are glad that there is the Christian leaven in the socialist party which fights vigorously against the organization being made a weapon with which to fight the family and the church. Socialism is primarily an economic theory. Let the shoe-maker stick to his last.

The Dead Line In the Ministry

In every kind of employment in the city, there seems to be a tendency to employ the young man. Whether it is the men that drive the street cars or even the men that teach in the university, very few of them are grey. The man of sixty has a hard time finding employment. With the ministry, this tendency has been most especially true. Churches have been observed to pass up men with long years of experience and take young men just out of school.

All of this makes us ask what the world wants with the young and inexperienced man. It wants his imagination, his optimism, his energy. These are not necessarily the qualities of youth exclusively, however. Many men in the sixties have them. When they do, they are not laid on the shelf. No one would dare to call Washington Gladden old. Our own Doctor Tyler is still drawing large audiences in Denver to hear him as in former times.

To look in on these men, however, we would find them employed as they have always been employed. They still buy and read books. They do not talk an ancient language but the modern one. They speak United States right up to the minute. They do not talk their theology in terms of the nineteenth century. Their intellectual interests are those of the present generation.

In other ages, the old men have held the positions of authority and power. They will do so again, if they do not presume upon any natural claim of age to respect but seek power by continuous development. The scientists are promising us that some day the average age of man will be one hundred and fifty years. Some of us wish we might be of the fortunate ones who shall thus be afforded time to think things through. To wish for this promised one hundred and fifty years to finish our thinking is a different attitude from that of the man who finished his twenty years ago and who has not had an original idea in a decade. Religious thought above every other kind requires time.

If preachers will seek continuous development, they need never fear the rivalry of striplings. The latter may sometimes "please the young people" but the former will teach and inspire the whole community of every age.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

On Understanding Each Other

Bishop Anderson of the Episcopal Church stands in the forefront of those who are advocating the cause of Christian union. His utterances are always fraternal. He is not indifferent to the causes of division, but he knows that to magnify the differences is to postpone the day of union. A recent address delivered by the Bishop in Chicago is in striking contrast both in content and in spirit to one delivered by a prominent Baptist, reference to which has already been made in this department. The difference between the two addresses is that one manifests the spirit of the sectarian and the other the spirit of the Christian statesman. We commend the following to our readers taken from the Living Church.

Let us put the best possible interpretation upon the beliefs and practices of others. Assume that the things that mean nothing to us mean much to their advocates. Let us try to get the point of view of the other man for the sake of the enrichment of our own minds. Let me illustrate. Because the angry dispute of some centuries ago, over the relation of the Bishop of Rome to the Church of England was settled to our satisfaction, are we to go on aggravating the rupture by talking and acting as though the papacy is and always has been unalterably bad, and as though no place could be found for it in the constitution of the United Church of the future? The papacy must be better than its enemies think it is, or else the world has had many brilliant fools. Because the Methodists left us for reasons which do us no credit, are we to go on estimating Methodism at its worst, as if it stood for nothing that would be worth while in the life of the Catholic Church of the future? Methodism must be something better than some people think it is, or it would not have brought so many thousands nearer to their God. Because bishop-baiting Covenanters and lordly prelates lost their tempers a long time ago and called each other unspeakable names, are we to go on, now that things have cooled down, as if reconciliation were impossible, and as if Presbyterian theology were wholly foreign to the Catholic faith? Presbyterianism must be more than some of us have thought, else it would not have captivated the minds and dominated the lives of a strong intellectual people. Estimate people at their best. Try to see what they see. Be careful to put your own best foot forward, so that the church of your allegiance will be seen—not at its worst. This lesson has been impressed upon me afresh through a considerable correspondence on Church Unity with representatives of many churches. Amongst my correspondents have been some candid friends who write with brutal frankness about the Episcopal Church. Dear brethren, if the Anglican communion were the wood, hay and stubble that my friends think it is, you and I wouldn't be where we are. Now it may be that this shoe fits the other foot also.

Please do not misunderstand me. It would be foolish and shallow to talk as if there were no serious difficulties and differences in the way of visible unity. There are. There are. There are different premises. There are different conceptions of what the Church of Christ is. There are fixed habits of mind in great variety. We press on towards the reunion of Christendom, not because it is in sight, but because we have a passion for unity—a passion that is based upon our loyalty to Christ, and a desire to do good in the world. No one sees much daylight ahead as yet. We cannot see the distant scene, and we can take but one step at a time. But we feel sure that that one step is in the right direction if it leads us to think highly of the things of others.

Baptist and Disciple Differences

We should like to introduce into our colleges a course of reading which would compel every student to become familiar with the sectarian journalism of America. Nothing could be more illuminating to the youthful mind. The poison would carry its own antidote. As long as our own sectarian journals are read their offences will be veiled under the guise of loyalty; when the journals of others are read sectarian principles will be seen in their true light, and suggestions of loyalty repudiated. Sectarianism is always the same, no matter where it appars; its spirit and vocabulary never change. We can appreciate its bane in others, though we like to call the bane blessing when it appears among ourselves. But the reading course suggested would convince those who followed it closely that men may be Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, and Disciples, and yet be destitute of many of the graces which make up the life of the Christian. The invincible bigot will shout loudest for the partisan, and will recommend sectarian literature which he knows will inflame the basest desires of his partisans, and all the time be lamenting over the presence of the traitor—the man usually who has outgrown sectarian policies—and his attempts to destroy the denomination, or the faith once delivered to the saints. An illustration of this sectarian journalism is found in the Journal and Messenger, a Baptist paper published in Cincinnati. We quote:

One of our good Ohio pastors wants us to write up and put before our readers the distinctions between Baptists and "Disciples." He seems to think that we have not done enough along that line. His neighbors of the "Disciple" order are preying upon his flock and are using their utmost endeavors to persuade the simple-hearted and uninstructed that there is really no difference between Baptists and Disciples, except that the former still persist in being a "sect," while the latter are so broad-minded and generous that they are willing to take to themselves anybody or anything affecting the name Christian. We would be glad to gratify our brother, but for the fact that we have given so much space to the same subject for years, and do not feel that a formal article or series of ariticles on it would be edifying to more than a small proportion of our readers. Only a few weeks ago we published the address of Dr. McGlothlin, of the Louisville Seminary, before the Baptist Congress, which we recommended as the best thing on the subject which has got into print for several years, and, as we have had occasion, we have called attention to a small treatise by the late Rev. Frank Adkins, published first in The Journal and Messenger and now issued by our Publication Society. Either or both of these ought to be sufficient to put any genuine Baptist on his guard against the blandishments of his proselyting neighbors. Oil and water do not mix and no more do well-informed Baptists and genuine "Disciples." The difference is radical.

After reading the above we wondered whether any talk of union and of fraternal relations with the Baptists, was sincere or sacrilegious. It is not sincere if we may accept the decisions of our contemporary. Our relief from the distressing situation in this instance is that the Journal and Messenger never has understood the Disciples, and never intends to understand them. It is a sectarian paper in every sense of the word, as intolerant as a certain Disciple paper published in the same city. Each of these journals reflects the spirit of the other. It would be both humorous and pathetic to see them discussing a basis of union between their respective bodies! How the fur would fly, and how the cause of union would be sacrificed! A civil war would be proclaimed in the interests of peace. But we must forbear for the sake of sweet charity. If the address of Professor McGlothlin is to be taken as a correct expression of the differences of these two bodies we might as well abandon hope of union between them. The address is a caricature of the Disciples, and none but a sectarian would approve its contentions. The man who made it has no desire to see closer relation between the two bodies; he wants the gulf to be widened. On no other suppositions can we account for that address. To recommend it as a statement of the differences between Baptists and Disciples is to work for division while praying for union.

To Censure or Censor the Theatre?

A writer in the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate says some very pertinent things about the motion pictures, which are such a large factor today in the life of the American people.

Concerning the church's attitude toward this attractive form of amusement, he says:

Either one of two attitudes is open to the church in dealing with moving pictures and the theater in general. It may indiscriminately denounce the institution, profess to see no good whatever in it, and advise its members to keep away. By so doing, the church seems to wash her hands of all responsibility, and the devil is left to do what he will with his own. The minister may stay away from the theater and keep his children at home without losing much thereby; nevertheless, he knows that quite a percentage of his membership, with an effort at discrimination, attends the better class of plays. Should he attempt to enforce church discipline, his wisdom would be questioned generally by the authorities above him.

On the other hand, the church may point out the grave dangers of the playhouse, its ministry become more familiar with the problem, and cry out unsparingly against the depraving and vitiating tendencies which are trying to gain the ascendency in all our towns, at the same time conceding that the theater and moving-picture show have possibilities for good. Is it better for the church to say that no Christian within its folds shall frequent a theater, or better to teach and urge discrimination, letting the responsibility of settling the matter rest upon each one personally? The New York Conference of our own church recently decided that the latter course was preferable. This is the position taken by an increasing number of Christian workers whose sincerity and desire for the kingdom of God can not be questioned. It is certainly the duty of all Christian and moral people to unite in their several communities in an honest effort to keep out the low, suggestive, and vicious show, lest after the church has sown good seed in the field on Sunday, she shall go to sleep for a six days' nap while the enemy comes and sows tares among the wheat through all the intervening time.

How poor are they who have only money to give!—John Lancaster Spalding.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—SILAS JONES, IDA WITHERS HARRISON, ORVIS F. JORDAN, ELLIS B. BARNES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy, 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

What Is True Patriotism?

Patriotism, like religion, suffers from formalism and traditionalism. We use the words of our fathers without trying to understand their original meaning or whether we are in the presence of conditions to which the old formulas can be applied. We try to summon the courage and wisdom of the past into the service of the present and fail because we trust to the mysterious power of inherited shibboleths. True patriotism has initiative. It has tenacity of purpose. The patriotic citizen who does his own thinking is not deceived by cries of anarchy, socialism, and revolution which the unthinking and selfish raise against the measures he supports.

True patriotism is obedient to the law. Its obedience is more than formal. Its lawyers are better acquainted with the principles of justice than they are with methods of evading the purpose of the laws. If it catches the man who committed the crime, it does not turn him loose because there was a misspelled or misplaced word in the indictment. If a sentence is just, it does not ask that it be set aside on the ground of slight technical errors in the trial. The patriotic citizen submits his appeal to the unimpassioned judgment of his fellow-citizens as this judgment has been expressed in law. He mistrusts the deliverance of momentary feeling. He discountenances the mob.

The paying of taxes is a part of patriotic duty. The citizen looks to the state for the protection of his life and property. The protection he needs cannot be furnished unless the state has money. He is a mean sort of man who demands that his neighbors build the roads he uses and support the schools which his children attend. Such a man belongs with the oppressors of all ages. The oppressor takes what others have earned and gives them nothing in return for it. This is what the man does who enjoys the favor of the state, who prospers under the protection of its laws, and then shifts the burden of supporting the state to other men.

The use of the ballot is a test of patriotism. There are men who think they have no time to vote. They are so busy with their own affairs that they must neglect the interests of the state. Other men will not vote because their church tells them to keep out of politics. These men do not always see the inconsistency of their practices. One of them was very indignant over the failure of the police to keep the young barbarians of the town from tearing down his fence on Hallowe'en. He gives no assistance by his vote in securing the police protection he demands. He is an intelligent man and could be useful politically if his church allowed him to vote. He has the wrong kind of religion for an American citizen. Voting is not a means of pleasing some one who seeks office. The truly patriotic citizen does not wait for a candidate to solicit his support. He looks out for the right kind of men to serve the state and invites them to become candidates.

Is the readiness to serve on the jury characteristic of the good citizen? The expedients to which successful business men resort in order to escape jury service seem to indicate that it is not a matter of conscience with them to sit on the jury. One who is truthful on other occasions may be an accomplished liar when the judge asks him for reasons why he should be excused from serving on the jury. If the jury has any place in our judicial system, the men who serve on it ought to be the most intelligent and successful that can be found. It is a weakness of the state that good men refuse to accept their responsibility in the courtroom. It is not pleasant to assist in sending a man to the penitentiary, but is it pleasure we are seeking? If the laws are unjust, it is the good man who should have a part in their enforcement. He will see where they are unjust and he will try to change them.

The good citizen renders service to the state beyond what the laws prescribe. The ideals of a great nation are never fully expressed in its laws. New institutions may be needed. These cannot be created by law. They will grow up under the care of men and women of vision. The state will adopt such as it finds necessary to its progress. Schools, churches, and homes are needed by the state. It can do much for them, but it cannot have the kind it ought to have unless it has leaders who know not only what of good has already been accomplished but also what is implied in the achievements of the past and must be written in the laws and sentiments of the future if the children of the state are to enjoy their birthright. [Midweek Service, July 3. Matt. 22:15-22; Rom. 13:1-7.] S. J.

Missionary Administration.

Of the four factors essential in the conduct of modern foreign missions—the native Christian, the churches at home, the missionary, and the officers of administration—the last are important as the necessary intermediaries between the field and the sources of supply, and therefore require consideration in a study of the problem.

No doubt there was time in the early history of the missionary enterprise when no formal organization was necessary. Any church or group of churches might interest itself in some missionary or station, and forward funds for that purpose. But in the growth of the work and the increasing complexity of the interests involved it has become absolutely essential that the administrative part of the plan be placed in the hands of specialists who know the problem and all of the factors involved. Such men, whether they constitute a committee, a board, a group of secretaries, or all of these combined, are beyond question required for the economical and wise administration of missionary affairs. Those churches which fail to avail themselves of such expert service either have no missionaries to support, or suffer all the disadvantages of a haphazard and inefficient method.

The history of organized missionary work reveals with clearness the fact that a task so great in its dimensions and so close to the heart of our Christian faith has a tendency to choose for itself the strongest men available as missionary specialists, and then to retain them in the work for the longest possible period. The man who is to be a missionary secretary ought to have all the qualities required in a missionary, and in addition, if that be possible, the elements of statesmanship and administrative capacity such as are essential in the direction of one of the greatest forms of activity in the modern world. The wisdom, discretion, tact, patience and courage required for the successful administration of a great foreign missionary program demand men of such exceptional capacity as to be equaled only by the promoters of the largest business, educational and governmental concerns of the modern world.

And if a man with such qualities as these is found for the position of a missionary secretary, he becomes still greater in the work to which he is called. To his natural elements of leadership there are added annually the forces of experience and discipline. Some of the finest products of our Christian civilization have been the men chosen by the different denominations for the work of missionary administration. The names of the really great missionary secretaries are household and honored words in the churches of all faiths. Beyond any honors which election to complimentary offices can bring is the assured and substantial privilege of being a true and wise promoter of this great work. And in the number of such really great men the Disciples of Christ have had abundant reason to place their most representative missionary administrators.

No office requires a more abundant endowment of the highest qualities of leadership than that of the missionary secretary. He is first of all an interpreter to the churches of the noblest work committed to the followers of Christ. In a certain sense he is the servant of these churches, chosen by them to have executive direction of their missionary interests. But in the truest sense he is their instructor, monitor, guide and inspiration. But for him most of them would yield but reluctant assent to any program requiring sustained consecration and sacrifice to missionary work. He is the common denominator of all the facts and interests of the mission field. He must meet the churches face to face in conventions, through literature and in the person of the returned missionary whose movements he directs. Upon his heart there rest the burdens of all the mission fields and forces, and though the work is that of the churches and not his alone, he feels himself responsible for its success and growth.

He is also charged with responsibility for the financial support of the evangel to the non-Christian lands. Upon the gifts from the churches depend absolutely the results of the denominational program of missions. The moment the cause is planted in any foreign land it begins to demand increased facilities for adequate expansion. The funds for this increasing need must be secured from the churches. Both on the ground of adequate response to the imperative call to go forward, and on that of administrative efficiency the missionary secretary feels under the keenest sense of obligation to make proof of his ministry as a provider of sufficient money for the cause. This puts upon him a very heavy burden. But it is one which he assumes gladly, not as a mere business proposition, but as the means of accomplishing the will of the Christ and at the same time of educating the churches in the grace and joy of Christian generosity. The work is theirs, not his. And yet it falls to him constantly to remind them of this fact, and to urge them to still greater participation in the wholesome and world-embracing acivities of the kingdom of God.

But even more important than the securing of funds for the work of missionary promotion is the administrative responsibility which rests upon the missionary secretary. The care of all the mission churches, schools, hospitals, dispensaries, relief depots, publication enterprises and industrial activities is his. He must know the personnel of every mission station, and the many complex interests which are there centered. The thousand details of adjustment, conservation and promotion which fall to his decision require an extraordinary capacity in an executive. And while a large measure of liberty is necessarily accorded the missionary force in foreign lands, it is the missionary secretary, assisted by such counsel as his elected board of advisors can supply, that must determine the conduct of affairs. Few men are charged with so wide a variety of responsibilities as he, and few perform even the simpler tasks of more restricted positions with as large a measure of efficiency.

Nor must it be forgotten that there is demanded of the missionary secretary a sympathy, tact and insight which are almost beyond the power of any man to gain, save by the force of supreme consecration to his work and an unusual dower of personal affection for those whose interests he administers. No one unacquainted with the details of missionary activities can possibly conceive the difficulties under which the missionaries are often compelled to labor, the perfectly natural and temperamental disagreements which arise among them, and the innumerable problems of finance, social adjustment and industrial activity which emerge in the various mission stations. In the last issue the missionary secretary decides these questions. At least this is the case in the present period of missionary work, in which the administrative center is the mission office rather than the groups of new churches rapidly developing on foreign soil. Presently these daughter churches will take their own way with as much confidence and success as have the churches in the homeland. But at the present moment the hand of control is still stretched out above them, and perhaps necessarily so; and that hand is in the very nature of the case the hand of the missionary secretary. With what wisdom, sympathy, tact and prophetic vision must that administrative power be employed!

It is essential to the possession of first-hand knowledge of the entire situation that the missionary secretary should visit now and then the mission fields. All the denominations have recognized the absolutely indispensable character of such visitations. It is impossible that any amount of correspondence should give adequate information regarding conditions on the mission field. Only as they are seen can they be understood. Such a visitation must be made not with the air of a superior bringing orders to an employed and subordinate force, but with the attitude of open-minded and teachable humility. The missionary secretary in such a visitation is not seeking to impose his views upon the missionaries, but to learn in the amplest way precisely what are the conditions in the midst of which they have to work, and the opportunities which call for immediate concern. In a certain sense he brings to the missionaries the good will, encouragement and fraternal love of the home churches, and within certain limits he may attempt to point out the dangers of too radical and rapid expansion or of new and unproved methods of work. But in general the missionaries themselves know far more of the problem than does the missionary secretary, and his must ever be the attitude of a sympathetic and tactful learner, who is preparing to transmit to the churches at home the inspiring and convincing facts of which he has been the observer on the foreign field.

But most of all is the missionary secretary the mediator between the home churches and the newly growing Christian communities in the far lands. As such he is too often the natural target for a body of unintelligent and senseless criticism the result of ignorance, opposition to missionary work in general, and of reactionary conservatism which insists upon as narrow a view of the gospel on the foreign field as the most timid and hesitating orthodoxy of remote communities in the home land can devise. There will also be personal opposition to even the best and most trusted missionary leaders. The malice of suspicious and small-minded preachers and of unprincipled journalists in their criticism of missionary administration is almost past belief. Small men in the office of missionary secretaries wither under this type of opposition, and either adopt an attitude of weak and hesitant compromise or lose heart and resign. It is only the great, open-minded, courageous man, with the vision of missions not as the home churches would shape them, but as the spirit of Christ demands that they shall be, who can survive and maintain his place as a true leader of his people to nobler things. Such men the Disciples of Christ possess, and of such they are increasingly proud.

The missionary secretary must set his face like a flint against all demands for a reactionary and sectarian policy on the mission field, even as he resists with all his force, the attempt to emasculate the gospel of which he is the promoter, by failure to emphasize its great divine, redemptive factors. He knows himself to be a necessary part of the message which the churches of his faith and order are delivering to the non-Christian world, and he holds himself the servant not of those churches alone but of the kingdom of God and of the future, in the supreme work of making known the one true God and Jesus Christ whom he has sent.

Forward and Backward Steps at Berkeley

How much more than merely local are the forces which came to the surface in the decision of First Church, Berkeley, Calif., to practice Christian union, is beginning to appear in a movement to practice Christian union between the Congregational and Disciple theological seminaries, both located at Berkeley and in friendly affiliation with the state university.

The Congregational school, called Pacific Seminary, took the initiative by abandoning its denominational control and now stands in the same undenominational position as Yale and Oberlin Divinity Schools and Union Theological Seminary of New York.

This action appealed strongly to the faculty, a few of the trustees and to a large number of the lay and ministerial supporters of the Disciples' institution, called Berkeley Bible Seminary. It seemed to them a challenge to practice union, in the interest of economy and scholarship and a larger fellowship. It was assumed by the Congregational trustees that the Disciples would agree to merge the endowments and faculties of the two institutions in one united seminary.

In this they were disappointed, however, for the board of trustees met and by a vote of six to two abolished the entire faculty—Dean H. H. Guy, Professors Walter Stairs, C. C. Bentley and H. O. Breeden —excepting only President H. D. McAneny. The reasons given for their radical action were announced as "financial and other."

It is understood that the "other" reasons were two—pernicious activity in encouraging the seminary union, and pernicious inactivity and silence with respect to the forward step recently taken by the Berkeley church. President McAneny's attitude in both these matters was the opposite of the faculty's.

The action of the trustees has been received with indignation in many of the best churches and by many leading Disciples in northern California. They feel that in these days when Congregationalists and Disciples are entering conferences on union an excellent and significant beginning could be made by practicing the plea in the training of ministers. The way was graciously paved by the initiative of Pacific Seminary in ceasing to be a denominational institution.

Moreover the economic advantage lay altogether on the side of Berkeley Seminary, inasmuch as its endowment is considerably less than $100,000 while that of Pacific Seminary is a half-million. The proposed terms of union gave ample recognition to the Disciples. No criticism on any aspect of the plan was suggested by those who opposed it save that it involved the removal of "our" seminary from denominational control.

Since the refusal of the Berkeley Seminary trustees to enter the union President Nash of Pacific Seminary has extended Dean Guy an earnest invitation to become a member of his faculty and Disciples in California both as congregations and as individuals have already subscribed a liberal fund for his support. Dr. Guy is greatly esteemed on the coast for his scholarship and for his sincere Christian personality. He carries always with him the spirit of consecration, a spirit native to him but cultivated and confirmed by his long missionary service in Japan.

It is likely that other Disciple teachers will be added to the faculty of Pacific Seminary in a similar way and thus the opportunity that was lost by the timid trustees may be saved by the direct action of the churches.

Certainly it is to be regretted that in a matter so obviously desirable from the standpoint of closer unity with our Congregational brethren, in a matter involving no slightest compromise of conscience, we who plead for union should be placed in the position of being pleaded with by our Christian brethren and finally of refusing to practice our plea on the more than generous basis which they had proposed.

It is hardly conceivable that young men drawn toward the ministry will in any large number elect to attend a seminary whose faculty is hostile to the practice of Christian unity either in Berkeley Seminary or in Berkeley Church.

Further Instruction in Accurate Quotation

Our neighbor, the Christian Evangelist, is having a hard time to get straight in its mind the thesis of Prof. F. O. Norton's paper read at the Kansas City congress. Some weeks ago it represented him as having said that the science of textual criticism puts our Lord's commission out of the New Testament.

This very crude error called forth a statement from Dr. Norton in which he tried to set himself right. In last week's issue the Christian Evangelist prints an editorial under the heading "Biblical Scholarship and Christian union," which begins with the brave question, "Has modern biblical scholarship invalidated the basis of Christian union proposed by . . . the Disciples of Christ?" It devotes a paragraph to the baptism question and refers to Dr. Norton's paper, this time representing him as dealing "simply with the tri-sectarian [a typographical error no doubt for 'trinitarian'] formula of Matthew's record of the commission which the writer argued was probably an interpolation of later times, and that the true reading should be, 'baptizing them in my name.' That conclusion, even if granted, certainly does not knock the foundations out from under the position that baptism rests upon Christ's authority, and the writer of the paper distinctly disclaimed any such inference from his argument."

The Christian Century has been compelled so many times to instruct its St. Louis contemporary in the simple art of accuracy, not to say honesty, in quoting from others that it seems our bounden duty to correct the present error. This we do from memory but with entire confidence.

Professor Norton dealt not simply with the trinitarian formula but with the whole clause, "baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit." He did not argue that the true reading should be "baptizing them in my name," but that it should be "make disciples of all nations in my name, teaching them," etc.

Dr. Norton contended that the entire clause including the words "baptizing them" was an interpolation. His paper left not a shred of New Testament authority for the doctrine that Christ had explicitly commanded baptism, for he also showed that the presence of "water" in John 3:5 (the only other text in which Jesus can be assumed to refer to baptism) was undoubtedly also a later addition.

Prof. Norton's paper was a scholarly and convincing thesis. Its author has few superiors in the field of Greek scholarship. Disciples generally should know the facts he sets forth. For while, as he says, his argument does not do away with baptism any more than the elimination of the two proof texts for the trinity would do away with the Incarnation, it does, nevertheless, absolutely cut the root of the immersion dogma which assumes to find its sanction in the expressed authority of Christ.

It should be said that The Christian Century believes there are other arguments that cut the root of this dogma besides an appeal to the original text, cogent and incontestable as this appeal is.

And it should be further added that the Christian Evangelist's assumption that a corrected text would call for a revision of the Disciples' plea for union discloses a very shallow conception of what that plea really is. That plea does not hang upon any letter of scripture whatever. Its sanction is not in a text but in the mind of the Church's Lord.

—One way in which the Disciples used to state their "position" was to say that it was their purpose to make their terms of fellowship as broad as the New Testament conditions of salvation and identical with them. This statement and this ideal can hardly be improved upon. A soul whom God has saved is thereby fitted for the fellowship of all other souls whom God has saved. And no congregation of the saved has any Christian right to deny fellowship to any soul whatsoever whom God has received. The essential sin of the sectarian order is that it divides Christians into exclusive groups and tolerates terms of fellowship in the various groups that are different from and more than the New Testament conditions of salvation. This is presumption. It is usurpation of the sovereignty of the Church's Head. The way to Christian unity is by breaking down these human barriers of fellowship. It is a strange paradox that Disciples can make immersion a term of fellowship when they do not regard it as a condition of salvation. Very few are the Disciples who nowadays hold that immersion is a New Testament condition of acceptance with Christ. As a matter of fact it is not such a condition. By what right, then, can a church of Disciples withhold fellowship from any Christian whom Christ has manifestly received?

—Every believer in the practice of Christian unity will rejoice in the highly significant report of the conference between the Congregational and Disciple commissions on Christian union. This report, signed by representative leaders of both bodies, will be found in this issue. There are earnest souls not a few who have doubted the serious purpose of the Disciples' commission on Christian Unity to face their task with open-mindedness. All such must now acknowledge their mistake. It is manifest that when this Commission goes to New York to confer on Christian unity with other similar groups they go straight to the root of their problem, and get results. In recent times Disciples' hands and seals have been set to no instrument comparable in its implications and significance to this modest but earnest report to which are attached the names of some of the most responsible leaders among us. The Christian Century and such conservative pastors as Rev. H. J. Loken and Dr. E. S. Ames, may not be able to adopt the radical suggestions of Dr. Garrison's Commission, but all will thank God that at last Disciples are able to entertain a proposal to practice Christian unity with other members of the Church of Christ besides those who happen to have been baptized by immersion.

—Our readers who have followed the daily papers the past week will be able to imagine the self-restraint under which this issue of The Christian Century has been prepared. A thousand promptings to speak right out what we think about the humiliating spectacle called a Republican convention have had to be repressed. The shameless theft of delegates, the brazen defiance of the popular will, the course of Mr. Roosevelt, the repeated and hearty recognition of Mr. Bryan by a republican body, the organization of a new political party—these and many other themes press upon us just at this minute for interpretation. While this paper is not a political organ it would seem that in the present situation the issues are so clearly ethical as to be proper subject-matter for a religious newspaper. Mr. Lloyd George, England's Chancellor of the Exchequer, says that the time comes in every enterprise—political, industrial and religious, when its conditions must be subjected to a "thorough overhauling." That time has come in American democracy.

—The nomination by the Republicans of Iowa of Mr. George W. Clarke for governor, confers leadership upon one of the brainiest and most admirable men in that state. Mr. Clarke has won the confidence of his fellow citizens by no trick or accident but by his long tested ability and character. He was for many years a member of the state legislature and is now the incumbent of the lieutenant governor's chair. He is a member of the Christian church at Adel of which, together with his law partner, Mr. J. B. White, he is a pillar.

The Heathen Invasion

Startling Facts Regarding the Coming of Oriental Cults

BY JULIA HUMES.

These facts, bearing on the religious conditions of America, may stir the hearts of well-meaning Christians who think we are living in a land wholly given to Christian teaching, so far as religion is concerned. Oh, that it were true! But Christianity's most decisive battle-ground is America. While America has church-houses and many organized agencies for good, we must not forget that she has also many agencies for evil. While we were sleeping the enemy came and sowed tares in our field. Eve is eating the apple again. Yoga, that Eastern philosophy, the emblem of which is the coiled serpent, is being widely spread here, and thousands are yielding to the temptation to embrace its teachings. Literally, Yoga means the "path" that leads to wisdom. Actually, it is proving the way that leads to domestic infelicity, insanity, and death. Priests from east of Suez, with soft-spoken, proselyting words, have whispered this mysticism into the ears of American women.

Have Their Temples.

While the churches of America are spending twenty million dollars annually in the cause of foreign missions, the pagans have executed an amazing flank movement; they have sent their emissaries to us. Today the tinkling temple bells ring out with a derisive, jarring note in a Christian land, and the United States is a medley of diverse religions imported direct from heathendom. Seattle has its Buddhist temple; San Francisco has its Hindu temple; Los Angeles has its Krishna temple. The Hindu religion is represented here by the Vedanta society, which has laid at West Cornwall, Connecticut, the corner-stone of a greater temple than these. It is marked, as are stones and trees set apart for worship in India, with red paint, the sacred vermillion. And deep in New England granite is set the most holy word of the Vedantists, "Om." Chicago, Illinois, and Lowell, Massachusetts, have their Zoroastrian temples to the sun. In 1896 there was started at Green Acre, Maine, a summer school of philosophy, which was the outgrowth of the World's Fair Congress of Religions, its platform being an open forum where the Swamis found a welcome. It is by this New England route from Calcutta that nearly every Eastern mystic has arrived and established his vogue in this country.

The Yoga Class.

The Yoga class is becoming as popular as those of Browning or Shakespeare. It is the direct means by which a Swami or priest reaches the public. It is the promise of eternal youth that attracts woman to Yoga, the promise which is found intertwined with most of the pagan religions. Incidentally, there is offered also health, long life, and the power to stay the ravages of time. Small wonder that a Swami's following recruits its largest numbers among women. But Yoga is a dangerous thing. In pursuit of it the listening devotee is offering her sacrifices even at the altar of her soul. Miss Sarah Farmer, a New England spinster, with a beautiful ideal of universal brotherhood, gave her fortune in the founding of Green Acre, where, for years, she was a familiar figure in her glowing gray gown and veil. The study of many religions unbalanced her mind, and she has been for several years an inmate of an insane asylum at Waverly, Massachusetts.

Broken-Hearted.

The death of Mrs. Ole Bull, of Cambridge, Massachusetts, widow of the world-renowned violinist, occurred in January last, and her will, bequeathing several hundred thousand dollars to the Vendantist Society, was set aside by the courts on the ground of mental incapacity and undue influence. On the very day of the decision her daughter, Mrs. Olea Bull Vaughn, in whose behalf the verdict was rendered, died, technically, of tuberculosis, but actually, the doctor said, of a broken heart.

Last spring Dr. William R. C. Latson, a New York physician, was found mysteriously dead in his Riverside Drive apartment, and Alta Markheva, the young Jewish girl who called him her mangod, or "guru," in the study of Yoga, attempted to follow him in suicide. Her sister, Mrs. Rebecca Cohen, moaned: "This new religion seems to me to be of the devil. It has disgraced my sister and taken her from her people."

Left Husband and Home.

More recently the handsome and cultured wife of President Winthrop Ellsworth Stone, of Purdue University, at Lafayette, Indiana, has abandoned home, husband and children to join the sun worshipers in the study of Yoga. Doctor Stone went before the board of the Presbyterian Church and announced: "I am utterly crushed; I want your prayers and your sympathy. I love my wife; she is as dear to me as she ever was. I hope that she will some time yet come to her senses and return to me and my boys." It is not that the Swamis bring with them hideous images worshiped at every roadside shrine in India. Here and there, it is true, a little brown god, Buddha, or a green jade, Kirshna, has appeared in an American home; but it is undoubtedly used merely, so its owner will tell you, as an "aid to concentration" in the worship of the ideal it represents. A greater menace than that of image worship lurks in the teachings of the Hindu mystics. The casual observer will not discover it. Only those who reach the inner circles become acquainted with the mysteries revealed to the most skilled. And the descent from Christianity to heathenism is by such easy stages that the beginner scarcely realizes she is led.

Following New Gods.

How many are followers of the new gods it is difficult to estimate with exactness. It is known, however, that their numbers are in the thousands. At West Cornwall, Connecticut, the society maintains its "ashrama," or peace retreat, planned to become the great summer school of Oriental philosophy for America. It consists of three hundred and seventy acres of forest and field in the heart of Berkshire hills. It was here last summer, on a night in June, that the Swami talked of his religion that is three thousand years old. The aim of life, the Swami said, was to realize oneness with God. Then, with closed eyes and clasped hands, with his hearers he passed into the silence to meditate on oneness with God. In the silence a voice spoke. It was the voice of a woman. "Swami," she said, "I have come from your home land after twenty-two years as a missionary there. And your religion, that is three thousand years old, what, let me ask, has it done for the women of India?"

Has No Answer.

The missionary's question is the argument for which Orientalism in its most plausible phase has no answer. Woman's position in India is the most degraded of any in the world. So Julia Ward Howe once gave pause to the flow of Vivekananda's eloquence in a Boston drawing-room. "Swami," she demanded, "if your gods are so good, let your women come to tell us of them." "Our women," he evaded modestly, "do not travel." One of them did, however. It was Pundita Ramabai, whose tour of the world, proclaiming the wrongs of womanhood, stirred England to lay a heavy hand on some of the religious rites in India. Have American women forgotten Pundita Ramabai? Baba Bharati, the priest of the Krishna temple of Los Angeles, was able to boast of his five thousand converts in this country, the majority of whom are women.

A CO-OPERATIVE CONFERENCE

Movement to Bring Congregationalists and Disciples Closer Together.

An informal conference was held in New York on April 23, between representatives of the Disciples of Christ, and of the Congregationalists for the purpose of considering the existing relations between these two communions and the feasibility of their closer affiliation. After careful discussion of present conditions in different parts of the country, and the possibilities of more effective co-operation between these bodies, the conference, with one mind and in a profound conviction that Providence is opening the way to a far greater realization of Christian unity, resolved to address the following letter to the local churches, where such co-operation seems most necessary.

Possible Affiliation.

We believe that the time is come when practical efforts should be made to show to the world the spiritual unity of Christ's church by every possible affiliation of our ministries and needful integration of our churches. The feasibility of closer unity between the ministry of the Disciples and that of the Congregationalists, was considered by us with mutual frankness and from all points of view; and the following conclusions were reached with sincere unanimity: First, that there are no essential differences of faith which need keep us apart. Existing reasons for separation lie in the outer domain of Christianity, rather than at the heart of essential Christianity. Without insistence on uniformity of customs, there is no valid reason why we should not co-operate more closely, both in the case of strong churches working in the same community, and also in the case of weak churches contiguously located, which are unable, acting separately, to secure proper ministerial care.

Points of Resemblance.

Secondly, our respective ecclesiastical polities have so many points of resemblance that no elaborate reconstructions would seem necessary to bring them into working harmony. A few simple adjustments, which our local associations of churches are quite competent to make, might be enough to secure effective team work, where now the ecclesiastical oars are helplessly interfering, and the churches are making no progress. For the initiative of happier and fruitful relations of our churches, no ecclesiastical authority from above need be invoked; we recognize alike our common Christian democracy, the representative units of which are our particular local churches. If in those communities where the need is most obvious this work of church unification should at once be begun conjoint action afterward of our larger national conventions and councils may wisely plan for its further extension and more thorough prosecution.

Plan of Co-operation.

Thirdly, two practical steps were suggested and indorsed for the initiation of this closer affiliation: (1) Where there are two churches, one of the Disciples, and the other of the Congregationalists, in a community where the conditions justify the existence of one only, these two churches could agree to worship as one congregation, and to unite in the support of one minister, the ordinances to be administered as individual members of each communion from time to time may reasonably desire; (2) in order that the scruples of the faithful in both communions may be duly respected, it is suggested that the members thus uniting for greater efficiency be enrolled as members of their respective bodies; that is, that after each name may be written, Congregationalist or Disciple, as the case may be; and that their missionary offerings be made through such boards or societies as they may elect. In other words, the emergency demanding unification of effort by weak churches in the same field need not and ought not to wait on more organic union, such as would require more time for the adjustment of differences than the exigencies of the situation would permit. Furthermore, in order that the standing of the common minister may be deemed regular in them both, it is desirable that the Congregationalists and the Disciples should give each other official recognition and regularity of standing as ministers of Christ.

Simple Steps.

The principles and first steps in such mutual alliance and co-operation are simple, and easily to be followed; the details may be left for adjustment in accordance with local conditions and customs in the application of friendly and hopeful common sense.

It was also resolved that in the near future, further and enlarged conferences be organized for the advancement of this endeavor.

With profound trust in the leading of the Spirit in the churches, and in a great hope that our now scattered Christian forces may be united in the strategic providence of God for the Christian salvation of our country and the world, we venture to address this letter to the churches of our respective communions, and to urge that especially in those parts of our country where such action is most needed, it be made matter of the immediate business of the Lord.

Signed on behalf of the Disciples:
Rev. Peter Ainslie, Baltimore, Md.
Rev. J. H. Garrison, St. Louis, Mo.
Rev. I. J. Spencer, Lexington, Ky.
Rev. F. W. Burnham, Springfield, Ill.
Rev. Finis Idleman, Des Moines, Ia.
Rev. J. M. Philputt, New York City.
Rev. I. N. McCash, Cincinnati, O.
Mr. E. M. Bowman, Chicago, Ill.
On behalf of the Congregationalists:
Rev. Nehemiah Boynton, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Rev. Newman Smyth, New Haven, Conn.
Prof. Williston Walker, New Haven, Conn.
Rev. William H. Ward, New York City.

The Book World

CHRISTOLOGY AND PERSONALITY. William Sanday, D. D., LL. D. [Oxford 1911.] The existence of the so-called subliminal self and its functions has received attention from the psychologists and the philosophers. Professor Sanday accepts the evidence of these as a basis for his study in that question so fundamental in our Christian faith "How could Jesus Christ be both human and Divine?" The doctrine of the person of Christ, who and what He was, is of course at the very center of any Christian theological system. The forming of this doctrine has had a history contemporaneous with the Christian faith itself. Professor Sanday in this book gives a summary of Christologies both ancient and modern, in a most sympathetic way. He sees no reason for thinking that any writer, from the Apostles down to today, has been able adequately to account for the personality of Jesus Christ in its two-fold aspect. His own contribution to the subject is from the standpoint of modern psychology, and it is given as tentative only, and with the modesty of real scholarship. The subliminal or subconscious self is a term familiar to readers of Professor William James' "Varieties of Religious Experience." It is assumed to be a well established psychological entity. Wider or deeper than our conscious life, the great storehouse of memories, impressions and impulses, it plays no small part in our experience. The greater part of our ideal impulses seem to originate here. If we look into ourselves, this is what we shall see. There is an impulse to right action, and we act; there is an impulse to prayer, and we pray; there is an impulse toward thanksgiving, and we give thanks; there is above all that central impulse of faith, the impulse as it were to take hold of God in Christ and cling fast to Him, so that no outward deterrent can loosen the hold. We feel that all these promptings come from a hidden source within us. It is literal truth to say that the inner life of the spirit is "hid with Christ in God." The influences of God upon the human soul are wrought through or in this subliminal region. It is predicated to be our point of contact with the "supreme reality" of the philosophers, but this we Christians know to be God. "The proper seat or locus of all divine indwelling, or divine action upon the human soul, is the subliminal consciousness." And "the same or the corresponding subliminal consciousness is the proper seat or locus of the deity of the incarnate Christ." The suggestion certainly gives a clue at least that will be welcome to the philosophically inclined. The book should be on the shelf beside the volume of Professor James referred to above.

C. O. REYNARD.

THE TERRIBLE MEEK by Charles Rann Kennedy. This short play, an allegory so consistent as to be almost a presentment of the Crucifixion, is as powerful as it is unique. The spirit of Christ seems to have an irresistible attraction for Mr. Kennedy. "The Servant in the House," an earlier and well-known play, developed the philosophy of love and brotherhood. "The Terrible Meek" uses the same fundamental theme, and through it delivers an eloquent arraignment of war. The curtain rises upon a stage completely dark. The first sound is the sobbing of a Woman, the mother of the Man who was nailed to the cross because he was not understood. It is a beautiful bit of impressionism. In the study of the mother, there is also a suggestion of the common tragedy of parenthood. The mother, now that the son is dead, knows that she did not fully understand him, remembers that she was ashamed of him sometimes, and often opposed him.

The ringing theme of the play, however, is the folly and iniquity of war, based always on misunderstanding and a false sense of patriotism.

"Perhaps that has been the real mistake all along," says the Captain, "taking these people—men like this one, for instance—for foreigners. Supposing they were more nearly related? Supposing, after all, they happened to be made of the same flesh and blood as you and me? Supposing they were men? Supposing, even, they were—brothers?"

"Brothers!" exclaims the Soldier, who had slain the Man, under the Captain's orders, "Why that's exactly wat 'e used ter say—'im up there . . ."

War is the custom, the fashion. "I have been mixed up with it ever since I can remember," says the Captain. "My father did it before me. All my people did it. It is considered the thing—the sort of thing a gentleman ought to do. They call it glory; they call it honor, courage, patriotism. Great kings hold their thrones by it. I have been helping to build kingdoms for over twenty years. I have never known any other trade. Soldiery, bloodshed, murder, that's my business. My hands are crimson with it. That's what empire means. . . . Already our kingdoms begin to totter. Possess the earth! We have lost it . . . for the soul of the earth is man and the love of him, and we have made of both, a desolation—something has happened up here on this hill today to shake all our kingdoms of blood and fear to the dust. The meek, the terrible meek, the fierce agonizing meek, are about to enter into their inheritance."

The growing light discloses the Woman, in eastern garb, the Captain in the equipment of a Roman centurion, the Soldier in the armor of a legionary. Above them rise three gaunt crosses bearing three dead men gibbeted like thieves.

"The Terrible Meek" is an effective answer to those who see only enmity between drama and religion. It could hardly be more religious. One seldom reads anything more dramatic. [New York, Harper and Brothers. $1. net.]

Margaret E. Sangster

Margaret E. Sangster, who died on June 4, at her home in Maplewood, a suburb of Newark, N. J., was born in 1838, at New Rochelle, N. Y. She had written stories and poems for religious and other publications for over fifty years. She had been connected with Harper's Bazar, Harper's Young People, The Christian Herald, Christian Intelligencer, as an editor at different times. Her talks and advice to women and girls did much good in the world. She married George Sangster when a girl of twenty.

THE HIGH CALLING

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS."

Copyright 1911, George H. Doran Co.

CHAPTER IX (continued)

"Elsewhere!" snorted the irate committeeman. "Why, you made this a personal meeting. You've got to come down. I can't hold Rogers to our plan if you don't come. And Alvard is on the fence. We lack just enough to make a majority. This is your pet measure. Are you going back on it?"

"I can't come down tonight. Put it through among you. If you really mean business you don't need me. Stand by the bill at all costs."

The committeeman broke in with an oath: "All costs! It's your bill. If you desert it now at this pinch, it is down and out. I can't look after your fences."

The receiver at the other end went up with a bang and Paul realised that another one of his cherished measures had received its coup de grace. Partly, he said to himself, as he started up to Louis's room, on account of the half-hearted action of those who called themselves friends. What friends! Rabbits! Cowards! Self-seekers! Real friends could have managed that bill without his presence and there was a show for it, owing to its popular character, if anyone would push matters with energy and intelligent enthusiasm. "But was it his duty always to neglect his own children even for service to the state?" He said "No" as he went along up and into Louis's room.

He had seldom been into the boy's sanctum, and as he came in now he was curious, and interested in what he saw. Louis had employed the interval of his father's presence to pick a number of things up off the floor and what he did not have time to throw on top of the bed he had kicked under it, so the room presented a fairly respectable outward appearance.

He had pulled the writing desk out into the middle of the room and as his father stopped in front of it he said suddenly: "There it is, now laugh."

Paul was simply astonished when he examined the article. To be sure, all the joints on it were not perfect by any means and one of the legs looked a little out of plumb. But as a whole the writing desk was so creditable a piece of work that he could not help saying, "I call that pretty fine. Mother will be tremendously pleased. You made it all yourself?"

"Yes, all but this little bit of carving. That Johnson started me on. The rest of it is mine."

"It's mighty good," said Paul, walking around it. "Straighten that leg out by amputating it just below the knee and it will——"

"Yes, I knew you would laugh at me. All the teachers do," wailed Louis.

"No, I'm not laughing at you, Louis. You have done splendid work. But you mustn't feel badly to have your faults pointed out. That is the way to learn. If you hadn't been in quite such a hurry you would have made a better job, wouldn't you? Your fault, one of your faults, is lack of patience and thorough painstaking over details. Isn't that so?"

"It must be. All my teachers say so all the time."

"Well, if they say so all the time there must be some reason for it. But, honest, now, the writing desk is not a bad piece of work viewed as a whole."

Louis felt somewhat mollified and after his father had made one or two more comments they started down stairs. When they reached the hall, the telephone rang again.

"Go into the library and wait for me," Paul said, as he went to the instrument.

This time it was Rogers, the doubtful member of the committee. He wanted to ask one or two questions about the bill and Paul quickly and eagerly answered him.

"But we need you right here now. We can't do anything without you. Burke is mad and we can't depend on him. You've just got to come if you want to see the thing through."

"I can't come, Rogers. You can whip them into line." Paul rapidly shot directions at him. "Stand by the thing for my sake if not for the sake of the bill. Don't go back on your promise."

"Promise! What's become of yours? The thing is impossible without you. I can't do anything with Burke and the rest of the committee are hot over your absence. Don't blame anyone but yourself when you read the morning paper."

Paul started to answer, but the committeeman had finished, and after hesitating over the matter he went into the library and resumed his questions with Louis.

"After the manual training, which one of your studies do you take to most?"

"Oh, I don't like any of them. Chemistry, I guess."

"Do you like mathematics?"

"I don't mind, but I want to go into business, father. I want to quit school altogether and go into business."

"What business?"

"Any kind. I want to make money."

"What do you want to make money for?"

"What does anyone want money for? I want to buy——"

"Go on. Tell me exactly."

"Well, clothes and—and—I want things, so I can go out and be with other fellows, and have something to spend—and——"

In his burst of unconcealed eagerness to get out of school Louis was really revealing to his father some of the actual reasons for wanting to give up his studies, and as Paul listened to him he felt that the boy's eagerness went even farther. He determined to be very frank with him and get at the bottom of the thing if possible.

"Do you want to make money so as to go with the girls and get popular with them and spend money on them?"

The question was almost brutal in its directness, and one that his father had never before suggested. Louis reddened with an angry but self-conscious manner that told Paul he had not guessed very wide of the real motive that was urging the boy.

He did not answer the question but sat sullenly tearing bits of paper from the leaves of a magazine on the table. And his father sat silently staring at him, wondering how he was going to manage Louis and help him to make a possible manhood for himself. The problem across the library table in this boy of his was even a greater problem than the one down at the State House. He could afford politically to lose the bill. But could he afford parentally to lose the boy?

"You needn't answer my question, Louis, you have answered it. Now listen to me. I am your father and next to your mother I love you more than anyone else in all the world. Do you believe that?"

"I suppose so," Louis managed to say.

"You know it, Louis. There is no guess work. You are sixteen. You have fairly good health and more than average brains The main business in your life for the next ten years ought to be study and education. The girls—society—all that—do you want to make a fool of yourself and miss the one thing of manhood that's worth getting? If you do, I don't for you. I am several years older than you are, Louis. And I am your father for the purpose, as I believe, of really being worth something to you in the matter of counsel and direction for your voyage over life's great ocean. If you are planning to start out without a compass or the right kind of equipment I would be worse than a fool if I didn't prevent such a voyage, wouldn't I? Well, I don't intend to let you do just as you please just because for the time being you choose to go your own gait. Mind, Louis, I am not going to ask you to do impossible things, or be tyrannical with you. But neither do I intend that you should throw away a splendid chance for education just to gratify a present longing to make money for the purpose you want it for."

The telephone rang again at this point and Paul went over to it.

Burke had come to the instrument again.

"We can't agree on the bill in its present shape and it's simply impossible to put it through in your absence. You are being judged by all the committee and some of them don't hesitate to say you are being bought out. If you come down now you may be able to save it. But we are on the point of kicking the bill out, or reporting adversely. Can't you come down within an hour?"

"I can't promise. I have a very important engagement here. I might be able to get down by midnight, but wouldn't promise."

"Midnight! The members are dead tired now. Rogers is asleep in his chair and Colfax is dozing on the lounge. If you don't come within an hour you needn't come at all."

"I can't come within an hour."

"What is it? A matter of life and death?"

"Yes, a matter of life and death," Paul answered slowly.

"Oh, very well. Then the old bill is dead, that's all. It's not a matter of question."

And Paul could picture Burke as with an incredulous sneer he hung up, and told the committee to clear out and go to bed.

He went back into the library and sat down by Louis and put his arm around his shoulder and reasoned with him as he had never in all the campaign reasoned with a political acquaintance for the purpose of winning his friendship.

He showed the boy clearly what it meant to him to lose an education, what a handicap it would be to him all his life if he

(Continued on page 13)

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison.

Mrs. Harrison will be glad to receive communications from any of her readers offering suggestions concerning woman's welfare, criticisms of articles or inquiries concerning any matters relevant to her department. She should be addressed directly at 530 Elm Tree Lane, Lexington, Ky.

THE JUNE GARDEN

As I have written of the gardens of the spring months, each one has seemed the most beautiful of all the year. Though the March Garden is but a garden of dreams, yet how full of hope and charm it is!—no blighting frosts, no wasting droughts, no ravening insects intrude upon our happy plans; and no flowers are as dear and perfect as the crocus, the daffodil, the narcissus, the hyacinths that make our April borders gay and glad. And May is surely the month of magic, with its wealth of hardy blooms, both of plant and shrub and tree. But just now, the June garden seems the most desirable and satisfying of all the floral calendar.

Month of Roses and Lilies.

Month of roses and lilies, sweetest flowers that blow, we salute thee! All the beloved family of climbers are in their full, consummate flower. The Baltimore belle and prairie queen, and all the rest of the old-fashioned roses have veiled many a porch and fence and trellis with their rich tapestry. I am sure there must have been millions of blooms on my fence rows from these faithful friends. But the old-fashioned climbers are eclipsed by the newer rambler types—especially, the crimson rambler, and the lovely pink Dorothy Perkins. Blessed be the florist who evolved them! They are not only so beautiful, but so reliable, and of such strong, luxuriant growth. We can count confidently on their doing their best every year—and their best is indeed a superlative; in several of the clusters on my ramblers, I counted as many as forty-five blooms, each one a perfect little rose. How I envy Dorothy Perkins—whoever she may be! I would rather have such a rose named for me than a battle ship, or a marble monument. The ramblers are the most democratic of roses. They are so cheap in cost and so easy of growth, that they are the joy of both cottage and mansion. One of the stately old homes of Lexington has its tall pillars draped in their pink and crimson glory, and many a little dwelling has its veranda transformed by them into a thing of beauty.

Inconsistency of Flower Lovers.

Did I say in a former garden talk that the rose was not the best porch climber, because it had many insect enemies, and because its season of bloom was short? I take it all back—at least until June is past; it would be rank treason for any flower lover to decry a rose in June. Do not tell me, consistency is a jewel; how can one's sense of floral values help but vary with the changing season? When one's heart "dances with the daffodils" at the beginning of the flower pageant there is no other blossom comparable to it in her affections. And when November's chill is lurking in the air, who would not swear that the chrysanthemum was the queenliest flower of them all!

Consider the Lilies.

June is certainly the time of times for considering the lilies. We have had the iris, the flame colored fire lilies, the golden lemon lilies, and now the candidum lilies are here in their white splendor. Surely, they are the aristocrats of the hardy garden—so stately on their tall, straight stems, so sumptuous in their shining beauty that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of them! And all the lilies, whether of May, or June, or midsummer, are not only stately and sumptuous, but are forever sacred, because our blessed Master used them to teach his lesson of immortal comfort, "If God so clothed them, shall He not also clothe you?"

I am cherishing an ambition to have lilies in my garden from spring to fall, and I believe it can be done by judicious selection and planting. Some day I shall try.

June Annuals.

As the bloom time of the hardy plants and shrubs passes, and becomes but a beautiful memory, the faithful little annuals come to console us. It seems but yesterday since I was breaking my back transplanting them, and now they are repaying me with abundant blossoms for my house, and my friends. For the law of the annuals changeth not; it is, "Cut my flowers, or I go to seed and die." As the grass is the type of humility, the more it is trampled the more it flourishes, so the flowering annual is the type of selfishness; it grows by giving. Once let the seed pods form on sweet peas or nasturtiums or any of their family, and you have sounded their death knell. Already my sweet peas furnish a daily bowl for the table and the poppies, the petunias, the pinks, the mignonettes, the nasturtiums are lovely to see. And they are but forerunners of a goodly company to come.

A June Garden in the Mountains.

This is the time of the year when the "impulse to the vernal wood" carries many of us to our Kentucky Mountains, which are but a short distance from Lexington. Two hours will transport us to a more beautiful garden than was ever planted by the hand of man. The flora of our state is of superb variety—the trees and plants of north and south meet and mingle here. We have both the limestone and the sandstone formation, with their different range of forest and flower. The laurel family will not flourish in the limestone soil of our blue grass section, so we have to visit the mountains to enjoy them. The azalea passed with May, and the mountain laurel is almost gone, but the rhododendron, most superb of all our flowering shrubs, is now entering on its season of beauty.

Up the Path.

One June day, our path up the mountain followed the course of a clear little stream, whose rapid flow downward put to shame our slow steps upward. It was bordered on its far side by a thick growth of rhododendrons, whose lustrous leaves, and waxen pink and white clusters of flowers made a hedge surpassing any ever planted in a king's pleasure grounds. All the way our hearts were singing praises to God for having put this glorious garden in the wilderness. What wealth and variety of ferns were there!—from the dainty maidenhair, with polished black stems and delicate fronds to the tall bracken; and overhead were endless successions of green arches made by interlacing branches of lofty and noble trees. What wonder that we longed to linger there indefinitely, and that one of the party, like Silas Wegg, could not resist dropping into poetry:

How we have learned to love this lovely place
Where summer reigns, without the summer's heat!
And now the time to part has come, how sweet
This grave, green wood, whose branches interlace
To make the shade, where ferns grow at the base
Of these tall cliffs; the rippling waters' beat
But makes the restful silence more complete,
While through the leaves come glimpses of heaven's face.

'Tis hard to seek the city's toil, and leave
This paradise of peace! but though to stream,
And wood, and mountain, we must say good-bye,
Yet whereso'er we go, we can believe
The uplifted eye can see the heaven's gleam—
O'er town and forest bends the same blue sky.

I. W. H.

Woman's Doings

—"The way to 'make good' is to go after what you want, and then stick to it," says Mrs. L. C. Harnsbarger, known as "The Oil Queen of the West." She departed from Washington several years ago to prospect for oil in the West, settled in Lander, Wyo., and today is one of the wealthiest women of the West. Recently, she was chosen vice-president of the oil interests of the Western oil field.

—Esther Harris, whose neck and back were broken in the fire at the Triangle shirtwaist factory in New York, has had a most wonderful recovery. The girl slid down the elevator cable when the fire panic raged, but was knocked from her hold by a man who jumped down the shaft. On top of her fell twenty other girls, many of whom were killed. After she had lain in a hospital unconscious for fourteen weeks with her life despaired of, she regained her senses, and the surgeons experimented by attaching weights to her head and legs to pull the fractured vertebrae back into place. The operation was successful, and it was learned last week that the young woman had been discharged as cured.

—By the election of Mrs. William Vaughn Moody, '76, of Chicago, to the board of trustees of Cornell University, the women graduates have regained representation on the board of trustees after several years. She polled 3,383 votes.

—A canvass of the senior class at Smith College has given the following statistics for the coming year: 142 will stay at home, 77 will teach, 25 will do graduate study at Columbia, University of Chicago, and other colleges, 15 will travel, six will do social work, five will do secretary work, five newspaper work, one library work, and 89 are undecided.

—Gilbert J. Walter, democratic national committeeman from Hawaii, who is en route to the Baltimore convention, carries with him a resolution asking for woman suffrage in Hawaii.

The High Calling

(Continued from page 11.)

did not have the schooling and culture that history and language and science stood ready to give. He pictured to Louis the tremendous advantages that go with education in the social life of the world and cited numerous instances in the range of his own experience to show Louis what a prize he was throwing away at the age of sixteen if he deliberately threw away the riches of mental power for the dirt of lust and mammon. He got hold of Louis as he never had before, because he divined the really impure and foolish motive the boy had for going into business, and as the minutes ticked into hours Louis gradually became convinced of certain things which he had only vaguely entertained so far.

In the first place he began to have a feeling that his father did care for him tremendously after all. Paul's absorption in politics for the last year had been so deep that, as has been said, he had neglected the boy's interests and had not paid attention to his frequent complaints and appeals. But now that the matter was squarely met, Louis knew from what he caught of the telephone dialogue that his father was neglecting a very important political affair to spend the entire evening with him. The thought added to the feeling he began to have of his father's real character. Then Louis had all his life had the greatest respect for his father's intellectual life and regarded it with admiration. He was fond of quoting him and there was no one in Milton who read Douglas's editorials more regularly and carefully than Louis.

And added to the rest that influenced him that night was the shame he began to feel that his father knew his real motive for wanting to leave the school and make money. He had become fascinated and led away by a certain set in the High School and he wanted to go with them, wear expensive clothes, frequent society functions and spend freely and get the reputation of a generous and even lavish giver. This he could not do with the allowance his father gave him, and he chafed under it foolishly. He had not supposed his father would detect his underlying motive in his longing to quit school and go into business. Now that he realized his father did understand it, he felt ashamed to continue his plea as he had first made it. At the end of the evening together, a certain definite agreement was reached between father and son.

Louis agreed to continue his studies for another year and do his best with those branches he found most difficult where he was not allowed to choose electives. His father agreed to study with him in a regular course, helping him through hard places, practically being his tutor and agreeing to give him all the time he needed in the evening. "And why not?" Paul kept asking almost with a sob as he noted the glow that was creeping back into Louis's eye, the glow of a new interest in study. "Why not? What shall it profit tne reformer if he reforms the whole state and loses his own children? I don't believe that even high-flown Patriotism requires such a sacrifice as that."

(To be continued.)

Little Bobbie swallowed a dime. His aunt and grandma went into hysterics, and screamed for somebody to run for a doctor. "Not the doctor, but the preacher," said Bobbie. "I heard my pa say that our preacher could get money out of folks when everybody else failed!"

Church Life

The Bolenge, Africa, missionaries report 520 baptisms in the year ending May 5. They are eagerly awaiting the visit of Secretary Corey, who is now enroute.

Indianapolis Disciple ministers held a picnic recently with their families at Brookside Park. A ball game was the feature of the day. The city papers showed pictures next day of "Rev. A. B. Philputt at bat."

President R. H. Crossfield reports that more than forty churches have responded to the appeal to help sustain more than fifty young men in Transylvania University in preparation for the ministry.

The church at Huron, S. Dak., will support an evangelist in the state who will give all his time to establishing the work in new fields. This church is less than two years old but has the missionary spirit.

Drake University conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon Rev. C. M. Chilton, pastor First Church, St. Joseph, Mo. Dr. Chilton is also president of the American Christian Missionary Society. He is an alumnus of Drake.

Middletown, Ky., church will be dedicated June 30. Robt. M. Hopkins, of Cincinnati, will have charge of the morning service and Linley Gordon, of Louisville, will preach the dedicatory sermon in the afternoon. J. J. Cole is the pastor.

The twenty-eighth annual convention of South Dakota churches was concluded June 9. Besides the leaders in the state speakers of national interest to Disciples appeared on the program. W. S. Elliott, corresponding secretary, writes optimistically of the outlook. G. W. Knight is state evangelist.

Bernard Gruenstein's successful pastorate at Selma, Ala., was terminated June 15. An interesting fact in connection with this pastorate is that of the ninety sermons preached during the past year seventeen were published in the daily press. Mr. Gruenstein has not located but desires to do so.

Lee Ferguson and his church at Prosser, Wash., will build a tabernacle and hold a meeting in August. Evangelist A. L. Crim and his company will lead. Mr. Ferguson is extending his influence constantly in the community as is indicated by the increased number of invitations he receives for special addresses.

Central Church, Youngstown, Ohio, William D. Ryan, pastor, will enlarge its building by an expenditure of $15,000. When finished it will be one of the most complete and adequate church houses in the city. It will be especially fitted to care for the great Sunday-school which Mr. Ryan has developed there.

The marriage of Miss Bertha Coop, daughter of Mr. J. Coop, of Southport, Eng., to Rev. R. G. Quiggin, Disciple minister at Birkenhead, is an event to which great interest attaches among the English churches. Many Americans will share their interest also. Mr. Quiggin is one of the most competent and brilliant British Disciple pastors.

E. P. Wise, of East Liverpool, Ohio, has been tendered a call to the pastorate of the church at Bethany, W. Va. Mr. Wise has been seven years in his present field and has just dedicated a $50,000 house of worship. He is strongly attracted by the invitation to be associated with the life of Bethany College but has not yet announced his decision.

On account of bronchial trouble, H. Erwin Stafford of First Church, Massillon, O., left June 14 for Vancouver, B. C., Canada, where he will remain during the summer. His congregation sent him on full salary to return at $300 increase. Walter M. Hanshalter of Yale University will supply his pulpit during his absence. First Church has had about 200 added since the first of the year. Seven were added on Mr. Stafford's last day.

L. C. Howe reports a thrilling experience on a recent Sunday at Mooreland, Ind., where he was supplying the pulpit for O. P. McMahon. While he was preaching a cyclone struck the town and did much damage all around the church, causing one fatality. The church house was not injured. Mr. Howe reports that he has delivered twenty special addresses in the past few weeks in and near Noblesville, his home.

C. C. Bentley of Orange, Calif., recently conducted a series of meetings at University Church, San Diego. A. Lyle DeJarnette, the pastor, says that Mr. Bentley's work is of a very superior kind and resulted in great good to the church. Central Church, San Diego, is making great strides forward under its popular leader W. E. Crabtree. It recently raised several thousand dollars to pay on the indebtedness on the new building. The church is growing near to the 1,000 mark in membership.

The mayor of the city and a half dozen ministers of other churches united with the Disciples congregation at Southport, Eng., to welcome their new pastor, George Walker Buckner, who recently went there from a long and fruitful pastorate in this country at Canton, Mo. Mr. Buckner's ministry starts off well in England. In an address Mr. J. Coop, one of the church's leaders, said that he was proving to be even better than his credentials. That is touching a high mark, certainly, for we know what some of his credentials said.

The annual meeting of First Church, Niles, O., was recently held, and the reports showed it the best year in the church's history. For the first time in eighteen years all indebtedness was paid. Over one hundred new members were added to the church. The Sunday-school average attendance was over 300. The church voted an increase in the pastor's salary. Their recent Sunday-school rally had 581 present, and an offering of $108.41. The church building is now being improved to give more room for Sunday-school work. The entire building will be refrescoed. Allan T. Gordon is pastor at Niles.

Richard W. Gentry has resigned his work as field secretary of the Bible College of Missouri to take the position of Director of Religious Education in Linwood Boulevard church, Kansas City of which Burris A. Jenkins is pastor. This church has a large Sunday-school with indefinite possibilities of growth both in numerical strength and in quality of instruction. Mr. Gentry was probably the first man to wear the title of Director of Religious Education, that position having been created for him at Monroe Street Church, Chicago, some years ago. At the present time there are a half hundred churches in the county with salaried leaders giving their time to this instructional ministry. Mr. Gentry's thorough university equipment rests upon a basis of practical good sense and is combined with a convincing personality which guarantees that something significant will issue from his new connection with the resourceful congregation on Linwood Boulevard.

Plans Aggressive Campaign

The Minnesota Convention was held June 3-5, at St. Paul, and was pronounced the most successful convention of many years. A new spirit seemed to prevail—a spirit of enterprise and newly consecrated zeal.

The needs of Minnesota seemed more apparent than ever before, and there seemed to be a general confidence among all the delegates that the Minnesota Disciples were able to cope with the situation. To this end plans were carefully formulated, and means carefully devised for doing aggressive work in this immense commonwealth. It was decided to put an evangelist in the field at once, to organize the state into districts and to lay special emphasis upon Bible-school work.

One feature that promises to be of special efficacy in this field is the plan of combining the next state convention with an eight-day institute to be held at one of Minnesota's beautiful outing places. This institute will embody a systematic Bible-school training, a course on practical church methods, and a chief speaker or lecturer, as well as the usual features of the state convention. It is felt that these plans will help to solve the difficulties that Minnesota is under, resulting from scattered membership, weak and isolated churches.

The attendance was excellent—twenty-seven churches being represented out of a total of forty-four. Forty persons attended outside the Twin Cities. The program was of the best. Among the speakers were Archibald McLean, Grant K. Lewis, A. C. Smither, Fred Kline, and D. E. Olson.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, Ray Hunt, Duluth; first vice-president, H. G. Connelly, Minneapolis; second vice-president, O. H. Loomis, Winona; corresponding secretary, H. D. Kitson, Minneapolis; treasurer, S. M. Waters, Minneapolis; auditor, F. H. Mellen, Minneapolis; superintendent of Bible-school, C. F. Martin, Redwood Falls; derictors, Chas. Oliver, M. R. Waters, J. J. Louis, Dr. D. O. Thomas, H. D. Kitson, Minneapolis, C. W. Barnes, W. L. Hackney, M. E. Lloyd, St. Paul, B. H. Coonradt, Rochester, H. W. Swanson, Forest Lake, Clyde Cordner, Duluth, A. J. Marshall, Nevis.

H. D. Kitson, Cor. Sec'y.

501 N. W. Bldg., Minneapolis, Minn.

The Voice of the Leaders

Finis Idleman, pastor Central Church, Des Moines, who made an appeal recently for $1,300 to pay the Disciples' apportionment on the running expenses of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, reports that $235 has been sent him. This amount comes mainly from individual givers, but a number of congregations are represented also. "I do think it is a shame," says Dr. E. L. Powell of Louisville, Ky., "that this money is not provided. I have been calling on several individuals to help me raise $25." "It will be a national disgrace," says Dr. J. M. Philputt of New York, "for us to fall down on this offering." "I enclose draft for $25," says Mr. C. C. Chapman of California. "I assure you of my willingness to join with you and others in carrying on what I trust will result in a larger and closer union of the churches." "It must seem to other bodies of Christians a very strange thing," says W. W. Sniff, of Paris, Ill., "that we should say so much in favor of Christian union and yet be so slow in making our financial contributions to the cause." Others write in similar vein. Many more gifts should be sent to Mr. Idleman at once.

Indiana Notes

Sixty-four churches sent in their offerings for Home Missions in May. This is twenty-two more than last year. Only one offering of more than $100 was received. Nearly all of the offerings were from the smaller churches. We expect many more in June. Last year, June was the best month but one. We trust that many of our strong churches will report in June.

The first meeting of the Board of Directors for this year was held on Monday, June 3. The new members of the board are S. A. Harker of Parker City, L. F. Drash of Evansville, John S. Zahn of Bedford, Robert N. Simpson of New Albany, O. O. Frazier of Morristown, L. M. Sniff of Angola. Fourteen of the twenty-one members of the board were present. In the organization W. H. Book was elected president, E. L. Day, vice-president; J. S. Hussey secretary, and U. C. Stover was re-elected treasurer. These with G. I. Hoover, M. T. Reeves and A. C. Ward, appointed by the president, constitute the Executive Committee which meets the first Monday of every month. The matter of establishing a church at Dunkirk and taking over the house of the Congregational people was discussed at length, but definite action was postponed. It was definitely decided, however, that we could not afford to purchase the building at this time. The request of the Calumet district that money raised from churches in the district for special work in the district be received by the board and appropriated as the district board should direct was granted.

The secretary has received awards of praise and appreciation for the concise, neat and well-arranged report of the proceedings of the recent annual convention at Hammond.

L. E. Murray, Sec'y.

Christian College Commencement.

Christian College, Columbia, Mo., closed its sixty-second annual session May 22, following a week of interesting programs and exhibits of the various schools—Art, Dramatic Art and Music—and the usual commencement exercises. Robert Graham Frank, of Liberty, Mo., preached the baccalaureate sermon at First Christian Church, the students appearing at the church in processional with white silk cap and gown. Dr. George H. Combs, of Kansas City, delivered the commencement address on "The Power and Uses of the Imagination." The annual report of the president, Mrs. Luella W. St. Clair-Moss, showed a steady increase in patronage and in gifts to the college, and a strengthening of the literary and special departments since her return to the administrative office in June 1909. A special meeting of the board of trustees was called for the formal acceptance of a gift of $25,000 on endowment. This, with $1,500 secured by the alumnae during the past year, is a substantial beginning on the proposed $100,000 for endowment needed for the proper conducting of the Junior College for women.

Following Dr. Combs' address on commencement day, President St. Clair-Moss closed with a brief talk on the growing opportunities for service by women, the need of woman's help in civic affairs and many other departments of life—all showing the need of better education for girls. President St. Clair-Moss presented the medals, certificates, and then the diplomas, to thirty-one graduates, twenty from the literary department, seven in music and four in expression.

Transylvania University Commencement.

The one hundred and fourteenth annual commencement of Transylvania University and the forty-seventh annual commencement of the College of the Bible were held in Morrison Chapel, Lexington, Ky., on June 13th, the occasion proving one of the most enthusiastic and satisfactory in the history of these institutions.

Hamilton College, a part of the university organization, ranking as a junior college for women, closed its session with appropriate exercises, on the evening of the preceding day. These exercises were attended by a large audience of alumni and interested friends, and were held in the Opera House. Hamilton College had twenty-two graduates, representing sixteen states. President H. G. Shearin reported a most successful year, with 279 in attendance. Of this number, 131 boarded in the school. Dr. George Hamilton Combs, of Kansas City, gave the address, on the subject, "The Value and Uses of the Imagination." The address was brilliant.

In the College of Liberal Arts, eleven received the baccalaureate degree and three the master's degree. In the law school, three received the LL. B. degree. There were nine graduates in the College of the Bible, five in the classical course, and four in the English. It was announced by the president that this was the first time in the history of the College of the Bible when the classical graduates outnumbered those in the English course. The valedictory of the university was given by Miss Lulu Snyder, of Muncie, Indiana, and that of the College of Bible by Mr. Charles Lynn Pyatt, of Jacksonville, Illinois. A number of these graduates will enter Yale and other universities in the autumn to study for the Ph. D. degree.

The graduating address was delivered by Dr. Combs, who spoke for Hamilton the previous evening. He discussed in a most masterly way, "Our Ancestors Completed In Us." This address reached the depths of thinking and the heights of true eloquence, and was pronounced second to no similar address heard recently in Lexington.

Announcement was made that the vacancy in the department of Biology, caused by the resignation of Professor C. A. Shull, had been filled by the appointment of Professor Ansel F. Hemenway. Mr. Hemenway made his Bachelor's degree in the University of Oregon, his Master's degree in Harvard, and will receive the Ph. D. degree in the University of Chicago this month. He has had successful teaching experience.

The chair made vacant in the College of the Bible one year ago by the resignation of Professor W. C. Morro, will be occupied by Professor A. W. Fortune, of Cincinnati. Mr. Fortune is a graduate of Hiram, studied in Rochester Theological Seminary, received the B. D. degree from the University of Chicago, and will make the Ph. D. degree in the latter institution in August.

Transylvania University and the College of the Bible expect to enter upon another financial campaign in July. One hundred thousand dollars is to be raised for buildings and improvements, and $200,000 for endowment purposes. Encouraged by the success of the recent campaign for $250,000, we confidently expect to secure the $300,000 imperatively needed to make the colleges capable of largest usefulness.

R. H. Crossfield.

Lexington, Ky.

Illinois

The men of First Church, Quincy, gave a reception to their new pastor, J. M. Rudy.

The convention of the Seventh District met in Olney last week, June 19-21.

Frank H. Vernor, who has been pastor at Homer, has accepted a call and begun his work at Georgetown.

W. B. Hopper, pastor of Bethany Church, was the orator on Decoration Day and delivered the Memorial sermon for the Oddfellows in his home city.

The first Sunday in June there were five additions at Princeton, where Cecil C. Carpenter ministers. Two of these additions were on profession of faith.

Granite City Church has extended a call to I. W. Lowman, who has recently been preacher at Overland, Missouri. It is understood that the call has been accepted.

Fred A. Gallagar has resigned the pulpit of East Side Church, Decatur, and is reported to have accepted the pastorate at Mt. Auburn, to begin the latter ministry immediately.

Table Grove Church will celebrate its sixty-first aniversary Sunday, June 30. R. P. Shepherd, of St. Louis, Mo., and Secretary J. Fred Jones, of Bloomington, are the speakers announced.

At Mt. Pulaski there have been seventy additions to the congregation during the first year of the pastorate of J. Newton Cloe. Mr. Cloe has indicated his intention to remain a second year with the church.

Frank B. Thomas, who has been pastor for several years at Mattoon and during whose pastorate a large number of additions have been received to the church without outside help, has resigned to enter the evangelistic work. His pastorate at Mattoon will be concluded the first of September.

One of the large art glass windows in the new Normal Church is to be a memorial in honor of the deceased pastor, J. H. Gilliland. The glass for this building is being furnished by the Kinsella Art Glass Company of Chicago. No announcement has yet been made regarding the date for dedication, Elmore Sinclair has been in demand for extra addresses during recent weeks, having delivered commencement addresses at Iroquois, Woodland and Markington, and baccalaureate addresses at Gilman and Watseka, the latter his home city. In addition to these, he was the orator on Decoration Day at Loda and Lyman.

Among the Illinois Sunday-school contributions for foreign missions on Children's Day, are reported: Gibson City, $100; Stanford, ninety-two dollars; Waggoner, twenty-two dollars; Mattoon, $107; Denver, sixty-six dollars; Grayville, $17.30; Concord, $36.65; Latham, $26.82; Bellflower, 43.35. Nearly all of these were a large increase over the offerings for previous years.

Fred S. Nichols, formerly pastor of Table Grove Church and more recently of New York, will act as supply pastor for First Church, Bloomington, during the vacation of Edgar D. Jones, in the months of July and August. Mr. Nichols has been studying for the past year in Columbia University. The Bloomington pastor, Mr. Jones, will spend his vacation in Kentucky, at Erlanger.

Secretary's Letter.

Oliver W. Jennings, of Granite City, has entered the general evangelistic field. His address is Belleville, Ill.

First Church, Bloomington, raised about $850 in their missionary rally June 16. This does not include the $600 raised by the C. W. B. M.

A. E. Underwood has closed his work at Chapin and is ready for another pastorate, or will do supply work or hold meetings.

Round up your May offering soon as possible and send it to the A. C. M. S. office, Cincinnati, Ohio. Make it large, equal to both the home and state offerings, then you will not be asked for the November offering. Of course this takes it for granted that you made a creditable offering for both home and state work last year.

It will soon be too late to get your statistical report in the Year Book and we urge our preachers and church clerks to see that the report card has been mailed to us.

F. L. Starbuck who preaches for McLean and Shirley is planning to take a delegation to the national convention from these two churches that will fill a sleeping car.

The program for the Illinois convention is in the hands of the printer. It is one of the best in recent years and it is predicted that the attendance will be very large. Southern Illinois will take a special interest, as it comes into their midst, and the whole state will be glad to go down into "Egypt" to enjoy the feast and fellowship. The date is September 2-5. The place is Centralia, where A. L. Huff is pastor. Make your plans to be there with a good delegation.

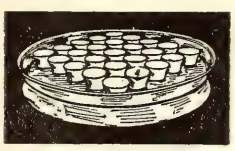
W. D. DEWEESE, Office Sec'y-Treas.
J. FRED JONES, Field Secretary.

Eureka College

At Eureka College commencement eighteen persons received the bachelor's degree, two received diplomas from the school of music and three from the commercial department. Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, of Kansas City, preached the baccalaureate sermon. On the following Thursday the new president, Charles E. Underwood, was formally installed, Dr. J. H. Garrison, of St. Louis, delivering the address. This was followed by Doctor Underwood's inaugural address treating of the distinctive place of the church college. On Friday the commencement address was delivered by Prof. Edward A. Ross, of the University of Wisconsin, on "Sub-surface Tendencies in American Civilization."

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 27
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE INDIVIDUAL
"Noiseless"
CUSHIONED TRAYS
4 Different Features
WHY?
1st—"Noiseless"—As all cup holes are cushioned.
2nd—Dust-proof—The Trays interlock.
3rd—A short glass—no need of tipping back the head.
4th—Automatic Filler—Fills rapidly and evenly.
Does not mar the sacredness of the service.
Write for booklet. Outfit sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 E. Randolph St., Dept. T., Chicago.



Drake University
Des Moines, Iowa.
COLLEGE OF LIBERAL ARTS.
Four-year courses, based upon four-year high school courses, leading to the degree of A. B., Ph. B., S. B. In the School of Education, included in this college, are courses for Students in Domestic Science.
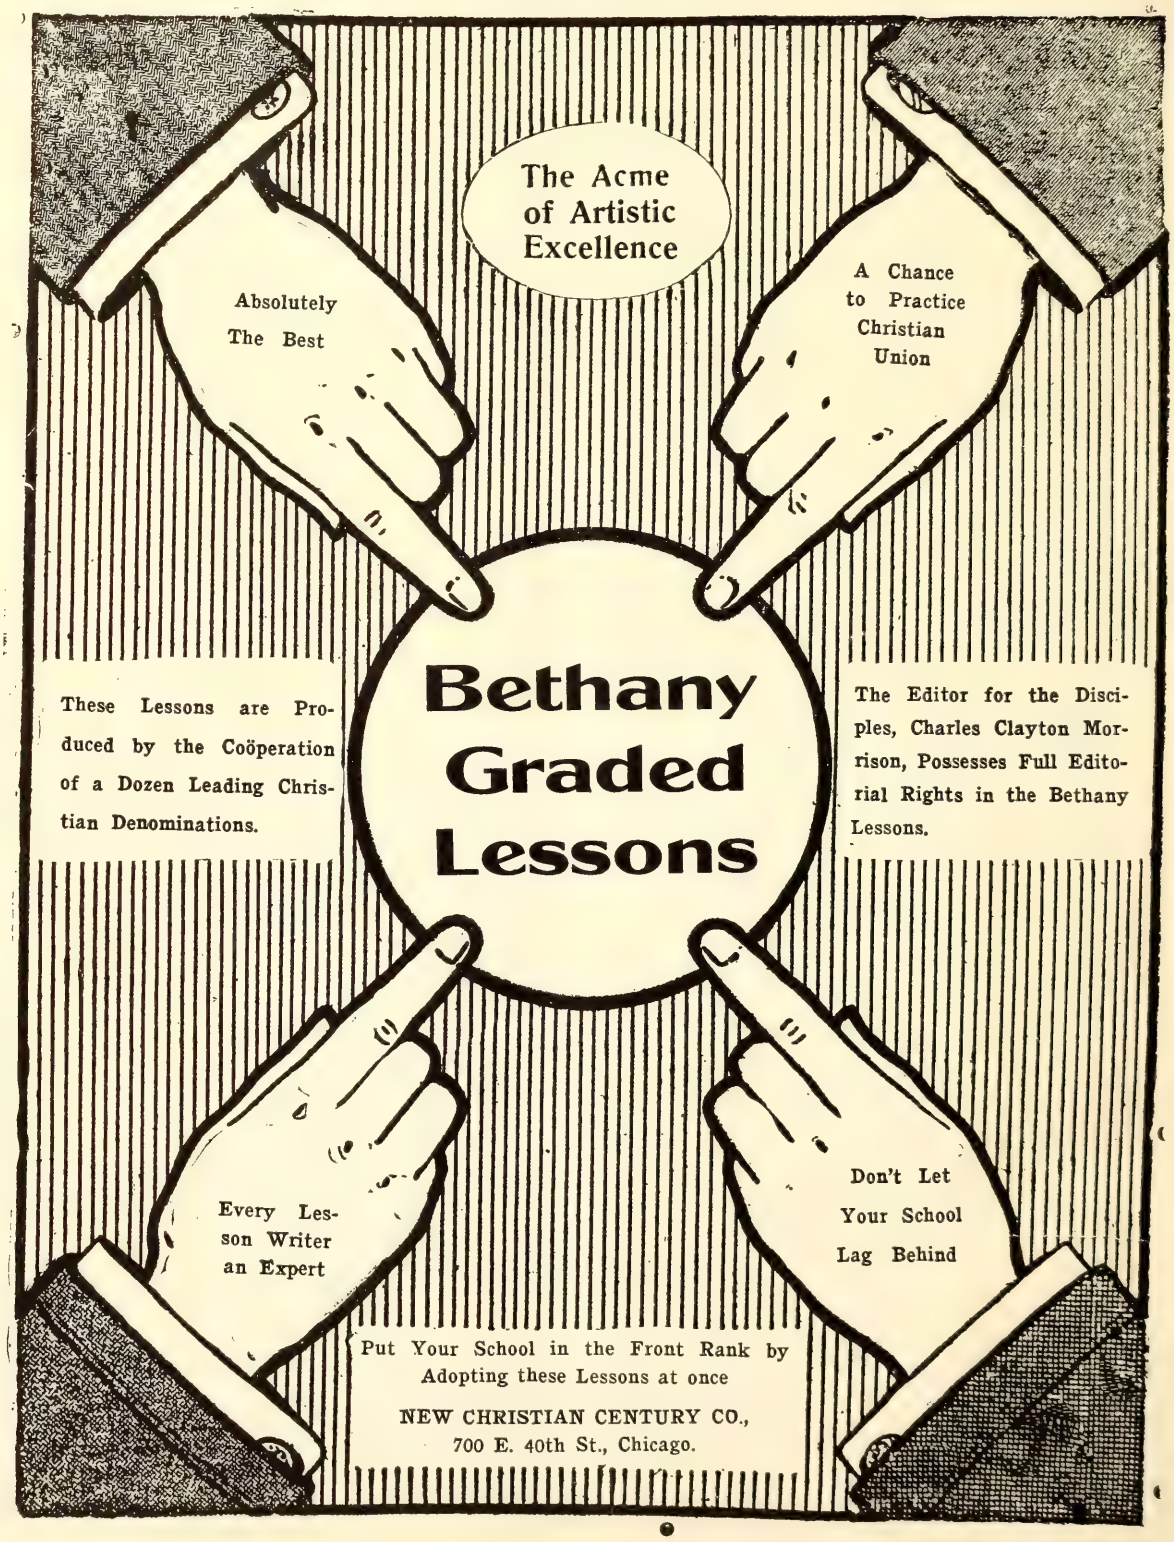
Primary Teachers.
Kindergarten Teachers.
Grade Teachers.
High School Teachers.
COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE.
Graduate course, requiring three years' work, leading to degree of D. B.
COLLEGE OF LAW.
Three-year course, based on four-year high school course, leading to degree of L.L. B.
COLLEGE OF MEDICINE.
Four-year course, based on four-year high school course and two full years in college, leading to the degree of M. D.
COLLEGE OF DENTISTRY.
Three-year course, based on four-year high school course, leading to the degree of D. D. S.
INSTITUTE OF FINE ARTS.
Special courses, based upon such preparation as best fits the student to pursue the study of his chosen course most profitably. The Institute of Fine Arts includes three distinct departments:
Conservatory of Music.
School of Painting and Drawing.
School of Dramatic Art.
For catalogue and other information, address,
THE PRESIDENT,
DRAKE UNIVERSITY,
Des Moines, Iowa.

WILLIAM WOODS College
School where girls WHO KNOW want to go
FULTON, MO.
Girls do NOT miss the College Flavor here.
Our illustrated, interesting new catalogue tells all the story. Ask for it.
Address: J. L. Garvin, President Box C
Chartered Controlled by Christian Church

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
An Up-to-Date College for Young Women
CAMDEN POINT, MISSOURI
COURSES:
College Preparatory Bible
Normal, Music
Elocution
Physical Culture
COMMODIOUS BUILDING:
New Addition to Building
New Gymnasium
Steam Heated, Acetylene Lighted, Large Campus
TUITION REASONABLE AND RIGHT—SEND FOR CATALOGUE
Sixty-fourth Year Opens in September
FRANK G. RICHARD, President

An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women
SIXTY-SECOND YEAR
Christian College
Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $36,000 building, completed. 25 College-trained, experienced teachers. Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior college course leads to an A. B. degree. College-preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character-training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field. Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern colleges. For illustrated catalogue address
MRS. LUELLA W. ST. CLAIR-MOSS, President, COLUMBIA, MO.
Next Session begins September 17th.



The Acme of Artistic Excellence
Absolutely The Best
A Chance to Practice Christian Union
Bethany Graded Lessons
These Lessons are Produced by the Coöperation of a Dozen Leading Christian Denominations.
The Editor for the Disciples, Charles Clayton Morrison, Possesses Full Editorial Rights in the Bethany Lessons.
Every Lesson Writer an Expert
Don't Let Your School Lag Behind
Put Your School in the Front Rank by Adopting these Lessons at once
NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.,
700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Sharp Rev C M Dec
5352 Kimbark Ave

Vol. XXIX July 4, 1912 Number 27

THE LARGER LIFE
BY WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

THE VISION FACULTY
BY H. D. C. MACLACHLAN

OUR POLITICAL UNREST
BY ORVIS F. JORDAN

CHICAGO

Topics of the Times

New York may not be so good to its older citizens, but it is kind to its infant population. The big town leads the whole world as a city where private enterprise provides for fresh air homes and outings for the poor children. This year, $500,000 will be spent in manning, provisioning, and otherwise administering the sixty-eight breathing spots in the state and at nearby sections, where the little tots who now are not infrequently compelled to sleep six and seven in a room, will get an opportunity to expand their lungs in the free air and light of heaven. These fresh-air homes on seaboard and hillside are not, however, the only places where the children may be released from the awful conditions in which their daily lives are spent. Many of these sixty-eight places are supported by private individuals, churches, or societies, whose aim and intent is the alleviation of the infant population. In one such institution alone, the appropriation for the care of children during the summer months has been set at $150,000. Another such institution, whose province includes convalescent children as well as those who are suffering for want of a breath of air, plans to spend $50,000 in the summer months on the three homes which it maintains. There are 117 homes and camps maintained by seventy-six agencies which offer recreational opportunities for the summer. The total capacity of these homes and camps is 8,095. The average length of season is about eleven weeks, although some of the homes are kept open six months. The average length of stay per child is a little less than two weeks. The total number of children served last year was a trifle more than 80,000, and with the increased facilities for this summer, it is estimated that fully 100,000 children will be given from a week to ten days' vacation at the seashore or the mountains.

That street-cars can be run successfully on the basis of a three-cent fare is made very evident by a recent report from Cleveland, O. All records of earning under three-cent fare were smashed in that city during May. The report submitted to the directors showed an actual surplus of $32,000. The book surplus was $34,000. According to the daily press, even the president gasped with astonishment when he scanned the figures. A small deficit had been expected. The highest previous earnings of the lines in a single month was an actual surplus of $14,000, made in March. The book surplus that month was only $23,000. In April, there was a deficit of $23,000, and a book deficit of $26,000. May earnings indicate three-cent fare is assured for the rest of the year. The interest fund now stands at $440,000, or $140,000 removed from return to the penny transfer charge.

Baroness von Suttner, the peace advocate, now in this country, has issued a printed protest against the "barbarizing of the air" by the military air fleets. She appeals to the nations in the name of common sense and mercy, and in the name of human genius, higher civilization and God to call a conference of the powers to renew The Hague agreement prohibiting aerial war engines, at least to the extent of dropping explosives. Her appeal is signed by many prominent people. Baroness von Suttner emphasizes the fact that the tremendous rivalry for the creation of immense air fleets is of a wholly military purpose. She pictures the devastation which would be caused by the extension of the war zone to the land, sea, and air with dramatic intensity.

China has at last received a big loan and reorganization seems to have been made possible by a complete understanding reached by bankers representing the United States, Great Britain, Germany, France, Russia, and Japan, to lend China $300,000,000. Russia joined the five other powers in acquiescing in the agreement, but stipulated a slight change in the original formula. This was quickly accepted by all the powers, including the United States. It is understood that Russia and Japan specifically reserved the right to withdraw from participation in the loan at any time should they decide their special political interests in China had become jeopardized. Russia and Japan tried to exact an agreement that the loan should not be applied in any way likely to compromise their interests. The four other powers refused to agree to this. It is understood the final agreement was restricted to the financing of China, all political questions as such being left to the powers.

WILLIAM WOODS College
School where girls WHO KNOW want to go FULTON, MO.
Girls do NOT miss the College Flavor here.
Our illustrated, interesting new catalogue tells all the story. Ask for it.
Address: J. L. Garvin, President Box C
Chartered Controlled by Christian Church

1869 — HAMILTON COLLEGE FOR WOMEN — 1912
LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.
HUBERT GIBSON SHEARIN, A. M., Ph. D. (Yale), President.
Standardized Junior College courses under a faculty of twenty-nine, all graduates of leading American and European institutions. Faculty of seven for Music, Expression and Art.
Five modern buildings. Complete gymnasium, laboratories and libraries. Home care. Delightful dormitories. Cultural surroundings and scholarly ideals.
The forty-fourth session begins September 9, 1911. For catalogue T address THE SECRETARY.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
An Up-to-Date College for Young Women
CAMDEN POINT, MISSOURI
COURSES: College Preparatory Bible, Normal, Music, Elocution, Physical Culture
COMMODIOUS BUILDING: New Addition to Building, New Gymnasium, Steam Heated, Acetylene Lighted, Large Campus
TUITION REASONABLE AND RIGHT—SEND FOR CATALOGUE
Sixty-fourth Year Opens in September FRANK G. RICHARD, President

An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women SIXTY-SECOND YEAR
Christian College
Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $36,000 building, completed. 25 College-trained, experienced teachers. Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior college course leads to an A. B. degree. College-preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character-training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field. Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern colleges. For illustrated catalogue address
MRS. LUELLA W. ST. CLAIR-MOSS, President, COLUMBIA, MO.
Next Session begins September 17th.

How About Attending College This Year?
We want the name of every young man and every young woman who is considering this most important question. We believe we can show them that
DRAKE UNIVERSITY
Offers Great Advantages
It is located in the best residence district in Des Moines—the best city in the West. Surroundings clean and wholesome. Good influences surround the boy or girl who attends Drake University.
Courses of Study: Liberal Arts (including Courses for Primary, Kindergarten, Grade and High School Teachers and Students in Domestic Science), Law, Medicine, Dentistry, Bible, Music, Painting and Drawing, Dramatic Art, Etc. Thoroughly prepared teachers in all departments. The best of equipment. The Drake Stadium, one of the finest athletic fields in the country.
Write for catalogue and full particulars. Any question you may desire to ask will be answered cheerfully.
HILL M. BELL, President,
Drake University. Des Moines, Iowa

The Christian Century

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT . . . . . EDITORS

The Vision Faculty

FAITH MAKES THE UNSEEN SEEN. The things that count for most in life are just these unseen things. God is the greatest of all realities, but He is invisible to the eye of sense. "No man hath seen God at any time." The most compelling of all voices is that of conscience—unheard by the physical ear. The most pervasive is that of God's spirit—unfelt by the physical touch. Faith, hope, love, friendship, justice, peace and truth, are ideals—unseen realities.

No man ever handled honor or weighed it in a balance, but it has influenced the course of history more than all the money markets of the world. That which makes home dear to us is not its brick and mortar, furniture and furnishings—not its seen things at all. The unseen presences of its family affection—its common hopes and fears, struggles, defeats and victories—it is these that make it home to us.

* * *

It is just the supreme office of faith to make visible and tangible these unseen realities. There are two universes in which men may live, must live, namely, the seen and the unseen, the spiritual and the natural the temporal and the eternal. One is the universe of present values, the environment of earth, the conditions under which we live and move as creatures of sense and time. The other is the universe of eternal values, the environment of those spiritual realities that alone give worth and meaning to the things of sense.

And the great task of faith is to unify these two worlds. It is the faculty whereby we can live at once in both of them; whereby we can build houses—seen things—to God's glory—a thing unseen; whereby we can make money—a thing tangible—in order to advance the kingdom of righteousness—a thing intangible; whereby we can play our part in the citizenship of earth—a temporal concern—in order that we may receive the freedom of the city supernal—that city without foundation whose builder and maker is God.

* * *

Faith sees visions. It is conscious of powers and presences to which the natural man is blind and deaf. It has its tranfiguration moments when the gates of the spiritual world are opened and the glory yet to be revealed becomes manifest, palpable. Said his servant to Elisha when the Syrians were besieging the city; "My master what shall we do?" But the man of faith had seen the hosts of God encompassing the city and set for his defense, and his answer was: "Fear not, for they that are with us are more than they that be with them."

That was faith. Faith transfigures the world. It sees things otherwise than by physical sight. It is the poetry of the soul.

As the poet takes the common fact of life—a daisy in the furrow, a beggar by the wayside—and irradiating it with his own spirit of beauty, makes it a new and more living thing for all time to come, so faith takes the same facts—the obscure, ugly, mean facts as well as the grand and beautiful ones—and makes them shine with an inner light that gives them new meaning and value forevermore.

The brute facts of life are like the stained glass of the cathedral windows by night—a dull, heavy, blind and speechless thing: the same facts irradiated by faith are like that same glass stained with the glory of the setting sun. To the eye of sense this world is a mere stage for the play of soulless laws and forces, brutal in their very inerrancy. To the eye of faith it is a temple of the eternal Love, which counts the very hairs of our heads and lets not even a sparrow fall to the ground "without our Father."

* * *

Yes, the eternal Love is here, could we but see Him. His voice is in the waters could we but hear Him. His footprints are on the "sands of time" could we but trace them. The world is His temple, the soul His inner shrine.

"The drift of pinions would we harken,
Beats at our own clay-shuttered doors.

The angels keep their ancient places;
Turn but a stone and start a wing.

'Tis ye, 'tis your estranged face,
That miss the many-splendored thing.

But (when so sad thou can'st not sadder)
Cry—and upon that so sore loss,

Shall shine the traffic of Jacob's ladder
Pitched between heaven and Charing Cross.

Yea, in the night, my soul, my daughter
Cry,—clinging heaven by the hems;

And lo, Christ walking on the water
Not of Gennersareth but Thames."

The story of Helen Keller, the blind, deaf and dumb girl to whom only one sense was left, the sense of touch, is wondrously revealing. Through the education of that one sense she has learned, if not to hear and see, at least to speak, and to accomplish greater things in the world of sound and sight than most of her sisters endowed with both senses.

* * *

It is a parable of faith. What the sense of touch is to Helen Keller faith is to the human soul. It is the faculty of soul-touch; it brings the soul into contact with realities which it cannot see with the physical eye and makes them so real to it that they, and not the things actually seen, are the controlling power of its life.

Blessed is he whose life is thus controlled, who follows the light that never was on sea or land, who communes daily with the unseen God and the unseen Christ, for whom

"The spirit world around the world of sense
Floats like an atmosphere;
Wafts through these earthly mists and vapors dense
A vital breath of more etherial air."

—H. D. C. MACLACHLAN.

Social Survey

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN.

The Political Unrest

The Republican convention has passed and its history of division and strife is known to all. The Democratic convention is at this minute in session and while desperate efforts are being made to maintain party harmony, it is evident to all that there is the same line of cleavage in the Democratic party that there is in the Republican party and over the very same issues. To some it will appear that a summer hysteria has come over the nation. To others it will be apparent that deep-seated causes lie beneath all this agitation.

It was once correct to speak of party enthusiasm. It is a common place of our day that the people distrust and in many cases despise both the historic parties in America. The enthusiasm of the old torch-light days has gone. Hired rooters attend conventions and rallies to furnish the "rousements" for the people have long since come to be cold and critical. The discontent is by some assumed to be due to the corruption that is proven to exist in political life. While bribery has come to be common it is not yet universal and yet the people are not enthusing even towards our politicians of unimpeachable honesty.

The truth is, the American people hate the hypocrisy of the present parties. At the opening of the Democratic convention, Alton B. Parker declared himself a progressive, and insisted that all Democrats are progressives. This is known by us all to be mere campaign oratory. In the Republican convention the same hypocritical kind of handling of issues could be observed.

Long since, the average American has forgotten the historic meaning of the two dominant parties. They are supposed to differ fundamentally upon the doctrine of states' rights, the tariff ,and a number of other matters. Yet it is well known to all of us that Democrats vote for laws that contravene the doctrine of states' rights and Republicans are in many cases inconsistent with the doctrine of the protective tariff.

The difference between the average Democrat and the average Republican is simply the difference between those who are in and those who are out. In England and Germany party lines correspond to the real issues. England has a conservative party and a liberal party. There is no hypocrisy about their respective holdings. When the people vote for a party nominee, they know just what they are getting. The party name is an insignia of the party principles. In England where there is frank handling of political issues, there is still party loyalty and party enthusiasm.

Belated Reforms in America

The voice of the insurgent in both parties has sounded to some like anarchistic rantings. The progressives have been hunted in some cases to their political death, but they still persist for the reason that their contention remains. It is not known by many of our citizens that the great modern movement for popular rights is more belated in this country than in any other great civilized land of earth.

We blush that the descendants of the brave men who framed our constitution are compelled thus to admit their sloth and indifference to progress. In England our so-called insurgency, our progressive doctrines, would many of them sound tame enough to be branded as conservative. They have just enacted a far-reaching old-age pension bill which had the support of both parties.

In Germany long since they have had employers' liability laws. In New Zealand they have compulsory arbitration of labor disputes. Even in Australia there are many progressive measures which our citizens will eventually copy. In conservative Canada we find the conservatives in certain sections championing the Single-Tax while we still shiver at the mere mention.

There are but few things of which we can boast which mark us as a member of the family of modern nations. The progressives in politics have only begun the fight for popular rights and already they are nearly a whole generation behind the other civilized nations. The same forces that brought victory to the other progressive countries will bring it here. Yet the corporation magnate with his characteristic blindness hopes to frustrate the workings of historic forces and set back the hands of progress.

The real issue then in our political life is the issue of the human reforms. Beside these the question of the proper amount of tariff to place on log-chains dwindles into insignificance. Our old questions are to be interpreted from this new human view-point. We are not to be concerned henceforth as to the effect of the tariff on business but its effect on people.

When we view it thus the protection to such infant industries as steel and sugar must cease. We will set to work to give men somewhere near their fair share in modern industrial operations. The weak will be protected against the cunning and cruelty of the strong. We will be talking of the problems of childhood, of industrial insurance, of old-age pensions. We will come to be disturbed over the waste of human life as well as over the waste of material things.

I have just finished reading a great national platform. I am impressed that it was written by business men for business men to fool the people. It touches practically none of the burning, human problems. In politics, the age of the business man is passing. The day of the human reformer is near at hand. We may usher in our reforms by means of the Socialist party if the corporation magnates are blind enough to compel it but it seems rather probable that these reforms will come from a new political movement less doctrinaire and visionary than Socialism.

What Might Happen in Politics

What is to happen to each of the old parties is impossible to prophesy at this moment. It seems inevitable, however, that they will either become, one a conservative party, and the other a progressive, or that they will completely distintegrate and make place for a new alignment. Roosevelt is just now promising a new political movement. It is rumored that he cannot secure the proper financial backing. The Democrats may not split this year. They may nominate a conservative on a liberal platform and defeat a conservative on a conservative platform. They would then fail to live up to their platform and at the end of four years disintegrate as will the Republicans this year, as some think.

Meanwhile the mugwump, once the despised pariah of all parties is our savior. Only his independency can save us from the hypocritical hiding of the real issues by professional politicians. This must be a year when every voter who senses the historical movements at work should vote for the big human interests wherever he has opportunity. The day of our redemption is drawing near.

The Difficulty of True Democracy in America

Our material prosperity has created many of our problems. In our present political situation we have a senator on trial for alleged buying of his senatorial office. We have just acquitted an aged senator held on the same charge. We have thought to bring true democracy into politics by direct election of senators and by the direct primary.

Both of these excellent devices are capable of abuse and must have reinforcement. This year for the first we have had direct primaries on the matter of presidential candidates in eleven states. It is estimated that in each of these states presidential candidates spent money by the hundreds of thousands of dollars. Since the money is not put up by the party organizations, it is put up by the individual friends of the candidates and insures that every candidate for the presidency must strike a bargain with some plutocrat.

The new system without the safeguard of limiting campaign expenses would be a greater hazard than the old. Newspapers are now bought up by blocks. We will only exchange masters if millionaire newspaper owners supersede the bosses of the great cities as our masters. The country is so large that it is hard to know the merits of the individual candidates. The journals are many of them selling their editorial columns. We shall have only just so much democracy in our political life as we shall fight for.

They tell us that in some trackless lands, when one friend passes through the pathless forest, he breaks a twig ever and anon as he goes, that those who come after may see the traces of his having been there, and may know that they are not off the road. O, when we are journeying through the murky night, and the dark woods of affliction and sorrow, it is something to find here and there a spray broken, or a leafy stem bent down with the tread of His foot, and the brush of His hand as He passed; and to remember the path He trod He has hallowed, and that there are lingering fragrances and hidden strength in the remembrance "in all points, tempted as we are," bearing grief for us, bearing grief with us, bearing grief like us.—Dr. Maclaren.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Union of the Presbyterian Family

At the national gatherings of the Presbyterians in the past few months, overtures were made and considered in behalf of union among the different branches of that household of faith. It does seem within the bounds of possibility that before many years these members of the one household can be brought into harmony, and thereby set an example which those whose differences are much greater than those of this historic body, will be likely to follow. To all who have given this subject any attention, the wonder has ever been, not that the different sections of Presbyterianism should come together, but that they should remain apart. The consolidation of the different branches of Methodism in Canada several years ago has been attended with the most gratifying results. It would be a signal victory for the cause of union if our Presbyterian brethren could give the world another demonstration of the possibility and fruitfulness of a united household of faith. We are indebted to the Congregationalist for the following:

Presbyterians adhere steadfastly to their purpose to bring about a union of the denominations belonging to their own ecclesiastical household. They refuse to permit their enthusiasm for this great and righteous cause to be chilled by those unlovely things which attended their union with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Negotiations with the Reformed Church in the United States (the German Reformed Church) are going forward with good promise of the coveted result. This fine body of German-American Christians numbers upwards of three hundred thousand communicant members, and with a Sunday-school enrollment which exceeds that of the church members by some twenty thousand. The friends of organic union with this and other churches of similar order exhibited great boldness in declaring their convictions in the recent General Assembly at Louisville. And well they may do so, for these convictions are finding crystallization in a definite policy. While there was no formal discussion of the question of union between the Northern and Southern Churches, the men who made up this German Assembly did not hesitate to express in private the ardent desire of their hearts for such a consummation. The fraternity between them and their Southern brethren who were largely represented in Louisville was delightful and highly promotive of what appears to be manifest ecclesiastical destiny. Another chapter of this same sort will be written next year at Atlanta, whither the Assembly goes to join the assemblies of the Southern, the United and the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Churches in a festival of fraternity under Southern skies.

The Ministerial Dead Line

The Congregationalist and Christian World has an able editorial in a recent issue on the above subject from which we make a few extracts. The following are so sane and comprehensive that we pass them on to our readers. The dead line may be a matters of years, but it is also a matter of yearnings; it may be that the churches prefer the budding youth to the withered veteran, but the only hope is that the veteran shall preserve the bloom of youth. There are many fine suggestions as to how this may be done in the editorial which we gladly pass on to our readers.

But leaving this for the present we want to say a word about the dead-line in the ministry. There is no doubt that the average church, seeking a pastor, instinctively turns to find a young man. Of course many churches, after serious reflection do call older men. There have been some notable instances of this, but almost always where it has happened it has been where the man was famous or known for his youth of mind and soul. Frequently the request is for a young man—perhaps a callow youth just from the seminary who has nothing but years to recommend him. Why this paradoxical and seemingly illogical desire? Simply this, we believe. The average church wants in its pastor not experience first, not knowledge first, not good sermons first, but vision, optimism, faith in the eternal goodness of the world, enthusiasm of humanity, above all the prophetic gift. Now these are all youthful qualities. They are not necessarily associated with young men, but most young men have them, a good many men lose them by fifty, and perhaps few old men retain them. Some old men do, and these are the men with whom one does not associate age.

We are not saying that the fault is always with the preacher, nor that many churches would not still prefer the young man in years when there was an old man with youth of mind and spirit. But we are sure that the reason why the churches seek young men is this which we have given, and we sometimes wonder whether fewer ministers would not reach the dead-line at forty or fifty if they grew younger then than they had been at twenty-five.

A man of sixty-four not long since read a paper bemoaning the fact that no church seemed to desire him, although he was hale and anxious to preach. But three pages of his paper were enough to tell the reason why. He used a terminology which even to some of the ministers present meant nothing, it was so outgrown. His words could have meant little to the modern man. He evidently had not read a book written since 1870. He had caught no single note of the modern social passion, and apparently dreaded it. His message was addressed to a generation that is gone. What would a congregation do if it had to sit under that preaching week after week? And yet this man was constantly scolding the churches for preferring young men. We have in mind other men of this age who are vainly seeking churches—men of pessimistic mood who cannot see that the eternal gospel is not bound forever to the same channel in its flowing or to the same form of church activity in its expression. We can hardly wonder, therefore, why sometimes the church fears old men and calls ignorant but prophetic youth. Where there is prophecy, knowledge will come. But knowledge without prophecy is tame.

One closing word is in the nature of suggestion to the young men now in our ministry. Above all things, keep your youth of mind and heart. Read the great books, new as well as old, and keep in touch with the advancing thought of the world. Do not fear it, even though you may not agree with it all. Keep something of the zest in your reading that the explorer feels who seeks new worlds. It used to be said in New Haven, "If you want to know the last great book of theology, philosophy or literature from Europe, look on Munger's desk." But Dr. Munger's last sermon was that of a young man just beginning to preach.

Keep in touch with the great movements that today are moving like God's breath on the face of the earth, feel those new yearnings that are swelling through the breast of humanity and mankind. How splendid it was to hear Washington Gladden not long ago in a great sermon in Brooklyn sing the death knell of militarism and proclaim the new order of Christ's Kingdom based on justice, good will and kinship of all human souls in Christ! Who dares call Dr. Gladden old!

Finally, keep your faith in God and man. Both faiths are one. He who believes that God is in his world knows that he will draw men unto himself. He who believes that man is in the image of God and is slowly rising to higher things, will believe also in God. If you lose faith, hope, buoyancy, the prophetic vision, you can do nothing but criticise, as so many preachers do; but men go to church to hear "good news"—to hear Christ, not Jeremiah. If you have the last "good news" you at least are pushing the dead-line a little further off.

Missionary Activities Among Presbyterians

The following from the Churchman which is alive to the good works carried on in all the churches, indicates the missionary record made by the Presbyterian church. In these days of missionary activity all churches should regard these indications of interest as a renewed call to all the churches to enter into that wonderful propaganda to preach the gospel to the regions beyond, and to establish a new line of evidences for the divine origin of Christianity

The officers of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions spent the second week of June in conference with eighty-three missionaries who are going to the field for the first time. A number of others, returning after furlough, were also present. Twenty-three new missionaries have already been sent to the field this year, so that the Board is adding to its staff abroad the unusually large total of 106 in a single year. The conferences combined the practical and the spiritual. An entire day was devoted to considering the necessity for and the methods of attaining high standards of intellectual, physical and spiritual life, the addresses being given by an editor, a physician, a missionary from the field and a home clergyman. How the missionary is to do his work through healing, teaching and preaching was explained by some older missionaries who are returning to their fields after furlough in this country. In order to help the recruits understand the magnitude and the real character of the task to which they are going, much time was devoted to considering present-day world conditions, especially as manifested in social and national unrest. Professor Cairns, of Aberdeen, whose brilliant essay on "The Missionary Message in Relation to the Non-Christian Religions," was one of the classics of the Edinburgh Missionary Conference, spoke of the modern attitude toward ancient religions. Mr. Robert E. Speer summed up the entire discussion by a masterly statement on the meaning of the present opportunity viewed from the standpoint of the Christian messenger. Of the recruits, twenty-four are assigned to China, a larger number than to any other field. Japan receives but two—chiefly because of the progressive spirit of the Japanese Christians and their ability to direct their own religious concerns. Fourteen go to the successful missions in India, where the Presbyterian Church is doing some of its best work. The west coast of Africa will welcome eight helpers; Siam and Laos will be strengthened by ten new workers. Mexico and Persia receive four each; Guatemala and the Philippines two each. A number of those appointed have not yet been assigned to any field.

"The only way to be sure we shall not hurt other people is to try continually to help them. The careless individual, while perhaps not meaning any harm, is always giving pain. 'Unless you are deliberately kind to every creature,' says Ruskin wisely, 'you will often be cruel to many.'"

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—SILAS JONES, IDA WITHERS HARRISON, ORVIS F. JORDAN, ELLIS B. BARNES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy, 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

Our Promised Land

"Understandest thou what thou readest?" is an appropriate question to address to any one who opens the Book of Revelation. It has been the fashion to read into this book our party prejudices and personal biases. The figurative language of the book lends itself readily to this sort of treatment. We Protestants have discovered in the visions of the Christian seer a history of the papacy. Some Roman Catholics have seen in these same visions Martin Luther and the Reformation. To discerning eyes have appeared the Russian Empire, the Southern Confederacy, and an ungodly church that observes as its day of worship the first day of the week instead of the seventh. Modesty should be the characteristic of one who attempts to understand a book that has been so variously interpreted.

In spite of the differences of opinion as to the meaning of the parts of the Book of Revelation, there has been general agreement that it contains assurance of triumph to all who follow the Lord Christ faithfully. The powers of darkness can never overcome the armies of light. Whether opposition to the kingdom of God takes the form of an empire that persecutes the church, a corrupt church that gives its honors to the worldly minded and invents tortures for men of independence and conscience, or knowledge that sells itself to pleasure, the final victory is the Lord's and will be shared by all his loyal servants. "He that overcometh" shall enjoy a glorious heritage, and both the certainty of the victory and the reality of the reward are vividly presented to the mind of the believer.

"It is evident," says Professor E. C. Porter, "after chapter 20, that it is no earthly hope that inspires him. It is only in a new heaven and earth that the fulfilment of the prophetic hopes is looked for. Yet the language of sense and present conditions is used as the only language available, and as most suggestive and emotionally impressive, just because it is sacred and ancient and familiar. Two things, then, are important for a historical appreciation of these chapters. One is to bear in mind the constant use of Old Testament language, the allusions and reminiscences with which the passage is full. The other is to feel the emotion of the writer and sympathize with his effort through the sense symbols that Scripture and tradition offered to suggest spiritual and in reality inexpressible joys. The underlying reality that gives its marvelous power to this accumulation of sensible imagery is that which also in Old Testament prophecy was the kernel and essence of hope, the presence of God and the expectation of a real vision of him and a close communion with him in the life to come."

Of the necessity of using figurative language in describing the joys of the future, Professor Porter says: "Such language was the best the writer knew by which to convey his hope. It was, indeed, fitted to convey only the emotion of his hope, not its intellectual contents. Just this is indeed its value for us. We have no better language than his in which to suggest the inconceivable glory and blessedness of the final life of the soul with God. It is actually to our advantage that the Jewish prophets and poets expected an earthly consummation, for they were able to give to this a vivid, concrete emotional expression, and the language of beauty and feeling in which they voiced their hope is a far more adequate expression of our more ideal aspirations than we could create for ourselves. Figurative language is the only language in which we can express our hope of heaven, and no figures can have greater power to suggest hope than those taken from the literal longings of exiled Israel for the recovery of its land and city."

The absence of a temple from the heavenly city may seem strange, but is it not just what we should expect? Many of the forms of Jewish worship were discarded by Christianity. The discarded forms had ceased to be useful and many of them would have been a positive hindrance to the new faith. Is it reasonable to expect the temples of this world to be necessary when we see the things that are now objects of faith and hope? After the lesson is learned we may understand it better if we lay aside the symbols that are employed during the learning process. But no wise teacher despises symbols because they may be discarded when the lesson is learned. We should be very foolish to neglect our earthly temples because we expect to have nothing like them in heaven. We use them as means of fitting ourselves for participation in the worship that needs no temple. [Midweek Service, July 10. Rev. 21:1-7, 22-27.]

S. J.

"A Widespread Interrogation" and a Wide-of-the-Mark Reply

Dr. Bayard Craig, of California, long a leader in the educational and church life of the Disciples, voices a frank and earnest plea for guidance out of the dilemma in which he feels he and his brethren are now placed by their awakening conscience on the practice of Christian union. The plea is addressed to the Christian Evangelist, which prints it under the heading, "A Widespread Interrogation." Following is Dr. Craig's letter:

East or west we cannot avoid facing the question, "What will we do with the Christian unimmersed" in the present progress toward Christian union? How can we preserve the integrity of a plea based on the divine authority of the Word of God and ignore the teaching on baptism? How can we recognize and preserve the unity of the spirit and the supreme obligation of Christian union where the integrity of baptism intervenes? I confess I don't know. I want light, guidance, help both human and divine. I feel that I am a legitimate child of this movement, begotten by its preaching of Christ and Christian union, and have never recognized the claims of those who were "born and brought up" in the church as superior. With tens of thousands of other converts won to the "Disciples" by their plea for Christian union, we have a right to expect the organization to make good. To "make good" we must make a scriptural, wise and persistent effort to bring about the union for which Christ prayed.

I do not agree with the extreme position of the "Christian Century," but am glad that some one has the heroism to declare his convictions or even his opinions on the question. Let us have freedom of speech in the bounds of Christian courtesy. The spirit that would burn a heretic, the spirit that gnashes the teeth at an opponent, the spirit that creates suspicion, the spirit that cries out for the crucifixion of the teacher of something new, cannot settle this question right. It never has settled any question right.

The question cannot be settled by saying: "Let the denominations do as they please, we have nothing to do but go on preaching the gospel just as we have been doing." We have already entered into fraternal relations with other religious bodies in all the world's mission fields; we have entered into fraternal relations in our churches and in union meetings at home. We are about to enter into a world conference in the interests of Christian union. We must face the questions involved humbly, lovingly, bravely, and, above all, loyally—loyal to Christ, loyal to our own best convictions.

The oracular, dogmatic preacher, editor or leader who would settle the whole question by imperial decree, knows neither history, our own people, or the world-wide and time-long importance of the problem.

We want to hold on to the great company of people who are the strength and foundation of our movement and we want to hold on to our educated sons, daughters and converts in our progress toward the accomplishment of our great mission. We look to the Christian-Evangelist for able leadership in this crisis.

Redlands, Cal. BAYARD CRAIG.

To which The Christian Evangelist replies as follows:

Brother Craig is right in saying this question is before us and can only be settled right as we face it in the spirit of brotherly love and by an appeal to the authority of Christ. The question, however, is subordinate to other questions, which, when clearly settled, will clear the mists away from this baptismal controversy in its present phase. It is not the key to the union problem. Such questions as, In whom (not on what) are we to be united? Is Christ's authority supreme in relation to his church—its constitution, its ordinances, its unity, its life? Is the New Testament an authentic and intelligible record of Christ's will concerning his church? In hearing the apostles of Christ in relation to Christ's church and kingdom are we hearing Christ? Was it the aim of our movement in behalf of Christian unity to construct a platform broad enough to take in all the members of existing churches, or to return to the New Testament conditions of church membership as the true basis of unity? If the latter, was that a true aim? If that were a true aim what apology can we make for departing from it? Not for the sake of fellowship in service or in worship, for as Brother Craig says, we already have that. When these questions are all answered correctly the question of what we shall do with the Christian unimmersed will seem easy. We may love them, work and worship with them, seek to show them the "way of the Lord more perfectly," while we learn from them all they have to teach us, but we may not compromise our conscience by presuming to change the New Testament basis of unity, neither as respects the one Lord, the one faith, nor the one baptism. Why should the subject of baptism present any greater difficulty than the question of the essential creed? We imagine the giving up of time-honored symbols of faith would be vastly more difficult for the large majority of those having such creeds, than the change of their practice as respects the form and subject of baptism. A little clear thinking will clarify the atmosphere, and we shall see that the difficulties we are troubling ourselves about are not of our making, but that if we are carrying out Christ's program in the world we can depend on him to overcome the difficulties.

It would be interesting to know the feelings of Dr. Craig when he read the Christian Evangelist's reply to his earnest appeal for help and leadership. Is this the best our contemporary can say to this vital problem that is wrenching the souls of a great multitude of Disciples? Does the editor imagine that he has suggested one new thing to Dr. Craig? Is not every sentence in the reply a commonplace to the inquirer? What help can the editor conceive that Dr. Craig or others like him will derive from a repetition of points with which they are quite as familiar as is the editor? Manifestly Dr. Craig's problem is not grasped at all by the journal to which he looks for light.

It is our purpose to examine in detail our contemporary's reply, separating into its constituent strands the beam of "light" which it throws upon Dr. Craig's problem.

Let us keep in mind that Dr. Craig's question is "What will we do with the Christian unimmersed?" To which the editor replies that the question "is subordinate to other questions" which "when clearly settled, will clear the mists away from the baptismal controversy." It is not clear to what the editor refers when he says "It is not the key to the union problem." Grammatically the antecedent of "it" is Dr. Craig's question. But this does not make sense. Of course Dr. Craig's question is not the "key" to the union problem, his question IS the union problem. If "baptismal controversy" is the antecedent intended we will agree that it is not the "key" to union. The Christian Century believes, with the Disciples, that Christian union may be practiced without waiting for the settlement of any academic controversy whatever.

Now follows a series of questions. When these questions are all answered correctly, the editor says, Dr. Craig's question as to what we shall do with the Christian unimmersed "will seem easy." Here is a rich promise, indeed. It will pay us, therefore, to take these questions up one by one.

"In whom (not on what) are we to be united?"

In Christ Jesus, all will agree. Does the Christian Evangelist imply that the "Christian unimmersed" are not in Christ?

"Is Christ's authority supreme in relation to his Church—its constitution, its ordinances, its unity, its life?"

Christ's authority is absolutely supreme on every matter of which he has spoken. Does the editor imply that Presbyterians, for example, would answer this question otherwise?

"Is the New Testament an authentic and intelligible record of Christ's will concerning his church?"

Without reasonable doubt, it is. And with this answer the "Christian unimmersed" will agree as heartily as will the immersed.

"In hearing the apostles of Christ in relation to Christ's church and kingdom are we hearing Christ?"

Without reasonable doubt, we are. And with this answer the "Christian unimmersed" will agree as heartily as will the immersed.

"Was it the aim of our movement in behalf of Christian unity to construct a platform broad enough to take in all the members of the existing churches—or to return to the New Testament conditions of church membership as the true basis of unity?"

It was the aim of our movement to construct a platform broad enough both to take in all members of the Church of Christ, AND to return to the New Testament conditions of church membership as the true basis of unity. These two are not alternatives—they are identical. A platform broad enough to take in all members of the Church of Christ and none others IS the New Testament basis of unity. The New Testament conditions of church membership are identical with the conditions by which a Presbyterian, for example, became a member of the Church of Christ. If we know how an unimmersed Presbyterian became a member of the Church of Christ we will know what are the New Testament conditions of membership in the Church of Christ—for there is no conceivable way by which he could have become a member save the New Testament way. To admit that he is a member is to admit that he became such in conformity to essential New Testament conditions. To admit that he is a member of the Church of Christ is equivalent to denying that immersion is a New Testament condition of membership in the Church of Christ.

"If the latter, was that a true aim?"

It was a true aim, so also was the former.

"If that were a true aim what apology can we make for departing from it?"

Absolutely none. And we cannot depart from it without disloyalty to our fathers, and, incomparably more serious, without disloyalty to our Lord.

"We may love them, work and worship with them, seek to show them 'the way of the Lord more perfectly', while we learn from them all they have to teach us, but we may not compromise our conscience by presuming to change the New Testament basis of unity, neither as respects the one Lord, the one faith, nor the one baptism."

But Dr. Craig was made to understand at the start that the true basis of union is Christ, not baptism—"in whom, not on what." Why this shifting of the ground? After we have gotten into Christ are there certain "things" on which we must be agreed before we can be united? Is Christ divided? Or is union with him sufficient for union one with another? The Disciples have always contended for the all-sufficiency of union with Christ as a "basis" of union. Shall we now depart from that position? The Christian Century agrees with Paul that union with the Head is all that is needed for the members of the body to practice union one with another. Will the Christian Evangelist tell Dr. Craig why it asks its initial question above if it now insists upon settling the baptismal controversy before those who are one with Christ may receive one another?

"Why should the subject of baptism present any greater difficulty than the question of the essential creed?

It does not present any greater difficulty to those who truly desire to practice Christian unity.

"A little clear thinking will clarify the atmosphere, and we shall see that the difficulties we are troubling ourselves about are not of our making, but that if we are carrying out Christ's program in the world we can depend on him to overcome the difficulties."

A little clearer thinking will show us that all the difficulties in the way of Christian union are absolutely of our own making, and that if we consecrate ourselves to truly practice the things Christ prayed for these difficulties will vanish of themselves.

We have tried to answer those questions upon whose correct answer, according to our contemporary, depends the answer to Dr. Craig's question. But we fail to see the connection between his question and these questions and answers. We wonder if Dr. Craig sees the connection. We wonder—we are not trifling—if the editor sees the connection!

What shall we do with unimmersed members of the Church of Christ?

Treat them, we would say, and we believe Christ would say, just as you would treat any other members of the Church of Christ!

To do otherwise is to wound Him.

The Prophet.

You preach to generations that revile you,
Who love mankind; and men cast stones at you
And cheaply jest—poor, petty, narrow souls,
Sodden and deaf in their own small conceits.

Yet ages unto ages bear your message;
Time comes in step with ancient heresy,
Till nobler minds of many generations
Gather, a multitude, before your tomb.

—Harold Norman Denny.

If the cup that I fain would lift to my lips has poison in it, or if its sweetness is making me lose my relish for the pure and tasteless water that flows from the throne of God, there can be no truer friend than that calamity, as men call it, which strikes the cup from my hands and shivers the glass before I have raised it to my lips. Everything is my friend that helps me toward God.—Alexander Maclaren, D. D.

"No one has any more right to go through life unhappy than he has to go through it ill-bred," says Stevenson. When we remember what the writer's own life was, and what a brave battle he made against pain and discouragement, practicing his own doctrine of good cheer to the last, it adds force to his words. He learned to find pleasure in out-of-the-way places and to take it in bits as it came to him. The trouble with most of us is that we want our happiness in large quantities all at once, and we trample upon the little flowers of sweetness that spring all along the way.

In an engine an unbalanced balance wheel means disaster. Man is creation's engine, of which the brain is the balance wheel.

Editorial Table Talk

Who Gets the Tips?

One of New York's striking waiters tells us that the real grievance of the strikers is the practice common to hotel and cafe proprietors of appropriating the tips which are given their employees, who "have to do all the dirty work", as they graphically express it, and receive but a small portion of the money.

This appeals to us as rather a surprising situation. We have become accustomed to regard owners of large hotels as distinctly fashionable people, quite of the elect, as it were. Also we have been reared in the belief that one who accepts a tip is thereby out-caste—a menial, inferior, and socially quite out of the question.

The situation seems to border upon the ridiculous when we thus learn that some of the flower of our society are deriving a part of their living from gratuities. We find our illusions slipping away, for, indeed, we are forced to concede that our society is a structure wonderfully built, but, after all, its foundations contain more of sand and less of cement than the building commission should allow. Its standards and criteria seem to have been set up with a naive abandon, a charming disregard for consistency that rivals even our tariff legislation. In fact we have come to think that for the most part our society is a state of mind.

We have grown accustomed to that attitude that bows to the big butcher and snubs the little butcher; that locks up the little thief and banquets big ones, but shall we ever become reconciled to the big tip-taker, now that he is unmasked?

The disclosure has also its serious aspect. How is our hostess to know, unless she goes to the annoyance and delay of a federal investigation, whether or not her prospective guests have violated this cardinal precept, and hence are by their own standards outre? What security has she that her salon will not be invaded by menials, albeit in evening clothes? And must we run the risk, whenever we accept an invitation to dine, of mingling with vulgar tip-takers?

What class of society is there that is above suspicion, now that our wealthy have debarred themselves? Only one that we know. Editors never accept tips. Nobody offers them to us.

Why "Radical" and "Extreme?"

Dr. Craig speaks appreciatively of The Christian Century in his letter quoted elsewhere, but he characterizes our advocacy of the practice of Christian union as an "extreme position." Dr. Garrison applied the word "radical" to this same position in his Kansas City address. Neither of these terms is invidious, but we wonder why they apply at all.

Reduced to its lowest terms, The Christian Century advocates the primary ideal of the Disciples of Christ and nothing else, namely, loyalty and obedience to Christ. It is the will of Christ that those whom he has received should receive one another, that as they are one with him so they should be one with his whole body, that there should be no schism in the body. Christ has received Methodists, Congregationalists and Presbyterians into his Church, his body. They are just as truly members of his Church as are we. It is an act of disloyalty, therefore, for "us" to maintain a "church" or "body" of "our own" from which they are debarred.

This position may be called "extreme" or "radical" if any one wills, but will any one deny that it is Christian and scriptural?

Certainly the terms "radical" and "extreme" do not apply to The Christian Century's position on baptism. For, in respect of this ordinance, although we do not accept certain reasons usually given therefor, we advocate precisely the same practice that Drs. Craig and Garrison and the Disciples are accustomed to.

The one fundamental difference between The Christian Century and some others is that this paper advocates obedience to the whole will of Christ—not his will with respect to baptism only but his will with respect to the unity of all his true followers.

Others believe the will of Christ with respect to baptism on the one hand and unity on the other is a divided will, that the Master contradicts himself, that his disciples cannot obey both his commandments. This is Dr. Craig's dilemma. The Christian Century declares that Christ's whole will can be obeyed, that he does not contradict himself, that it is possible to practice Christian union and immersion-baptism at the same time.

This may be an "extreme" position, but it seems to us to be a comprehensive position. It may be "radical," but there does not appear a single element either of conscience or expediency that is not conserved by it.

—The Salvation Army in London has done a great work with its anti-suicide bureau. Since it was started, 4,754 persons have called to lay their embarrassments before Colonel Emerson and have asked him to "show cause"—as the lawyers say—why they should not put an end to their lives. The largest number put down the cause of their trouble to financial reasons; after this come drink or drugs and melancholia. The applicants come from almost every class, except the workers. There are clergymen, missionaries, military officers, doctors, solicitors, schoolmasters, clerks, and company promoters. They have all been dealt with according to their needs and such help has been given them as their cases seemed to demand. Legal and medical advice has been afforded, creditors have been reasoned with, reconciliations have been brought about with relatives. And the work, according to General Booth, has been successful beyond highest expectation.

—We hope the reporter misunderstood or misreported the bishop, but according to his version of the interview, Bishop William O. Shepard of the M. E. church said that he was "perfectly willing that the rule (against amusements) should remain in the Methodist church provided it fell into innocuous desuetude." That's the mischief of it all. The world says that our ministers profess creeds that they do not believe and lay members subscribe to rules which they never intend to keep. It answers no purpose to say that our creeds are sometimes too specific and our rules too minute. That may be true, but two wrongs never made a right. And we ought to correct evils by revision not by disobedience. Personally we do not think churches ought to add to the ten commandments. We believe that liberty is as essential as discipline and that better results are secured by protecting that liberty than by voting in or voting out amusements which must, according to New Testament principles, be decided by individuals for individuals, not by majorities for minorities.

—The Methodist Church in Canada has taken a stand against its members who grow tobacco for a living. Methodist farmers in the rich tobacco-growing lands of Essex County, just across the river from Detroit, who continue to cultivate the plant, will do so in face of the "uncompromising opposition" of the governing body of their church. The question was raised some time ago by church members in the adjoining county of Kent. It was passed on to the governing body of the church, and was one of the live topics at the annual conference at St. Thomas, Ont. The result of the discussion was the adoption of a clause in the report of the temperance and moral reform committee, recording the uncompromising opposition of the church to the cultivation of tobacco and calling upon church members not only to desist from the industry, but to use every effort to bring about its ultimate complete cessation.

—Rev. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, New York, and three of the most prominent bishops of the Episcopal Church, have gone to England for a conference with the high officials of the Episcopal Church of that country in regard to a union between the Church of England and the Episcopal Church in America. The bishops are Charles P. Anderson, of Chicago, chairman of the commission on a world conference on faith and order, appointed by the last general convention of the Episcopal Church; Boyd Vincent, of Cincinnati, O., chairman of the house of bishops; and Arthur C. Hall, of Vermont. Dr. Manning is chairman of the plan and scope committeee of the commission. These four clergymen have been sent officially to discuss church union, and they will be received by the prelates of the Church of England.

—The use of the term "Christian unimmersed" in Dr. Craig's correspondence with the Christian Evangelist marks a step forward in the evolution of our nomenclature in dealing with the problem of Christian unity. The line of this evolution, past and future, may be traced as follows: Members of the denominations—the pious unimmersed—the Christian unimmersed—unimmersed Christians—Christians—members of the Church of Christ. The quickest way to solve the problem of unity is to use the term that fully describes the persons in question. Our canny speech is more than any other thing the cause of our problem. Nobody would hesitate in answering the question: "What shall we do with members of the Church of Christ who ask for membership in our congregations?"

—There is an idea abroad among moral people that they should make their neighbors good. One person I have to make good—myself. But my duty to my neighbor is much more nearly expressed by saying that I have to make him happy—if I may.—R. L. Stevenson.

The Larger Life

BY WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN.

The Distinguished Statesman's View of Christ's Religion

Christ was a master in addition. He came not to subtract, but to add. We are told that he came "to bring life and immortality to light." Had the people been in darkness? Yes, there was a dispute when he came as to the answer that should be made to the searching question asked by Job: "If a man die shall he live again?" Christ answered the question: He came to bring immortality to light. But he came also to bring life to light, for the world had had but a poor conception or life. Man's vision, even of his existence here in this world, had been but a limited vision. People used to read the Bible to find out what it said of Heaven; now they read it more to find what light it throws upon the pathway of today, for they have learned that where Christ spoke once of the world to come he spoke ten times of man's present relation to his fellowmen.

Deeper Wealth.

If we were in the midst of a great agricultural community where everybody lived by farming—where the surface of the earth was cultivated and made to bring forth all that was necessary to meet man's physical needs; and some one should come, a stranger, and tell us that we were but scratching the surface, unconscious of hidden wealth; tell us that down a few feet in the ground we could find a vein of coal that would furnish us the heat for steam, and that we could convert it into light and motive power, we would be grateful to him for making known to us the larger wealth that we possessed, but possessed in ignorance. And, possibly, if we did not become too busy mining the coal and too absorbed in the enjoyment of the new wealth that it would bring, we might erect a monument to him, when he was dead, to show that we appreciated the service he had rendered.

Christ came to tell us that there was yet an unexplored field; that there was yet a depth which man had not found; he came to reveal to man the larger, broader, deeper, higher joys of spiritual life. And Christ, when he revealed these new possessions, did not withdraw that which man had learned to know before. When Christ said, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness," he did not add that we must take this as a substitute for all other things. He did not ask us to compare that which he would give with that which we had before and calculate the difference in value. He said, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things will be added unto you."

Is There Any Excuse?

Is there any excuse for not leading the larger life? Is there any excuse a man can give for not being willing to make use of all his powers? Shall we allow the materialist to speak of being "more liberal" than we are, when he refuses to consider the most important element in life? I resent the charge of narrowness that the atheist brings against the Christian. The Christian is in a position to enjoy every good thing that an atheist can enjoy, and, in addition, those larger, better things that an atheist cannot enjoy. I hope the time is not far distant when the egotism of those who think they are stronger than Christians in mental power will vanish and when they will no longer assume a superiority over those who allow Christ to lead them into the larger way.

What is there that Christ would take from us that has value in it? Does he deny us the food that we need? No, the Christian is at liberty to eat; aye, not only at liberty, but it is his duty to eat enough to lift his body to the maximum of efficiency. If his passion is service, how can he render the largest service unless the instrument of service is in good order? Christ requires no physical concessions that are not for our good. There is not a good habit that Christ does not allow. He only prohibits those habits that decrease our strength, and reduce our capacity for work—habits that waste our bodies and make them unfit to be temples for the indwelling of his spirit.

Where Will You Find More?

So, in the intellectual world, what is there in the range of science, or history, or poetry, or art, that Christ forbids us to enjoy? All that he asks is that we shall remember that all these things are means to an end. Where will you find more learning than in the Christian world? Where will you find higher art than in the Christian world? Where will you find sweeter poetry than in the Christian world? All that Christ asks is that we shall train the mind for usefulness—that we shall not glory in our minds merely because we enjoy intellectual pursuits, but because a larger mind can do a larger work—because a more extended vision can be of greater assistance to those who rely upon the educated to see in advance coming dangers and warn against them. All these things are but the means we use for the development of that which is highest in the life and best in man.

A Higher Incentive.

Christ does not restrain our activities along any line of legitimate work. On the contrary he furnishes a higher incentive and a larger purpose. In domestic life, in business life and in political life—everywhere, the Christian is free to satisfy every worthy ambition, every noble impulse. The only injunction laid upon him is that God shall come first and all other things afterward. But this one injunction does not fetter effort; it simply directs one's energies. It is the compass by which we steer if we would sail the sea of life in safety.

There are no happier homes than the homes of Christendom, and the happiest homes in Christendom are those in which God is enthroned, and in which his will is the supreme law of the household.

Nowhere is business more successfully conducted than in the Christian nations; nowhere does it rest upon a more substantial basis. And in the Christian nations no business men build more surely than those who daily live as in his presence.

Extends Vision.

Materialism can not deal successfully even with the material things of life. A spiritual viewpoint is necessary if one would see clearly! no one is far-sighted who does not see farther than the eye can reach. Faith is a spiritual extension of the vision, and no one can afford to be without it. Faith also is necessary if one would resist the temptations which, if yielded to, drag men down. In order to successfully withstand the insidious allurements that beset life' sway we must understand that wrong-doing automatically recoils upon the wrong-doer; that God is not mocked, and that no human effort can prevent a harvest according to the sowing. One is sure to fall if his only restraint is the fear of being detected by others. There are too many chances for escape from the vigilance of others to make the fear of being caught a sufficient barrier to wrong-doing. No outer guardian can take the place of the inner monitor—the voice that bids the "wicked flee when no man pursueth."

Nowhere does Christ enlarge one's conception of life more than in the conduct of public affairs. Those who exercise authority have special need to give weight to the things that affect the heart. Only when one knows the heart can he judge men, and only when his heart is knit to the hearts of his fellows can he enter into the spirit of brotherhood. A condescending service is not sufficient; man is not fit to serve unless he recognizes that he is serving those who are attached to him by undissoluble ties, and only when he understands Christ's measure of greatness does his ambition become helpful to others as well as to himself. In no other walk in life is it more necessary for one to be guided by conscience than in public affairs, for nowhere else is one watched more constantly or subjected to more continuous criticism. The fear of exposure operates nowhere else more powerfully. In the bearing of great responsibilities he is strongest who has trained himself to measure up to the responsibilities imposed upon him by his Creator, for this being the greatest of responsibilities, responsibilities less weighty are more easily discharged.

Power of His Name.

Christ is not only a guide and friend in all the work that man undertakes, but his name can be invoked for the correction of every abuse, and the eradication of every evil, in private and in public life.

There is no nation in which the reviving, regenerating influence of Christ's words and life is not sorely needed—no nation where we cannot quote with propriety the lines,

"I know of a land that is sunk in shame
Of hearts that faint and tire,
But I know of a name, a name, a name,
That can set that land on fire."

We spend a great deal of our time taking care of our bodies, and yet it is the body that is subject to sickness—it is the center of disease; it is the thing that causes us most of our trouble. Not only do its pains bring us grief, but its passions and the temptations that come through them darken our lives. And, yet, how we sometimes worship the body! How we pamper it and how we try to adorn it. Christ did not object to man's making every proper use of the body, but He warned us not to spend all of our time taking care of it. He pointed to the birds and beasts about us—how God cares for them. He reminded us that even the flowers are more beautiful than man arrayed in all his glory. He constantly tried to turn our thoughts from the things that engross our attention if we think only of physical life. He tried to direct our thoughts toward the higher and more exalted things. Compare, if you will, the spiritual joys with those that are either physical or intellectual. Look back over your lives and count the happy days. Are they the days when your bodily wants were satisfied or the days when your minds were exulting? No, the happy days were the days that you recall because they marked and measured some unselfish contribution to the welfare of others.

Mind and Heart.

We exaggerate the influence of a mind over minds. We put too much of an estimate on (Concluded on Page 11).

THE HIGH CALLING

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS."

Copyright 1911, George H. Doran Co.

CHAPTER IX—Continued.

When Louis went up to bed tears were on his cheeks and a choking in his breast. His father had simply said, "My boy, I want you to be a man. Your mother and I have prayed for you all these years. We believe you will not disappoint us. Don't forget God, Louis. You need to pray to overcome this great temptation of impure thinking. The gates of Hell are close by that sort of life. Not even your father and mother can spare you from ruin that way. You have got to fight it out yourself. God helping you."

Paul looked up at the clock and saw it was after midnight, but on a venture he called up the committee room at the State House. A night janitor answered and informed him that the committee had been gone for over an hour.

He went upstairs and found Esther in her sewing room, her face pale and troubled, traces of tears on her cheeks and such a look of real fear on her face that Paul exclaimed, "Esther! What is it?"

She turned to her table and picked up a package of postcards and with a shudder of loathing held them out to Paul.

He took them and saw at a second's glance that they were the vulgar, coarse, suggestive and even indecent photographic postcards which this great civilized, supposedly Christian, government even yet allows to pass through the post office and be displayed and sold at every news stand and book store in the country.

"They dropped out of Louis's coat when I began to mend it this evening. And there was worse. He or some other boy had written this vile thing." Esther handed it to Paul what she had found. Paul read it and his face grew white and stern. Esther sat down and put her head on her arms and almost shrieked.

"Oh, I can't bear it! Louis! Louis! How could you! Oh, how can his soul ever be clean again! Oh, boy, your mother's heart is broken! After all my prayers for you! After all the days and nights of consecration! Oh, my son, my son! Would God I had died before I knew or saw this! Oh, my Master, the cup is too bitter! I can't drink it!"

Never in all his knowledge of Esther had Paul ever seen her like this. His own heart almost stopped at the sight. For years she had been so uniformly calm and strong even when her children had disappointed her. She had with high-spirited motherhood faced their sins and wrong-doing with a peaceful faith that they would do right in the end. But this discovery seemed to smite her soul down into a hopeless darkness, where there was no redemption. And as Paul looked at her there was in his soul more anguish for her than fear for Louis over what she had discovered. In a sense he was prepared for this, somewhat, because of the glimpses he had been getting that very evening of Louis' nature and its temptations.

He kneeled by his wife and put his arm about her.

"This is too great for you to bear alone. Besides, it may not be as hopeless or as terrible as you think. Let me see Louis. I have just been having an evening with him. If he hasn't gone to bed I believe now is the time for me to see him."

Esther had grown quiet. She seemed to be praying. Paul got up and went out of the room along the hallway to Louis's room and knocked. At Louis' answer he went in and found him at work on the writing desk.

Without any preliminary Paul held out the cards to Louis and said, "Louis, are these yours?"

Louis' face blanched on the instant. His hand trembled so he could not hold the cards still. He tried to answer but his tongue seemed paralyzed. His father repeated the question more sternly. Louis broke down completely, flung himself on the bed in a spasm of fear and shame.

His father eyed him with conflicting feelings. Again he was strongly reminded of Louis Darcy and his many experiences with him. Louis still refused to answer, and Paul said:

"Look up here, Louis. Look up and answer me. Did you write that?"

His father thrust the paper his mother had found close up to the boy. Louis cried out. "No, no, father. That is not mine. One of the boys—"

Paul felt relieved as far as that went, for Louis had never lied to him.

"But these cards. Are these yours?"

"Yes."

"How long have you had them?"

"I got them yesterday."

"Give them to me." Louis handed them over and Paul tore them across again and again and flung the pieces into the waste paper basket. Louis had never seen his father angry like that before. He shrank and cowered back while his father said:

"Louis, I would almost rather see you in your coffin than with those vile things in your hands and their foul imaginings in your heart. Do you realize what this will lead to? Your manhood will be blasted! your body tortured! all the angel in you turned into animal—"

Paul nearly broke down himself. He shuddered and for one instant Louis really caught a glimpse into the horror that sin causes.

But Paul Douglas was not a cowardly father nor one who is content to leave it to boys to learn unaided bitter lessons from evil. He sat down by Louis and gave him the plainest talk on the subject of personal purity the boy had ever had. And the effect on him in all his after life was even more than either Paul or Esther had dared to hope. Paul never did a better hour's work. When he was through, Louis was completely broken. In the moment of his cry to his father for help, Paul kneeled by him, put his arm around him and prayed for him such a prayer of appeal and hope and good cheer that Louis Douglas will never forget. The whole thing was the beginning of a new manhood for the boy. And when the next day he plucked up courage to confess to his mother, one of the hardest things he ever did in all his life, the entire unfolding of his mother's love, her passionate appeal to his better nature, her cry to him to seek God's help in overcoming all, overwhelmed him. Again the boy caught a glimpse of the mightiness of father and mother affection and young as he was he came from that soul yearning of Esther with a manly determination in his boyish heart not to disappoint either father or mother in the struggle he would make to be true to the high calling. For as the time slipped away many and many a time he was reminded of the black pit on the edge of which he had almost slipped, to fall into its slimy and murky abyss, and perhaps never again come up into the pure sweet air of God under his blue sky and its silver stars. O Louis, you will never be able to measure the rescue your father and mother made for you at that crisis when your soul was wandering over the treeless moor of passion.

CHAPTER X.

Felix Bauer sat at his bench in the electrical machine shop at Burrton just about to open a letter which had been left there late in the afternoon. The shop men sometimes brought one another's mail up from the village and Bauer, who often worked at his task without going out to tea, was glad to get his occasional letters before he finished his bench work late into the night.

Bauer's mail was not very frequent nor very heavy. After that vacation at the Douglas home, he had come back to Burrton and plunged into the work in a vain endeavor to forget Helen Douglas. He did not forget her in the least and did not try to pretend that he ever could. He had never ventured to ask if he might write to her, but Mrs. Douglas had dropped a friendly note now and then for which he was grateful and Paul had sent him a copy of Heine, which Bauer had admired on the library shelves at Milton.

The only additional letters he received were those which belonged to his correspondence with the people in Washington who were interested in his electrical patent. The circular glass incubator was finally completed, and Bauer had experimented on it to such satisfaction that it was a common joke with the boys that Bauer's electrical chickens were so thick they ate up all the currents in the shop.

Bauer could afford to take all the criticism, even the caustic remarks of Anderson the foreman, because it began to look now very much as if the stubborn, dogged, plodding German were on the road to financial success. He had been through the regular struggles necessary to make his model and get his patent. But he had finally succeeded in all the preliminary stages, his model was in the patent office, and he had even begun to receive letters from two or three manufacturing firms about putting the incubator on the market.

He was totally inexperienced in this business and needed much counsel from older heads. Anderson the foreman finally saw that Bauer had really invented a very valuable article and he came to his assistance in the final correspondence over the patent, but Bauer had some reluctance about sharing with him the correspondence over the actual manufacture and sale of the incubators, because of Anderson's unfortunate habit of antagonizing the shop men in various matters. He had never been able to overcome a general distrust on the part of the students, and Bauer shared that distrust so keenly that he did not feel willing to risk any great amount of confidence in him.

Since his return from Milton, Bauer had brooded over money matters. A small inheritance from his grandfather's estate in Lausbrachen had helped him through school, and his living wants were so few that he had not suffered any from privations which most of the rich men's sons at Burrton would have considered absolutely impossible.

But a new and unknown ambition had invaded Bauer's hitherto placid and somewhat passive soul since Helen Douglas had come into his circle of interest. What was it the girl had said during that talk in the library that day when she had made a vow not to speak first and had broken it? Bauer remembered every phase of that incident; the girl's real sparkle of interest in his invention; her eager questions; her coming up to the library table and bending over Bauer's plan; her head so close to his that a stray curl of her hair had almost touched his cheek; her startled drawing back at Bauer's solemn remark about the eggs having to be good before they could hatch; her frank but entirely innocent questioning of him about his home life, and how she unknowingly hurt him; her swift realization of something wrong and her tactful change of conversation; and then her remark about the power of money when she had asked Bauer about the possibility of his becoming rich. The girl's enthusiasm, her perfect physical animal health, her smile, her unquestioned interest in his work, her ingenuous and pure joy in life,—all affected poor Bauer so deeply that he felt as if he were walking through an apple orchard in full bloom, his feet pressing through fragrant red clover, and the apple blossom petals floating down gently, caressing his face and hands, the sky a robin egg blue and the air elixir of heaven—and then, he was suddenly recalled to the plain, dusty, weed-bordered road he was actually travelling, he, Felix Bauer, German, poor, homely, with a dishonored family history, with no prospects worth considering and no future worth dreaming over. And the road became very dusty, and the weeds very coarse, and the sky very grey and the air very heavy for Bauer, as Helen went out of the library and left him there staring intently at the place where she had been and recalling what she had said about money.

After all, money was the great power of the world. It could buy anything, even a wife, even in these modern times. But could it buy love? Had it ever bought so divine a thing as that since the foundation of the world?

Bauer's question did not go much farther. Somehow he shrank from trying to answer it. But he brooded over the utter hopelessness of his thought of Helen as he stood, penniless and obscure, and dishonored, as he believed, through the sin of his parents. And as his patent grew under his hands and the possibility of his really making money from it became more possible, he found himself growing possessed with the "auri fames" and nourishing it as if it were the one indispensable factor in his final possession of the one being in the whole world worth living for. He believed he could never win such a life without money. There might be some hope for him or any man with it.

The letter which he was about to open bore the Washington postmark and he took for granted it was from someone interested in the purchase of his patent rights. He opened it in his usual slow deliberate manner, but the moment he began to read his whole manner changed. It was as if one had opened a cage door to take a pet bird in his hand suddenly to find his fingers in contact with a snake.

(To be Continued.)

The Larger Life

(Continued from page 9.)

the brain and not enough of an estimate upon the heart. We say that it is wonderful that man's mind has been able to discover a means by which one can stand by the side of a telegraph instrument and through an invisible current that runs along the wire speak to people ten thousand miles away. Is that wonderful? The achievements of the heart are more wonderful. The heart that is full of love for its fellows; the heart that burns to do some great good; the heart that puts into operation some movement for the uplifting of the human race, will speak to hearts that will beat ten thousand years after all our hearts are still. Man's greatest power is exerted when he touches the heart and through it reaches the endless generations of the future.

The heart is the great thing. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." "Out of the heart are the issues of life." Christ came to make known to men the riches of the human heart, to show us how the heart, the center of love, is also the center of life. He simply gave us love as the rule of life, and then left us to supply it. No other teacher was ever so free from the discussion of details as he. He did not give minute directions as to how we should act in each particular case. He gave us one great rule, the new commandment, "Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself."

I Am Growing Old.

Our bodies will decay no matter whether we take pride in them or not; the seed of death is in them. I have now lived more than half a century. I used to think that a man was old at fifty; I have changed my views on that subject. I am satisfied that I was entirely mistaken. I have moved old age forward several years. It is still beyond me, and yet I know that the time is coming when I will not be as strong as I am now. I know that my bones will ache after a while and my joints become stiff. And I know, too, that those about me will recognize that I can not do what I used to do. Even now, my good wife is cautioning me that pneumonia is more fatal as people get along in years. I know what is coming.

No Doubt of Another World.

It is pleasant for me to believe in a resurrection. I have no more doubt that I shall live again than I have that I live today. I have no more doubt that I shall in another world meet those whom I have loved than I have that I have known them here. I do not know just what kind of a body I am going to have—and I do not care. I have had seven already, according to the scientists. The scientists say that the body changes every seven years—if that is true, I now have my eighth. I had a baby's body, and then a boy's; then I had a young man's body, and then I changed again and again and again. I do not know what kind of a body God is going to give me in the next world, but I can trust him, and I waste no time speculating. He can give me any of the bodies I have had if he wants to, and I will do the best I can to use it; but I know that he will give me the kind of a body I need. There is an invisible something in a grain of wheat that can discard the body that we see, and from earth and air build a new body, so much like the old one that we can not tell the one from the other, and I know that, if that invisible something in that grain of wheat can pass unimpaired through thousands of resurrections, my spirit can clothe itself with a body suited to its new existence when this frame of mine shall crumble into dust.

What He Will Need to Know in Another World.

But I find nowhere in the Bible that Christ speaks of the physical perfections of this world being carried into the next. Neither do I know how much of my mind I can take with me or how much of the knowledge I have acquired. I worked pretty hard in school.

My mother taught me until I was ten, and then I went to the public schools until I was fifteen; then they sent me off to an academy for two years, then to a college for four, and afterward to a law school for two, and then they said I was through; and so I commenced to study in the school of life—and I have been studying ever since. I have learned something of science, a good deal of history, a little of poetry—and lots of politics. I do not know what I can carry beyond. I do not know how much of the story of the stars I will need over there. I do not know how much that I have learned of the growth of the rocks will be useful to me there. I do not know whether the new songs will make me forget the ones I have learned here. I do not know much about the future. I am quite sure that there is a great deal that I have spent much time on that I will not need there. I have a large accumulation of information on issues and men that I expect to leave; I am sure I shall not need it over there. I do not know how much of that which is intellectual in me will survive the tomb—and I do not care. I have such faith in the wisdom and love of the God, who made both the heaven and the earth, and am so well satisfied that he made earth more wisely than we could, that I am willing to leave him entire freedom in arranging heaven for me. It is enough for me to know that in our "Father's house are many mansions," and that he has gone to prepare a place for us. That is all I care to know.

If Christ Did All This?

If Christ comes to give and to take nothing away; if he comes to add and not to subtract; if he comes to reveal; if he comes to make us know how much richer we are than we thought; if he comes to give us, aye, and to multiply in us, the value of all we had before; if he comes to teach us how our bodies can be made stronger and better fitted for our work, and how our minds can be trained so as to enlarge our capacity for service; and if he comes to show us that the glories of the world into which the soul can lead us are above and beyond the riches of the body and the mind—if he does all this, is there any excuse for not accepting him? If he can add to the quantity of our lives and raise the quality of our lives and then give permanence to that which is best in us, is there any reason why anyone should reject him?

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison.

Mrs. Harrison will be glad to receive communications from any of her readers offering suggestions concerning woman's welfare, criticisms of articles or inquiries concerning any matters relevant to her department. She should be addressed directly at 530 Elm Tree Lane, Lexington, Ky.

Are the Children at Home?

BY MARGARET SANGSTER.

Each day, when the glow of sunset fades in the Western sky,
And the wee ones, tired of playing, go tripping lightly by,
I steal away from my husband, asleep in his easy-chair,
And watch from the open doorway their faces fresh and fair.

Alone in the dear old homestead that once was full of life,
Ringing with girlish laughter, echoing boyish strife,
We, too, are waiting together; and oft, as the shadows come,
With tremulous voice he calls me, "It is night! are the children home?"

"Yes, love!" I answer him gently, "they're all home long ago"—
And I sing, in my quivering treble, a song so soft and low,
Till the old man drops to slumber, with his head upon his hand,
And I tell to myself the number at home in the better land.

Women in One Trade

The change in the standing of the woman interior decorator in the last three years is indicated by the fact that the parish houses of three churches situated in the neighborhood of New York have recently been turned over to a woman decorator to equip, says the New York "Sun." There are said to be three main reasons why the number of women decorators in business for themselves in New York have doubled in the last two years, and why there has been a similar increase in the number of women employed by men decorators.

First, women decorators are now better equipped; second, the public prejudice against them has abated; third, there has been a tremendous change of late years in the position taken by the householder on the question of paying some one to select his furniture, draperies and wall trimmings.

Of late years, Americans, even of the plainest classes, have done a good deal of traveling, and consciously or unconsciously in going over Europe they are bound to get new ideas so pronounced in certain places they are sure to visit, and to gain enough ideas about harmony in color and decorations to give them some about house furnishing and decorating. Returning home, they hesitate to carry out their first intention of themselves selecting all the furnishings for their home, and seek professional advice.

The women decorators of New York in general get the biggest part of their orders from the suburbs or from towns near New York.

The reason that the woman decorator is, or seems to be, better equipped than formerly is that more college women are taking up the work.

Frank A. Parsons, who has directed art classes at Columbia University and is now at the head of the New York School of Fine and Applied Arts, in referring to the number of college women taking up the work, said:

"Two years ago in this school there were fifteen pupils in the interior decorating classes; this year there are fifty-one, 85 per cent of whom are women. These include three high school teachers, one normal school teacher, one teacher in a college and four college graduates, who mean to qualify as soon as possible as interior decorators. Besides these, and this is rather surprising, there are two young women of large means who are taking the course and are actually slaving in their eagerness to work, merely to be able to direct the furnishings of their own houses when the time comes.

"This is significant. It proves that as a profession for women interior decorating is firmly established and that candidates will have to reach a high mark in order to succeed."

The Dream-ship

BY MIRIAM S. CLARK.

A sweet little ship stole up from the south,
With a cargo of baby dreams;
Of dolls and kittens and warm little mittens,
And rose-colored peppermint creams;
A wee wind wafted it on its way,
And it sailed along, at the end of day,
Down the sleepy streets where the lights were lit,
To leave each child some wonderful bit.

"Oh, hush, little child, if you want a dream,
You must close your eyes—ah, yes!
For the dream-ship carries a gift for you
More lovely than you could guess;
Perhaps a moon will shine all day,
Perhaps a gown of color gay,
Or a queer little fish
In a silver dish—
Sail away, little boat, and away!"

—St. Nicholas.

Woman's Doings

—Miss Constance Henley Kane was sponsor of the destroyer Henley, latest addition to the United States navy. She is a New York girl, great-granddaughter of Commodore Henley, for whom the destroyer was named.

—For the first time in 400 years, degrees were conferred upon women by a pontifical university in Washington last week, when, at the commencement exercises of the teachers' college of the Catholic University of America, eighteen sisters, representatives of Chicago and six other teaching communities, were awarded the baccalaureate of arts. A marked feature was the fact that the recipients surpassed all previous marks of scholarship for a like degree given to men by the university. The award of the degree to women was the first since similar awards were made by the University of Bologna, Italy, nearly 400 years ago.

—According to one of the daily papers, the women of California are not particularly desirous of voting. In San Francisco, only 30,000 out of 100,000 have registered, and only 20,000 voted at the primaries. It is believed that the registration for the whole state will be only about 175,000 out of 500,000 women who are entitled to vote.

—Miss Inez Milholland, of New York, who has been one of the most ardently active advocates of "votes for women," will take up the practice of law when she returns from her summer vacation in Europe.

—With the appointment of Princess August Wilhelm, wife of the kaiser's fourth son, to the colonelcy of the Fourteenth Regiment of Dragoons, the number of women colonels in the German army has risen to nineteen. The German empress and the grand duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin command two German regiments each. The kaiser's four sisters are chiefs of an infantry regiment each; each of his three daughters-in-law leads a dragoon regiment, while his only daughter, Princess Victoria Louise, is second in command of a regiment of hussars. The queens of England, Holland, and Sweden, the duchess of Connaught and the empress of Russia are among the other foreign ladies commanding German regiments.

—Miss Helen Taft, daughter of the president, will be a bridesmaid at a Cincinnati wedding the 25th. Her brother, Robert Taft, will accompany her, making his first visit to his father's home since he was a small boy. The wedding is that of Miss Taft's cousin, Miss Harriet Anderson, to Hugo DeFritsch, of New York.

—Mrs. H. J. Camp, who has just returned to her home in Gardiner, Me., has been serving as a missionary in Central Arabia. Her headquarters was at Menakhi. In order to get there, she was obliged to travel four days on horseback, and was accompanied by camels carrying her luggage.

—A glove given by Mary, Queen of Scots, to her master of the household as she went to the block, and the silk vest worn by Charles I, when he was executed, were recently exhibited at Cambridge.

—The Chicago Training School for Women has secured a successor to the late Miss Fensham, and is planning for good things in the future. The school considers itself specially fortunate in the combination, which it has effected with other institutions, including the Chicago Theological Seminary, the Lewis Institute, and Graham Taylor's School of Physics and Philanthropy. This federation furnishes the young women with the largest educational advantages.

—Miss Margaret V. Kelly, assistant director of the United States mints, is now on a tour of inspection of the money-making plants. She receives a salary of $3,000 a year, and is the highest salaried woman in the employ of the federal government.

Rock-a-by Baby

There are a few girls in this country who have not heard the nursery rhyme sung by the mother:

"Rock-a-by baby, upon the tree top:
When the wind blows, the cradle will rock:
When the bough breaks, the cradle will fall,
And down will come cradle, baby, and all."

But how many know the origin of these lines? Shortly after our forefathers landed at Plymouth, Mass., a party were out in the field, where the Indian women were picking strawberries. Several of these women, or squaws, as they are called, had "papooses"—that is, babies—and, having no cradles, they had tied them up in Indian fashion, hung from the limbs of the surrounding trees. "When the wind blew, these cradles would rock." A young man of the party observing this, peeled off a piece of the bark, and wrote the above lines, which, it is believed, was the first poetry written in America.—The Girls' Companion.

Church Life

Frank Stuart Ford has accepted the pastorate of Alameda, Calif. church, succeeding J. R. Perkins.

Another evangelistic "company" is being organized, this time by C. L. Organ of Des Moines, Iowa.

On a recent Sunday F. N. Calvin, pastor First Church, Warren, Ohio, capitalized current political sentiment by preaching on "My Candidate."

O. L. Cook, who resigned the pastorate at Hutchinson, Kans., recently, is moving his family to Hiram, Ohio, that he may educate his sons in Hiram College.

Dr. Albert Buxton was properly "received" at a social event given by the congregation of Central Church, Joplin, Mo. Doctor Buxton is the new pastor of the church.

At the Missouri state convention George A. Campbell, of Hannibal, delivered what was characterized as a profound and masterful sermon on "The Religion of the Spirit," using Alexander Proctor's message as an illustration.

Arthur Braden, pastor of the Central Church, Syracuse, N. Y., had the misfortune of losing his home by fire the night of June 11. Mrs. Braden and the children were at home alone and when wakened by smoke had difficulty in escaping.

G. L. Surber, whose long ministry among Disciples was best known for the fruitfulness of the period which he spent in Australia organizing many mission churches, passed away at the home of his daughter near Fruitland, Idaho, June 19.

D. F. Sellars, pastor, at Lordsburg, New Mexico, recently held a three weeks meeting at Douglas, Ariz., in return for one of like length which Pastor Walter L. Martin held for him and his people in February. The meeting resulted in eight additions to the Douglas Church.

Between 1,800 and 2,000 attended the Children's day exercises at Pomona, Calif., where C. R. Hudson ministers, and an offering of $320 was given. Sunday, June 16, Pastor Hudson graduated a Bible study class of twenty-six. The Pomona Church has the vision of a Bible institute.

William Dunn Ryan, of Central Church, Youngstown, Ohio, was the speaker at a fellowship service at Newton Falls, Ohio, on June 14. He spoke on "The Scientific Saint," contrasting him with the "canonized" saint and the "professional" saint. H. D. Williams, pastor at Newton Falls, speaks very cordially of Mr. Ryan's address.

At the dedicatory services of the new Christian church at Liberal, Kans., the architect of the building confessed his faith in Christ and was baptized by the pastor, H. G. Bond. The new structure cost $15,000. George L. Snively led the congregation in raising funds. Six thousand dollars was asked for and $7,200 was pledged. This church numbers 245 members.

S. M. Perkins' ministry at First Church, Davenport, Iowa, was suddenly terminated by his acceptance of a call to succeed T. W. Grafton at Jackson Ave. Church, Kansas City. Mr. Perkins was leading his people in a large building enterprise. The funds were in process of collection when the call came. His nearly five years at Davenport have been very fruitful and this church which has made headway only with great difficulty for many years past, took on new and vigorous life. Mr. Perkins will be found well adapted to the Kansas City field. Meantime it is hoped Davenport church will speedily find a competent and worthy leader.

Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, Ohio. W. F. Rothenburger, pastor, takes much satisfaction in giving ten of its sons to the ministry of the gospel in the past two decades, besides one young lady to missionary service. Earl Brown, son of the late Russell A. Brown, was ordained June 20, in Franklin Circle Church in which he was reared. Mr. Brown took his bachelor's degree at Hiram and his master's at Yale, and enters now into pastoral charge of the church at Beaver, Pa. At the ordination the pastor was assisted by Walter S. Goode, pastor of Lakewood Church, Frank C. Ford, pastor of West Boulevard Church and Alanson Wilcox, one of the veteran preachers of Ohio.

C. R. Oakley dedicated the new house of worship at New Washington, O., on June 9. Last August J. E. Sturgis and Mr. Oakley held a tent meeting at New Washington which resulted in an organization of twenty-two members. They have struggled along and builded a neat house of worship 30x50 feet, and furnished it with pulpit, baptistery, chairs and piano. They can accommodate 250 people. Nearly $600 was raised in cash and pledges. Eight baptisms in the week's meeting following dedication. There is now a resident membership of twenty-five.

Hon. N. S. Martz, mayor of Tipton, Indiana, and a member of the Christian Church there, died recently in Indianapolis, where he had gone for a surgical operation. He superintended the construction of the beautiful church building at Tipton toward which he was a most generous contributor. He was a liberal giver to the educational, benevolent and missionary enterprises of the brotherhood. The funeral took place at Tipton, the addresses being delivered by the pastor, G. I. Hoover, and I. H. Kuhn of Indianapolis, a former minister of the Tipton Church. The pastors of the various churches of Tipton and Aubrey Moore of Arcadia also participated in the services.

The Convention of the Northwest District of Iowa held at Waterloo, June 6 and 7, was of considerable interest. There was no formal program of speeches but the time was largely given to business and discussion. A fund had been raised to pay the milage of every minister in the district so that definite work could be planned for the future. Pres. W. P. Clark gave a survey of the churches, showing the conditions. C. H. Morris of Marshalltown sopke on the subject, "Shall We Employ a District Superintendent of Missions?" F. E. Smith of Cedar Rapids, discused the subject, "Shall We Have a District Ministerial Association?" Their addresses caused lively discussions. Miss Annette Newcomer spoke on Thursday afternoon and gave the closing address. Friday evening she was heard with great interest as she told of her tour around the world visiting the mission stations.

Butler College Commencement

Butler College, Indianapolis, graduated twenty-nine Bachelors of Arts and one Master on June 16. The baccalaureate sermon had been delivered on the preceding Sunday by Rev. C. J. Tanner of Detroit. His theme was "The Uplift of a Great Task." The commencement address was delivered by Hon. Martin A. Morrison of the class of 1883, now a member of Congress from Indiana. The new catalogue just issued shows six graduate students, two hundred ninety-seven undergraduate students, twenty special students, one hundred forty-two extension students—in the department of art, thirty-one, in the teachers' training course, forty, and in the summer session of 1911, seventy-one—making a total of six hundred twelve. Deducting thirty-seven for names quoted twice leaves a total of five hundred seventy-five, the largest number of students the college has ever known. The prospects for next year are the best in the history of the college. A number of improvements to the building will be made during the summer.

Foreign Society News

At the regular meeting of the Executive Commitee, June 14, J. B. Daugherty was appointed a missionary to the Philippine Islands.

Mrs. Paul Wakefield of Wuhu, China, expresses the hope that a new mission station will soon be opened in Wu-hei-chow. This is a city we have been planning to enter for a number of years. The location is strategic.

D. O. Cunningham has returned from India on his regular furlough and is at Ada, Ohio.

The Foreign Society will join with Protestant missions in a missionary exhibit in Ghent, Belgiumn, in 1913.

Miss Jessie Asbury has left Japan and is on her way to America. She is suffering from nervous prostration. She has rendered splendid service at Akita, and it is hoped she will soon recuperate and be able to return to her duties.

Miss Mary F. Lediard has reached home on furlough. She is now at Owen Sound, Ont. It will be remembered that she is in the girls, college at Tokyo and is associated with Miss Bertha Clawson.

There is a plan on foot in China to establish a school in Kuling and another in Shanghai, for the training of children of missionaries.

Miss Josepha Franklin has been urged to travel in India in the interest of the Sunday-school work and in the interest of graded lessons in particular.

Miss Olive Griffith is at home on furlough from India, and will remain until after the national convention. She was not able to attend the last convention, because it was at Portland and she did not arrive in time.

James G. Ware, a son of James Ware, our missionary in China for more than a quarter of a century, is now in Rush Medical College, Chicago. He is making fine progress in his studies.

Geo. R. Quiggin of Birkenhead, England, is a missionary volunteer. He has recently married Miss Bertha Coop, the daughter of Joe Coop of Southport, England.

The returns from Children's day are the most satisfactory in the history of the Foreign Society. Up-to-date a gain has been made in both the number of contributing schools and in the amount contributed.

J. C. Ogden, who lately returned from Tibet, and who has been in quite poor health, is now said to be improving and it is hoped that he will soon be fully recevered.

Miss Sylvia M. Siegfried, Laoag, P. I., under recent date, writes "Had seventy-five in our chapel Sunday-school Sunday; fifty at an afternoon Sunday-school at another place in the city at a private home. The latter was held in a strong Romanist center where some of the neighbors were so afraid our teaching would be against them that they shut their doors and windows so that they wouldn't hear."

Illinois

Evangelist B. L. Wray is in a revival meeting at Stronghurst, which began the early part of June.

James Sharratt and daughter concluded a revival meeting at Rosiclare. The meeting is said to have been most profitable to the church.

S. H. Kuntz of Eureka preaches at Pittwood, where there were seven additions on a recent Sunday, three of whom were on profession of faith.

Grayville Church, where W. H. Kern is pastor, will hold a meeting in July, assisted by Evangelist E. E. Violett and wife, who have recently returned from a trip to the Orient.

One of the largest home missionary offerings in Illinois was given by a country church near Emden called Bethel. The amount was $210. The offering represented more than $2 per capita.

Lovington Church pastor, Gilbert Jones, led the Johnson City Church in a revival meeting which added twenty-eight persons to the membership. This congregation has called J. J. Hudson to its pastorate.

Quincy is having a revival meeting led by the Fife brothers. The First Church and East End are coöperating. The meeting is held in the east part of the city in a large tent, and large congregations of people are gathering nightly.

The pastor of Abingdon Church, F. L. Moore, has presented his resignation, to take effect the first of September. Mr. Moore has been pastor of the church here more than four years. It is not reported where his next pastorate will be.

Union services will be held by four churches in Bloomington, including the Second Christian Church, of which S. H. Zendt is pastor. It is purposed to hold these services in the park during the months of July and August, and the various pastors will alternate in preaching.

Additional Children's Day offerings for foreign missions are reported from the following schools: Concord, $36.65; Smyser, $20; Beecher City, $14.36; Rock Island, $70; London, $16.19; Howett St., Peoria, $181.45; Hermon, $16; Bethel, $43.19; Lawrenceville, $100; Washburn, $100.

Ira A. Engle, who has been pastor of Carrollton Church for more than a year, has tendered his resignation. It is not learned where Mr. Engle will locate, but undoubtedly some wide-awake Illinois church will persuade him to remain in the state, where he has been laboring for several years.

The officers for the Fifth District were elected at the convention held at Illiopolis the early part of June, as follows: President, C. E. French, Virginia; vice-president, G. W. Wise, Lincoln; secretary, John R. Golden, Springfield; with members of the board, C. H. Metcalf, Girard; and J. W. Augur, Mt. Auburn.

H. H. Peters has closed his work as Endowment Secretary of Eureka College, and will accept a secretarial position with the American Christian Missionary Society, beginning August 1. He will work in Illinois and adjoining states, continuing to reside at Eureka. Mr. Peters' services in behalf of Eureka College resulted in the payment of a large debt and increasing the endowment from $50,000 to $170,000. The new campaign for a further increase of endowment begun last January has not proved as fruitful as Mr. Peters hoped. He speaks with confidence of the future of the school under the new presidency of Charles E. Underwood.

The venerable Knox P. Taylor of Bloomington passed away June 27, at the age of 77 years. The funeral services were held at Second Church, conducted by Pastor S. H. Zendt. A large gathering of people paid tribute to his memory by their presence. Mr. Taylor's long residence in Illinois and his vital connection with Sunday-school and church affairs throughout the state made him a well known character among the Disciples. His going will sadden many a heart which has come to appreciate his genial personality in years gone by. For some months he had been incapacitated for work and had been residing quietly with his daughter, Mrs. Dunkin, in Bloomington, from whose home he passed away.

Chicago

Basil S. Keusseff, missionary among the Russians of Chicago, reports that he baptized three men on June 23. Mr. Keusseff recently organized a Temperance Society, to work against drunkenness among Russian immigrants. Eighteen men constitute the charter membership of this society.

During the summer vacation of C. G. Kindred, Englewood Church will be supplied by N. S. Haynes, of Decatur, Ill.; Elmer Ward Cole, of Huntington, Ind.; G. W. Hemry, of South Bend, Ind., and Clark Cummings, of Ipava, Ill. Mr. Kindred breaks into his vacation to speak at the Illinois State Christian Endeavor Convention at Quincy. Over $15,000 has been raised to pay for the $18,000 Sunday-school and Gymnasium Extension, which will be built this summer. The remaining $3,000 will be secured before contracts are let.

The Disciples Divinity House gave a banquet to students, faculty and trustees last Thursday evening at the Quadrangle club. Over fifty persons were present. The speeches were highly enjoyable. Divinity House affairs are shaping up for a great future. The outlook for the collecting of a fund with which to erect a new building is promising. Professor C. M. Sharpe, recently of the Bible College of Missouri, has begun his new work on the Divinity House faculty. He is winning many friends by public address and personal graciousness. It is his purpose to take up shortly the practical development of the material plans for the new building. The student enrollment in the Divinity House is larger this summer than ever before. Among those doing graduate work are many well-known teachers and pastors.

SPRINGFIELD'S NEW SANCTUARY

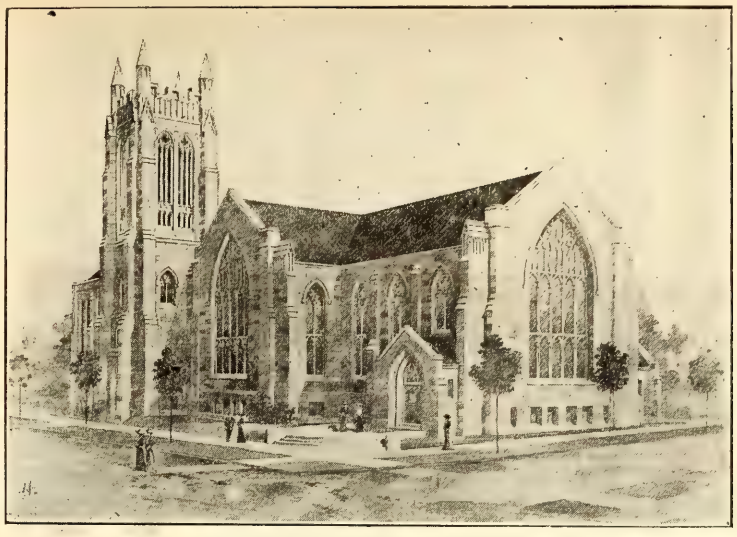
Cathedral Church of Illinois Erected at Capital City.

Dedication week at Springfield progressed with marked interest. On Sunday, June 23, great concourses of people assembled at the new building, many being turned away at both the morning and evening service. At the Sunday-school hour the school assembled at the Masonic Temple, where services were held for two years, and marched to the new church, two blocks away. There were said to be between six and seven hundred persons in line, every class having its own banner. Services in the auditorium were preceded with a processional, with the choir singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers." The sermon in the morning was preached by F. M. Rains of Cincinnati, and was followed by the solicitation of pledges to liquidate indebtedness on the building. The property cost about $135,000 and there yet remained approximately $50,000 unpledged. About one-half of this amount was raised in the morning, and some additional was received at night, making a total of about $27,000 pledged during the day. On account of the money not being in sight to assure the liquidation of all indebtedness, formal dedication was postponed, with the hope that during the week succeeding the entire amount would be pledged. At this writing a canvass is being aggressively carried forward to this end.

Rev. Frederick W. Burnham, Pastor of First Church.

Every night during the week a program was rendered. Monday evening was given over to reminiscences and historical sketches of the city and churches. Tuesday evening a largely attended gathering received felicitations from neighboring ministers of the Methodist, Baptist, Lutheran, Presbyterian, Episcopalian and Congregational churches. This program was rendered with the utmost Christian temper in all of the visiting ministers. Their congratulatory messages were sincere and gave evidence of the entire absence of jealousy and narrow sectarianism. A Disciples camp fire followed on Wednesday night in which pastors of the local churches and visitors from central Illinois participated. On Thursday evening the ladies of the church were in charge of a program which represented the various women's interests of the congregation. A magnificent organ recital was rendered by Clarence Eddy of New York, Friday, and on Saturday evening a splendid banquet and musical entertainment was given in honor of the workmen employed in constructing the church, together with their families. The Sunday morning sermon was delivered by the pastor, Frederick W. Burnham, and in the evening Dr. A. McLean of Cincinnati was the speaker. Springfield Disciples have had few occasions, if any, to compare in importance and interest with that of the dedication of the new church and the accessory programs during the week following.

Probably there is no church structure in Illinois outside of Chicago comparable in beauty and completeness to the new home of First Church. Its lines maintain the Gothic motif with a consistency rarely followed in the West. Travelers in Scotland will notice the similarity between the picture herewith presented and the noble ruins of Melrose Abbey.



Springfield's New Sanctuary.

The stone windows, tower, furnishings and all constitute a unity. No particular feature of the building insists on being observed either for its extraordinary excellence or detracting inferiority. The architect planned it for beauty and worship as well as utility, and was slow in deviating from architectural ideals.

The first impression is of its unity and symmetry, but the critical observer will come naturally, after the first view, to note its details. On the exterior one will pause long to appreciate the tower, situated at the juncture of the main auditorium and Sunday-school building. It is of rare beauty, having a gracefulness of itself, yet in nowise detracting from the symmetry of the building in its entirety. Such a tower it is as would be preserved in older countries when the structure against which it stands had fallen away.

And this is quite as true of the three massive windows in the two transepts and rear of the auditorium. These windows, so chaste in design, filled with cathedral glass, are the conception of a master designer, and would easily find harmonious setting in many of the cathedrals.

On the interior, one is immediately impressed with dignity. A spacious Gothic foyer with tile floors leads into the auditorium, the latter having two main sections of seats, and a large center aisle, with the floor gently sloping. On either side are transepts surmounted by balconies with entrance from the side doors and by a narrow passage-way connecting the side balconies with a balcony over the foyer. The main floor and balconies provide sittings for about 1,000 persons.

The ornate chancel, with a large center arch and two smaller arches on each side, with a rood screen effect, even the superficial observer will not fail to appreciate. The chancel is floored in its large middle part with tile. Here will be set the communion table, with seats for the presiding elders. At either side, on platforms slightly higher, will be the pulpit and choir loft. The minister will speak from an angle at the congregation's right, instead of from a pulpit situated directly in front and between the two halves of the congregation. Immediately in the rear of the central platform is the baptismal font, faced with marble, free from the inartistic and often very crude efforts at scenic effect. The organ, of Austin design, is built in two sections in the rear of the pulpit and choir loft, the console being placed on the main floor, with the organist facing the choir and with the pulpit and minister in easy view.

The wood-work throughout is oak stained dark, with complete harmony existing between the seats and other furnishings. Great beams crossing the ceiling add to the auditorium's massive appearance.

The Sunday-school department is entirely separate from the auditorium, and thoroughly in harmony with the pleasing design of the church edifice proper. It is not a mere lean-to or afterthought. Its structure conforms to and does no violence to the Gothic ideals.

A beautiful auditorium on the second floor, with a balcony, and having nearly thirty separate class rooms, affords capacity for a school of six or eight hundred without crowding.

On the first floor are rooms for a capacious pastor's study and reception room, official board, Primary department, ladies' parlor, sand-map class and robing rooms.

The basement, completed under the entire structure, is divided into three sections, not including a large well-equipped kitchen. These three sections are easily capable of being thrown into one mammoth room for banquets or entertainments, and with capacity for seating at least 1,000 persons at the tables. One division of the basement is the dining room, another and larger part is for gymnasium purposes, and the third, in such relation to the other two as to provide a stage or platform, is designed as a club room for boys.

A fan ventilating system with electrical motor power is in operation throughout the building. A modern vacuum cleaning system is also installed.

The entire building, constructed of Bedford stone, occupies ground measuring 110x157 feet.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 27
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

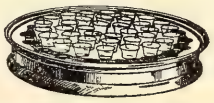
BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone
Far Sounding
Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.

NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business

FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet

THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.
1109 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, U. S. A.



THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
OUR SPECIAL SELF-COLLECTING Cushioned Tray has no equal. NOISELESS, DUST PROOF, INTERLOCKING. Best for pew or altar communion. Uses short, shallow cup, glass or aluminum (indestructible) no tipping of head. Saves ONE-FOURTH cost other services. Over 12,000 churches use. Send for catalog and "Special Introductory Offer." Thomas Communion Service Co., Box 120 Lima, Ohio

SIDE TRIPS
- - - in - - -
"MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME"

While attending the great International Convention of The Disciples of Christ

Louisville, October 15-22

MAMMOTH CAVE
World's Greatest Subterranean Wonder.

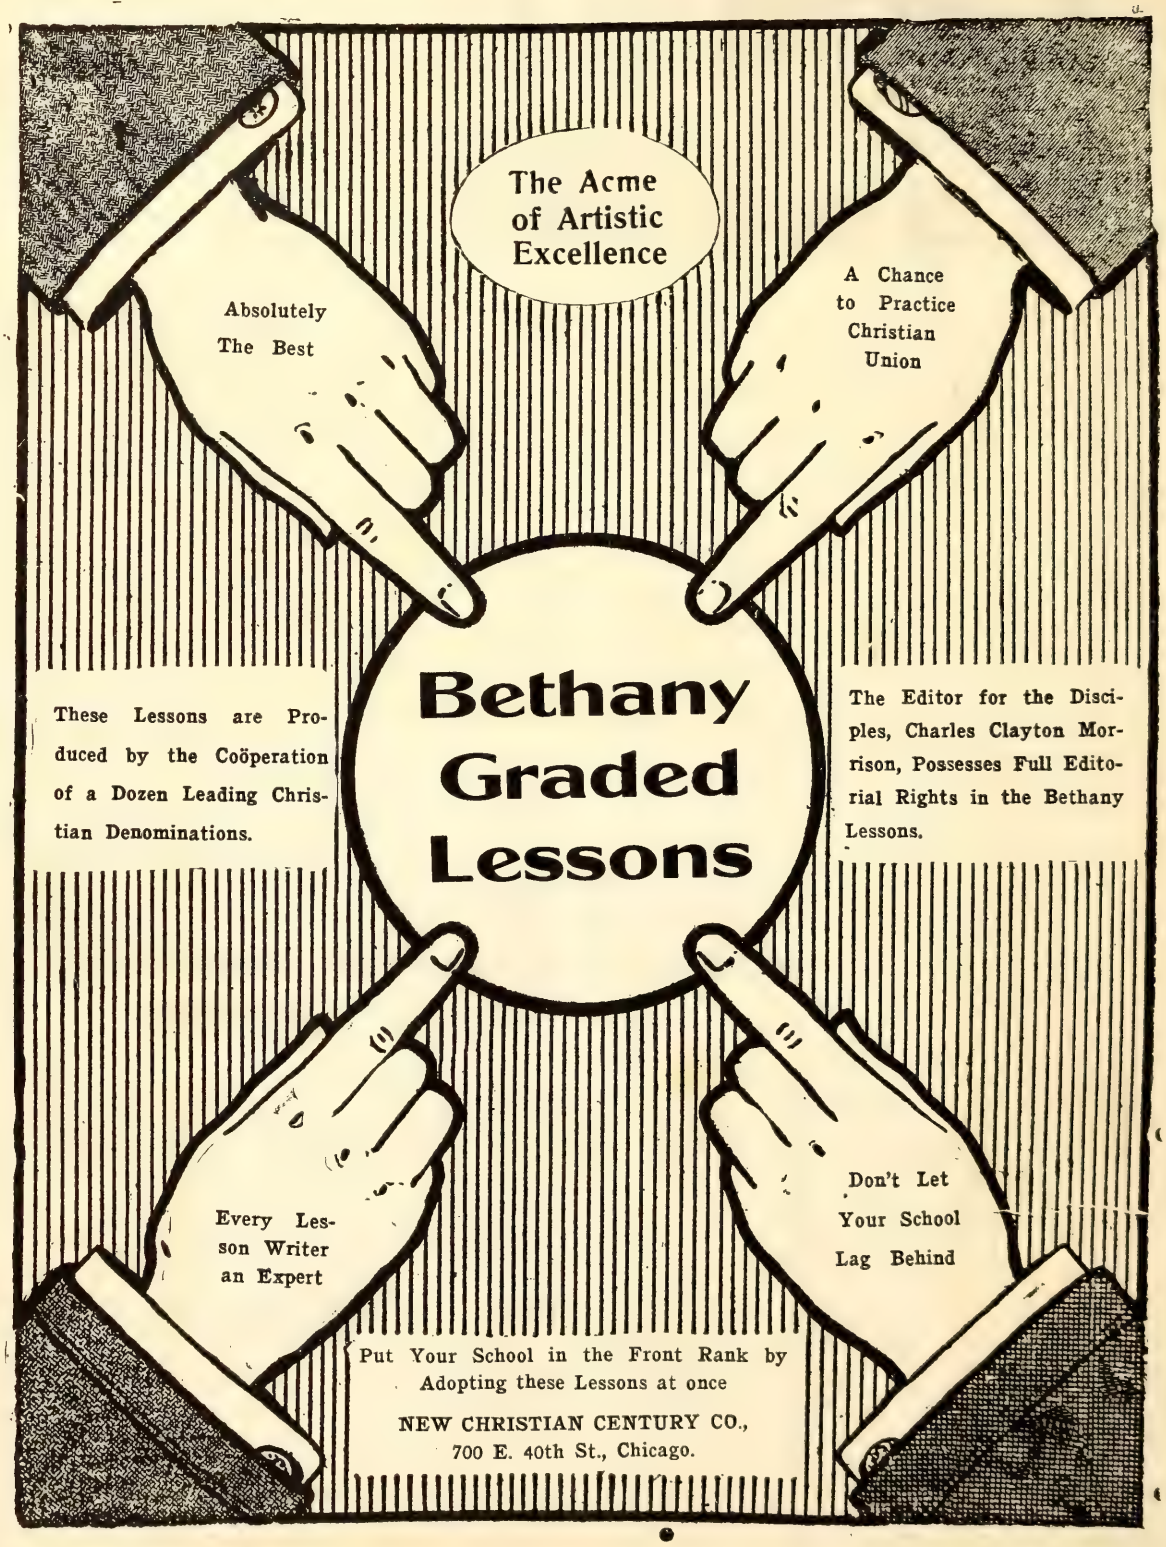
LINCOLN MEMORIAL
The Great Granite Temple over Lincoln's Birthplace.

Foster's Home, Old Transylvania, Cane Ridge Church and dozens of other historic spots of interest.

WRITE ME NOW FOR YOUR RESERVATION

GEO. A. JONES, Secy.

Care First Christian Church Louisville, Ky.



The Acme of Artistic Excellence
Absolutely The Best
A Chance to Practice Christian Union
Bethany Graded Lessons
These Lessons are Produced by the Coöperation of a Dozen Leading Christian Denominations.
The Editor for the Disciples, Charles Clayton Morrison, Possesses Full Editorial Rights in the Bethany Lessons.
Every Lesson Writer an Expert
Don't Let Your School Lag Behind
Put Your School in the Front Rank by Adopting these Lessons at once
NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.,
700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Sharp Rev C M Dec12
5522 Kimbark Ave

Vol. XXIX July 11, 1912 Number 28

FAITH AND HOPE
BY H. D. C. MACLACHLAN

THE COLONEL'S TOWEL
A MISSIONARY STORY
BY SUSAN HUBBARD MARTIN

DID CHRIST COMMAND BAPTISM?
AN EDITORIAL REPLY TO SOME QUESTIONS

CHICAGO

WILLIAM WOODS College

School where girls WHO KNOW want to go
FULTON, MO.
Girls do NOT miss the College Flavor here.
Our illustrated, interesting new catalogue tells all the story. Ask for it.
Address: J. L. Garvin, President Box C

Chartered controlled by Christian church

1869 — HAMILTON COLLEGE FOR WOMEN — 1912
LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.
HUBERT GIBSON SHEARIN, A. M., Ph. D. (Yale), President.
Standardized Junior College courses under a faculty of twenty-nine, all graduates of leading American and European institutions. Faculty of seven for Music, Expression and Art.
Five modern buildings. Complete gymnasium, laboratories and libraries. Home care. Delightful dormitories. Cultural surroundings and scholarly ideals.
The forty-fourth session begins September 9, 1911. For catalogue T address THE SECRETARY.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
An Up-to-Date College for Young Women
CAMDEN POINT, MISSOURI

COURSES:
College Preparatory Bible
Normal, Music
Elocution
Physical Culture

COMMODIOUS BUILDING:
New Addition to Building
New Gymnasium
Steam Heated, Acetylene Lighted, Large Campus

TUITION REASONABLE AND RIGHT—SEND FOR CATALOGUE
Sixty-fourth Year Opens in September FRANK G. RICHARD, President

An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women SIXTY-SECOND YEAR
Christian College

Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $36,000 building, completed. 25 College-trained, experienced teachers. Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior college course leads to an A. B. degree. College-preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character-training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field. Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern colleges. For illustrated catalogue address

MRS. LUELLA W. ST. CLAIR-MOSS, President, COLUMBIA, MO.
Next Session begins September 17th.

How About Attending College This Year?

We want the name of every young man and every young woman who is considering this most important question. We believe we can show them that

DRAKE UNIVERSITY

Offers Great Advantages

It is located in the best residence district in Des Moines—the best city in the West. Surroundings clean and wholesome. Good influences surround the boy or girl who attends Drake University.

Courses of Study: Liberal Arts (including Courses for Primary, Kindergarten, Grade and High School Teachers and Students in Domestic Science), Law, Medicine, Dentistry, Bible, Music, Painting and Drawing, Dramatic Art, Etc. Thoroughly prepared teachers in all departments. The best of equipment. The Drake Stadium, one of the finest athletic fields in the country.

Write for catalogue and full particulars. Any question you may desire to ask will be answered cheerfully.

HILL M. BELL, President,
Drake University. Des Moines, Iowa

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS
Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.
THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street - - - Chicago, Ill.

The Best

The Uniform Sunday School lessons for 1912 are in The Life of Christ. You want the very best text for your young people's and adult classes that can be found. Even though your school is graded, up to the Intermediate department, you may still find it desirable to follow the Uniform lessons for the older classes. This is simply to remind you that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF CHRIST in Fifty-two Lessons. It is a new book. A second large edition has just been issued to meet the great demand. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

The New Christian Century Co.,
700 E. 40th St.
CHICAGO

The Christian Century

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT . . . . . EDITORS

Faith and Hope

FAITH MAKES THE FUTURE PRESENT. It is "to be confident of what we hope for." Hope is in the future; faith is in the present. If I merely hope for a thing I may sit down and fold my arms and wait for its happening; if I have faith in it, I reach a hand into the future and live as though the thing hoped for were already here.

Hope is an attitude of expectation; faith is an attitude of possession. Hope is passive, faith is active. Hope is emotional, faith is volitional. Hope has a remnant of doubt still clinging to its skirts, faith has already trampled all doubt under foot. Hope is in time, faith in eternity. Hope lives by the time piece of earth, which crawls from hour to hour; faith lives by the clock of God, which is always at high-noon.

One can readily see, therefore, what the scripture writer means when he says that "faith is the confidence of things hoped for." He means that it is the bringing of the power of future blessings so to bear on the present that the life that now is is irradiated with the glory of that which is to come. To have faith in the promises of God is not merely to believe that such and such good things will come to pass, but to help God fulfil his promises by living as though they were already in some sense realized.

To have faith in a life beyond death is to have such a strong grip on it that our lives to-day and every day are lived in the environment of eternity—in that supernatural world where eternal values already have the right of way. To believe in the future reward of goodness is to realize its present reward. To believe in that vision of our souls for the advancement of Christ's kingdom is not merely to hope for it, but to take it for granted, and go forth to do battle for it with the glad confidence of one who is as certain of its success as of the rising and setting of the sun.

Faith, therefore, produces two qualities of soul that are of inestimable value. The first is confidence. To go into the fight sure of success because God is on our side, is to have the battle already half won. Confidence of this sort—which is as far from egotism and self-confidence as day is from night—at once strengthens the man who possesses it, confirms his companions-in-arms, and proportionately discourages the enemy.

Confidence is infectious—hypnotic. It is the one great essential of spiritual leadership. The man of faith believes in himself because he believes in the justice of his cause; and so, begetting faith in others, makes heroes out of common clay, and leads, as did Moses, a mob of slaves to glorious victory.

Faith also begets joy, and joy, too, is strength. To have faith is to have the promised reward, the future, so vividly present to the soul that the harvest begins to be reaped almost when the seed is being sown. It is not at all necessary that we "go forth with weeping, sowing precious seed." On the contrary, the best sowers are those that have gone forth with a shout and a song because by faith they saw the broad fields of grain already whitening in the sun.

It is true that the great heroes of faith have been men of much sorrow and suffering, but they also have been men of profoundest joy. It was the same Paul who penned that terrible catalogue of woes in the Eleventh of Second Corinthians, who also wrote only a few years later: "Rejoice in the Lord always: again I will say rejoice." It was Jesus who in the very shadow of the cross said: "This my joy, therefore, is fulfilled." It is of a man of such faith that Tennyson writes:

> "The men who met him rounded on their heels
> And wondered after him, because his face
> Shone like the countenance of a priest of old
> Against a flame about a sacrifice
> Kindled by fire from heaven: so glad was he."

Faith is at once a demand on the universe that the things that are shall become conformable to the things that ought to be and an endeavor, so far as in us lies, to make them conformable. One cannot have faith in God or devil without striving to make either the one or the other the captain of his soul and monarch of the world. Faith does not stop with reciting creeds, but takes the form of words and clothes it in the flesh and blood of human lives and institutions. To believe in the Fatherhood of God is not to repeat the Pater Noster, but actually to live in the comfort and peace of God's paternal care. To believe in immortality is not to understand an argument, but to cultivate the immortal part of you—to live in the power of an endless life. To have faith in any good cause whatsoever is not merely to understand and love it, but to pledge oneself, body, soul and spirit to the bringing of it to pass.

To have faith is to be sure that the ideals which shine on the horizon of our hopes are not mere cloud-land capes, but really the first dim outlines of the promised land; that God is not mocking us with the visions that draw our souls upwards; that "the light that never was on sea or land" is not unreal, but the most real of all the visions that disturb the sloth of our souls; that the ideals we follow, so slowly and heavily, are not jack o' lanterns hung out by some inexplicable, maleficent power to lead us astray, but are the very lamps of God to light our feet in the paths of peace and power. For many of us—for the most of us perhaps—immersed as we are in the things of sense, ideals are but rare visitants from another world, and then come only to glitter fitfully awhile on the horizon like the Northern lights.

But for the true man of faith the ideal is a fixed star—the ever present inspiration and motive-power of his life. His actions are controlled not by the things that are, but by the things that ought to be; not by the things seen, but by the things unseen.

H. D. MACLACHLAN.

Social Survey

The Corn Crop and the Whisky Output

The distillers succeeded, by means they understand, in getting the papers of the country to publish recently the assertion that "sixty per cent of all corn produced by the farmers of the United States goes into whisky." The distiller would fain pose as the "farmer's best customer." But the last corn crop reported in government table was that of 1910, and amounted to 3,125,713,000 bushels, whose value at the farm is put down at $1,523,968,000. Sixty per cent of this means $914,380,800, which is more than the entire output of liquors is worth after distillation, all materials, cost of plant and labor being added. It is usually estimated that all liquors manufactured in the United States consume—some would say destroy—two per cent of the various grains grown in the country. Such an estimate is based upon the statistics of the department of agriculture issued in 1908, and was given by Secretary Wilson to W. E. Curtiss. The despatch so widely published multiplies this by thirty, that's all. But the publicity advocates employed by the trade evidently think that a lie well stuck to will serve as well as if it were true. The farmers will never know the difference.—Won't they?

Censored American History

Roman Catholics of Denver have succeeded in throwing out of the public schools of that city an American history that was obnoxious to them; our Episcopal brethren in Ohio have protested as a diocese against an English history used in the schools of that state, which they think does not fairly state the causes and effects of the Reformation under Henry VIII. That is the old route down which the public schools always travel when they first throw out the Bible. In Holland, the process has gone so far that in one of their universities they refused longer to teach the history of the Netherlands at all, and the elder pupils, to pass the time, were reported to spend on dancing the hours formerly given to the story of William of Nassau. In America we can always fall back on manual training and domestic science. If there is any country in the world where the system of education is more clearly "up in the air" than it is in America, we have not heard of it. By the way, one of the high schools in Cook County graduated this summer with a ball!

Prosperity of Argentine Republic

The Argentine republic is on the boom. The area under cultivation in the republic now exceeds 54,000,000 acres, and there are 10,843 miles of railways. The imports in 1911 amounted in value to $366,810,686 gold, and the exports to $324,697,538. The extensive and increasing demands from foreign countries for Argentine beef bid fair to leave the country without cattle sufficient to supply local needs. The president of the nation has instructed the minister of agriculture to investigate the matter, and make such recommendations as the situation may warrant. Various societies interested in the cattle industry have also taken the matter under advisement, so serious has the situation shown itself. Reports received from many of the investigators substantiate the statement that the annual slaughter of cattle by packing companies far exceeds the increase of the herds for the same period. Legislation looking to the limiting of the number of cattle slaughtered to the number represented by the yearly increase is proposed as the sole solution. The Argentine possesses vast tracts of idle and uncultivated lands admirably adapted to stock raising. The government invites immigrants of the right sort to come there. Conditions require that the prospective settler have some means to subsist while the soil is being made tillable and the cattle raised; otherwise the farmer will fail to achieve that success which climate and conditions insure.

—Female suffrage workers are hard at it in Chicago. The Illinois Equal Suffrage Association is issuing a miniature newspaper called the Press Bulletin. It is designed to awaken and keep awake interest in equal suffrage. The first issue of the new publication was out last Saturday. Suffrage workers, armed with the public policy petition providing for more than one amendment a year to the state constitution, and for equal suffrage, are invading the loop district in an effort to obtain 100,000 signatures before fall. Office buildings, department stores, railway stations, restaurants, railway yards and hotels are being visited by suffrage workers. "The progressive movement has come to stay on the Pacific coast. Women are studying, helping, thinking everywhere, and in every way in the work of cleaning California. The women of California, since their enfranchisement, claim that they have stopped the ravages of the liquor traffic, have stopped the white slave traffic, accomplished many prison reforms, and started recreation centers throughout the state that will build up the communities and make better men and women."

—During Mr. Bryan's campaign against Governor Harmon in Ohio, he said: "I shall never be nominated again. My most prized possessions are 100 letters in my safe at Lincoln, written to me by Nebraska men when I had enlisted in the Spanish war, in which they offered to substitute at the front for me. Many of these letters were poorly written and some of them were illiterate, but the tenor of them all was that I had a mission to perform in the public life of the nation, while the writer of each had no one dependent upon him, regarded himself as a more or less worthless citizen, compared with me, and said his life would never be missed." He said the other day, "Those 100 men were willing to die for me, and I would rather die now than desert the ideals they had of me and of my public service. If ever temptation has come my way, if ever I could have gained by cheating, the thought of those 100 men always confronted me. My life work is consecrated to the 100 men who offered to die for me, and I shall never give up."

—The Catholic church becomes more and more worried over the spread of socialism as the days go by. A warning has been sent out to archbishops in America emphasizing the necessity of more Catholic churches to offset this danger. Reports of studies recently made in Vienna and Paris, centers of socialism, about the equipment of Catholics in those cities, or rather the lack of equipment, have been transmitted to archbishops. Parishes with 5,000 to 10,000 communicants are depreciated, and archbishops are urged to increase the number of churches, if they can possibly do so. Old Catholic strongholds like the Austrian and French capitals are, the report shows, badly off for churches. In one district of Vienna, there are 25,000 Catholics to attend each church; in another, there are 35,000 to each church; and in still another, there is only one church for 70,000 Catholic population. Paris reports are even worse.

—Drastic measures to avert accidents in the streets of London are demanded. It is alleged that a reign of terror exists, mainly because of the large increase in the number of motor buses. John Benn, leader of the municipal progressives, advocates the establishment of a central authority to regulate the number of buses admitted on any route. He asserts that the motor bus trust is adding vehicles and speeding up in order to "hustle the municipal trams off the streets." The war between the buses and the street cars is bitter. They often battle for the right of way, involving danger to life and limb. The police are accused of negligence in permitting these struggles. The taxicabs are also blamed for reckless driving due to the general scramble to win fares.

—Excursion steamers on Lake Michigan during the summer season will be under the continual observation of the federal authorities. A corps of government agents from the office of the division superintendent of the department of justice will patrol the large excursion boats with a view of ending drinking and rowdyism. The government recently decided, it is stated, that under the federal laws governing lake traffic, it has the right to prevent, in many instances, the carrying of liquor aboard boats.

—So great is the number of Spanish-speaking people in the United States, and especially in the South and Southwest, that the American Bible Society and some of the American mission boards are joining with the British and Foreign Bible Society to make a new translation of the Bible expressly for them. The commission is to begin its sittings this summer, and, in order to obtain greater perfectness in language, will hold its sessions in Spain itself.

—The following gentlemen, more or less prominent in public life, are responsible for the democratic platform at Baltimore: W. J. Bryan, John W. Kern, C. C. Culberson, J. A. O'Gorman, Isador Rayner, A. H. Dockery, D. J. Walsh, Atlee Pomerene, Thomas S. Martin, S. W. Belford, R. T. Broussard, G. W. Fithian. Most of these platform framers are United States senators.

—Miss Anna A. Malley, socialist lecturer and writer, of Everett, and once business manager of the New York Call, will head the socialist state ticket in Washington, the count of the referendum vote giving her the nomination for governor over Richard Winsor, of Seattle, by a majority of 850.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Baptists and Unity

A writer in the Standard (Baptist) summarizes the position of that denomination on the subject of Christian union as follows:

Is there not ample justification for our continued existence as a denomination, not for its own sake, but for the sake of a sound Christianity? This proposition we hold true: The existence of a denomination is justified when it stands for distinctive principles vital to the salvation and development of the individual soul and vital to the spiritual life and character of the Christian church. As to the obliteration of denominations we hold that those which have no such vital differences, and have most in common, should first get together; and that until this is done it is unseemly to throw stones at us as disturbers of the unity of Christendom or to exercise the lachrymal glands too copiously over our separations. Let the work of consolidation of denominations begin along the lines of least resistance. Meanwhile, though formal church unity may be a chimera, there may be, indeed there is, Christian unity between different denominations; for these various flocks of the one great fold usually live in peace with one another, the fighting, if any, being done by a few bellicose rams. Our own mission in and for Christendom is to be prosecuted in the spirit of Christian love and it is for us to prove that a sane, self-respecting denominationalism is not hostile to Christian unity any more than pronounced patriotism is incompatible with international clasping of hands between republics and monarchies in the interest of righteousness and peace.

Now, briefly, as to our conjoint mission. This means work in common with others for the world's evangelization. Important as our distinctive denominational principles are, our chief mission is not to make Baptists, but to do our part as a great denomination in winning the world for Christ.

Our query is, What is there in such a statement that will not be applicable to every other denomination in Christendom? It is true that the author of the above declares that "our chief mission is not to make Baptists, but to do our part as a great denomination in winning the world for Christ"; but is there not in all such utterances the vague feeling that making Baptists and winning the world for Christ are identical tasks? We are all so embued with the denominational conception of Christianity that we cannot draw the line between the particular and the universal. Now all denominations have some of the essential features of Christianity, some express them much better than others, but we believe that not any one of them can so embody the salient features of our great religion as to compel the recognition of its right to be the sole expositor of the fundamentals. Hence, there will ever remain the distinction between the denominational forms of Christianity and the essence, whch can only be maintained in its purity and given to the world by a union of all the forces of Christendom in which the denominational features and the sectarian spirit cannot have a part. With many sects claiming to have discovered the true faith, one need not be surprised at the attempts to make the sect equal to the whole, and to claim identity with the apostolic models.

Discussions Among the Episcopalians

In many of the churches the cost of administering the various Boards has come up for discussion, the impression in many instances being that there is more butter than bread. There seems to be no way out of the difficulty at the present time. Efficient men must be had to carry out the policies of the different organizations of the church; the cost of maintenance is heavy, and if results are secured it would seem that the investment was wise. We cannot speak of the wisdom which demands the disproportion between the maintenance of a staff of workers in a vast territory, and the cost of the overseers, as indicated in the item below which we borrow from the Congregationalist. Our readers will not miss the discussion therein on the merits of the episcopacy as a basis of union.

The United Clericus of Episcopalians in the far Northwest has been convening in Portland. Its attendants came not only from Oregon, Washington and other Pacific communities, but also from across the Canadian line from Vancouver and British Columbia. For that reason a discussion on the Episcopacy in Relation to Church Union was of more than conventional interest and significance. The clergyman who introduced the subject made statements in his paper which bordered on the sensational. For instance, he presented figures indicating that all the ordinary clergy and deaconesses on the Pacific Coast cost the general board of missions less than $33,000, while it required over $23,000 for the seven bishops over them; that, in one instance, "the bishop has cost the board nearly three times as much as all the other clergy put together." The speaker criticised the lack of a central head, with each bishop "under no supervision or oversight," and declared that certain rules of ordination were "habitually disregarded with impunity." Naturally, after such scathing indictments, there were many calls from the floor for speeches from the bishops present. The latter, for the most part, declined to enter the discussion, which, therefore, shifted to grounds more intimately connected with the topic in hand. At this time, some remarks by Principal Vance of Vancouver may be considered fairly typical. Admitting that "there is no great movement toward the Anglican Church," he went on to say, "whatever may be true about divine rights vested in hierarchies, it is true they are not favorable for the ecclesiastical unity we say they secure. We cannot be so certain from the New Testament about the episcopacy as to say we will accept no union except the episcopacy be a basis of union." In view of the efforts now being made by our Episcopalian friends toward a world conference on Christian unity, these insurgent declarations on the episcopacy—the inevitable stumbling block of all union movements—are worth considering.

Progressives and Conservatives

The following from the Presbyterian Banner is an excellent contribution to the study of the forces which are now being felt in every phase of our activities. It is these two forces which in our political life at the present moment are responsible for the severing of life-long friendships, for the tensions in the business world which sooner or later must end in hardships for many, and for the chasms in the great political parties. Here again is where the lines are drawn in all the churches, the progressives on the one side and the conservatives on the other. But we believe that between these two forces the best things in church and state will be conserved; one is a check upon the other. One will restrain the speed and quicken the pace of the other. Each will be a corrective of the other's faults. Our readers will give their consideration to these timely words from our esteemed contemporary.

But as conservatism itself is simply accumulated progress, progress also is a necessary principle and process. Our whole human world is alive, and life is ever sprouting and expanding. The oak cannot be kept in the acorn, nor the eagle in its shell. The civilization that has been marching forward for thousands of years cannot be suddenly stopped at the present point. The river of progress cannot be arrested and turned into a stagnant and poisonous pool. And there is no standing still. Life must either go forward or backward, wax lustier or wither, grow into finer fruit or decay at the root.

The materials of the past must be constantly reshaped to closer adaptation and higher efficiency. The machinery of yesterday is thrown on the scrap-heap today, and more effective and economical machinery is installed. Our knowledge is being constantly corrected and enlarged, fact being added to fact, and theory giving way to theory, and thus science is ever approximating to reality and mounting to mastery. Our political and social and religious institutions are undergoing the same change and adaptation to our ideas and needs. An institution or agency, such as a political party and platform or a religious creed and organization, may last a long time and slowly get out of adjustment. Accumulating progress and expanding life will then press upon it in increasing force until it must give way, either in a revolution or convulsion or in plastic reorganization and adjustment. Nothing is so fixed and certain or so sacrosanct and inviolable that it must not be touched and changed by this process. Everything at times must go into the melting pot and come out purged of its dross. These two processes are often at seeming variance and destructive strife and may give alarm to timid souls. But both are good and necessary and will surely work out some larger result and better thing. We should, therefore, be calm and patient while the process of adjustment is being wrought out, refrain from taking alarm or giving offense, and have faith that the ultimate issue will be larger truth and goodness.

Every one, then, should be both a conservative and a progressive. It would be blind folly to deny the progress of the past and to try to cast it away; and it would equally be blind bigotry to think that the past is perfect and has left nothing for us to learn. We should strive to appreciate and be loyal to what has been gained and at the same time should have a clear eye and receptive mind for growing truth and life. The just and happy combination of the two states of mind is the ideal we should strive to attain and maintain. Conservatism keeps its feet on the solid ground, but progress also sees majestic white visions on the horizon which it strives to reach; conservatism keeps the root of the past firmly planted, but progress cultivates this root so that it bursts into leaf and blossom and then gathers its fruit.

I have thrown out in life these four anchors—my faith in goodness, my faith in the possibilities of men's accomplishment of goodness, my faith in Jesus Christ as the ideal of goodness, and my faith in the divine helpfulness in the world to help me to goodness.—Lyman Abbott.

A Sunday sermon transmuted into Monday manhood is the want—no, the need—of the world. We are too prone to toss sermon and Sunday paper into the waste basket together.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—SILAS JONES, IDA WITHERS HARRISON, ORVIS F. JORDAN, ELLIS B. BARNES.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy, 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
United Religious Press Building

Faith and Works

James preached a gospel of loving deeds. Men may have thought he was coldly practical, but, if they did, it was because they were more familiar with the froth of religion than with its deep currents of faith and emotion. James planted his feet firmly on the earth. He stood where the work of life was being done and he was one of the workers. He knew the power of wealth to turn little fellows into tyrants and how easy it was for the poor to become embittered by their poverty. He saw about him the hungry, the sick, the lovers of pleasure, the busy-bodies, and the presumptuous, and he sought to give aid to them all according to their various needs.

If James insisted that the facts of life be squarely faced, it was not for the purpose of destroying enthusiasm and hope. He was a man of faith. He exposed folly that he might create interest in what was worth while. In our superficial moods, we class men like James with the cynics. We resent their sharp words about our enervating pleasures and our heartless commercialism. We flatter ourselves that we know life and that our critics are ignorant. We fail to see that they are inviting us to have a better opinion of ourselves. They do not esteem lightly the heroes and martyrs of patriotism and religion. They reverence childhood. They are always ready to encourage the burden-bearers of humanity. They believe we were made for fellowship with God and they show their faith by their actions.

Paul emphasized the quality and the source of the religious life. He had learned that the bad man does bad deeds and that the motive must be right before the conduct can be right. One may visit the sick, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and go through the forms of worship without having love for God or man. Faith is acquaintance with God. It is access to the source of all goodness. Hence Paul sets the man of faith over against the formalist and the hypocrite. Good deeds, he feels certain, will issue from the life that is joined to Christ. God gives himself freely to his children because he is what he is. He could not withhold himself from them and remain the loving Father. Those who are like him also give themselves freely to the children of God.

Formalism had entered the church when James wrote. Men were reciting the ancient creed of Israel, "The Lord our God is one Lord;" and meaning about as much by it as if they had recited, "I believe that the Jordan flows into the Dead Sea." Morality and religion seem to have stood apart. James reminded his readers that God is the source of every good and perfect gift and that faith in such a God is social in its expression. Demons acknowledged the existence of the one God but they did not change their habits. Faith is not faith unless it is shared. Without deeds it cannot prove its existence. Apart from works it has no place whatever in this world.

What are the deeds of faith? Among them must be included thoughts, words, and what we commonly call acts. Man thinks, and he expresses his thoughts in words and in acts. The things he says and does react upon his thinking. There is really no line to be drawn between thinking and speaking and doing. They are all one. If the deed is wrong, the thought is wrong. The man of loving thought will act right. To say to the naked and the hungry, "Go in peace, be ye warmed and filled;" and yet not to give them the things needful for the body, is to lie. The word is not right. There is one law, James tells us, and that is, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The commandments are directions for fulfilling the law of love. They refer to thought, speech, and actions.

A narrow conception of the useful is responsible for much of the criticism that is directed against the church. The church can be improved and its friends should be the first to point out its weaknesses. But when the church is attending faithfully to its chief business, that of awakening in men the noblest ambitions and of assuring them that they are on the side of the eternal God when they fight for character, then it is that the spiritually poverty-stricken denounce the church as a mischievous institution. The church ought to give its support to every enterprise that has for its object the relief of distress, the curing of disease, the removal of burdens from the overworked, or the overthrow of evil institutions. This work and any other it may do must be done in its own way. It must come to the aid of the social workers and learn of them, but it must have its own message. Its power comes from the spiritual in man and its usefulness is in ministering to the spiritual. Its methods may vary with time and place; its aim remains the same. [Mid-week Service, July 17, James 2:14-24.]

S. J.

Did Jesus Authorize Baptism?

Probably the most significant papers read at the Kansas City Congress last April were the two by Professor F. O. Norton of Drake University and Dr. Burris A. Jenkins of Kansas City on the effect of critical scholarship upon the problem of Christian union. Dr. Norton's thesis was substantially this, that critical scholarship eliminates many of the old causes of division by providing a corrected text of the New Testament in which neither side of the old quarrels can find any support.

As illustrations the doctrines of the trinity and of immersion-baptism were used. The New Testament texts in which the trinitarian formula occurs were shown conclusively to be late interpolations. Likewise the texts which assume to put the explicit authority of Jesus back of the ordinance of baptism were examined and incontestable evidence was brought forward showing that these also did not belong to the original manuscripts but were interpolated at a later date.

With Professor Norton Dr. Jenkins was in substantial agreement, though questioning some details of his arguments. Since these papers were read many references have been made to their thesis by the press, and a considerable body of opinion and inquiry has expressed itself in correspondence addressed to the editors of The Christian Century. A list of questions has been sent us by Rev. J. C. Creel of Plattsburg, Mo., typical of many other inquiries. In a personal note to Dr. Willett he says:

"I wish you to take your leisure in answering these questions in The Christian Century; but I desire you to make your answers as full as you can conveniently do. I know quite a number of preachers who are interested in these questions; and as you are well equipped in this field the questions are submitted to you."

The editors have prepared their reply to Mr. Creel's questions with care. With respect to certain matters of fact we have appealed to Dr. Norton, whose knowledge of the field is that of a trained authority while our own is quite general. The opinions expressed in our editorial are our own opinions, not Dr. Norton's, who may for aught we know hold quite otherwise. For his assistance, however, in putting us in possession of much valuable data it is a pleasure to acknowledge our obligation.

Once more The Christian Century must state its belief that the question of baptism is not to be settled finally by an appeal to technical scholarship. Not many of us are prepared to walk with Drs. Norton and Jenkins in the highly scholarly field of patristic Greek. But we are not helpless on that account. Whether "water" in John 3:5 and the baptismal clause of Matt. 28:19 were or were not in fact the words of our Lord does not affect the validity of baptism. As we say in answer to the eighth question below, baptism does not depend upon authority—it depends upon the Church. If there is to be a Church (such as the Christian Church has been from the beginning) there will be baptism. If these portions of these two texts under consideration are not in fact the words of our Lord then we have lost nothing except our traditional legalistic support of the dogma of immersion-baptism—and that is a glorious riddance.

Mr. Creel's questions and our responses are as follows:

1. Is there a single MS copy or version of Matthew's gospel known that does not contain the words "baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost?"

Answer. All known MSS and versions that contain the concluding verses of Matthew have these words, but in the Sinaitic Syriac and the oldest Latin the pages of the MSS containing the conclusion of Matthew have been lost. It should be noted in this connection that none of the MSS or versions of the New Testament which we possess are older than the fourth century, three hundred years after the original documents were written and that students of the New Testament agree that whatever doctrinal corruptions there are were made during the first two centuries.

2. In what work or works of Eusebius Pamphilus are the words "Go ye, teach all nations in my name" quoted as Matthew 28:19? I can find only one such quotation in his ecclesiastical history, Book III, chapter 5, page 86, in a work, "A Historical Review of the Council of Nice" with translations by the Rev. Isaac Doile, D. D., page 43. In a "Letter of Eusebius Pamphilus to the Church of Cæsarea," Matthew 28:19 is quoted in full as it stands in our common version.

Answer: The quotation referred to should be "Go ye and make disciples of all the nations in my name." It is found in "Demonstratio Evangelica," "Theophania," "Historia Ecclesiastica," "Oratio de Laudibus Constantini," "Commentarium in Isaiam," "Comment. in Psal.," and in a catena patrum published by Mai. In writings traditionally ascribed to Eusebius as written after the council of Nicæa are found four citations of the ordinary text. One of these in the Syriac Theophany 4:8 cannot be regarded as an attestation, for the Syrian translator has evidently availed himself of the common labor saving device of copying five consecutive verses from his own Syriac version. Two others occur in controversial works (Contra Marcellum and De Ecclesiastica Theologia) whose authorship is doubtful. The fourth is in a letter quoted by Socrates (who wrote about 440 A. D.) as part of a quotation of the first form of the Nicene creed. If it should be contended that any of these are genuine attestations of the ordinary reading, it must be noticed that they are after the Council of Nicæa where the great controversy about the Trinity was settled and Christ was declared to be "very God of very God." It would seem natural that Eusebius, even if he had never seen our form of the text before he went to that Council, would afterwards quote it in the authorized form in view of his opinion expressed in his commenting on Mark 16:9-20, namely, that although that passage was not found in "the accurate copies of the Gospel according to Mark," yet assuming that the view of one "not daring to reject anything whatever that is in any way current in the Scriptures of the Gospels" is true, since "the reading is double as in many other cases each reading must be received."

3. Is it not true that Ignatius (A. D. 30-107) in the Epistle to the Philadelphians quotes Matthew 28:19 as containing the baptismal formula?

Answer. No. The genuine epistle of Ignatius to the Philadelphians does not contain this quotation. It is found only in the Longer Greek recension which Dr. Swete says, "contains, besides the seven genuine Epistles in an interpolated form, six others, viz., a correspondence between Ignatius and Mary of Cassobola, and letters purporting to be written by Ignatius to the Tarsians, Philippians, and Antiochenes, and to one Hero. Lightfoot has convincingly shown that these interpolations and forgeries are due to a writer of the fourth century, and of Syrian origin; and more recently Brightman, following in the steps of Lagarde, Harnack, and Funk, has identified the pseudo-Ignatius with the compiler of the Apostolical Constitutions." The Ignatian letters were written about 110 A. D.

4. Does not Justin Martyr (A. D. 110-65) quote substantially Matthew 28:19 as it reads in our common version?

Answer. No. He makes use of the names of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit in connection with baptism, but not by any means as a quotation from Matthew 28:19. By this time there had been added to the originally simple ceremony of single immersion in the name of Christ a period of preparation by fasts, vigils, and confession of sins, trine immersion into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, unction or anointing of oil, sponsors, public renunciation of the devil before the head of the community, ceremonial tasting of milk and honey, etc. There is evidence in fact that Justin Martyr did not have our form of Matthew 28:19, for in his chapter on baptism he quotes Isaiah 60: 1-20 as Scripture authority for baptism and appeals to tradition to support the use of the three-fold name, whereas it is his custom to quote directly the words of Christ whenever he knows any that will support his doctrine. He seems to refer to the Eusebian form of Matthew 28:19 in his dialogue with Trypho when he says, "God hath not yet inflicted nor inflicts the judgment, knowing that even today some are being made disciples in the name of his Christ and are abandoning the path of error. . . . . being illumined by the name of this Christ."

5. Does not the Didache or the teaching of the twelve apostles which the majority of critics date about 90-150 contain the baptismal formula as now found in Matthew 28:19?

Answer. Yes, but the Didache is a mixed composition of uncertain date. With reference to this Dr. Swete says, "In its present form it is clearly a composite work. The substance of the first part (c. 1-6), which is purely ethical, seems to have been borrowed from a Jewish source known as The Two Ways; the second part (c. 7-16) deals with such peculiarly Christian topics as Baptism, the Eucharist, the Ministry, both itinerant and local, the hope of the Second Coming. The date of the compilation is uncertain; Harnack ventures only to say that it falls between the date of the Epistle of Barnabas (A. D. 131) and the year A. D. 160."

6. Does not Clement of Alexandria near the close of the second century quote the exact words of the Didache as "Scripture?"

Answer. You probably refer to the passage in which Clement says: "It is such a one that is by Scripture called a thief. It is therefore said, 'Son, be not a liar, for falsehood leads to theft.'" This may mean merely that the admonition was given because the "Scripture" characterized such a person as a thief. Even if it could be shown that Clement regarded the Didache as "Scripture" that would not seem to be of much service here as it would prove too much. We would have "Scripture" for trine effusion et cetera. Dr. Bittell in the Roberts-Donalson edition of the ante-Nicene fathers says of the Didache, "Of its apostolic origin no one should presume to speak, since the text of the document makes no such claim and internal evidence is obviously against such a suggestion." Eusebius names among "spurious" works "the so-called teachings of the Apostles."

7. As all scholars and critics now reject Mark 16:15 and 16 as being genuine "Scripture" and some of the critics claim that the baptismal formula is an interpolation, if this is true then do we have a command from Jesus to baptize anyone?

Answer. We have no such command from Jesus.

8. If the New Testament contains no command of Jesus to baptize anyone, then by what authority did the apostles administer the ordinance of baptism?

Answer. The apostles did not have the New Testament. It was not in existence during the time of the conversions reported in Acts and consequently the preface to your question does not really have any bearing upon the question itself. The question then simply becomes, by what authority did the apostles administer the ordinance of baptism? To which we would reply that the apostles administered baptism simply because they could not carry out their Master's commission to make disciples without administering it. Christian baptism is the act of initiating a convert into the Church, the body of Christ. Whether or not the apostles received explicit authority from Christ to organize the Church it is clear that a Church was the inevitable result of "making disciples of all nations." Such disciples would be bound together in a communal life. This communal life was itself the Church, the body of Christ. Like other social institutions it received new members by a definite act in which both community and candidate participated—in other words, an initiation. Baptism was this act of initiating a convert into this community, of incorporating him into the body of Christ. There would have been no definite community, no institution, no Church, had there been no baptism, no definite act of initiation. Thus we see that baptism does not depend upon the legal authority of Jesus expressed in an explicit command. Whether he actually commanded it or not, he might reasonably have done so. And, again, even if he did not actually command it it was inevitable that his apostles, engaged in carrying out the program of "making disciples" and organizing them into a definite social community, would administer it. As to the particular form by which they would administer it we do not now speak; that was no doubt determined by the incident of custom. But the essential baptismal act was not incidental; it was inherent in the enterprise of propagating Christianity.

Editorial Table Talk

A Church's Appreciation of Workingmen

It was an act of singular grace on the part of First Church, Springfield, Ill., to set apart an evening of dedication week for a banquet to the workingmen whose hands had built the beautiful new house of worship. That kind of appreciation interprets the new feeling growing up in the church toward labor. Faithful and conscientious manual work on a church building is just as honorable and should receive the same honor as the faithful and conscientious work of the architect or the faithful and conscientious gifts of the generous-hearted church membership. But it is as significant as it is regrettable that out of an expected attendance of 250 persons only about fifty sat down. This may be partly accounted for by the fact that a certain portion of the workmen were Catholics. Besides, it is possible some may have suspected that the church intended to use the occasion to solicit money to pay for the new building. But after such allowances are made the fact remains that the problem of engaging the interest of the rank and file of workingmen in the average prosperous church, even in its social functions, is fraught with great difficulty. Even in the best, the most democratic, of our protestant churches—and Springfield's First church is one of the best and most democratic—the caste scheme of secular society has ingrained itself. Our protestant churches all lack that sense of catholicity, the feeling that the Church is the Mother of us all as God is the Father of us all, which the Roman church cultivates. And it is just here that one of the saddest results of our sectarian divisions is disclosed. Our churches will never possess the sense of catholicity until they are in truth catholic. From this as from every other angle of approach the problem of Christian union would seem to be the biggest and most urgent problem of the time.

Plain Speech, But Evidently Needed

There may be good and intelligent men who differ with The Christian Century in its disapproval of the action of the trustees of Berkeley Bible Seminary in California in peremptorily dismissing Dean H. H. Guy, Prof. Walter Stairs, Dr. H. O. Breeden and Dr. W. P. Bentley from its faculty on account of their progressive leanings, but we feel pretty well assured that no good and intelligent man will take exception to our condemnation of the course of these same trustees in using or allowing to be used some $13,000 of the scant endowment fund of the seminary for current operating expenses during the past three years.

Attention has been called to the facts in regard to this procedure by an editorial in the Christian Evangelist which sets forth the facts but seems totally unaware of their moral implications. Not a hint of condemnation is contained in the article. The facts are written up in a regretful vein as indicating the financial stress under which the seminary has labored, but the reader neither gets the impression that this sort of thing is illegitimate nor particularly exceptional.

And the humiliating fact is that it is not particularly exceptional in the Disciples' educational practices. The hands of some of our colleges have only within recent years been washed clean of this same practice of misappropriating funds.

It is believed by many discreet educational workers that one of the big difficulties in the way of our educational progress has been the uncertainty with which the security and permanence of endowment funds have been regarded by men and women who had money to give. More than one college president and board of trustees have been guilty in the earlier years of their institution's life of betraying the trust that had been reposed in them precisely as the Berkeley officials have been guilty in this instance. Generous-minded men and women have no doubt often been deterred from making gifts to colleges on learning of certain of the more notorious instances of such careless administration.

It should be said that in recent years there has been an all around stiffening-up of the policy of college boards in the conservation of their endowments. The costliness and immorality of the lax course of earlier years has been brought home to college officers with such force and clearness as to render any further lapse unlikely.

This does but increase our amazement that the president of Berkeley Seminary and his board of trustees should be found guilty of a practice which, while always plainly immoral, has recently been definitively abandoned by all self-respecting institutions. Of the pitifully small endowment—between thirty and forty thousand dollars—the amount taken wrongfully is more than one-third. The fact that pledges aggregating $20,000 had been secured for the current expenses of the institution in no degree palliates the wrong in consuming funds which had been given and received as a perpetual endowment.

The trustees of a college or seminary are the bearers of a trust from those who have given their money to the institution. Some of these are dead, some are living. Their gifts were made in the faith that the trustees would use all human means to keep the fund inviolate, using only the interest on the original capital.

A board of trustees or a president who allows the original capital itself to be tampered with is guilty of a breach of trust.

These are very plain words. But they evidently need to be spoken, not only because of the flagrant practice of Berkeley Seminary but because this practice could be reported with such ingenuousness by a responsible Christian newspaper.

In the interest of every college that is conscientiously guarding its sacred funds every instance of such misappropriation should receive the public condemnation that is its due.

A Character Assassin

If ever the detective machinery of our police department had cause to get busy it is just now. The disappearance of the man Henning who framed up a charge of alienating his wife's affections against Clarence S. Funk, of Chicago, and followed his case through to its ignominious break-down after the jury had been out fifteen minutes, ought to make the fingers of the detective service fairly itch with eagerness to apprehend him. If the law once got hold of Henning he could, no doubt, be compelled to lead the court to the men behind him who had sufficient motive for attempting to assassinate Mr. Funk's character and who furnished the money to their willing tool to do so.

Mr. Funk is the man who testified that Edward Hines, the Chicago lumberman, had asked him to pay $10,000, his share of the $100,000 that Hines had spent to "put Lorimer over." Ever since this testimony was given Mr. Funk has been hounded by detectives, presumably in Mr. Hines' employ. Some months ago the sensational story of Henning's charges was published. The trial came off the last of June. Alleged fact and circumstances were testified to by Henning's two witnesses. On cross-examination both Henning and his corroborators were made to appear ridiculous. Their story was not only preposterous but flimsily so. It was shown that he has been living with his wife since the suit was begun, that he and she are both supplied with abundant money from some source which they are unwilling to divulge. The reputation of Mr. Funk is too well established in the community to be so much as soiled by the unclean story told by this creature. But the attempt to ruin a man of Mr. Funk's probity puts a duty up to the police and the law that should be discharged without a twinge of hesitation.

Unfortunately the law provides no punishment adequate to such moral assassination as Henning attempted. If any crime deserves a life sentence a conspiracy to ruin a man's reputation deserves it. Let the law search for Henning until it finds him. Then having dealt out its maximum punishment to him let it go back of him to the stronger and more responsible sources of his crime and bring them to light and to their deserts.

—The decennial record of the class of 1901, of Princeton University, shows that the average income of the members of that class ten years after graduation is almost $4,000. The table includes the earnings of each year since graduation, and increases steadily, except for the seventh year, which was the time of the 1907 panic. Lawyers lead the list at the end of ten years with an average of $4,994.88, and the business men, including bankers, insurance men, and publishers, are close seconds with an average of $4,684.69. The incomes from business, medicine, and law increase more rapidly than those from the other pursuits. The average incomes were: First year, $706.44; second, $902.39; third, $1,198.94; fourth, $1,651.15; fifth, $2,039.42; sixth, $2,408.30; seventh, $2,482.33; eighth $2,709.37; ninth, $3,221.89, and tenth year, $3,803.58. This record includes only individual earnings, and is exclusive of allowances and legacies.

—"I am breathing a little easier as the reasoning goes on," writes a keen-minded layman who tells of the fear with which he at first regarded the movement to practice Christian union. There are thousands like him. They see how true to Christ and his gospel the reasoning is, and they join with this business man in his exhortation: "In God's name do not stop until you have cut a way out of the sectarianism that has over-grown even us Disciples, while we wist not."

The Colonel's Towel

A Missionary Story

BY SUSAN HUBBARD MARTIN

The Colonel came briskly down the stone steps of the bank, holding himself very erect. His eyes beneath his beetling eyebrows, were sharp and searching.

Avis, after a short look, turned to Polly, whom she was visiting. The two girls were just going into the postoffice.

"Who is that stern-looking old man?" she whispered. "Has he any friends?"

Polly looked. "Why, that's the Colonel," she answered. "Has he any friends? I should say he had. Just wait till you know him, and you'll be his friend, too. I'm acquainted with Mrs. Temple, his sister, who keeps house for him, and some time, if you'd like to, while you are here, we'll go over. He's real hospitable, the Colonel is, and I think he does lots of good. I'd like you to see his home, too. It's beautiful."

"Got a Turkish towel, Avis?" asked Polly, somewhat mischievously.

Avis shook her head.

"What a queer question," she said, "but come to think of it, I don't believe I have. I have plain towels and towels that are embroidered, and guest towels, and towels with borders, but not a Turkish one. What's back of your question, Polly?"

"More than you dream of," was the quick reply, and then someone came up, speaking to the girls, and the subject was dropped.

Avis was a gay girl, planning and living, most of all, for a good time, and how to dress as attractively as she could on the allowance her father gave her. Mr. Thornhill was most indulgent, and the money all went, somehow, into pretty gowns and fine shoes, and hats, and ribbons. At the end of the month, she had saved nothing, and given nothing away. Then, one happy day, she met Polly, and because Polly was such a contrast to the girls she had known, she attracted her, and nothing would do but Polly must make her a visit, and now she was returning it. And in spite of the plain little house and the plain fare, for Polly's parents were not wealthy, as were hers, such whole-souled hospitality was meted out to her as caused that young lady to concede rather gravely that, after all, a great deal of happiness might exist in a very small house, if everybody in it was as kind and as agreeable and as polite as they were at Polly's. She was only a gay, thoughtless girl, but even she could discern the atmosphere that pervaded everything—the spirit of Christian living that everybody in the house seemed to possess. Little by little, Avis was being impressed by it. There were no sharp words, no ugly frowns, and under the genial roof that sheltered Polly, even Avis began to lose her little airs and mannerisms, and became more what a young and healthy girl ought to be.

One rainy afternoon, Polly ran up the stairs and into her room.

"Ready for your visit to the Colonel's?" she asked, merrily.

Avis looked up. She was deep in a book.

"Mercy, Polly, on such a day as this?" she cried.

"Why not; you've a raincoat and rubbers, and besides, we'll find the Colonel at home. He won't go out today. He's a little rheumatic, and I want you to know him."

"But he looks so stern," objected Avis.

"Stern! He has the kindest heart in the world. Besides, he'll give you a present."

"What kind of a present?" cried Avis; "you're joking."

"No, I'm not, either," replied Polly; "and I don't want you to go home without one. Come on now, that's a dear. Of course, it won't be a diamond sunburst, or a sapphire ring, but it may wake you up and set you to thinking. I'd like," added Polly briskly, "to see as fine a girl as you at work in the world. You're no butterfly, though you will persist in acting like one. You've too much sense. It may do for a time, but soon or late, you'll see the better part of life, and choose it."

Avis rose. "Come on, then, preacher Polly," was her reply. "I suppose, to please you, I'll have to go. Lead on. I'm in the hands of my friends."

And Polly did lead the way.

"Is the Colonel at home?" she asked Mrs. Temple, after a little visit with her.

"Indeed, he is, dear," was the pleased reply, "and he'll be so glad to see any friend of yours."

A moment later, Avis and Polly were ushered into a very handsome room lined with books, and further ornamented by a fine picture or two. The Colonel sat in his armchair reading. When he saw Polly, his face lighted.

"Welcome, little friend." he said, extending his aristocratic old hand.

"Thank you, sir," said Polly, with a smile and bow. "I've brought another girl to see you, too. This is Avis Thornhill, Colonel Travers, who is visiting me."

"Glad to see you, I'm sure," said the Colonel, shaking her hand, too, and in his most gallant manner, and then they all sat down and the Colonel began to talk. And before she knew it, Avis found herself listening intently, for the Colonel was a brilliant talker and had traveled everywhere.

As they rose to leave, the Colonel stooped suddenly, and opened a drawer in his desk.

"Permit me, Miss Avis," he said, "to present you with a little reminder of your visit to me this afternoon. I keep them to give all my friends, and if you like Polly as well as I do, you're entitled to it."

Avis looked at it. It was a very large, a very soft, a very white Turkish towel.

"Thank you, sir," she said, with a somewhat puzzled face, but what she thought was: "What in the world is the Colonel giving me a Turkish towel for?"

And then the towel was promptly wrapped up, and after a moment or so, the girls said good-bye and were ushered out.

"Didn't I tell you you'd get a present?" demanded Polly, with a twinkle in her eye.

"Yes, but what a funny thing to give a girl. Explain, Madam Polly."

"I will," was the somewhat grave answer.

"It's this way, Avis. In his travels, the Colonel became interested in the Industrial School over in Turkey. Our missionaries are over there, and they're teaching these poor Armenian girls not to get married when they're nothing but children, but to do something to earn a living. Of course, it takes money to run these schools and you know how it is, people are so slow to give to missions, so the Colonel, he wanted to help. They live in such miserable huts, these Armenians do, mud floors and roofs with only a hole in the wall for a window, and the Colonel wanted to see these girls put in schools away from such miserable surroundings. Why, he says that the poorest poor in this country don't know what poverty is, as these people know it. Well, as I said, the Colonel got wonderfully interested and wanted to help, so he gets the missionaries over there to send him great quantities of these Turkish towels, and he sends the money for them back to them so that more of these heathen girls may be taken in the Mission schools and educated and Christianized. He's too proud and aristocratic to sell them, and of course he'd soon get swamped in towels if he didn't do something; so he keeps them to give away. Perhaps, the missionaries over there think he sells them. I don't know; but he never does. Every one of his acquaintances is presented with one, and the new friends, too. So you see, in this way, he gives away a good many, and the missionaries get a good deal of money, too."

"What do you think of him now?"

Avis was silent a moment.

"I think he is the dearest, kindest, old gentleman I ever met, and I'm going to keep my towel always. And that isn't all, Polly. When I go home, I'm going to go to work. I guess, after all, I can't be contented to be just a butterfly. There's too many things that need to be done in the world. The Colonel's towels have set me to thinking. Do you think, Polly, I might send for some? I'd like to be of use, too. I've been spending so much money foolishly."

Though it was still raining, Polly hugged her regardless of the big umbrella.

"You are the dearest girl," she said. "I knew we could wake you up some way and, 'with a bright smile,' the Colonel's towels have finished what we tried to begin."

About People

—Constantin Brun, the Danish minister at London, has been re-appointed minister to Washington at his own request. Mr. Brun represented Denmark in the United States for fourteen years. He says he loves America, and that it is the only place for him as a diplomatist. He never felt well in London, to which place he was transferred against his wishes.

—Eugenio Lacoste, the man who is declared by the government to have been the brains of the revolution in Cuba, has surrendered. Lacoste sent a messenger to Major Castillo, the commander of the forces near Guantanamo, telling him of his desire to surrender. Lacoste, who is a paralytic, was brought into camp on a stretcher. Lacoste's wife and daughter accompanied him.

—President and Mrs. Taft celebrated the twenty-sixth anniversary of their marriage on June 19 very quietly. In contrast to last year, when thousands of persons filled the White House to participate in their silver wedding anniversary, this year's celebration was confined to the Taft family and a few friends. Scores of congratulatory telegrams and flowers arrived. The president remained in the executive offices most of the day.

—Rev. Kenneth Miller and Rev. Joel B. Hayden, members of the graduating class of Union Theological Seminary this year, and Rev. Gabriel Dokus, of the graduating class of the Reformed Seminary in Newark, refused fellowships that would support them in comfort at Oxford or Cambridge University in England, and have just sailed for Hungary to pass a year in study of immigrants to America and future immigrants. They are under contract for three years, and they carry with them letters of commendation and introduction signed by Secretary of State Knox.

THE HIGH CALLING

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS."

Copyright 1911, George H. Doran Co.

CHAPTER X. Continued.

He rose from his bench so abruptly that his chair fell over, and he threw the letter down, eyeing it as if it were alive and dangerous to the touch. Then after a few seconds he picked up the letter and yielding to a very unusual passion tore the paper clear across, and threw the two pieces down on the bench. Then he seemed to be aware of yielding to an unusual outburst and picking up his chair he sat down.

There were only a few students in the shop. Walter had gone out an hour before. It was almost seven o'clock and the foreman was just going out of his little office room at the other end of Bauer's section of benches.

Bauer sat there until the foreman had gone out and then he picked up the two pieces of the letter and with a flush of color on his face as unusual as his recent outburst of feeling, he slowly read. The handwriting was very peculiar even for German script and the tearing of the letter in two made its intelligent perusal doubly difficult.

When he reached the end he hesitated and at last put the two pieces of the letter into its envelope and the envelope in his pocket and then he sat staring at the stuff on his bench with a hard look in which scorn and shame and perplexity were mingled. He sat there until he was all alone. Then he got up and tried to go on with his work. He was on the track for another invention—a spring coil to prevent the jar to a tungsten lamp. But after picking up a tool and making one or two efforts to continue his task, he threw his material down on the bench and after a moment of indecision closed up the locker, put on his coat and went out.

He and Walter had rooms opposite each other in the same hall. As he went up to the landing he stopped at Walter's door and finding it open, went in. Walter was writing to his father. Bauer waited until he was through and then in his usual direct simple manner said:

"Walter, I want your advice. I'm in a hard place and I don't know just what I ought to do."

"All right. Fire away," said Walter frankly. The friendship of the two was now on a perfect basis and Bauer had lost all reserve although he had never up to this time taken Walter into complete confidence in his family matters, partly owing to an honest feeling of independence and a courageous reluctance to burden Walter with it.

"I want to read you a letter from my father," said Bauer, eyeing Walter wistfully.

Walter nodded, and Bauer took out the letter and read in his slow almost stammering fashion.

"Washington, D. C.,
"October 5, 1909.

"Son Felix:

"Undoubtedly this letter will cause you surprise. It is only after much painful contemplation of all the facts that I venture to send you this communication. It is not an easy matter for myself after the experiences through which I have passed to approach you with proposition which may seem altogether impossible to you. Before you judge me, hear me. Whatever may have been the mistakes I have made you have never been involved in them in any way, and I am writing you now to assure you of my real affection for you and to hasten to dispel any ill will you may have for me on account of the deep shadow which has fallen on my life.

"I am living here in Washington and have opened a law office on H Street. A few days ago I had occasion to go to the patent office and there I saw your model of the electric incubator. There were two men standing there looking at the model and I overheard one of them saying, 'That thing is good for a fortune to someone.' I learned by inquiry that the speaker was Halstead of the manufacturing firm of Halstead, Burns & Company. He does not know me, and I am sure he did not see me or notice me while he was in the patent office.

"Now what I am writing you for is simply this. If you will put the business of this patent into my hands, I am confident I can manage it for you to your satisfaction. I am confident you have made a very valuable invention and it ought to bring you a good sum of money. I am willing to do all the work of negotiating between you and the parties interested and charge you only a fair price for my services. As you know, I have had some experience in business affairs and I am not without ability. There will be two offers made you no doubt, one to buy your patent outright, and the other to contract for a share of the manufactured sales. In the first case a lump sum would be offered. In the other you would be obliged to wait a long time for any returns. I would be inclined to favor the sale of the patent rights and hold to a stiff price. But that is a matter for deliberation. You may not agree with me. However, very much would depend on the amount the patent right could bring. If this man Halstead, who is one of the largest manufacturers in the east, is right in his judgment it is possible the sum he will offer you would decide the matter for you and give you a sum of ready money which I have no doubt you could well use in your education.

"I do not offer any apologies for this missive as I do not consider that it calls for any. My offer is purely a business one and I make it partly on my own account as well as yours. If the patent turns out a success we would both benefit by it. I am confident, as I say, that I can serve your interests better than any mere stranger. I am here on the ground, I am familiar with the patent laws and I believe I can make good terms with a man like Halstead. If you decide to accept my offer, write me at once, giving me authority to act for you. The sooner the better, for I believe Halstead is going to make you an offer if he has not already done so. But he does not know that anyone knows what he really thinks of the value of your work and he will do what they all do, try to get your patent for the lowest possible figure.

"My address is 427 H Street East.

"Adolph Bauer."

When Felix had finished reading, there was a moment of silence. Then Walter said, to give Bauer time to let him into his confidence if he chose:

"Has this man Halstead corresponded with you yet?"

"No, I have had no letters from him."

"You probably will hear from him soon, then?"

"Why, yes, if what he says is true?"

Bauer all through this talk with Walter never mentioned his father's name directly but spoke of him using the personal pronoun.

"What do you suppose the patent is worth?"

"I have no imagination about it. But say, Walter, what do you think I ought to do about this letter?"

"I don't know. You have never told me ——" Walter began slowly.

"I know, of course you can't advise me unless I tell you more. He—well, he deserted mother. She was involved in some similar disgrace. From all I could learn while in Washington that time I went, he turned over all his property to her. That was the only redeeming thing about the wretched business. But at any rate he has been obliged to go back to his old law business. He is very capable. Brilliant. My mother—I can't talk of her."

Poor Bauer put his face in his hands. Walter was silent. What could anyone say?

After a little, Walter said gently, "Why do you hesitate about accepting your father's offer?"

"I don't wish to be under any obligations to him."

"But he makes you a purely business proposition. Can't you trust him to handle it?"

"Oh, I suppose so, I never knew of his being dishonest. And you know the old proverb: 'Wer lugt, der stiehlt auch;' 'show me a liar and I'll show you a thief.' His faults were always of a different sort. But you can see how I would naturally hesitate to correspond with him or have any dealings with him."

"I think you are wrong about that," said Walter positively. "This is a purely business affair. You ought to treat it as such. He can handle the matter for you, being on the ground, far better than you can do it through correspondence at this distance."

"Do you think so?"

"I know it. If I were in your place I wouldn't hesitate a minute. You are totally at the mercy of the manufacturers unless you can make them understand your ability to take care of yourself. Isn't it true that the great majority of inventors die poor? The manufacturers make the money, not the inventors."

"That's true. But I don't want to die poor. I won't die poor. I have not the ambition of a Carnegie or a Rockefeller."

"You need a good friend at Washington to protect your interests. My! Won't it be great if your incubator should make you rich! I don't know why it shouldn't. The way the chickens hatched out of it was wonderful. Just think, old man. Most everyone nowadays has electricity in his house. Thousands of people could just as well as not be raising chickens on the side. Ministers, doctors, college professors, newspaper men, school teachers,—no end. The sun would never set on your incubator any more than hens have to. I tell you, old man, there's money in your electric birds if you manage the business end of this thing right. And I don't see why your father's offer isn't just—well, providential."

"I never knew anything about him to be 'providential,'" said Bauer in almost the only bitter tone Walter had ever known him to use. "But I don't want to take any chances on this. Perhaps he is sent along at this time to help me out."

Walter looked curiously at his friend.

"You seem to be awfully anxious to make money, Felix. Never knew you that way before. What you going to do? Get married? And start a chicken ranch?"

Over Bauer's face a great flood of color swept. There was one confidence he had determined never to make to Walter, and that was his feelings towards Helen. He believed Walter had no hint of it. And as a matter of fact that was true. Walter had so far had no love experiences and Bauer had never by so much as a look or a word in Walter's presence betrayed his secret.

"I don't expect to get married. At least not very soon," Bauer managed to say. "But I want money. You can borrow of me," he added with one of his rare smiles, "if you need it for your own nuptials."

"No immediate need," said Walter, laughing, "I have never seen the girl my mother would like to welcome."

"Ah! Your mother. But she would be kind to the girl you would choose."

"Or the one that would choose me, you mean. I don't know. Mother would be pretty particular about the people that got into the Douglas family. Did I ever mention old man Damon who came around courting Helen last winter? He wears a wig and deals in rubber goods. Old enough to be Helen's father. I never saw mother so upset. And as for Helen—why—I would as soon think of her taking you for a suitor as Damon. But you never can tell what a girl will do. They generally do the opposite of what you expect."

Bauer managed to say—"That's fortunate for some of us, perhaps. Else there might be no hope for unfortunate and homely people if there was any fixed rule by which girls acted."

Walter stared at Bauer as he sometimes had to when Bauer opened his philosophy unexpectedly.

"I wonder what will happen to you, old man, when you fall in love, really and deeply?"

"I wonder," said Bauer softly.

"It will be interesting to watch you," said Walter laughing.

"Same to you," said Bauer with some spirit.

"We can watch each other," Walter continued.

"I have no doubt you will bear watching" was Bauer's reply, wrung from him by the tense situation.

Walter roared, and did not venture to say any more on that subject. But he went on to urge Bauer to answer his father's letter at once and give him power of attorney to act for him and make the best possible terms for his invention. Bauer promised before he left the room to do so, and on reaching his own room he at once set to work on the difficult business of answering his father on purely business grounds. Without making any definite promises or giving his father any authority to act for him, with characteristic caution he asked several questions about the patent laws, and especially about the possibility of undertaking the manufacture of the incubators on shares. He enclosed the letters he already had received from companies interested, none of which, however, had made him any positive offer, only sounding him in general as to his disposition to sell the patent rights on certain terms which had no very promising prospects of ready money. And it was money Bauer wanted,—not dim future prospects of the all-powerful medium of happiness or unhappiness.

After his letter had been mailed, he felt a little uncertain about it all, but he was of a direct, straight-forward habit, and once started in a course of action he seldom changed it. Once committed to the correspondence with his father he would hold to it, keeping it all on a cold business basis as if his father had no other relation to him, and letting the heartache take care of itself. It is astonishing how many heartaches do take care of themselves in this old world. Only, like Bauer's, they are apt to take care of themselves so poorly that the ache starves the heart out of house and home.

Two days later, Walter, who was in his room going over some complicated formulae connected with Rausch's Dynamics, was interrupted by Bauer who came running in from his room across the hall waving a little slip of paper.

"What do you think of that," he exclaimed with unusual excitement.

Walter looked at the little yellow slip and read "One Thousand Dollars" payable to Felix Bauer by Halstead, Burns & Co., of Washington."

"They offer me that for my patent right, with a small percentage of profit on certain sales."

Walter was excited in his turn and started to offer congratulations. But Bauer's next words broke in on him.

"I'm going to send the check back. It's not enough and they know it."

"I believe you're right," said Walter, after a stare at Bauer in this new light of money hunger. "The fact that they sent a check shows their eagerness to get into the business and their faith in its value. What will you hold them up to?"

"I don't know. But I am going to put the matter up to—to him."

"You mean your father?"

"Yes," said Bauer hastily. "The more I think of it the more I believe he can get more than I can. I'll mail him Halstead's correspondence."

That same afternoon Bauer returned the check to Halstead, Burns & Co., with a brief business note saying that he was not prepared to sell out at such a small figure. He added that he had placed the business connected with the patent in the hands of his father, giving street number and office. In the same mail he sent his father Halstead's letter and told of his return of the check, at the same time authorizing his father to have full power to act for him with Halstead or any other firm.

"I do not know just what I ought to receive for my patent," Bauer wrote. "But I am not going to act hastily nor sell at a sacrifice. I trust you to make terms that will at least be some measure of the real value of the article."

A week passed by during which time Bauer's father wrote acknowledging Bauer's letters, thanking him for accepting his offer, commending his action in returning the check to Halstead, Burns & Co., and assuring Felix that the business would be prompt and careful at [illegible]

A week later as Wa[illegible] in the shop a telegra[illegible] in with an envelope for [illegible]

Bauer opened [illegible] word passed the [illegible] read, "Halstead o[illegible] percentage on American sales. [illegible] with offer? Adolp[illegible]"

Walter could hardly speak—h[illegible] excited.

"Better close with it [illegible] ter. That father of your[illegible] a —"

Bauer smiled faintly. "[illegible] I can expect more. I believe I will wire accept."

"Better find out what the percent[illegible] and why European sales are not include[illegible]"

"Yes," said Bauer briefly. He was strangely calm and not particularly overjoyed by his unexpected good fortune. Walter recalled that afterwards.

He answered the telegram with a letter, asking for details which his father furnished promptly. The European sales were subject to such expense and delay that the manufacturers explained the unusual risk and made a plausible showing why royalty terms were difficult to arrange. After two weeks' correspondence, Bauer finally telegraphed his father—"You are authorized to close with Halstead on their terms. Take your commission out of the $5,000."

By the business arrangements made between them Bauer's father was to receive five per cent on any cash offer. Bauer felt kindly towards him for the way the affair had come out and in a letter written the same day he sent the telegram he authorized his father to take out ten per cent commission instead of the five agreed upon in their formal contract.

"I don't want to get too money mad," he said to himself with a grim smile as he posted the letter, and with a great feeling of weariness upon him he went into the shop.

Felix Bauer was one of the few students at Burrton who never subscribed to a daily paper and seldom read one. He kept up with the news of the world by dropping into Walter's room and hearing him dribble out the events of the day from a New York daily which Walter took. The edition reached Burrton eight hours after the date line.

Three days after Bauer had authorized his father to close the contract on the patent for him Walter opened up his New York Daily for his usual skim over its contents. It was two o'clock. He had heard Bauer come up the stairs and go into his room and had not heard him go out.

He glanced down over the usual political and sporting news and then his eye caught a headline that made him start.

"Leaves on the Kaiser Wilhelm Under Suspicious Circumstances."

(To be continued.)

One of the late Wilbur Wright's last letters addressed to a well-known airman at the Johannesthal flying camp, says: "Everybody who has ever seen a buzzard flying knows that there must be a method whereby human beings also can remain in the air. Once they really find themselves aloft, the sole difficulty is that nature provides the birds with a means of soaring without exerting themselves, while the human beings must devise artificial means of achieving the same result. The real problem now confronting us is to find out whether we, too, like birds, once we are in the air, can stay in it indefinitely. A bird can do it; why should not man?"

MODERN WOMANHOOD

By Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison.

Mrs. Harrison will be glad to receive communications from any of her readers offering suggestions concerning woman's welfare, criticisms of articles or inquiries concerning any matters relevant to her department. She should be addressed directly at 530 Elm Tree Lane, Lexington, Ky.

TYPES OF WOMEN

THE WEALTHY WOMAN.

It is a mistake to speak of the wealthy women of America as a distinct class. Wealthy women are simply women who have married men of wealth; they differ among themselves very much as the wives of other men. Very often, especially in the West, where fortunes are still made dramatically, the woman may have had many years of doing her own work, or even working for others before wealth comes; quite as often it vanishes suddenly, leaving her very much in the same case as the rest of us.

Men of wealth, not being restrained by prudence, show a disposition to choose their wives for beauty and social charm, rather than the more solid qualities; but there is hardly ground here for finding common traits among them. Recently, a millionaire of my acquaintance married his typewriter. She was of the type that is called a "brainless butterfly," but she would not have been any less brainless if she had married the grocer's young man. Millionaires are not any more likely to choose wives for intellectuality than are other men.

The truth is, that in speaking of wealth we have a lot of left-over notions from the time and country when the wealthy class was kept so by law, and was also the ruling class, and had definite responsibilities. It seems more offensive for a rich woman to be selfish and shallow, because we are in the habit of thinking of personal attainment as being a matter of opportunity, when in fact it is much more a matter of endowment. Money does not confer ability.

Although it is, I admit, distressing to see a large fortune in the hands of a pretty fool there is this compensation, that a fool woman usually has fool sons; and for this reason, large fortunes break up in the second and third generations, and are returned to the community. It is the fact that men of wealth in America have not shown any disposition to marry for the sake of improving their stock, that keeps us from having a permanent wealthy class fastened upon us. As things are, the only way in which wealthy women can be said to form a class is in their being all subject to the disintegrating effect of wealth on its possessors. They are cut off from the reality of life, and have little incentive for living, except pleasure. Then, too, the rich see a large part of humanity fawning and preying upon them, which gives them a false estimate. All these things make for the deterioration of character, so that if a woman under such circumstances succeeds in being anything more than a "society woman" she deserves much credit for it. That many women do so succeed, is evidence that rich men often choose as wisely as others. Wealth, of course, gives a woman opportunity to display whatever capacity she has.

The whole question is one of establishing a standard. American women have less charm, less culture perhaps than wealthy women of Europe, but individuals of them have certainly more capacity. The king of Italy is said to find them conceited, but I was told by a young Italian nobleman who had married an American wife, that the more ambitious and modern-minded of his own class sought American wives because they understood so much better how to help their husbands on in their careers.

MARY AUSTIN.

THE SOCIETY WOMAN.

By the society woman is meant, usually, the woman of wealth and supposed leisure. She has been charged with heartlessness, selfishness, indolence, and with ambition that is determined and petty—since it is a struggle for social advantage and autocratic leadership. In considering this popular arraignment, it is well to bear in mind that there is amongst all classes and conditions of women, as with men, a vast deal of unadulterated human nature. Heartlessness, selfishness, and unworthy ambition are peculiar to no especial class or community. They are traits found quite as often in the cross-roads hamlet, and in purely rural neighborhoods, as in cities and in what are termed the higher walks of life. Furthermore, no human being possesses all these unlovely qualities, with no compensating virtues.

Money, first of all, has been considered the necessary requisite in the equipment of the society woman for the role she has assigned herself in the place she has attained. Now the real truth is, that there are in society everywhere women of very limited means who possess charm of manner, culture, and intellect—endowments that have given them a recognition that no amount of wealth, in and of itself, could ever have commanded.

A beautiful and accomplished American woman, who has long lived in London, whose plain little house is a rendezvous of the most brilliant and interesting people in that great metropolis, is a very good example of this type.

A good many years ago, a family of young girls from one of the Southern cities were much in demand as guests amongst the fashionable residents of Newport. They were talented and charming, and—poor, their best gowns being simple muslins made at home. So popular were they, that they were called "the pets of the spare room."

All made brilliant marriages—from a worldly standpoint—and the survivors of this remarkable family are today allied with some of the oldest branches of the British peerage. All this is of no especial consequence, except to prove that with the proper social qualifications, any woman of good breeding, cultivation, and attractiveness, may attain almost any social status she aspires to if she thinks it worth her while.

To come down to plain facts, it will be found that in all our towns and cities the promoters of all good works are society women, who assume leadership, not because they desire it, but because it is imposed upon them. Their influence is helpful and beneficial. They are upon the boards of philanthropic institutions. They are actively interested in domestic science, in the training of young girls as efficient home-makers, and their own experience in such matters is by no means theoretical. They are well-informed, reading much, and with understanding and discrimination, and are proficient in a practical knowledge of modern languages.

Moreover, hundreds of society women have given generously from their private fortunes, means for the education of young men and women in our colleges and universities and art schools. This has been done, not as an idle whim, but with real self-sacrifice; for the larger their means, the greater and more incessant are the demands made upon them.

They are charged with inordinate pursuit of pleasure, intemperate devotion to bridge whist, and the like, but this demoralization is widespread, and is not more prevalent amongst society women than amongst women in small towns throughout the whole country.

There is in all society, everywhere, a small and irresponsible handful known as "the fast set," given over to extravagance of dress and living; but these do not constitute society. They are merely an excrescence on the great social body, and the high-minded, public-spirited, charitable society woman—using the term in its broadest sense once more—is made to suffer for their sins and short-comings.

MARY H. KROUT.

The Story Teller

Depends on Point of View.

Secretary Wilson, of the Department of Agriculture, was praising in Washington the agricultural school at Cornell.

"It is a practical school," he said. "It wastes no time on useless things. It teaches practical and scientific farming.

"This school's viewpoint reminds me of the young farmer who was asked:

"'Which should one say—a setting hen, or a sitting hen?'

"'It's immaterial which one says,' the farmer answered. 'But it's tremendously material, on the other hand, that we should ask ourselves, when a hen cackles—

"'Has she been laying, or is she lying?'"
—Detroit Free Press.

Cruel Realism.

John G. Johnson, the famous lawyer and no less famous art expert, was talking at a dinner in Philadelphia about some of Sargent's cruelly realistic portraits.

"Sargent once painted a Philadelphia woman," Mr. Johnson said, "and when the work was finished, the lady's coachman called for it.

"As the coachman was studying the portrait, Sargent said to him:

"'How do you like it?'

"The man answered, thoughtfully:

"'Well, sir, ye might have made it a little better lookin', mebbe; but if ye had, ye'd have spoilt it.'"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Clever Willie.

Robert Henri, the famous artist, said in New York of a bogus "old master":

"Some of these experts must be very ignorant, judging from the facility with which they are duped. They must be ready to swallow anything. It's like the Velasquez story.

have been received at this office. The new

"An auctioneer, you know, put up a picture, saying:

"'Here we are, ladies and gentlemen—this exquisite Velasquez—'Battle of Waterloo'—what am I bid? One million, nine hundred thousand'—

"'But,' interrupted an expert, in a puzzled voice—'but I thought Velasquez died before the Battle of Waterloo!'

"'So he did, sir,' explained the auctioneer; 'so he did;' but this, you see, is one of dear old Velly's posthumous works.'"

Church Life

William Sweeney, of Baltimore, has declined a call to the pastorate of Evansville, Ind., church.

The Brotherhood of Hutchinson, Kans., church will build a $3,000 hospital for the use of Dr. A. L. Shelton in Tibet.

F. L. Pettit has been bidden good-bye by his cingregation at Lafayette, Ind., after three years of successful service there.

Central Church, Des Moines, Iowa, is combining the morning worship and Sunday-school in a single service for the summer months

J. H. Stidham, who recenly graduated from the Bible College of Missouri, at Columbia, has begun work as pastor at Unionville, Mo.

Randolph county, Ind., churches held their tenth annual convention at Winchester, the last week of June. J. Boyd Jones, of Anderson, was the principal speaker.

Central Avenue Church, Topeka, Kans., gave a reception to the new pastor, John D. Zimmerman and his wife. David H. Lyon was the former pastor of this church.

A card from J. H. Goldner, pastor Euclid Ave. Church, Cleveland, dated May 21, tells of an interesting eight days spent east of the Jordan and of a profitable trip to Beersheba and Gaza. Mr. Goldner will return to his church by September 1.

H. Maxwell Hall, pastor at Uniontown, Pa., has worked out a plan for a new organization of the Sunday-school. A description of the plan is printed in the local church paper. It is receiving numerous commendations from Sunday-school experts.

Willis A. Parker, formerly pastor at Emporia, Kans., and recently elected to the chair of philosophy in Pomona College, Calif., was awarded the Ph. D., degree at Harvard University at the June Commencement. He defended a thesis on "Pluralism and Irrationalism in the Philosophy of William James."

J. K. Ballou, pastor at Stockton, Calif., is reported as choosing a decidedly original method of securing first hand knowledge of the business world by accepting a position as manager of a department store at Coalinga, Calif. He has resigned his pulpit at Stockton but intends to return to the ministry again.

Orange, Calif., church shows by its annual report the best year's work in many years. Ninety-two persons have been added to the church, fifty-seven dismissed by letter, leaving a net increase of thirty-five. Total money raised for local work, $4,998.85. Total for missions and benevolences, $983.74. C. C. Bentley's pastorate there is proving fruitful and happy.

L. J. Marshall used the Chicago and Baltimore conventions as topic for a sermon recently at Wabash Avenue Church, Kansas City. His interpretation of these two gatherings will be indicated by this single illuminating sentence: "Religions and political conventions are now made up of two classes of men—those who thing in retrospect and those who think in prospect."

S. G. Buckner, pastor of Ashtabula, Ohio, church surprised his congregation by presenting his resignation. Mr. Buckner's work has been successful in every way. A debt purchased for $5,000 and fitted up at a cost of $350. A total of $5,666.23 was received for local expenses during the past year. The Sunday-school reports an average attendance of 337. A notable feature of the Sunday-school is the Brotherhod Bible-class which Mr. Buckner has himself organized and conducted. The retiring pastor has not yet announced his future plans.

Pastor Hermon P. Williams, of Albuquerque, N. Mex. has been using his little four page parish paper which he calls the "Door-Knobber" with such effectiveness against the city administration for its collusion with the segregated social evil that the promoters of the vice district have sent information to Washington seeking to have the little paper excluded from the mails on the grounds of indecency! Mr. Williams has been a football player and a soldier and he shows it in his campaign against social and civic wrong doing.

A. W. Fortune recently elected to a professorship in the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., closed his pastorate at Walnut Hills Church, Cincinnati on June 30. There were five additions at the morning service. The church gave him and Mrs. Fortune a reception on Saturday evening, June 29, at which time they presented Mrs. Fortune with a handsome silver toilet set and gave the minister a purse to pay the expenses of a trip through Europe and Palestine. In company with a young man of the church he sailed July 3. He will be gone ten weeks, returning in time to begin his duties in the College of the Bible at the opening of the school year.

Sixteen weddings in the month of June—that is the report that comes from the popular young pastor of South Broadway Church, Denver. Doctor Tyler bears testimony to the character of the groom in one of these marriages. He is a Jew and said to Doctor Tyler just before the ceremony, "There is one request that I have to make and that is that you will respect my religion." "He did not forget his faith in that supreme moment," comments Doctor Tyler. This preacher has been marrying souls to Christ also. Ten of them were received into the church during this bridal month. Doctor Tyler's ministry seems to grow more buoyant and vigorous since he passed the half-century mark.

W. A. Moore, pastor of First Church, Tacoma, Wash., follows the custom of answering questions at his Sunday evening service instead of preaching on a single theme. He announced for last Sunday evening the following: What is the proper attitude of the church toward the political situation and what party should Christians join?—How can we account for the fact that Christians pray for the baptism of the Holy Spirit and are baptized in water when the Bible plainly says there is but one baptism? See Eph. 4:5.—I am struggling to be pure minded. Will you offer suggestions that will help to reach the ideal?—Why require more for forgiveness than Jesus? He only looked on them and said, "Your sins are forgiven," while you teach confession, baptism, repentance and faith, etc.—If Christian Science helps to make people well why is it not a good thing.—My friend and I have quarreled. How can we best settle our trouble? We are both Christians.

A new church has been organized in Lincoln, Nebr., to be known as Tabernacle Church. Its membership is mainly drawn from First Church whose pastor, H. H. Harmon has fostered the new congregation in face of the cost to his own flock Ernest J. Sias has assumed pastoral care of Tabernacle Church and a temporary house built in a few days was dedicated last Sunday. In First Church's parish paper we note a picture entitled "Workmen that Need not be Ashamed." They hold hammers and saws and squares in their hands and wear aprons. Looking at the faces with scrutiny one accustomed to associating with great men will find W. A. Baldwin, state secretary, J. W. Hilton, pastor East Side church, H. H. Harmon, pastor First Church, Chancellor William Oerchger of Cotner University, H O. Pritehard, pastor University Church and E. J. Sias. Certainly with such "talent" working upon the building it should be well made.

Dr. Kendric C. Babcock, of the National Bureau of Education, Washington, D. C., in his recent report before the Conference for Education in the South, at Nashville, specifically commented upon the high standard of scholarship required by the curriculum of Hamilton College for women at Lexington, Ky. Miss Colton, of the Southern Woman's College Association made like specific mention of Hamilton College in a report given before the Southern Educational Association last fall. The aggregate enrollment of all departments of Hamilton for the past year is 303 about the same as in 1910-1911. Nearly half of these were residents in the dormitories; the rest represent local patronage. The college Y. W. C. A., has flourished, as have the Bible and Mission Study classes. The largest sum in years was raised voluntarily by the students in support of the college "Living link," Miss Kate G. Miller, formerly an instructor here, and now representing the school in like educational work among the girls of Wuhu, China.

The Anderson, Ind., church is debating the proposal to expunge from its roll the names of those who represent "dead timber." The church has a membership enrollment of about 2,000. Out of that number between 500 and 600 are said to be active paying members who contribute to the church expenses All the others dodge the contribution box. It is not by any means a mercenary motive that is prompting this action, of course, but the purpose is to get a live, active congregation and at the same time dispose of the indifferent ones who are said to outnumber the active members of the congregation. As a result of the Scoville revival meeting, which was held several years ago, there were hundreds of people united to the church who, a local paper asserts, have never contributed a dollar to the support of the church. " They still retain church membership, boast of the fact that they are members of Central Christian church and if they should happen to move to another city to reside, invariably demand their church letter. If death or sickness should come into the family the pastor is supposed to be on hand to administer comfort and solace." "I would rather this church would have 500 active members than 2,000 such as it has," declared the pastor, J. Boyd Jones, in his pulpit. He believes in the weeding out process and apparently the official board of the church supports him.

Benevolent Association News

We have just received a draft for $2,000 on the annuity plan. This gift comes from a comparatively young man who has formed the habit. This is a little the largest gift of the four or five which he has made.

The plans for the new building in Dallas have been completed. According to these plans the building will cost about $30,000. We have $20,000 in the treasury and about two thousand pledged. We must have $8,000 more at once. The Juliette Fowler Home is one of the best in the brotherhood. There ought to be a ready response to the call of its building fund.

After being closed nearly two years the home in Walla Walla is again in full operation, and this time we trust to continue its good work indefinitely. This home has just come into possession of a legacy amounting to about $7,000, the bequest of Miss Amy K. Harvey, recently deceased.

Mrs. W. J. Dodge, wife of the minister at Gooding, Idaho, made a telling speech at the recent convention of the churches in Boise as the association's representative.

Mr. J. L. Greenwell, minister of the Queen Anne church, Seattle, represented the association at the East Washington convention at Pullman, and the Oregon convention at Turner. His messages made a favorable impression.

Many things have conspired to make this a hard year for the association financially:

First: Somewhat extensive repairs had to be made on the buildings of nearly all the homes.

Second: The drought that until recently prevailed over a large section of the country from which we have been wont to receive liberal support dried up these funds of generosity.

Third: The high cost of living has affected us:

1st. By reducing the power of our friends to give.

2nd. By increasing our living expenses.

3rd. By driving many of the widows to the wall, compelling them to seek aid in our homes. We pray that God may put it into the hearts of our friends to help us in this hour of need. JAS. H. MOHORTER.

Statement of Federal Council Funds

Our appeal came to the ministers and churches just as they were busy with the offering for Children's Day. Notwithstanding the response has been encouraging. We have reported $235.00 previously. Since last report the following have contributed:

Central Church, Indianapolis, Ind.....$25.00
First Church, Louisville, Ky..... 10.00
Church at Iowa City, Iowa..... 6.00
Church at Eureka, Ill..... 25.00

The following churches have pledged and will send offerings:

H. H. Harmon, First Church, Lincoln, Neb.

G. W. Hemry, First Church, South Bend, Ind.

W. F. Reager, Central Church, Portland, Ore.

Claire L. Waite, Central Church, Cincinnati, O.

Stephen H. Zendt, Second Church, Bloomington, Ill.

Peter Ainslie, Temple Church, Decatur, Ill.

B. A. Abbot, Union Ave. Church, St. Louis, Mo.

E. W. Allen, Central Church, Decatur, Ill.

F. W. Burnham, First Church, Springfield, Ill.

C. M. Chilton, First Church, St. Joseph, Mo.

J. H. Goldner, Euclid Ave. Church, Cleveland, O.

John McD. Horne, First Church, Charleston, Ill.

Chas. S. Medbury, University Place Church, Des Moines, Ia.

Frank Richardson, First Church, Kansas City, Mo.

W. W. Sniff, First Church, Paris, Ill.

G. B. Van Arsdall, Central Church, Denver, Colo.

From the wide correspondence which this appeal has called out, it is evident that our ministry will not continue to be patient with the continuance of such a nondescript method of meeting an obligation to the Federal Council. Scarcely a man is willing to withdraw from it. Indeed all contend that such a course would be suicidal to our plea for union Two immediate duties confront us as a people: To meet the present obligations; to provide a permanent resource to meet such obligations in the future. The first we must provide this summer. The second we ought to provide at Louisville. Let us not come to Louisville with our boasted thousands while our religious neighbors are keenly aware that we cannot or will not raise a paltry sum of $1,300 to pay our debts.

Such churches as have pledged will kindly forward the offering soon. All who have not had fellowship as churches or individuals will heed this appeal and act upon it now. Kindly send gifts to me at Des Moines, Iowa.

FINIS IDLEMAN.

Foreign Society News

The Sunday-school at Winchester, Ky., raises $250 with which to employ a Hindu secretary to assist Prof. G. W. Brown, president of the Bible College at Jubbulpore, India. It will be remembered that this splendid church and Sunday-school support Mr. Brown, and the $250 is in addition to the regular $600. J. Harry Allen is the very efficient superintendent of missions in that church.

The Sunday-school at Paris, Ill., contributes $100 annually toward the support of F. E. Hagin in Japan, who is the Living-link missionary of this church and school. F. E. Hagin was a class-mate of W. W. Sniff, the pastor of the church at Paris.

The Sunday-school at Newark, Ohio, sends $103 for the support of Miss Sylvia Siegfried at Laoag, P. I. She is one of the most efficient missionaries in the service of the foreign society. It will be remembered that Newark church and the churches in Licking county combine their offerings for the support of Miss Siegfried.

Miss Nina M. Palmer, Nankin, China, has passed her first three months' examination in the Chinese language with a grade of 93. She will take her next examination at the of the summer. She says, "I like China better every day and only hope that I may have a long life to this most needy country."

H. A. Baker and wife on their way to Tibet will spend some time this summer at Kuling, China, studying the language.

Dr. E. I. Osgood, Chuchow, China, reports 115 baptisms. He says the Sunday services constantly have packed houses and the Sunday-school has a fine regular attendance. He also reports that the soldiers have cleaned out the idols from the heathen temples and there was no stir or objection. He says: "This means we must be busy to bring Christ to the people."

Dr. C. L. Pickett reports 1,428 treatments at Laoag, P. I., during the month of April and 30 additions of the church during the month. Speaking of the new hospital he says: "The work is moving along slowly. We have on the ground now the materials for the roof and the wire for the reinforcing." F. M. RAINS, Sec'y.

Preachers' Week at Bethany Assembly, Indiana

Bethany Assembly will offer an attractive program this year for five days, July 29 to August 2. Prof. W. C. Morro, Dr. R. P. Shepherd, Mr. S. S. Lappin and Prof. W. J. Lhamon, speak on subjects of interest to preachers. Besides this, at the evening hour there will be the privilege of hearing some of the foremost men on the platform and in the class room. Among the evening speakers are Hon. J. Frank Hanley on "Jesus Christ, Was He Mortal or Is He Divine," and Dr. E. H. Lindley on "Religion and the Energies of Men." The rate for these five days is $5. The Summer School of Methods from August 6 to 16, under the direction of Garry L. Cook, and in the Brotherhood session planned by R. N. Simpson, will prove highly enjoyable. You are invited to spend as much of your vacation as possible with us. We will do all in our power to make your stay enjoyable and profitable.

C. W. CAUBLE.

—A week of missionary education for the women of Grand Rapids (Mich.) churches will be held October 6 to 12, next, at Park Congregational Church under the auspices of the Women's Missionary Social Union of Grand Rapids.

SIDE TRIPS

--- in ---

"MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME"

While attending the great International Convention of The Disciples of Christ

Louisville, October 15-22

MAMMOTH CAVE
World's Greatest Subterranean Wonder.

LINCOLN MEMORIAL
The Great Granite Temple over Lincoln's Birthplace.

Foster's Home, Old Transylvania, Cane Ridge Church and dozens of other historic spots of interest.

WRITE ME NOW FOR YOUR RESERVATION

GEO. A. JONES, Secy.

Care First Christian Church Louisville, Ky.

Illinois

Fifth District Convention was held at Illiapolis, June 5 and 6.

Ira A. Engle has resigned at Carrollton, after a year's pastorate.

J. A. Barnett, of Galesburg, and S. S. Jones of Third Church, Danville, exchanged pulpits on a recent Sunday.

Improvements on the church building at Sterling, are in process July 4, was spent by many members of the congregation in working at the task.

Robert E. Henry, secretary of the Sixth District, aided the mission at Monticello recently in a short meeting and arranged for the purchase of a property.

A short meeting was held at Salem by Evangelist Lew D. Hill, which resulted in four additions at last report. Mr. Hill is to assist the church at Centralia in a tent meeting in July.

Adam K. Adcock preached his final sermons in Carbondale on Sunday, June 30. He has accepted an instructional position in the Johnson Bible College at Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.

It is learned that Cuba church will be pastorless in a short time due to the resignation of Mr. Cross, who succeeded A. I. Zeller. The Christian Century is not informed as to where Mr. Cross will locate after leaving this church.

Edgar D. Jones of First Church, Bloomington, celebrated the last Sunday in June his sixth anniversary with this church. Both church and pastor are willing for a continuance of the happy pastoral relation through many more such anniversaries.

The Sixth District Convention, held at DeLand, elected the following officers for next year. President, J. F. Rosborough of Clinton; vice-president, E. M. Smith of Decatur; secretary, Robert E. Henry of Niantic. Next year's convention will be held at Tuscola.

As a result of an address by W. B. Clemmer, pastor at Rockford, the churches of the Walnut district organized a building syndicate with pledged shares of $5 for each member to help in the erection of new church buildings in the district. It is hoped to secure 200 members of the syndicate.

A new $12,000 church is being erected by the congregation at Chandlerville. Work is progressing rapidly, and the church, under the capable leadership of Dr. B. O. Aylesworth, is looking forward with high anticipations to its occupancy in the not distant future. Frequent additions are reported to this congregation.

Central Church, Decatur, pulpit was filled by Evangelist Lew D. Hill on a recent Sunday during the absence of the pastor, E. W. Allen. Mr. Allen's pastorate, which dates from the first of March, is being reported as succeeding splendidly, both as to the essential spiritual gains and the more apparent numerical results.

At Saybrook the three churches of the town, including the Disciples' church, will hold Sunday evening union services, to be followed in September with an evangelistic meeting conducted by Toy and Dickson of Winona Lake, Ind. Mr. Toy, the evangelist, was formerly with Wilbur Chapman as an assistant in his revival campaigns.

West Side church, Springfield, ministered to by John R. Golden, had a Children's Day offering amounting to more than $100. This is probably the largest offering for that purpose in the history of the church. With but little appeal to public notice, the work of this church is being carried on with very substantial results. Frequent additions at regular services, with good congregations and a capable Sunday-school, are reported.

The Sunday-schools of Springfield are trying out a new departure in the line of annual picnics. Heretofore the congregations of the city have had their individual picnics, or combined with other churches of their own denomination. This year the Sunday-school association planned one large picnic to be held in Lincoln Park for all the schools of the city. The same was held July 4, and proved to be successful beyond expectations. Undoubtedly, the plan will be repeated next year.

The state secretaries, J. Fred Jones and W. D. Deweese announce that they will begin tabulating statistics for the new Year Book in a short time. They have sent out the second call for reports, paying the return postage each time, and yet many preachers and clerks pay no attention whatever. Much has been said about a "temperance conscience," and a "missionary conscience," but there is also need of a "report conscience." There are about 350 reports that ought to be sent in in the next few days.

Coronated Christians

By Edgar De Witt Jones.

During the past six months First Church, Bloomington, lost by death four members whose passing should be a matter of solemn interest to the entire brotherhood.

James Oscar Willson.

On November 15, Mr. James O. Willson died after a painful illness of some months. Mr. Willson was one of Bloomington's most prominent Christian business men and at the time of his death was president of the Peoples' Bank and a trustee of Brokaw Hospital. He was a graduate of Eureka College and his wife who survives him, is a daughter of the late Peter Whitmer, long a pillar in First Church here. Mr. Willson was a faithful churchman, a quiet, sincere Christian gentleman. He brought to the business circles of Bloomington a princely standard of Christian ethics. He died in the very prime of life. His influence still lives.

Francis Marion Emerson.

On December 14, Francis Marion Emerson died at the advanced age of 94. He was our modern Barnabas, one of the best and most spiritual of men. Born in Kentucky, he was intimately acquainted with scores of our pioneer ministers. He once prepared for me a list of seventy-four preachers among the Disciples whom he had heard preach. In the list were the names of Alexander Campbell, Walter Scott, Barton W. Stone, John Smith, the Creaths, both father and son, the Rogers, both senior and elder, Isaac Errett, Dr. Hopson, W. T. Moore, in fact, the names of nearly all of our better known ministers from the early thirties to the present. I have never known a godlier man. His life was full of sweetness and light. Somewhat conservative in his views he was a lover of all his brethren. He rests from his labors and his works do follow.

Judith Anne Bradner.

February 28, Mrs. Judith Bradner, aged 97 years and 10 months, completed her long and useful earthly career. Mrs. Bradner was one of the thirteen original charter members of First Church. Her father was W. T. Major, in whose house the organization took place, and who was one of Bloomington's most distinguished pioneer citizens. Mrs. Bradner was an extraordinary woman, knowing intimately Alexander Campbell, Col. E. D. Baker, Abraham Lincoln, Judge Stephen A. Douglas, and a host of other noted men of political and religious fame of sixty years ago. She delighted to tell of those now haloed times and characters.. She died strong in the faith of her fathers and ever-so-willing to put off the old tabernacle for one eternal in the heavens.

Miss Susan Loehr.

June 2, there died Miss Susan Loehr, long a resident of Bloomington, and a faithful follower of Christ. Miss Loehr, who was in her 94th year, was born near Somerset, Pa., her father's place adjoining that of Judge Jeremiah Black. She possessed considerable means and gave away much of it to worthy causes. To the local Y. M. C. A. she gave $5,000 and to several of our missionary boards she made substantial gifts. One of her last gifts was that of a memorial window to the new church edifice at Somerset. Miss Loehr was the old-fashioned type of woman of simple habits and childlike faith. For years she was unable to get out to church services but never a day passed without devotional services in her home. It was her daily custom to read a passage of Scripture, sing a hymn from "The Christian Hymn Book" and pray. She died as she lived in stedfast faith and sure hope of a fuller life beyond the grave.

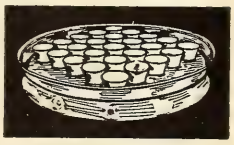
The memory of these good people is more fragrant than white lilacs and old-fashioned roses. Though dead they yet speak. They were friends of God and benefactors of men. We miss them sorely, but into their places are stepping some younger disciples upon whom we depend for like leadership in the service of the King.

First Church.
Bloomington.

Chicago

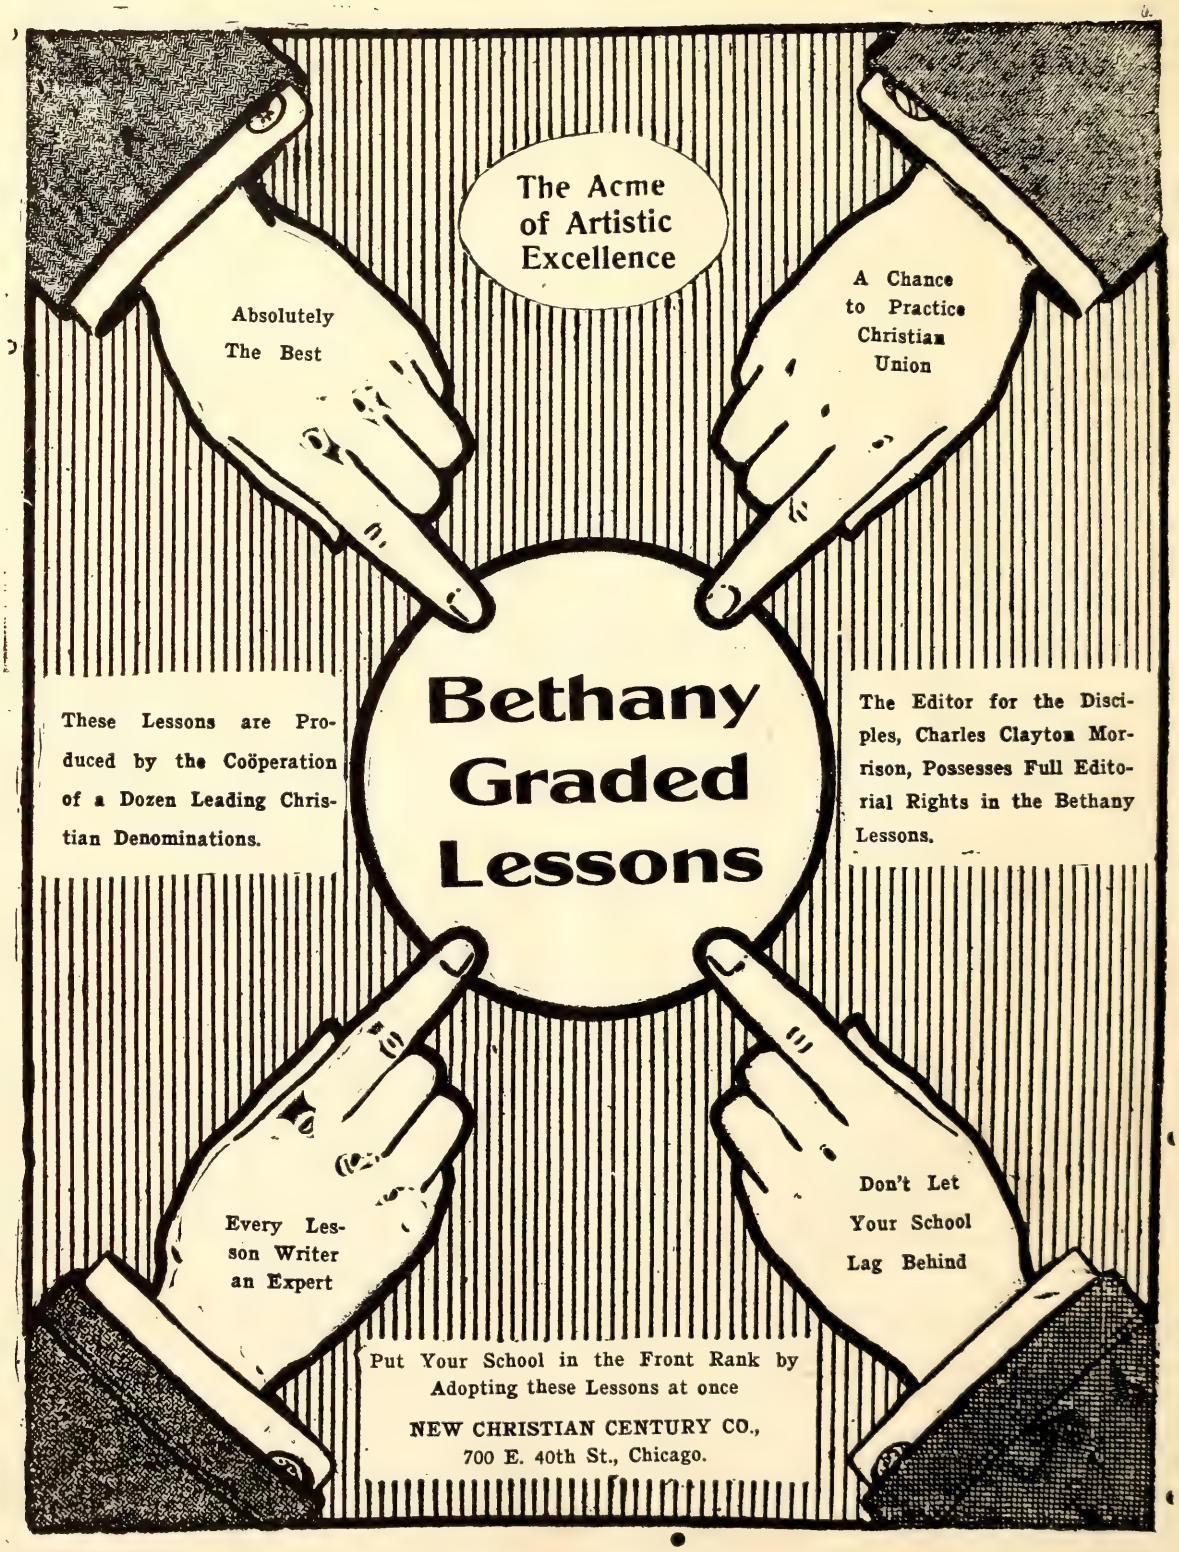
Among the fine company of men studying in the University of Chicago this summer are P. J. Rice, pastor at El Paso, Tex.; Clay Trusty, pastor in Indianapolis; Cloyd Goodnight, pastor at Shelbyville, Ind.; E. E. Elliott of Kansas City, secretary Brotherhood of Disciples; C. C. Buckner, pastor Irving Park Church, Chicago; Walter Athearn, professor of religious pedagogy, Drake University; Phillip Johnson, professor of philosophy, Bethany College; W. H. Erskine, missionary in Japan; Ellsworth Faris, professor of philosophy, Texas Christian University. There are close to forty graduate students enrolled. It is expected that the number will be considerably increased when the second term of six weeks opens near the last of July. The Disciples' Divinity House now counts over 300 of its former students in the pulpits and professorial positions of the brotherhood.

A. J. Saunders, pastor at Wellington, New Zealand, is intending to return to this country in the fall. Mr. Saunders was formerly pastor at South Chicago.

DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE INDIVIDUAL
"Noiseless"
CUSHIONED TRAYS
4 Different Features
WHY?


1st—"Noiseless"—As all cup holes are cushioned.
2nd—Dust-proof—The Trays interlock.
3rd—A short glass—no need of tipping back the head.
4th—Automatic Filler—Fills rapidly and evenly.
Does not mar the sacredness of the service.
Write for booklet. Outfit sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 E. Randolph St., Dept. T., Chicago.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 27
Established 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO



The Acme of Artistic Excellence
Absolutely The Best
A Chance to Practice Christian Union
Bethany Graded Lessons
These Lessons are Produced by the Coöperation of a Dozen Leading Christian Denominations.
The Editor for the Disciples, Charles Clayton Morrison, Possesses Full Editorial Rights in the Bethany Lessons.
Every Lesson Writer an Expert
Don't Let Your School Lag Behind
Put Your School in the Front Rank by Adopting these Lessons at once
NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.,
700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Sharp Rev C M Dec12
5522 Kimbark Ave

Vol. XXIX July 18, 1912 Number 29

THE RISE OF WOODROW WILSON

THE GREAT CONFESSION

HOW WOMEN ACT IN A WOMAN'S CONVENTION

CHICAGO

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

An Up-to-Date College for Young Women
CAMDEN POINT, MISSOURI

COURSES:		COMMODIOUS BUILDING:
College Preparatory Bible Normal, Music Elocution Physical Culture		New Addition to Building New Gymnasium Steam Heated, Acetylene Lighted, Large Campus

TUITION REASONABLE AND RIGHT—SEND FOR CATALOGUE

Sixty-fourth Year Opens in September FRANK G. RICHARD, President

An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women SIXTY-SECOND YEAR

Christian College

Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $36,000 building, completed. 25 College-trained, experienced teachers. Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior college course leads to an A. B. degree. College-preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character-training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field. Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern colleges. For illustrated catalogue address

MRS. LUELLA W. ST. CLAIR-MOSS, President, COLUMBIA, MO.

Next Session begins September 17th.

How About Attending College This Year?

We want the name of every young man and every young woman who is considering this most important question. We believe we can show them that

DRAKE UNIVERSITY

Offers Great Advantages

It is located in the best residence district in Des Moines—the best city in the West. Surroundings clean and wholesome. Good influences surround the boy or girl who attends Drake University.

Courses of Study: Liberal Arts (including Courses for Primary, Kindergarten, Grade and High School Teachers and Students in Domestic Science), Law, Medicine, Dentistry, Bible, Music, Painting and Drawing, Dramatic Art, Etc. Thoroughly prepared teachers in all departments. The best of equipment. The Drake Stadium, one of the finest athletic fields in the country.

Write for catalogue and full particulars. Any question you may desire to ask will be answered cheerfully.

HILL M. BELL, President,

Drake University. Des Moines, Iowa

WILLIAM WOODS COLLEGE

Fulton, Mo., successful school for young women.—23rd year.

Reason—we Specialize—Class 'A' standards

What Parents Want to Know.
1 Equipment—Buildings first class; homelike; heated; modern.
2 Curriculum—Courses "accredited"; well arranged for study, recreation and proper social life.
3 Faculty—Teachers from best schools, sympathetic; know their business.
4 Features—College atmosphere, gymnasium, right kind of good time.

Over 3,300 girls in 22 years

These questions answered to your satisfaction. Write President Joseph L. Garvin.

1869 — HAMILTON COLLEGE FOR WOMEN — 1912

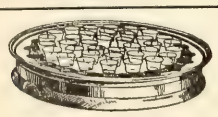
LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.

HUBERT GIBSON SHEARIN, A. M., Ph. D. (Yale), President.

Standardized Junior College courses under a faculty of twenty-nine, all graduates of leading American and European institutions. Faculty of seven for Music, Expression and Art.

Five modern buildings. Complete gymnasium, laboratories and libraries. Home care. Delightful dormitories. Cultural surroundings and scholarly ideals.

The forty-fourth session begins September 9, 1911. For catalogue address THE SECRETARY.



THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

OUR SPECIAL SELF-COLLECTING Cushioned Tray has no equal. NOISELESS, DUST PROOF, INTERLOCKING. Best for pew or altar communion. Uses short, shallow cup, glass or aluminum (indestructible) no tipping of head. Saves ONE-FOURTH cost other services. Over 12,000 churches use. Send for catalog and "Special Introductory Offer." Thomas Communion Service Co., Box 120 Lima, Ohio

The Best

The Uniform Sunday School lessons for 1912 are in The Life of Christ. You want the very best text for your young people's and adult classes that can be found. Even though your school is graded, up to the Intermediate department, you may still find it desirable to follow the Uniform lessons for the older classes. This is simply to remind you that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF CHRIST in Fifty-two Lessons. It is a new book. A second large edition has just been issued to meet the great demand. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

The New Christian Century Co.,
700 E. 40th St.
CHICAGO

The Christian Century

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT . . . . . EDITORS

Baptists Also to Practice Unity

IT IS ENCOURAGING THAT, WHILE churches and denominations are talking about union, one church has had the courage to go straight ahead and do something which removes the only obstacle between two great denominations of America and Great Britain. We refer to the remarkable action of the Mount Morris Baptist Church of New York City, which has decided, by a practically unanimous vote, to receive into full membership members of other Christian churches who may come with the usual letter of dismission or certificate of church membership.

This vote is so significant that a short sketch of the causes leading up to it will prove interesting. For many years the Mount Morris Church was ministered to by Dr. W. C. Bitting, who educated the congregation along liberal lines. When the question of union summer services arose among the neighboring churches, this Baptist church was as enthusiastic over them as the Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational churches, and the Lord's Supper was partaken of by all the denominations in the Baptist church, with ministers and deacons of the various churches administering it.

Then Dr. J. Herman Randall came, with the same liberal outlook both on theology and church polity and with an even more radical conception of church methods. He instituted Sunday morning lectureships which have achieved national reputation. The first course, on the great religions of the world, drew sometimes a thousand people, from all denominations. They became interested in the church and they liked its pastor. Some of them desired to join the church, but the question of baptism stood in the way of receiving them by letter, for most of them were Congregationalists, Presbyterians and Methodists. At first it was suggested that an associate membership be created. At this juncture Dr. Randall, backed by some of his leading officers, frankly put the proposition to the church that they receive into full membership Christians of good standing in any church, who brought properly attested letters. A committee was appointed to consider plans for a closer fellowship with Christians of other denominations.

This committee made a careful study of the whole situation. Especially did they study Baptist conditions in England. They found that in London, Dr. Clifford's great church; in Manchester, Dr. MacLaren's church, and in Liverpool the church of which Dr. Aked was formerly pastor admitted candidates to full membership on any form of baptism, or even none. (For instance, a Quaker who had not been baptized by water would be received by letter from his congregation. We judge, from the resolution of the Mount Morris Church, printed below, that this church would also receive him.) The committee remembered all "the many men and women who worshiped and worked with them in all branches of church and Bible school who are, and have been for years, professing Christians, one with them in all things but actual membership, who were anxious to become members with them and make their church home." As a result of these deliberations, the committee reported in part as follows:

"We believe their admittance to full membership, upon their letters from other Christian churches, would add greatly to their efficiency as workers in the Master's Kingdom, and show to them and the world our desire to contribute our part to that closer union so much hoped for. We believe it will be the most important step toward that end ever taken by any body of Christians, and in that belief we have approached the subject with open hearts and with but one desire, the actual expression of Christ's will as we believe it and the advance of his cause on earth through the breaking down of barriers heretofore existing which have for ages prevented the union of his followers. Therefore, at the meeting of your committee held Feb. 15, 1912, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, that we recommend to the church:

1. The acceptance into full membership of Christians in good standing, presenting letters of dismissal and recommendation from Christian churches of other denominations, provided that such letters are not over six months old.

2. That any person who has at any time been a member of another Christian church, but who in consequence of any special circumstances has no regular letter of dismissal and recommendation, may be received into membership of the church by appearing before the church and giving satisfactory evidence of regeneration and Christian conduct.

3. That admission to membership of persons who have never been members of any Christian church be, as always, through open profession and baptism as practically by the Baptist Church in America.

The recent adoption of this report by a more than four-fifths vote is significant. By recognizing other forms of baptism as having equal validity with immersion it removes the only thing that has differentiated the Baptist churches from the Congregational. If all the Baptist churches should follow, there would be no reason whatever for preserving two branches of Christ's Church which stood for exactly the same things, and had the same ecclesiastical polity. It is interesting to note that immediately after the adoption of this resolution several members from Congregational churches were received into the Mount Morris Church.

Other Baptist churches will probably follow the example of the Mount Morris Church. Indeed, the church at Ithaca, under the leadship of Dr. Jones, passed practically the same resolutions almost simultaneously with the Mount Morris Church, and we understand that churches in other parts of the country have taken similar action.

The action of these churches will give a great impetus to the whole movement for church unity. Denominationalism is based on those things which men are more and more coming to feel are, although important, the minor things of the eternal life. But insistent emphasis on these things is the very thing that has retarded all church union. Here are churches vlountarily setting aside as tests of either Christian faith or church loyalty one of those things that has been among the most impassable barriers. If the Baptist church can thus minimize a form and exalt allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ, will it not make it easier for other denominations to remove all barriers to church membership and to the ministry, except the response to the call of Christ to follow him?

—The Congregationalist.

Social Survey

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN.

The Division of the Progressives

No more anomalous political condition was ever presented to this country than the present one. That we are in a period of transition of more than usual significance is certain. It is a considerable journey to take to find a man or a newspaper with the hardihood to prophesy the re-election of President Taft. When the individual is found, he is discovered to be an optimist of the extremist type. Yet the progressive spirit, which is undoubtedly the spirit of a vast majority of the American public today, is divided between three rival candidates. The perplexed voter who wishes the triumph of the progressive idea hardly knows what choice to make.

It is a part of the irony of our present political situation that Senator LaFollette, supposedly the most uncompromising of progressives, remains with the Republican party. We presume this means that he will vote for the head of the ticket, even though under protest. Governor Wilson, as the head of the Democratic ticket, was nominated through the assistance of Boss Sullivan, of Illinois, an individual certainly no more desirable than Murphy of Tammany Hall in New York. There is, of course, no reason for believing that any deal was arranged between Wilson and Sullivan.

In the midst of all this, preparations go on apace for the organization of the proposed third party, which hopes to enroll progressives of both old parties. Some cloud is cast over this movement, however, by the demand of Senator LaFollette that Colonel Roosevelt publish his campaign expenses in the recent contest, which demand has not yet been met. Thus there are three rival claimants for progressive favor and two of them candidates for the presidency.

Out of such a tangle every good American should hope for some drawing of the lines so the people can face frankly, and without any confusion, the dominant issue of progressivism as opposed to the previous Bourbon stand-patism. We can hope for no real political progress until our political organizations clear the deck for some clear thinking on the real issues.

The Death of the Old Primary System

In our interest in who is to be the president the next four years, we cannot afford to forget that we have just had the best of all demonstrations that we need a different primary system. In eleven states out of forty-eight we had primaries that really gave the people a chance to express their wishes. It is interesting to note that both old parties nominated men who had been rejected in the popular primaries.

The cries of theft and robbery still echo from the Chicago convention. The only defense of the men who controlled that convention is that their actions were "politics" and that things had always been so. It is probably true that things have always been so, but here again the mind of the stand-patter cannot understand the man who will not receive the divine authority of things that have always been.

Our political system is now the most antiquated of any in the civilized world. Once we were leaders, and our institutions were copied by new republics the world over. Now we are pointed to as the country where democratic institutions seem about to be demonstrated a failure. It is well-known that our conventions have been bought and sold by corrupt interests in days gone by. The corporations, whose inordinate and inhuman greed has made America the most expensive place in which to live of any of the civilized nations, have had a reason for buying senators and controlling the conventions that nominated our presidents.

We shall never dethrone the plutocracy that has our institutions in its death grip until we give the people control of both primaries and elections. We need primaries guarded by all the safeguards of the Australian ballot system. We need limited expense accounts for the candidates. We are willing to prophesy that the American people will never face the emergencies of another presidential election without having provided themselves with these safe-guards to our institutions.

Justice for the Babies

In these sweltering days of the summer-time, our thoughts turn instinctively to the babies of the great cities. We know they will die by the thousands, strong-limbed, promising children, that ought to live to serve the race. This summer heat will weed out, not the unfit, but the unfortunate. We read the appeals in the newspapers for an ice fund to distribute ice in poor families.

There is a sanitarium for babies in Lincoln Park fostered by another newspaper. On the north shore in Evanston the churches conduct a summer camp for indigent mothers and children. These are mere palliative devices, however. The social remedy must strike deeper or we shall stand as mere triflers in the presence of a great human need. A man can stand by any boulevard and see enough automobiles go by in five minutes to have furnished the price to save the babies of all Chicago this summer. He can sit for an hour in any fashionable restaurant and watch five dollar dinners ordered in sufficient numbers to have gone far in saving the infants of a whole ward.

What is the sin of these children that they should be born to struggle from the first with adverse conditions?

Why do they not have light and air and good milk?

Why must they live on streets that burn like ovens and which never see a blade of grass?

Because they are born in a social and economic order which has no justice. They have come into a world which just now lives with the brutal every-day ethics of a Nietsche, whose frank thesis is that the world belongs to the strong. They have come to a world so pagan and utterly un-Christian that dogs wear diamonds while babies die.

Our selfish luxuries will cry out against us in the day of judgment when we shall know that for an automobile we sacrificed an infant genius, and for a poodle dog we gave up the second Shakespeare. Herod's slaughter of infants was but a poor affair compared with the slaughter that goes on every summer, perpetrated by the selfishness of luxury.

The parents of the babies must have social and economic justice. Then they will have the means to care for their children as human beings should be cared for. Justice, not charity, is the need of the hour.

The Growth of the Vacation Habit

It was once remarked as a sign of great energy when a man boasted that he had not taken a vacation in twelve years. It is now coming to be regarded as a mark of foolishness. The man who disregards the laws of the human machine that carries out his will is not a wise man but a fool. It is gratifying to see that among all classes there is a growing tendency to find more time in the summer to return to nature.

The Saturday half-holiday is well established in the offices of the great cities. The Thursday half-holiday for merchants and clerks is also making progress. In some cities the women's clubs have hinted that the stores which did not give their clerks this half-day would be remembered unfavorably. The polite suggestion has worked miracles with some recalcitrant shop-keepers.

Once the employee who took two weeks of absence in the summer had to find a new position. Now it is a part of the regular program for many employers to grant this vacation and some of them now continue the salary. Perhaps there was a day when the community was so poor economically that it was necessary for the whole population to work to the maximum capacity.

We are not suffering with poverty these days, however. The development of mechanical invention has so transformed life that we now have more money than any nation in human history. This money should buy better living conditions. It should make it possible for the average man to live longer. Our prosperity should be the opportunity of the masses to grow in physical vigor and to cultivate the refinements of life.

—British labor troubles have resulted in a dropping off of 40 to 50 per cent on shipments from London to the United States. Shippers are said to be afraid to ship goods, owing to the uncertainty of their despatch. While the actual figures are unavailable for the quarter ending June 30, the valuation of the exports for the previous quarter exceeded $40,000,000. It is said that the exports for the quarter ending June 30 are not much more than one-half that amount.

—General Booth, the head of the Salvation Army, says that he is still hoping to go to America and Canada as he had planned. General Booth is now on the high road to recovery, although he is incurably sightless.

—In the year 1800 there were about 50,000 Baptists in the United States. In 1912 there were 5,454,198.

—The Baptists of the United States have nearly $75,000,000 invested in educational work.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Presbyterian Losses in England

The prosperity of the Presbyterian denomination in England is not encouraging. While in our own land we are likely to hear the cry of materialism and worldliness more frequently than in England, yet we are able to report greater vitality among many of the denominations here than there. The Presbyterian Advance thus reports the facts:

According to reports submitted to the thirty-seventh Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England, which met at Regent Square, London, early in May, our sister denomination across the sea is not meeting with the encouragement which could be hoped for. The year recently closed showed an advance in contributions of the church to all purposes, the increase being about $20,000. It seems that practically all of the churches of England have recently suffered loss of membership. The Presbyterian Church has not actually lost, but the net increase last year was only twenty. The membership of the church is now 86,848. There was a slight decrease in the membership of young men's societies, of students in colleges, and of Sunday-school teachers and pupils. The amount contributed for missionary purposes was slightly larger than during the preceding year, but the Synod finds it is handicapped by the small contributions for home missions and church extension. For the second successive year the Home Mission Board found itself under the necessity to reduce the amount of aid which had been promised to mission churches. Steps were taken to employ twelve evangelists for the synod, and these men will press the work of evangelism and church extension during the coming year. The English church, like the Presbyterian Church in America, laments a dearth of students for the ministry.

The Pretensions of the Cardinals

Soon after Governor Foss of Massachusetts refused to take a subordinate place to "Prince" O'Connell at the St. Patrick's Day banquet at Boston, a number of letters appeared in several of the the court of St. James and at other non-Catholic capitals; that "by authority of diplomatic usage a Roman cardinal at any official government function in this republic must be granted recognition of his rank in advance of all other dignitaries, save the president of the United States only." And further—"At Washington the president would probably have quickly settled the status of Cardinal O'Connell in accordance with the rules that prevail at the court of St. James and at other non-Catholic capitals; that is to say, he would have conceded to Cardinal O'Connell, as also to Cardinals Farley, Gibbons and Falconio, the 'pas' over the foreign ambassadors, who precede everybody else, even the vice-president of the United States and the speaker of the house—also all of the judiciary."

Well may we ask, Is this ambition to have the chief places at feasts to end there? If so, let us gratify such an ambition. But what folly possesses a man who thus believes? The spirit that is content now with chief seats at a banquet would soon grasp at higher distinctions, and we know that Rome is never satisfied with minor ambitions. In addition, how foreign are the tempers of these "princes" of foreign blood to that of Him whom they profess to follow. The astounding arrogance of the cardinals is almost too contemptible to deserve a rebuke. The puppet show may succeed in Europe but it is doomed to failure on American soil.

The cardinals are in our country, but evidently not of it.

An Honest Confession

Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, rector of St. George's Church, Kansas City, makes the following confession in his parish paper. Our regret is that he should have become a reactionary after such a well-meant experiment. The fault of most people who think about and experiment with the subject of Christian union is that they become impatient if the anticipated results do not appear at once. Union is a growth, and all growth to be permanent will be slow. Acquaintance will help us to grow, and must be the first step toward union. And then union is a reform, and reforms move slowly. Old systems become entrenched, customs become law, privileges harden into rights, abuses become sanctified with age, the old order challenges every change—why should we grow impatient? A divided Christendom is the result of almost twenty centuries of effort not to divide.

The church divided in spite of her determination to keep the unity of the spirit. Why should it be thought strange if we cannot unite in a day? Time and patience are two of the factors in the problem of union. Doctor Brady's "confession" which is reported in the Living Church is worthy of a careful reading.

Recalling that it was he who introduced the so-called Open Pulpit resolution in the Richmond convention as a "practical measure which would tend to bring differing Christians nearer together," he now says, "I was mistaken. It has not made the least difference. The resolution is so innocuous that it is hardly worth while to delete it from the canon. During several years I have tried to get in touch with sectarian Christianity and bring the church, as I represent it, into closer relation with other Christian organizations. I have failed lamentably. No results whatever have attended my efforts. The church does not want to get into closer relationship apparently, neither her clergy nor her laity. Our ideas are so at variance with those of the other churches that nothing results from the association, even if we do come in touch, unless our differences are thereby accentuated!" Continuing, he expressed the opinion that the church is no longer respected by other Christians as it once was, and while personally he admits to have "made pleasant acquaintances and have profited by the Christian character and characteristics of the ministers of these various churches," yet "ecclesiastically nothing is changed." He says, therefore, "from the most ardent, outspoken progressive, I have become a reactionary. I have concluded that so far as I am concerned, unity is an iridescent dream; that it is not possible in the present stage of human development except by giving up all that we hold dear; and I have no doubt that other Christian organizations are exactly in the same position." Feeling that this church is "absolutely right in every fundamental position," he even sees "no use in the proposed conference on Faith and Order. It will bring forth talk and nothing else." Finally, he says, "having tried and failed, I try no more; not because I am a 'quitter,' I'm not that, but because I have come to see that it is useless and there are other avenues for my energies and for the energies of the church. That is all."

Preachers, Politics and Patriotism

In the unrest of our day in the state and the nation, it is difficult at times for the minister to know what his duty is. If he rebukes the wickedness of politics, someone will charge him with being a partisan, and with selfish motives desiring the defeat of "our party." Reason flees when the party is in danger. The preacher may distinguish between the corruption in the party and the wise statesmanship of which it may boast, but the average hearer can understand nothing but the assaults on the fabric of the party wherein he was born. The politicians have thoroughly indoctrinated the people with the theory that political sin was different from all other, that it must not be mentioned in the pulpit, that to mention was only to degrade the sacred desk. Hence, one of the corrective agencies of Christendom was as effectually silenced as though it were in the heart of Cathay. We are making some progress in correcting these impressions, but we move slowly. Political sins are popular and profitable; they become defiant under fire and fight with skill and valor. Speaking of the preacher's duty in such matters the Continent gives this excellent message:

It is high time to have done with mawkish folly about damage to the sacredness of the high calling of the gospel ministry. Elijah had a reasonably high call, and he did not defile its sacredness by his high-handed war against a profligate court and the debauched politics of his time. Is that illustration from a source too remote in time to be of vital interest? Take one from our own day. Henry Ward Beecher and George B. Cheever had a high call of God to a gospel work which they honored with their rare gifts. But no false sense of the sacredness of their call kept them from waging fierce war with all the ardor of their lives against the giant political iniquities rooted in African slavery in America. Such an exhibition as has been made of political methods by the months just passed is a disgrace to a cultured, educated Christian people. We may care nothing for men or parties; we do care for national honor. The need for a prophet-voice has come once more. The United States needs an Amos and a Jeremiah who will cry out for clean politics, for nonpartisan government, for officers who can and will sink personality and personal ambitions out of sight and look and work only for the public weal. Who can cry out so effectively as the Christian minister? What agency can sound so clear a note as the religious paper? The hour has struck when the church should begin to stand for the principles which the Founder of the church preached. Roscoe Conkling sneered at "Sunday-school politics," but the time for sneering has gone for ever and ever by. Righteousness exalteth a nation. Sin is a reproach to any people. And the religious man or the religious paper which holds its peace in the crisis to which political iniquity has brought us will be recreant to the highest duty of the times.

—There are many praying souls, most of them poor men and women in obscurity and poverty, with whom God's angels dwell more abundantly than with those who stand in the conspicuity of exhibitive holiness. The higher life is very low. "He that would be chief among you, let him be your slave; let him be minister of all."

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—SILAS JONES, IDA WITHERS HARRISON, ORVIS F. JORDAN. ELLIS B. BARNES.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy, 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

United Religious Press Building
700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

Growth

A great preacher once said it took fifteen years to get a new idea into the minds of his people. His congregation was above the average in intelligence. Of course he meant something more than giving information. It took fifteen years to put a new idea into the character of the people so that they would respond to appeals based upon it.

The first thing to be said of growth is that it requires time. A noble life does not reach its fulness and power in a day. We do not expect the child to display the insight and self-control of the mature man or woman. Those who begin late in life to follow Christ must also grow into an appreciation of the larger meanings of Christian service. Congregations trained to meet the conditions of forty years ago and deprived of the ministrations of men who could read the signs of the times may be expected to adjust themselves slowly to new conditions.

"The building of a good character is a long process. We do well to spend pains and toil on it; but the underground work is the main thing in estimating stability." We are told that men whom their neighbors trust often sell out when they are sent to the state legislature. It is charged that delegates to our national political conventions have professed one thing to their constituents and practiced another at the conventions. Men of this sort are not rooted and grounded in honesty and good faith. Some of them doubtless intended to keep the promises they made to their supporters, but when they found themselves among politicians they were helpless. They have nothing of their own to hold. At home they listen to the voter; in the convention they lend their ear to the trickster. In the church are some who think they delight in the Lord when they sit with the Lord's people in the house of worship, but who also go with the multitude to do evil. They reflect their immediate surroundings. They cannot grow strong in faith.

Said Horace Mann: "The highest human duty consists in an intelligent obedience to God's will. I say an intelligent obedience; for a blind obedience worships God with only a part of our nature—an intelligent obedience with the whole of it." One hindrance to growth is found in our demand that new knowledge shall leave our present opinions unmodified. We go to the theological school to have our prejudices confirmed and strengthened. We are offended and raise the cry of heresy if the teachers seem to be leading us to a reconsideration of questions which we thought had been settled forever. We ask that our knowledge grow after the fashion of a rock pile, by additions merely, and not by transformations. Even if we hold the faith of the fathers, we cannot accept it in ready-made systems. Vital faith comes by hard thinking and heroic acting.

Students of education have discovered that there are periods of acceleration and of retardation in the learning process. For the first few days or weeks in a study the progress may be rapid and then it may seem to stop. What happens is this: We acquire facts at first and then comes the period of assimilation. The nervous system undergoes change. William James said we learn to skate in summer and to swim in winter. He meant the readjustments required for success in the doing of some new thing go on during periods of rest. Now we cannot take a rest from moral and religious living and remain loyal to God and man, but we can change the emphasis within the realm of moral and religious thought and activity. The good and devout life has a variety of interests. Its most rapid progress would seem to depend upon a wise arrangement of these interests to suit the needs of the soul.

The pain of growth would be avoided by a majority of us if avoidance were possible. We plead for harmony in our political conventions and in our religious assemblies because we have ease. Harmony is desirable when there is important work to be done and the disagreements are over minor details of methods. But what shall we say of the man who desires harmony for the sake of office or of extending the circulation of his paper or of his continuance with an influential church? Pain is the price of progress. Friends will disagree on political and religious questions and they will become estranged. It is better that this should be so than that honest convictions should be suppressed. We may discover later that we quarreled over trivial matters. Happy will it be for us then if we can be assured it was our judgment and not our heart that was wrong. Honest difference may aid growth. Playing with convictions leads in the other direction. [Midweek Service, July 24. I Peter 2:1-4; Luke 2:52.]

S. J.

New Testament Conditions of Church Membership

It is becoming very plain that some Disciples possess two distinct compartments of mind in which they carry on their thinking with respect to the conditions of membership in the Church of Christ.

In one compartment they deal with scripture texts. From these texts are deduced three conditions which qualify a person for membership in the Church of Christ—faith, repentance and immersion water. As to immersion the texts seem to make it as invariable and inescapable as faith and repentance. "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter the Kingdom of God [the church]".

In the other compartment these brethren deal with a fact—the fact that millions of persons are members of the Church of Christ who have not been "born of water." In all the range of their fellowship with Presbyterians, Methodists, Congregationalists and others—in worship in communion, in practical service, in missions, in Bible study, in union evangelism, in the promotion of this or that enterprise of social welfare—these Disciples freely regard them as members of the Church of Christ.

At one point only is there an exception to this fraternal attitude. This exception is in the matter of giving the formal "hand of fellowship" which would admit such persons into the local congregations. The "hand of fellowship" is a purely human device having no authority in scripture and of dubious utility even when considered as a purely human device.

The traditional practice of the Disciples in extending this "hand of fellowship" to those and to those alone who have been immersed is based upon the supposed teaching of the texts that immersion is a prerequisite to salvation and to Church membership. A Presbyterian is a Christian, a member of the Church of Christ, at every point in which he comes in contact with the Disciples save when he comes forward to receive the "hand of fellowship." Here he is treated as an outsider: he is asked to make confession of faith and to be baptized by immersion.

In a word, the Presbyterian is asked to become a Christian!

The fact, recognized without exception in one compartment of thinking, namely, that he is already a member of the Church of Christ and therefore qualified for full fellowship in any congregation of the Church of Christ, goes for nought because the right to receive the "hand of fellowship" is determined solely by an abstract interpretation of texts, not by the actual fact in the case.

It is amazing how these two compartments of the Disciples' mind could have been kept separate so long. The inconsistency between them is so obvious and glaring as to amount to intellectual sacrilege. For example, in the compartment dealing with scripture texts we find ourselves believing that Jesus declared it to be impossible ("he cannot") for a man to enter the Church of Christ without immersion. But in the compartment dealing with the fact we find Christ actually receiving into his Church millions who have not been immersed at all.

Is Christ at variance with his word?

How much longer can the Disciples carry text and fact in two such separate compartments of their thought? Not much longer, we venture to predict. A door between these two compartments is being opened and the fact is entering into the text compartment, making us aware either that the word of scripture is wrong or that our understanding of it is wrong. The former alternative is impossible to us; God's word must be true. But our understanding of God's word is liable to error.

And it is impossible to dispute the fact involved, namely, that Christ does receive into his Church the unimmersed; therefore our understanding of the text must be mistaken.

To this conclusion multitudes of Disciples have long since come.

They do not believe that baptism is immersion in water.

They do not believe that immersion is a New Testament condition of membership in the Church.

They do not believe that Jesus said a man could not enter His Church except he be immersed.

They are thoroughly revising their conception of the New Testament conditions of membership. They are coming to see that faith in the Lord and repentance from sin are the sole qualifications of admittance into the Church of Christ, and that baptism is the act of uniting with the Church—not a condition of uniting but the act itself.

No other conception of baptism fits the numerous scripture references to the rite. No other conception of the conditions of salvation and of Church membership preserves the character of Christianity as a spiritual religion. No other conception of the teaching of the word of God harmonizes with the indisputable work of God in the living Church.

The wall of separation between these two compartments of our mind by which we have been betrayed into taking two contradictory attitudes toward the unimmersed must be broken down, is breaking down. Fact is facing text. Text must reckon with fact.

Disciples cannot any longer admit that Congregationalists are Christians, members of the Church of Christ, and, at the same time, justify a practice in their churches based upon the contradictory assumption that Congregationalists have not yet complied with the conditions of membership in the Church of Christ.

Editorial Table Talk

The Summer Slump

Most of the churches have experienced it already; more are anticipating it. What are we to do about it? There is nothing that can be done, save to exhort one another to love and good works, even when we are far away from the sound of our own church bell. There may be an abandonment of church services at home, but all can be diligent at such services as you can attend wherever you are. Make yourself known to the pastor; enter into the work with him; don't appear as a weakling needing help, but rather as a co-worker ready to push. Above all, be instant in season and out of season in exhibiting the character of Him whose we are and whom we serve. We have left the church behind us; let us not leave our religion. We have left our homes for a season; let us keep alive our obligations to Christ wherever we may be. A vacation severs no bonds, save those of toil and worry. Our characters and professions are inseparable from us if we are Christians indeed. It is a rare opportunity to enjoy the coolness of the wave, the ever changing tints of sky, the poetry of clouds as they marshal themselves in battalions, or change again into castles which the sun kindles into conflagrations; but let all invigorate us for the new duties and the greater tasks that lie before us, teach the lessons of divine order and the beauty of nature, and help to bring us into the harmony with the Mind about us which creates "the music and gladness of the world."

Sunday-school Hymn Books

While it is quite true that young disciples have not the same literary tastes as matured saints, we hold it to be a doubtful policy to confine our Sunday-school pupils and Christian Endeavor members to music and hymns which they will soon "outgrow." The child in the grade schools, if left to his or her own choice, would read Mark Twain and "Mr. Dooley" in preference to the essays of Addison or the orations of Webster. But the compilers of our school readers, while anxious to retain the interest of the child, are more anxious to form the taste and shape the future expression of the pupil. We were recently called upon to examine a new book of hymns for Sunday-school use, and declined to recommend it for the simple reason it was all juvenile, not a hymn or tune in it educative. A recent vote, taken in a goodly company of Christian leaders, showed their preferences of hymns in the following order: (1) Rock of Ages; (2) Jesus Lover of My Soul; (3) Nearer My God to Thee; (4) Just as I Am; (5) My Faith Looks Up to Thee; (6) All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name; and (7) Holy, Holy, Holy. It is evident that any Sunday-school which is not singing some of these hymns, is not fitting its young people for future praise. There ought not to be such a wide gulf between the worship of our schools and of our churches as now exists.

Baiting Roman Catholics

Not all countries are as favorable to Catholicism as our own. In Russia, it would seem, there is no discussion as to whether the foreign princes of the church are to have the precedence over governors at the feasts. We think baiting the Catholics is as bad as debating with them over their disposition to seize the select seats in the state. There is certainly a vast difference between the status of the Catholic church in America and in Russia. But that status in this country can be maintained only by the hierarchy doing its legitimate work, and not attempting to violate the principles of American government. A Catholic weekly says:

"Baiting Catholics has now become the favorite amusement of Russian officialdom. There are upward of 12,000,000 Catholics under the Russian czar's rule. Of these, over 8,000,000 live in the provinces which once formed part of the Polish republic. There are two archbishoprics, of Warsaw and Mohilev, and twelve suffragan bishops. They are all under strict police supervision, and are severely punished for doing anything which may be interpreted into zeal for Rome. The present archbishop of Warsaw, Msgr. Popiel, has been in exile in Siberia for several years, besides undergoing other minor punishments for considering the interests of his church before the orders of the local police. The bishop of Mohiley, Msgr. Ruszkiewicz, has just been sentenced to a year's imprisonment in a fortress because he allowed the consistory to grant an annullment of a marriage which the police thought ought to have been decided by the department of foreign religions."

—The higher life is served in many ways. Tom Sharkey, the ex-pugilist, points out with evident satisfaction that the desire of the young American to become an athlete has resulted in his living a temperate life. He declares that there is a marked improvement in the life of the college lads in recent years, owing to the fact that the seasoned athlete has drummed into the ears of the rising generation the wholesome truth that alcohol and tobacco are fatal to the hopes of the athlete. And while Tom does not pose as a philanthropist he avers that he would gladly go out of the saloon business, in which he is at present engaged, as a compliment to this worthy ambition of young America. The craze for strength and skill has resulted in an education from unexpected sources in the art of keeping clean internally and externally. The poisons of tobacco and drink can undo the finest system of physical culture in the world. The strong arm may develop a fine ethical code after all.

—President Taft has sent a special message to Congress recommending the immediate appropriating of $1,350,000 for use of the war department in the joint maneuvers of the regular army and the national guard this month. The president also asked the appropriation of $167,000 for urgent necessities of the war department. Both items were in the general army appropriation bill, which the president vetoed. It is stated at the war department that the projected maneuvers will be so much larger than anything of the kind ever attempted before in this country that they may fairly claim to equal in extent the annual maneuvers of the great European military powers. The dates set for the joint coast defense exercises of the militia and regulars at various Eastern coast fortifications are: Maine, July 18-27; New Hampshire, September 6-13; Massachusetts, July 7-August 3; Rhode Island, July 8-27; New York, July 6 to August 17.

—Rev. Sylvanus Stall, of Philadelphia, well-known writer, has been honored by the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society, of the Lutheran Church, through the founding of the Sylvanus Stall Woman's College, of Guntur, India, which was dedicated in April. Dr. Stall, though in moderate circumstances, gave $13,000 to the college; the English government contributed $10,000, and Lutheran women's societies, $12,000. The college begins life free from debt.

The Rise of Woodrow Wilson

How the Democratic Candidate Attained Eminence

The chroniclers who go back into the Wilson ancestry find that one of his great-great uncles or other relative signed the Declaration of Independence. But in a more direct way they find that his grandfather was a Scotch-Irishman who came from County Down and settled in Philadelphia. He became a printer in the office of the Philadelphia Aurora, a leading and somewhat violent democratic organ. The paper was edited and published by the noted William Duane, who, though born in this country, had had troubles with the British government as editor of a paper in India.

Duane used the influence of his paper in the interests of Thomas Jefferson. And it was here that Democracy got into the Wilson blood. "Jimmie," as he was called, married an Irish girl, Anne Adams, a good name, who had come over on the ship with him. They had ten children, all of whom were reared in the strictest teachings of the Presbyterian church. When the war of 1812 began Duane was appointed a military officer and young Wilson became the editor and manager of the Aurora. Later he migrated westward with his family and established a home and a newspaper in Steubenville, Ohio, in the office of which he trained his seven sons as printers.

Grandfather a Famous Clergyman.

In 1832 he founded a paper in Pittsburg. After successful experience as publisher and as politician, he died in 1837. His youngest son, Joseph, born in Steubenville, became a Presbyterian clergyman. In 1849 he married Miss Janet Woodrow, the ceremony being performed by the bride's father, Rev. Dr. Thomas Woodrow, a famous Presbyterian clergyman of his day. Dr. Woodrow was a descendant of an ancient Scotch family. He had been a noted preacher in England and Scotland before coming to this country.

Thus on both sides of the house Governor Wilson is a son of ministerial families. He was born December 28, 1856, the year in which James Buchanan was elected president, and he was christened Thomas Woodrow Wilson. When two years of age his father was called to a large Presbyterian church at Augusta, Ga. Three years later the Civil War broke out, and the father sympathized with the Confederacy from the top of his head to the end of his toes. For many years he was stated clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the South. In 1870 Dr. Wilson resigned his pulpit to accept appointment as professor in the Southern Presbyterian Theological seminary in Columbia, S. C., and the family moved to that city. About that time young Wilson shed the name Thomas, or "Tommy," and was known as Woodrow Wilson. This probably was a good move, as it had a tendency to take him out of the Tom, Dick and Harry class. Would "Tom" Wilson appeal to the great American public?

Off to College.

When seventeen the boy was sent to Davidson College, in the famous Mecklenburg county, N. C. Ill health shortened his stay, and two years later, in 1875, he entered Princeton. Here he at once attracted attention. "All testimony," says his biographer, "goes to indicate that Wilson immediately took his place as a leader in his class. He had the manners of a young aristocrat. His speech was cultured. He soon won the reputation of wide reading and sound judgment. His purpose at Princeton," continues the author, "was henceforth the clear and single one of preparing himself for public life. His study was bent on government, the history of various attempts at it, and the theory of it, and the lives of political leaders. To this he added assiduous practice in writing and extemporaneous speaking, the seeking for skill in expression and readiness in debate."

Studies Law.

Soon after graduation from Princeton, in 1879, Mr. Wilson entered the law college of the University of Virginia. Before that he had done some magazine writing. This sort of work he continued while pursuing his law studies. And while in the law college he ranked high as a debater and orator. After finishing his law course, he went to Atlanta to practice in 1882. He remained but a short time, however, entering Johns Hopkins University for a post-graduate course the following year.

In 1885 he married Miss Ellen Louise Axson, the daughter of a minister. That year he published his first book, "Congressional Government." The book was the first attempt that anyone had made to describe the actual workings of our system in practice, as developed from the theory of the constitution, and it remains, after seventeen years, the standard authority on the subject and was the acknowledged basis of Mr. Bryce's chapters on committee government.

His Books.

His next book, "The State" (1889), was a feat of scholarship, and by the breadth of its subject and the necessity for condensation allowed little opportunity for the graces of style—except for that supreme grace of clearness.

In the writing of history he first showed his skill in "Division and Reunion," a sketch of the period from 1829 to 1889, and a few years later he produced a brilliant popular biography of "George Washington" (1897.)

These books have led up to his "Colonies and Nations," a "History of the People of the United States," an elaborate work, in four volumes, which he has just completed, and which will be published this fall.

Becomes a Professor.

Abandoning all idea of returning to the practice of law, Mr. Wilson became a professor in Bryn Mawr College, an institution then just beginning to attract attention. During his third year there, Prof. Wilson was offered and accepted a position as lecturer in Johns Hopkins, an engagement which required his presence in the university twice a week.

Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., extended an offer of the chair of history and political economy. The offer was accepted. In 1890, the chair of jurisprudence and politics in Princeton became vacant, and was offered to Professor Wilson. So in that year he returned as teacher to his alma mater.

"The new professor," writes his biographer, "stepped at once into the front rank, as indeed became a Princeton graduate, a member of one of the most famous classes the old college had graduated, a man thoroughly imbued with the best traditions of the place."

Princeton students have a custom of voting annually on the "most popular personage" connected with the university. For many years, Mr. Wilson received a majority of the votes cast for the most popular professor.

President of Princeton.

It was in 1902 that Woodrow Wilson was made president of Princeton, succeeding the distinguished Francis L. Patton. He occupied the position until elected governor of New Jersey in 1910.

President Wilson was the first man not a clergyman ever chosen president of Princeton. He introduced important innovations, especially along the line of a larger democracy.

Becomes Governor.

While president of Princeton, Mr. Wilson's name was frequently mentioned in connection with the democratic nomination for the presidency. But it was not taken very seriously. But in 1910 the Democrats of New Jersey were in desperate need of a man who could wrest the state from the republicans, and the bosses, of whom ex-Senator James Smith, Jr., was chief, and decided to nominate Woodrow Wilson to achieve their purposes. When the wresting had been done, they expected him to subside, and they would do the rest. But here was where they made a mistake in their man. He not only wrested the state from the republicans by nearly 50,000 majority, but also delivered his party from the bosses—a result which sorely troubled James Smith, Jr.

Defeats Smith.

It is a matter of history how Smith came out as a candidate for the United States Senate after the democrats of New Jersey at their direct primaries election had declared in favor of James E. Martine, New Jersey's "farmer orator."

It is also a matter of history that Governor Wilson in public speeches and by every appeal that he could make prevented the election of Boss Smith and brought about the election of Senator Martine, whose integrity was beyond question, though in ability and political experience he was not nearly the match of his opponent.

The fight of Governor Wilson in the senatorial contest was not for Martine, nor against Smith. It was waged in order that by no fault of his should the people's verdict at the primary polls go by default. Some friends of former Senator Smith have accused Governor Wilson of ingratitude in standing in the way of a man who espoused his cause so warmly in the democratic state convention. Some have gone even further and declared that Governor Wilson deliberately broke a hard and fast ante-convention pact in taking up the cudgels against Smith.

Party Pledges.

The governor, on the other hand, has denied that any such pact existed, and declared that, to the contrary, there was a definite understanding that James Smith, Jr., should not become a candidate for United States Senator before he consented to accept the gubernatorial nomination with the Smith sanction attached.

Governor Wilson was elected on a progressive platform. In his annual message sent to the legislature soon after he had taken office, he urged upon the law-makers the faithful performance of every platform pledge. The House was democratic, the Senate republican.

Party lines vanished before the onslaught he made on the corruption of the old days and the boss control that had been exercised over former legislatures.

Among the measures passed was the Geran election law. This provides for a very advanced system of direct nominations.

Struggle with Boss Nugent.

The bosses fought this measure tooth and nail. It was while this bill was pending before the legislature that Governor Wilson learned that James R. Nugent, nephew of ex-Senator Smith, and the latter's understudy as head of the democratic state organization, was lobbying against it on the floor of the house. Governor Wilson heard that Nugent was on hand and sent for him.

When the democratic state chairman appeared in the governor's office, Mr. Wilson told him that he must keep his hands out of legislative affairs as long as he was governor. Nugent was amazed at such talk from a mere governor to a political boss. He came back with an accusation that Governor Wilson was using patronage to put his legislative program through.

Governor Wilson made no reply. He just rose out of his chair and pointed to the door.

The Great Confession

By G. Campbell Morgan

"And Simon Peter answered and said, 'Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.' And Jesus answered and said unto him, 'Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-Jonah: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father, which is in heaven.'" Matt. 16:16, 17.

These words were spoken at a time of the experience of Peter. Indeed, they constitute the pivotal words of that particular crisis. The confession of Peter completed the first stage of his work, and prepared for the second and final one. When, in the consciousness of one man, the victory of the kingdom propaganda was won, the King set his face toward the passion whereby all men might pass into the kingdom.

Our present theme is that of the confession of Peter, and there are four matters to which I propose to ask your attention: First, the man who made the confession, Simon Peter; secondly, the confession he made, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God"; thirdly, how Peter arrived at that conclusion, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven"; and finally, what that confession meant to him subsequently.

Peter.

First, the confessor. There is no man in these New Testament stories more fascinating than Peter. Every story about him interests us; and the more the portraiture of him is considered in its entirety, the more powerfully does it appeal.

The reason for this persistent fascination is to be found in his essential human greatness, and in his constant failure to realize that greatness. The appeal is twofold. We cannot read these stories of his life without feeling how near akin we are to him in certain essential elemental qualities. We cannot read the story of his life without feeling how near akin we are to him in his blunders and failures. Other of these New Testament men were in certain senses greater than Peter; Paul in massiveness of intellect, John in mystic intelligence, James in practical ethical convictions; but in this man we find all the elemental forces. In mental power he was a great man; quick of thought, eager of inquiry, swift of conclusion. In emotional power, he was equally great; a man of hot affection, burning anger, deep impression. In volitional power, he was capable of making courageous ventures, heroic choices, dangerous experiments.

Kinship of Failure.

We are brought into even closer kinship with him as we observe his failure. He was a man of mental power, yet characterized by strange blindness; to use a phrase of his own, "seeing only the things that are near," and unable to apprehend them in their true spiritual relationships; his was a mind quick, eager, swift; and yet never arriving at any final conclusion in his own unaided strength. He was a man of fine emotional power; yet contradicting the impulses of his love, and wounding his lover. He was a man of remarkable volitional capacity; capable of courageous venture, heroic choice, dangerous experiments, and yet suddenly becoming craven in his fear, and faltering by the way.

This is the man who at Caesarea Philippi uttered the confession which brought our Lord to the culmination of the first stage of his mission. He was more than a Hebrew: he was a human.

The Confession.

We now turn to the central matter, the confession which Peter made, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." There are very spacious values in these words. I believe that Simon said far more than he understood; in the thing he said there were values far beyond his comprehension, and the context proves it.

First, "Thou art the Messiah"; secondly, "Thou art . . . the Son of the living God." The first was a confession on the part of Peter, of what he understood concerning the office of Jesus; the second was a confession on the part of Peter as to what he understood concerning the nature of Jesus.

This confession reveals three conceptions in the mind of Peter: First, the Messiah; secondly, the Son; finally, "the living God." We shall appreciate the value of the confession a little more perfectly if we take these three conceptions in the other order; for in the confession, Peter moved backwards, from that final fact of which he was then convinced; through that which lay behind it, giving it light and power and glory; to the fundamental truth of his religion. Let us begin where he ended. First, "The living God"; secondly, "The Son of the living God"; finally, "The Messiah." Thus the whole confession becomes far more glorious and wonderful.

Peter expressed in one brief phrase—which seems to be incidental, which passed his lips at the close of a confession—the central fact and truth of Hebraism, "the living God." That was the fundamental fact in the faith of Abraham, and in the law of Moses. The belief in one God was the very rock foundation of the national life. That this God was living, was the message of all the prophets. With fine scorn, one of them had said of the idols which men worshiped, "There is no breath in them!" The God of Israel was "the living God," not a mere abstraction; not a mere force permeating the universe, having no personal consciousness, and therefore of no help to man in his personal life; but God, personal, alive, active; the living God.

Christ Divine.

We now come to the central matter in the words, "the Son of the living God." Without staying to refer to the general teaching of the gospel stories and the Epistles in detail, let me ask you to observe that the whole of the New Testament teaching concerning Jesus is that he was in lonely, unique, specific sense the Son of God; not a son, but the Son; not one among a company of sons, but alone, different, separate from all others in the mystic relationship which he bore to God. This confession of Peter harmonizes with the whole teaching and attitude of Jesus toward this subject. He never spoke of himself as on a level with other men in this respect, but maintained an attitude of separation whenever he approached the subject of his relationship to his Father. Even after resurrection, he did not say our God and Father; but my God, and your God; my Father and your Father. He did not identify himself with men in his relationship to God.

His Prayers.

We have no account, for example, in any of the gospels that he prayed with his disciples. He prayed in their presence, but when he prayed, he prayed on a different level. You will remember one remarkable word that seems contradictory: "As he was praying alone, the disciples were with Him." Have you ever observed that carefully? He was praying alone, away from them, while yet they were present. He never used the same words to describe his own praying as he used to describe the praying of his disciples. When he told men to pray, the word he used indicated an attitude which he never used of his own praying. When he spoke of his own praying, he spoke of inquiring of a father. When his mother came to him and said, "Thy father and I sought thee sorrowing," using the word that had been current in Nazareth to describe his relationship to Joseph, he replied, "Wist ye not that I must be in my Father's house?" In the first recorded words that fell from his lips, he assumed separate and lonely relationship to God.

John says, "In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God. . . . And the word became flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, glory as of the only begotten from the Father), full of grace and truth." That is the same thought of identity with the Father, revelation of the Father, co-operation with the Father. Thus in loneliness and separation, unique, special, specific, never repeated and never to be repeated, Jesus was "The Son of the living God."

The Messiah.

So we come to the last conception, which was first in order of statement in the confession of Peter. This one was the Messiah, the administrator in human history of the kingdom of God; the one who came for the fulfilment of all aspiration, hope, confidence; and consequently the one whose authority over the affairs of men is ultimate and final.

There were limits to the meaning of this confession in the case of Peter. Jesus was Messiah, King, head of the kingdom; but Peter had no true conception yet of the nature of the kingdom. Jesus was the son of God, and therefore was administrator of the kingdom of God; but Peter did not comprehend the method by which the king would enter into his kingdom. Such was the scope, and such were the limits of the confession. Here was a man, human as we are, with all our elemental forces manifest in him, with all our failures also; looking into the face of Jesus of Nazareth and saying, "Thou art the Messiah, the Son of the living God."

How He Reaches His Conclusion

How did he arrive at the conclusion? Here we are not left to speculation; we have the clear statement of our Lord. Jesus looked back into the eyes of Peter and said, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-Jonah; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." In that word of Jesus we have a threefold revelation concerning the method by which Peter had arrived at that conclusion: First, a negative word, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee." Secondly, a positive word, "My

(Continued on page 11.)

THE HIGH CALLING

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS."

Copyright 1911, George H. Doran Co.

CHAPTER X (Continued.)

"Adolph Bauer, ex-attachee of the Consular service, sailed yesterday on the Kaiser Wilhelm for Bremen. Bauer will be remembered as the brilliant but shady member of the Washington coterie of unsavory reputation in connection with the Jaynes-Buford scandal. Before sailing, Bauer cashed a check for $5,000 on Halstead, Burns & Co., payment it is said on a patent right owned by himself and son for a new invention in the incubator line. The son is a student at Burrton Electrical School. There is no charge of crookedness at the bank. The check had the regular endorsement of Halstead. But parties who are interested in Bauer's movements socially, have taken steps to track him to Europe. Interesting developments are promised by those who know Bauer's antecedents and especially his treatment of his wife from whom he is separated pending a divorce."

Walter was tremendously downcast by this bit of news.

"Poor Bauer! Poor old man!" he said over and over. "What an unmitigated rascal that father of his must be to steal that money. Bauer will never get a cent. And I advised him to take up with his precious father's offer! But how could I foresee a thing as black as this? Oh, I don't know what I ought to do! How can I tell him! I can't do it! But he will find it out in a day or two! It can't be kept. Blame it! Why are there such things in the old world! And Bauer has been so eager to get money lately. Oh, I can't tell him! I just can't."

Walter paced his room in great agitation. He dreaded to see Bauer. How could he break this to him? He dreaded to see his friend come out of the room. And he waited. But after an hour, Bauer had made no move and Walter, recalling his strength of character and mindful that the news would have to come to him some time, finally shook himself together, went out, crossed the hall and knocked on Bauer's door.

The knock was a faint one and there was no reply. He knocked again a little louder, and getting no answer, he did what he often did, opened and went in.

Bauer was standing over by his washbowl, leaning over and as he raised his head and turned around, Walter was startled at the look that greeted him.

"What!" He took a stride over to his friend and put one hand on his shoulder. In the other hand he held the New York paper.

Bauer smiled back at him.

"I was going to tell you. It's too much bother to hide it. But this hemorrhage is worse than the others. I've been to see the doctor and he says I'll come out all right if I can get into the painted desert and stay there a year or two."

Walter stared at Bauer without a word.

The paper slipped out of his fingers, and he was hardly conscious of the fact that Bauer had stepped on it as he walked over to his couch to lie down there.

"You see," he said, lying on his back, looking up at Walter and speaking in his usual slow fashion, "I've only had the flow three times. First time I never minded it. Next one took me three weeks ago while you were gone to the Harrisburg Exhibition. The doctor says I will come out all right if I go out there. My money will come in a day or two and I'll start for Canon Diablo. I ought to have a pretty good time on $4,500. Living is cheap in the painted desert. And anyway, 'Wir mussen alle einmal sterben?' 'We must all die sometime,' you know."

Walter's eyes traveled from Bauer's face to the newspaper on the floor and back again. And Bauer mistaking his look said, "Don't take it so hard. It might be worse. Money salves the wound, you know. Perhaps you can go out with me for a few weeks. Can you? Of course I'll foot all the bills if you'll go." And he smiled at Walter as he spoke.

CHAPTER XI.

Walter was trembling with sympathy and the sudden shock from the unexpected revelation of Bauer's physical condition. He was so overwhelmed with this that the loss of the money seemed comparatively trivial.

"Why did you not tell me the condition you were in? I ought to have known about it. It does not seem possible."

"It's not as serious as it seems. You remember Gardner, class of 1909? He's out in New Mexico with a U. S. surveying party and he's all right. A year or two out there will put me right."

Walter looked at him doubtfully.

"What a chump I must have been all this winter not to see. I wouldn't have believed it if I read it in a book."

Bauer smiled again.

"You couldn't do anything if you had known. Nobody could. The change of climate will fix me all right. Lucky that money is coming in just now. Lots of fellows don't have my good luck."

"Good luck?"

"Yes. I might be sick here without a cent, and be dependent like Franklin out at the day camp. I felt awfully sorry for him at the time, didn't you?"

"Yes, tell me! but no! it hurts you to talk?"

Bauer nodded. "I don't have any pain today. Just weakness. It's only one lung, the doc says. It might be my knee joints or my mucous or a dozen other places worse than lungs. If you're going to have tuberculosis have it when it will raise the most sympathy. If I only had a heart-rending cough to go with the hemorrhages I could get some church or tuberculosis society to send me out to Arizona free of charge."

Walter was so upset by the whole thing and so disturbed by the inevitable revelation that was bound to come that he sat miserably silent, while Bauer rambled on in a disconnected manner to all outward appearances quite unterrified by his trouble, or at any rate making a brave and successful attempt at deceiving his friend. But at last he unexpectedly gave Walter an opportunity to lead up to the article in the paper.

"Seems a little queer I don't hear from him. I understood Halstead and Burns were going to pay at once. Would you mind going down after the three o'clock mail? I feel a little uneasy about it. Never had so much money before. Probably never will again."

"Did you have any reason to distrust your father?" asked Walter.

"No, I told you his faults were of another sort."

"What would you do if he should try to cheat you out of the money?"

"How could he do that?"

"Didn't you give him power of attorney to act for you?"

"Yes."

"Well, what would hinder his having the check from Halstead drawn in his name instead of yours?"

"Nothing, only—"

"Only what?"

"Why, just sheer humanity."

Bauer was sitting up on the couch, his hands doubled up and his eyes fixed on Walter.

"What is it?" he said at last quietly enough. "Are you keeping something from me? I would rather have it from you than from anyone else."

"Poor old man!" Walter could not hold back a groan as his eye traveled to the paper on the floor.

Bauer saw his glance. "What is it? Read it for me."

Walter put his hands over his face and muttered:

"Oh, I can't, Felix, it's too cruel."

"Nothing's too cruel if you're used to it." He started to get up from the couch, but Walter prevented him.

"Lie down there. I'll read it to you if I must, simply because someone will have to do it sometime. But I would rather be hanged than do it."

He hardly ventured to look at Bauer when he had finished the newspaper account. When he did look at him, he saw him sitting up on the couch, his hands clasped over his knees, a slight increase of color on his face but no mark of any unusual anger or feeling.

"How could he do it! How could he!" Bauer whispered to himself, looking off into the distance as if Walter were not present. His whole attitude affected Walter more deeply than if he had given way to a violent passion.

"It's an outrage! There ought to be some way to get the money. You could have him arrested when he——"

"Arrest my father? On the charge of being a thief? Would you do that to your——"

Walter choked. "Arrest my father? I should think not. But—"

"He may be all you think, but I will never lift a finger against him. Let God punish him, as he has already."

"And meanwhile, if Halstead & Co. are informed how matters are, they might—"

"It isn't likely. They have paid the money once. Certainly they won't do it again. I never heard of any such philanthropists doing business in Washington."

" But how will you be able to go out to Arizona?" Walter blurted before he thought, and then wanted to bite his tongue off as Bauer turned his face towards him, a faint smile lighting it.

"I won't go. 'Wir mussen alle einmal sterben.' "

"But you'll have to go. We'll have to find a way."

"Where there's a will there's a way? Also even more necessary, the money. Now I've will enough. But it won't pay for a ticket nor buy the necessary canned goods to go with the sand of the desert when I get there. I'll set my incubators here at Burrton and raise chickens enough to bury me decently. 'Wir mussen alle einmal sterben.' "

"Yes, but we don't have to die before our time. There must be some way out."

"I don't know of any," said Bauer gravely but not with any bitternesss. "But don't let it worry you. I don't want to have you worried with it."

Nevertheless Walter did worry over it tremendously. He had never known anything in all his experience that affected him so profoundly. And in his next letter home, without hinting to Bauer of his intention, he sounded his father as to ways and means for helping Bauer at this crisis in his life.

"Isn't there some one in Milton who would be interested enough in Bauer to help send him out to Arizona? The doctor says it's his only chance. And he's pretty hard hit. Think of losing $4,500 at one fell swoop, and by his own father too. And I advised the business relation between them. Of course we had no idea that the matter would turn out as it has but that doesn't change the fact. As near as I can figure, it will cost at least three hundred dollars to get Bauer out to Arizona, pay for his board and room and keep him there a year.

He isn't a member of any church and Dr. Howard of the Congregational Church here in Burrton said a few Sundays ago that his people must make a special effort to raise the money to care for several needed cases of their own, so I don't feel like going to him with Bauer's story right now. And besides, I don't believe Bauer would take church help. He's awfully proud and while he doesn't say much about his trouble and pretends to take it easy, I can see he is pretty hard hit. And who wouldn't be, to lose $4,500 at one clip and at the same time realize that he's got consumption. I tell you it strikes me as pretty hard lines for poor Bauer. The worst of it is this mess about his father. That seems awful. And there isn't anyone more affectionate and dependent than Bauer. That's the reason he took up with me, because he had to have someone. He deosn't know I'm writing this sort of a letter about him, if he did he'd object, but I feel as if something ought to be done. Perhaps you and mother can think out some plan to help him. If I could see some way to cut down my expenses here I would do it and put in my little to help. But I'm living as close to the line as I can. The school is expensive and I don't know what I can do until I get out and begin to make instead of mar dollars."

Paul took this letter to Esther. And it happened that while he was reading it to her, Helen came in. Paul stopped reading and looked at Esther.

"It's all right. Let Helen hear it. I'm sure Walter meant it for a family letter."

They were all shocked at the news. And Helen seemed even more moved by the letter than her father and mother, though she made no remark of any kind until Esther began to look at her with some concern. Paul said, after a moment of sober thought:

"I believe Masters can do something for him out there at Tolchaco. There is the old Council Hogon out there in the cottonwoods past the 'dobe flats. Bauer could sleep there. It's about the same as outdoors. And he could do something perhaps at the trading post to help pay for his board. I'll write to Masters at once and see what he says. And—I have another idea that I think will do something. We can't let a fellow like Bauer go down without doing something and if he objects to being helped, why, we'll just box him up and ship him out there f. o. b."

After Paul had gone down to the office Mrs. Douglas and Helen continued the discussion over Walter's letter.

"What other idea does father have to help Mr. Bauer?" asked Helen.

"I don't know unless he is thinking of that precious book of his!" Mrs. Douglas laughed and Helen joined her.

It had come to be a good-natured joke in the Douglas household that Paul's book was such a great failure that publishers had it listed among the "six worst sellers" if anyone ever had the courage to print it. He had put in a tremendous amount of hard work on the volume which was a bold treatment in original form of the Race Question in America. The manuscript had been sent to eight different publishers and had been returned, in three instances with scathing comments.

Paul doggedly clung to his first estimate of the book. Each rejection by the last publisher only served to increase his faith in what he had written.

"I tell you, Esther, the publishers don't know a thing. Half the time their office readers can't spell. They don't know gold from mica schist. Half the books the publishers put out are dead failures. They don't know anything more about it than a native of Ponape knows about making an igloo."

Esther smiled.

"You are naturally a little prejudiced, don't you think? But I don't blame you. It's lucky for us though, that we don't depend on book sales for a living. Let's see, how much has the book cost you so far?"

"Well, in typewriting, and postage on returned manuscript it has cost me about one hundred and fifty dollars," said Paul good-naturedly. "But I'll send it to every publisher in America before I'll give up. I've written a good book and I know it. And I've made up my mind to one thing, Esther. When it comes to making terms I'll sell the manuscript outright for cash and give the money away to the most needy cause I can find."

"Better have the stipulation with the publishers stereotyped, father," said Helen, who was present when this conversation was held. "It will save you time and money."

"Very well, Miss," replied her father. "But don't you dare ask for any of this extra when my ship does come in. Not a cent of it does this ungrateful, unappreciative family get. It is my book and the 'child of my heart' and if it brings me anything I will spend it in riotous living on the other fellow."

Esther and Helen laughed and Paul went down to the office and courageously expressed the manuscript to one of the eastern publishers who had not yet seen it.

All this had occurred several months before Walter's letter about Bauer and when Paul went down to the office after getting the news, his heart and mind were burdened with plans for Bauer's relief. He began to open his mail and a letter from the eastern publisher specially interested him. After reading it, he looked at the check accompanying the letter and chuckled in anticipation of meeting Esther and Helen at lunch when he came home.

The mother and daughter were continuing their talk about Walter's letter.

"Can Mr. Bauer get well out there? Walter did not say very clearly," Helen asked.

"Many cases like this do recover," said Esther. "But he ought to go at once. If he is having severe hemorrhages that will be his only hope."

Helen was silent for some moments.

"How much did Walter say it would cost to keep him out there a year?"

"He said three hundred dollars."

"It seems like a very small sum, doesn't it?"

"It certainly does. But you remember in some of Mr. Masters' letters to your father about the mission expenses at Tolchaco how ridiculous the amounts seemed to us.

"You remember one year the entire mission force including seven persons lived on less than fifteen dollars a month for each? I suppose Walter had something like that in mind. And you remember how often in his letters Walter has spoken of Bauer's horror of the luxurious habits of one of the students at Burrton as if it were a great wrong?"

(To be continued.)

The Great Confession

(Continued from page 9.)

Father which is in heaven"—hath revealed it unto thee. Thirdly, a mediatorial word, a word indicating the method by which God had done it—the word revealed.

First, the negative statement, "flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee." Flesh and blood was a common phrase in Hebrew speech, which simply meant in this connection that the confession was not the result of human discovery, either his own or that of any other man. In the twentieth verse, I read: "Then charged he the disciples that they should tell no man that he was the Christ." Why? Because flesh and blood cannot reveal it; no disciple can carry conviction to another man. Christian workers cannot convince men that Jesus is the son of God. Our business is to introduce men to Christ, that through himself they may come to know him by divine revelation.

Secret of All Heresy.

The attempt of "Flesh and blood" to reveal him is the secret of all heresy concerning him. Therefore he said to his disciples: You are not called to prove to men who I am. They have their opinions; you know me by divine revelation and your business is to take me to men, and to bring men to me; let me be the intermediate one between my Father and men; let the Father show them who I am, that I may show them who the Father is. That is the meaning of the charge to the disciples.

The positive word, "My Father which is in heaven," is a clear declaration that the conviction which resulted in the confession was the result of divine revelation.

What did Simon do when he met Jesus? He listened to him, he followed him, and came at last to conviction and confession; and beyond the confession, he passed through processes of discipline and of testing, of growth and development; until at last, in true communion with his Lord, he died for him—as he had said he could in the days of feebleness—and glorified his Lord in that dying. So must we begin, if we ourselves at last would make the great confession.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison.

Mrs. Harrison will be glad to receive communications from any of her readers offering suggestions concerning woman's welfare, criticisms of articles or inquiries concerning any matters relevant to her department. She should be addressed directly at 530 Elm Tree Lane, Lexington, Ky.

A GREAT AND DIGNIFIED MEETING

It is sometimes urged that women are not fit to exercise the right of suffrage, because they are too liable to be moved by emotion, rather than by calm and deliberate judgment.

As we recall the calmness and deliberation with which the recent Republican convention in Chicago was conducted, and the entire absence of noise and excitement throughout the meeting, we despair of ever attaining to such an ideal. What could Mr. Dooley have meant by speaking of the convention in such terms as these?

"Th' deligates, well armed with pieces iv lead pipe, met under the vast dome in the Coliseum, to solemnly debate the gr-reat issues before thim. Iverything is in readiness f'r the grave deliberations. Th' ambylances ar-re standin' at the dure, the polis have been equipped with the usual riot bats, and the milishy ar-re sleepin' on their arrms."

The Eleventh Biennial of the General Federation of Woman's Clubs is now in session at San Francisco. The Chronicle, the leading daily of the city says editorially of it: "Particular attention is given toward keeping the immense hall as quiet as possible, and the rap of the president's gavel is seldom necessary. Every word of the various reports and addresses is plainly heard by every delegate."

Possibly, in the course of time, women may learn to control their feelings sufficiently, even to hold quiet and dignified political conventions like those at Chicago and Baltimore!

A Notable Book.

Immediately before the San Francisco Biennial, the General Federation issued a history of the organization, written by Mrs. Mary I. Wood, manager of their Bureau of Information. The author stated that at the first biennial, in 1890 at Philadelphia, there were only sixty clubs in the federation, with not a single state federation—now, after twenty-two years, every state in the union was federated, and the membership, direct, indirect, and allied, had passed the million mark. Mrs. Wood tells of the hundreds of libraries established, the thousands of dollars spent in parks and playgrounds, the kindergartens promoted, the loan scholarships secured, the vacation and manual training schools opened up, and many other good works accomplished by this agency, but says that the woman's club movement is more than numbers, more than culture, more even than practical attainments. "The passion for civic righteousness, which has invaded thousands of homes, the spirit of sympathy and understanding between those who rest and those who toil, the union of forces which shall bring about a new heaven and a new earth, this new birth into a new world of enlarged opportunities for service—this is the glory of the General Federation of Women's Clubs."

The Eleventh Biennial, then, had the backward look, not only over the two intervening years since the Cincinnati Biennial, but over the twenty-two years since its beginning. San Francisco welcomed the three thousand delegates and visitors, among them some of the nation's most prominent women, with open arms. The meeting began with an orchestral concert in the great Sutter Street pavilion, which was transformed into a scene of almost fairy-like beauty with flags, and multi-colored lanterns, and lavish decorations of California's peerless flowers. This was but one of a series of musical events which were to lighten the serious business of the convention. Midway in the meeting a play day was arranged in a trip to the lovely Santa Clara Valley, and there were luncheons and teas and receptions without number.

Age No Consideration.

While the biennial was noticeable for its handsomeness and attractiveness, yet the marked thing about it was that the older women were in the majority, and were the leaders. One of the papers said, "The fact that struck one at the formal opening of many beautiful and impressive silvered coiffures in the auditorium, and that there was not a really young woman on the stage, where the leaders were grouped. Nor was there a woman among them who was not wearing her years with grace and dignity." Not that the federation is composed entirely of mature and elderly women; youth and beauty were there in abundance, in the finest of raiment; but they gracefully yielded the palm of leadership to those whom time and work had tested, as was fitting.

Many Distinguished Women Present.

Possibly first in the list should be placed the Baroness Bertha von Suttner of Austria, who devotes all her time and talents to the promotion of the world's peace. Her book, Ground Arms, is considered the strongest argument yet presented against war and bloodshed, and has been translated into a dozen languages; it was awarded the Nobel place prize of forty thousand dollars in cash. She has spoken before the convention more than once, and is in great demand for addresses in San Francisco and the surrounding cities. Though she pleads so passionately for the abolition of war, yet all her affiliations are military; her father was Imperial Field Marshall of Austria, and her grandmother was the Princess Christine Lichtenstein, a family famous in war and diplomacy.

Among the other noted women are: Mrs. Sarah Platt-Decker of Colorado, ex-president of the federation, and ardent suffragist; Miss Julia C. Lathrop, head of the new federal Children's Bureau: Miss Phoebe Hearst, philanthropist and civic worker; Mrs. Frederick Nathan, who, with her husband, motored part of the way across the continent and made over one hundred suffrage speeches on the journey; Mrs. May Riley Smith, president of Sorosis of New York City, and one of our most popular poets, and a host of others whose names cannot be crowded in our limited space.

Presidential Candidates.

The women who receive the most notice in the press are the two candidates for president, Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker of Texas, and Mrs. Philip N. Carpenter of New York. But while there is the keenest interest in this presidential election, it takes no prophetic insight to foretell that it will be conducted with dignity and decorum—even if women are the emotional sex!

Address of the President.

The address of the president, Mrs. Philip N. Moore, of St. Louis (who is ineligible for re-election), showed that the office of chief executive of the General Federation is no sinecure. She believes it is the duty of a national leader to visit her constituency, and said,

"During my four years of office, I have visited eighty principal cities, and forty-one states on the business of the Federation, and have traveled more than seventy thousand miles. During those years, nearly all my mental and physical energies have been devoted to the work of our organization, and every state in the union is now joined in close bonds with the federation."

Among the accomplishments listed, Mrs. Moore said that the country at large had the club women to thank for the pure food bill, the saving of Niagara from the greed of the power companies, the passage of the Week's bill for the preservation of forest lands, and much legislation looking to the welfare of women and children.

This is writen while the biennial is in full swing; many of the departments have not yet made their reports so that will be another story, as Kipling says. I. W. H.

MRS. WOODROW WILSON

Wife of the Democratic Candidate.

Woodrow Wilson has a wife and three daughters, the youngest of whom—Eleanor—takes a most beautiful photograph. In regard to Mr. Wilson's selection of a wife, one of his biographers says: "That the governor showed as excellent judgment in this important matter as he has made apparent in every step of his career, is proved by the ideal domestic happiness which has been the good fortune of the Wilson family.

"Mrs. Wilson is an invaluable complement to her distinguished husband, an ideal wife and mother and a landscape artist whose paintings in oil have been honored with approval by the best painters and art critics in America."

A Southerner.

Mrs. Wilson was Miss Ellen Louise Axson when she was married to Mr. Wilson. She was born at Savannah, Ga. She traces her ancestry back to the cavaliers. A visitor to her home recently described her as a little above the average height, slender, almost girlish.

Besides her taste for literature and art, Mrs. Wilson is devoted to gardening. "Not making things grow," as she explained, "but in laying out and planning gardens." While she was mistress of "Prospect," the official residence of the president of Princeton University, the gardens attached to it were made over and improved under her direction until they became a mass of flowery glory that attracted visitors from far and near. One of her regrets in leaving "Prospect" was that she had no longer a guiding hand in the care of its gardens.

Of her first meeting with Mr. Wilson, then a student of Johns Hopkins, Mrs. Wilson says little. She was married to the young lawyer—he had already practiced one year—at the old house in which she was born.

Mrs. Wilson says in bringing up her girls she has followed her own theories.

Up to the time they were 12 years old they were educated entirely at home. "I am a strong believer in the family influence, and so I took personal charge of their early education. Even when they were only 5 and 6 I used to read to them from Odyssey and translations of the older classics. I felt that if they were to acquire a proper appreciation of literature they could not begin too early.

"I was always a great reader and would pass whole days in my father's and grandfather's libraries. Until comparatively recently I never read anything of a later period than Dickens. But I must confess that I do like detective stories."

The Daughters.

The three daughters are Margaret, Jessie Woodrow and Eleanor Randolph. Margaret, the eldest, has a rich soprano voice, which is being cultivated. Mrs. Wilson declares Margaret inherited her voice from her father.

Jessie Woodrow Wilson, the second girl, is named for her Scotch grandmother and her father. She is an artist of ability, but her whole ambition lies in sociological work.

"I must confess," Mrs. Wilson said, "that it came as a shock to me when Jessie took up this work. For, you see, it is all so different to the way of life of the girls of the South and my youth. But I appreciate the change in the views of young women that has taken place and I am not so old-fashioned as to believe that girls must be bound by tradition."

Jessie is, perhaps, the most brilliant of three daughters, though all are clever. She was graduated from the Woman's College in Baltimore, and on her graduation day Dr. Wilson delivered the baccalaureate.

The third daughter, Eleanor Randolph, is studying at the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia. If Margaret inherited her voice from her father, Eleanor inherited her artistic ability from her mother, for Mrs. Wilson paints landscapes in oil that have been honored with approval by many of the best painters and art critics in America. Every year the Wilsons form a portion of the art colony at Lyme, on the Connecticut River.

"It is the most delightful retreat, this art colony at Lyme," Mrs. Wilson says with enthusiasm. "It is apart from the highways, and the members of it form one happy family. At first, a few years ago, we all boarded at a splendid old mansion; then different members bought up old farmhouses and remodeled them, or erected their own cottages, so that now most of them own their own places. Every year the colony holds an exhibition and painters and critics from all over New England, from New York, Philadelphia, Boston and other centers, come to see it."

—Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin is at her summer home, "Quillcote," in Hollis, Me., where her stay will be shorter than is her custom, as she will sail on the 7th of August for Europe. She is to be present at the rehearsals in London of her dramatized story, "Rebecca, of Sunnybrook Farm."

—By the will of the late A. W. Wright, one of the richest men in Michigan at the time of his death, and the founder of Alma, the bulk of the estate was bequeathed to his daughter, Mrs. J. H. Lancashire, of Detroit. Though small bequests were made to individual members of the family, none outside of the immediate family received anything from the estate.

—Mrs. Frances Squire Potter, a Chicago club-woman, delivered the Fourth of July address at Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, being the first woman upon whom this distinction was ever conferred.

Church Life

A. R. Moore has resigned as pastor of First Church, Birmingham, Ala.

Mark Collis of Lexington, Ky., is holding a meeting for O. P. Spiegel, at Montgomery, Ala.

F. N. Calvin, for nearly two years pastor of the Central Church, Warren, O. has resigned.

Ten thousand dollars was raised last week to enlarge and remodel the Sunday-school portion of the building of Central Church, Wichita, Kan. W. S. Priest is pastor.

Canton, O., Sunday-school lead by P. H. Welshimer has challenged the Sunday-school union of Cleveland to an attendance contest. There are eleven schools in the Cleveland union. The challenge has been accepted.

The Crescent Hill Church, Louisville, Ky., has begun work on its new Sunday-school building. They expect to have a $6,500 structure with six class rooms, auditorium, and basement that may be fitted up for class rooms.

Linwood Boulevard Church, Kansas City, has a permanent pulpit erected on the church lawn from which the pastor, Burris A. Jenkins, preaches on summer Sunday evenings. Large congregations gather at these out-door meetings.

The church in Azusa, Cal., will soon complete a new $4,000 bungalow church building. It will have a seating capacity of 360. There will be seven rooms besides the auditorium. They expect to dedicate the new church September 1.

S. Grundy Fisher, pastor at Trenton, Mo., has accepted a call to the pulpit of Portland Avenue Church, Minneapolis. Perry J. Rice, a former pastor at Portland Avenue, now of El Paso, Texas, preached in his old pulpit on a recent Sunday.

One thousand were present at a Sunday-school rally of the Christian Church at Sailor Springs, on June 30. This is an unusual record for a school in a town of 500 population and one of which Pastor S. E. Fugate and his people may be proud.

Central Church, Spokane, J. E. Davis, pastor, marked Independence week with a patriotic musical service, on Sunday evening. A choir of eighty voices, conducted by Mr. Russell Morrison, drew a great house. The other Disciple congregations of the city were dismissed to participate in this service.

Sixty-three Indiana churches sent offerings for state and home missions in June. Since the first of October 213 churches have contributed. If this rate of increase keeps up for the remaining three months the report of any previous year will be surpassed. Few of the strongest churches have contributed.

The Church Extension Society seems to be in sight of its million dollar goal. Collections for the first nine months of the fiscal year amount to $69,561.89, which lifts to the fund to about $960,000. This represents a gain in collections of $28,517.36 over the corresponding period last year. John H. Booth is visiting all the western conventions.

Southern California churches will hold their annual convention at Long Beach, July 24, August 4. Dr. E. L. Powell, of First Church, Louisville, Ky., is the chief speaker on the program. Mr. C. C. Chapman is president of the convention. Other speakers are Mrs. M. E. Harlan, of Indianapolis; Abram E. Corey, of China; Dr. D. R. Dungan and Secretaries Grant K. Lewis and John H. Booth.

The church at Ludlow, Ky., has recently received seventy-eight additions to its membership resulting from a union evangelistic meeting and a prior evangelistic effort by the local church, the latter being conducted by Edgar Riley. Pastor P. H. Duncan speaks appreciatively of C. Frederick Reed, of Greencastle, Ind., the evangelist who led in the union meeting.

This is the season when many congregations in local communities are uniting as one for evening worship. The pulpit of the Congregational church across the street from Union Avenue Christian Church, St. Louis, is being filled by B. A. Abbott during July. During August the Congregational pastor will preach in Union Avenue pulpit. Each pastor takes his congregation with him.

W. H. Book, pastor of Tabernacle Church, Columbus, Ind., has been granted a two months' vacation by his people and an increase of salary for next year. Mr. Book recently published a pamplet on "Immortality," which will bring comfort to all who read it. He is ably assisted in his pastoral ministry by A. E. Buss, who has charge of the music of Tabernacle Church.

Fredonia (Kans.) congregation, whose house of worship was destroyed by fire in June, 1911, recently dedicated a new structure. Prof. Wallace C. Payne of the University Bible Chair, at Lawrence, was in charge of the services. He describes the pastor, G. W. Longman, as a "well-balanced man; a good preacher; a competent teacher; a faithful pastor; a consecrated servant of Christ." Mr. Longman is on his third year with this church.

The Missionary Training School at Indianapolis, Ind., closed its years' work in June. Seven of the students will go out under appointments this coming autumn. Mr. and Mrs. Reavis will go to the Argentint Republic; Miss Cowdrey, Miss Furman and Dr. Gail Tallman to India; Prof. Emory W. Ross, to Liberia, and Miss Bertha Magoon to Rhodesia, Southwest Africa, under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Principal Charles T. Paul spoke again at the Student Volunteer Conference, at Lake Geneva, the last of June.

The annual county meeting of the Christian churches at Tipton County, Ind., will be held the first Sunday in August at Carr's Grove, near Hobbs Station on the Union Traction Line. All cars for the day will stop at the grove. Dr. R. H. Crossfield, president of Transylvania University, Lexington, Ky., will be the preacher for the day. This county meeting includes within its fellowship the congregations at Windfall, the Chapel, Normanda, Independence, New Lancaster, East Union, Hobbs, Curtisville, Nevada, Kempton and Tipton.

Lamar College is the newest member of the educational family of the Disciples. It came into being last month. Its home is to be on a piece of ground of 304 acres near Clarkston, Ga., ten miles from the center of Atlanta. Josephus Hopwood, formerly president of Virginia Christian College, is the chief promoter of the new institution. The land cost $40,000. Trustees have been apponted and plans are going forward for the sale of building lots. Northern Disciples are enthusiastic over the prospect of a school near Atlanta. L. O. Bricker, pastor of First Church, Atlanta, is a member of the board which includes also a number of resourceful laymen. The name of the new school memorializes the sainted J. S. Lamar, a great teacher, preacher, and author, whose chief pastoral ministry was wrought in Atlanta. Justice Lamar of the United States Suprene Court is his son.

Des Moines Disciples are asking the question, "Do we want the national convention for 1913?" A meeting will be be held shortly to answer it. The answer will be heard at Louisville next October.

The birth of a new baby in the parsonage of the Disciples church at East Orange, New Jersey, was made the red ink feature of a special edition of "The Good News" the pastor's parish paper. L. N. D. Wells is the minister and father.

The house belonging to the church at Golden, Colo., has been closed and the property deeded to the Church Extension board. The failure of this church to prosper is due to a division in its ranks some three years ago.

The Protestant churches of Brooklyn, Ia., a prosperous town of two thousand people, have just finished a five weeks' union meeting with great success. W. D. Hamilton of Sabetha, Kans., was the preacher and J. Heaton of Winona Lake, Ind., was the singer. One hundred and seventy-eight people made a stand for Christ. Twenty-six of the number have united with the Disciples church thus far. The congregation will be strengthened materially. Every Protestant church in the community—Methodist, Presbyterian, Church of the Brethren and Disciple, co-operated and the greatest result, in a sense, that has come to the town is a consciousness of Christian union. Everybody worked for people, and not for any particular church, and the fellowship was much more than anyone dared to hope for a few months before. Douglas Serrill, a graduate of Drake, is the Christian minister at Brooklyn.

Foreign Society News

The receipts of the Foreign Society for the first ten days July amounted to $19,627, an increase over the corresponding time last year of $9,069.

Last week the Foreign Society received an annuity of $1,100 from a friend in town. This is his seventh gift on the annuity plan.

Dr. L. F. Jaggard writes as follows upon his return to Bolenge, Africa: "Reached Bolenge May 14. Found Mr. and Mrs. Hensey and Miss Eck quite well. They together with the native Christians gave us a most hearty welcome. We came to Longa and here again were warmly welcomed by Mr. and Mrs. Eldred and the native Christians of Longa. Mr. and Mrs. Eldred are also well. Tomorrow we go up the river to Lotumbe, where we will have a conference with all the missionaries on the field and it will be decided where we will be located. The missionaries and native Christians are all rejoicing over the coming of the two new men and the visit of Secretary Corey."

July 10 the Foreign Society received a special personal direct gift of $2,000 from a friend in Ohio.

During the first ten days of July the receipts of the Foreign Society from the Sunday-schools amounted to $13,070. This was an increase over the corresponding ten days last year of $5,407. During the same ten days there was a loss of about $350 from the churches.

Guy W. Sarvis reports a number of baptisms at the South Gate, Nankin, China.

American Mission News

The new church at Baton Rouge, La., will be ready for dedication Sept. 1. John A. Stevens, the missionary pastor, led an organized relief corps during the recent floods and rendered sufferers and the kingdom of Christ great service. He is recovering from an attack of malaria caused by exposure. Real heroes of our faith are not all in foreign lands or in ancient times.

Reports from Alberta, Canada, are encouraging. M. B. Ryan has the new church at Clyde enclosed for summer use. This is the only church in a new community. Mr. Pickell organized twenty Disciples of Christ at Champion and baptized three persons while there. Mr. Clutter's meeting at Lethbridge developed a new church with thirty members. Ten were recently baptized by him.

A. F. Fitts, of our mission church in San Antonio, established a mission at Kingsville, a town of 4,000 people, and a division on the St. Louis, Brownsville and Mexico R. R. Thirty-five persons are in the Sunday-school.

Offering to American missions for June shows an increase over the same month last year. That cheers the American Board.

A chord of hope was sounded in all recent state conventions. From widely separated fields I have returned with increased hope for our country and the practical good the American Christian Missionary Society is rendering the people. No notes of discouragement were heard. The obstacles in the paths of right, justice, morals, and spiritual life were considered, and brethren with determination propose to remove them. There is no faltering in faith that the Gospel of Christ is sufficient to surmount them. Present political and social restlessness is an index of a people unsatisfied with the unholy conditions of our age. Every leader among us believes that if the church, possessing the mind of Christ, arises in earnest opposition to all forms of evil, the gates of Hades cannot prevail against it. Such courageous faith and religious patriotism were inspiring and prophetic. It is the opportunity of the church to reckon with these conditions and lead the people in righetousness godward.

I. N. McCash, Secretary.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—a dozen leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

EVERY QUARTER ADDS TO THE NUMBER OF SCHOOLS INTRODUCING THESE LESSONS.

Illinois

J. A. Barnett has resigned the pastorate at Galesburg. He has been with this church since 1907.

E. M. Norton received five additions upon profession of faith at a country appointment near Potomac the last Sunday in June.

President Charles E. Underwood, of Eureka College, was granted the degree of Ph. D. by Yale University at the June commencement.

Centralia Church is having frequent additions to the membership. In the last six weeks there have been seventeen. The minister is A. L. Huff.

Washington Church has called to its pulpit D. J. Howe, of Kansas. Mr. Howe will preach for the church on Sundays, while attending college at Eureka.

J. J. Hudson has resigned from the pastorate of Antioch Church, near Olney, and from Reeves Church, in order to accept the ministry of Johnson City Church.

A new church at Golden Point was dedicated June 23 by Judge Charles J Scofield of Carthage. This building cost $5,000, and the entire amount has been provided for.

An event of much interest to the church at Lincoln is the banquet given each year to the graduates of the teacher training course. Seven such graduates were thus recognized June 30.

The Seventh District Convention, held at Olney the 19th to 21st of June, elected the following officers for the new year: President, W. W. Weedon; vice-president, G. W. Ford; secretary, W. S. Gamboe.

The revival meeting at Quincy, being held in a tent by the Fife Brothers, had enlisted more than fifty persons at last report, with the meeting to continue several days longer. The additions represent about fifty baptisms.

John R. Golden, pastor of West Side Church, Springfield, has been employed by Cooksville church to hold a meeting in the Fall. The church is preparing for a helpful meeting with considerable ingathering under the leadership of Mr. Golden. The minister here is A. K. Mathews.

Charles E. Smith, pastor at Du Quoin, tells of the enthusiastic Children's Day observance on June 23. He recently preached a special sermon to W. O. S. Cliffe's Men's Class at Christopher. Du Quoin church will hold evangelistic meetings in October, led by Evangelist E. E. Violett.

Guy B. Williamson, who has been pastor of Waverly Church for two years, has resigned to accept a call to Arrowsmith Church. The new pastorate will begin the first Sunday in August. Mr. Williamson has done a splendid work in Waverly, and leaves with the regret of the people at that place.

Summum Church, of which G. W. Burnett is pastor, has had a total of twenty-nine additions during the last year and a half, all but thirteen of these being on profession of faith, and were without special revival. Mr. Burnett has resigned his ministry there, in order to accept a call to Lynnville, where he is already at work with the church.

Bridgeport Church Brotherhood is undertaking a piece of work which will increase very much the efficiency of the church in that place. They are seeking to ascertain the facts about the religious life of the people of the community, in order that more intelligent work may be done. A census will be taken, lasting through several days, during which time the whole city will be visited and facts elicited which will prove of service to the minister and to the congregation in its activities.

Ellmore Sinclair, who for about five years has been pastor of Watseka Church, has accepted a call to Grand View Boulevard Church, Kansas City, where he will remove at once. Mr. Sinclair went to the Watseka Church immediately after graduation at Eureka College, and has made for himself a foremost place among the younger ministers of the state. His departure is regretted, and leaves one of the best pulpits in the smaller cities of Illinois vacant. Mr. Sinclair's acquaintances are sanguine of his success in the city church to which he goes.

E. T. McFarland, who for several years has beeen in the pastorate at Rock Island, and before that time, for eight years was pastor of Fourth Church, St. Louis, is to enter the evangelistic field in the employ of the American Christian Missionary Society. As a pastor-evangelist, Mr. McFarland has been continuously successful, having held meetings for a number of churches, and always of a profitable kind. He has also been continuously evangelistic in his own pastoral labors. His annual reports have shown many conversions. If the same success attends his efforts in the field, which his friends do not question will happen, there will be justification for so successful a man resigning from his pastorate. His new work begins the first of September.

Chicago

The committee on the unification of the various missionary societies of the disciples met in Chicago last week to put the finishing touches on a plan which will be offered to the convention at Louisville in October.

E. E. Elliott, secretary of the Brotherhood of Disciples, was invited to speak before the Disciple's Assembly at the University of Chicago last Thursday evening on the principles and progress of the Brotherhood. His address was received with favor by a large company. Mr. Elliott is studying at the university this summer.

The sixteenth annual meeting of the Campbell Institute was held in Chicago last week. Papers were read on "Forces Making for Progress Among the Disciples," "The New Testament Church and the Living Church," "The New Mysticism," "The Miracles of the Old Testament," "The Use and Abuse of Symbolism in Religion," "The Reform of the Courts" and other themes. Especially helpful interpretations were given of the philosophies of Eucken and Bergson, the two most significant thinkers in present day philosophy. The membership of the Campbell Institute consists of about 140 men of university training, mostly Disciple ministers and teachers, who are determined to keep their ideals of scholarship undimmed. As a means of keeping its members in touch with the vital problems of the time the Institute seems to supply a very real need.

The New England landlady had been instructing Debutsky in English when a compatriot dropped in. Debutsky answered all questions in English, so that his friend might observe his progress. "The house is no good!" he declared with an effort which cost him great mental concentration, "but the lady, she is a gentleman."—New York Times.

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.

NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business

FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet

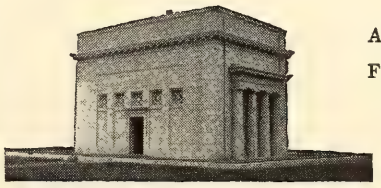
THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.
1109 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, U. S. A.

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 27
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

This is Where The Lincoln Cabin Rests In "My Old Kentucky Home"



The Lincoln Memorial near Hogdenville, Ky.

And Thousands are Going to Visit This Famous Spot While in Attendance at the Great

International Convention of the Disciples of Christ

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, OCTOBER 15 - 22

Write me for full particulars as to all the side trips and "Meet us in our Old Kentucky Home."

Geo. H. Jones, Secretary, Care First Christian Church, Louisville, Ky.

A Unique Mission Study Tour

Reported in a Series of

Fascinating and Authoritative Articles

in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Beginning Next September Continuing Nearly a Year

No feature of American religious journalism during the next twelve months will surpass the articles by PROFESSOR H. L. WILLETT from the Oriental mission field. Dr. Willett is now forming the personnel of the class which he is to take through Japan, China, Korea, India, the Philippines, Egypt and Palestine. The party will sail September 10, and will spend eight months, not in casual sight-seeing but in earnest study of the social and moral conditions of these countries and of the problems of missionary service among their peoples. The enterprise is conducted under the auspices of the University of Chicago. Dr. Willett has been invited by both mission and native educational institutions in the various lands to deliver series of lectures before students and faculties on Christian themes. The most intimate aspects of political, educational and social life as well as the teeming life of the masses, will be accessible to him. His mission both in purpose and plan is unique in missionary history.

The account of his observations and experiences will be published in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY in a series of articles written as only such a scholar and world-traveler as Dr. Willett can prepare, and generously illustrated by original photographs.

We have every right to say that these articles will be the most significant contribution to the missionary enterprise that has appeared in current literature.

Facts about the missionaries.

Facts about the Oriental religions.

Facts about Oriental social conditions.

Facts about Oriental types of civilization.

Facts bearing upon the practice of Christian Union on the mission field.

Facts as to the Church in the mission field.

Facts, gathered at first hand, by a competent and discriminating observer, and reported in fearless and graphic fashion, are what the Christian people of the Occident want.

This they will receive through Dr. Willett's articles.

Present readers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will do their friends an important favor by calling their attention to Dr. Willett's Travel Story and advising them to subscribe

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

700 E. 40th St., Chicago

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Vol. XXIX July 25, 1912 Number 30

Ah, here thou comest, sweet Rain.
Soft, tender Rain, benison of the skies!
See now, what transformation in thy touch!
Straight all the land is green. The blossoming trees
Put on their bridal wreaths, and veil their charms
From the too ardent sun beneath thy gift
Of soft diaphanous tissue, pure and white
As angel's raiment. Little wood children
Deck all the path with flowers. The teeming earth
Offers rich gifts. The little Choristers
Sing ceaseless hymns, and the glad husbandman
Adds his diapason. Bright fountains wake
And mingle with the swift roulade of streams;
The earth is full of music! Thou dost swing
Thy fragrant censer high, and dwellers in
The dusty city raise their toil-worn heads
From desk and bench, and cry "Summer is here!"
And straight they smell new hay and clover blooms,
And see the trout swift-darting in the brooks,
And the plover whistling in the fields;
The little children dream of daisy chains,
And pent-up youth thinks of a holiday,—
A holiday with romps, and cream, and flowers;
O, Rain! O, soft, sweet Rain! O, liberal Rain!
Touch our hard hearts, that we may more become Like that Great Heart whose almoner art thou.

—SARAH ANNE CURZON.

CHICAGO

1869 — HAMILTON COLLEGE FOR WOMEN — 1912
LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.

HUBERT GIBSON SHEARIN, A. M., Ph. D. (Yale), President.
Standardized Junior College courses under a faculty of twenty-nine, all graduates of leading American and European institutions. Faculty of seven for Music, Expression and Art.
Five modern buildings. Complete gymnasium, laboratories and libraries. Home care. Delightful dormitories. Cultural surroundings and scholarly ideals.
The forty-fourth session begins September 9, 1911. For catalogue address THE SECRETARY.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
An Up-to-Date College for Young Women
CAMDEN POINT, MISSOURI

COURSES:		COMMODIOUS BUILDING:
College Preparatory Bible Normal, Music Elocution Physical Culture		New Addition to Building New Gymnasium Steam Heated, Acetylene Lighted, Large Campus

TUITION REASONABLE AND RIGHT—SEND FOR CATALOGUE
Sixty-fourth Year Opens in September FRANK G. RICHARD, President

An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women SIXTY-SECOND YEAR
Christian College

Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $36,000 building, completed. 25 College-trained, experienced teachers. Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior college course leads to an A. B. degree. College-preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character-training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field. Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern colleges. For illustrated catalogue address

MRS. LUELLA W. ST. CLAIR-MOSS, President, COLUMBIA, MO.
Next Session begins September 17th.

How About Attending College This Year?

We want the name of every young man and every young woman who is considering this most important question. We believe we can show them that

DRAKE UNIVERSITY

Offers Great Advantages

It is located in the best residence district in Des Moines—the best city in the West. Surroundings clean and wholesome. Good influences surround the boy or girl who attends Drake University.

Courses of Study: Liberal Arts (including Courses for Primary, Kindergarten, Grade and High School Teachers and Students in Domestic Science), Law, Medicine, Dentistry, Bible, Music, Painting and Drawing, Dramatic Art, Etc. Thoroughly prepared teachers in all departments. The best of equipment. The Drake Stadium, one of the finest athletic fields in the country.

Write for catalogue and full particulars. Any question you may desire to ask will be answered cheerfully.

HILL M. BELL, President,
Drake University. Des Moines, Iowa

WILLIAM WOODS COLLEGE
Fulton, Mo., successful school for young women.—23rd year.

Reason—we Specialize—Class 'A' standards

What Parents Want to Know.
1 Equipment—Buildings first class; homelike; heated; modern.
2 Curriculum—Courses "accredited"; well arranged for study, recreation and proper social life.
3 Faculty—Teachers from best schools, sympathetic; know their business.
4 Features—College atmosphere, gymnasium, right kind of good time.

Over 3,300 girls in 22 years

These questions answered to your satisfaction. Write President Joseph L. Garvin.

Books

WHEN YOU WANT BOOKS
Send your order to us. We handle the books of all publishers, at the lowest prices. Your order will be promptly attended to.
THE NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY COMPANY
700 East Fortieth Street - - - Chicago, Ill.

The Best

The Uniform Sunday School lessons for 1912 are in The Life of Christ. You want the very best text for your young people's and adult classes that can be found. Even though your school is graded, up to the Intermediate department, you may still find it desirable to follow the Uniform lessons for the older classes. This is simply to remind you that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF CHRIST in Fifty-two Lessons. It is a new book. A second large edition has just been issued to meet the great demand. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

The New Christian Century Co.,
700 E. 40th St.
CHICAGO

The Christian Century

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT . . . . . EDITORS

Unconventional Christianity

A FAMOUS EDITOR HAS SAID THAT HE derives his conceptions of God not from the theologians, but from the poets. His contention is that the theologians err in attempting to define; the poets reveal without attempting to define. In the view of the poets there is room for adjustment and liberty; in the creeds there is neither.

And these things remind us that religion finds its expression in a multitude of unconventional ways, especially in these later times. The poet did not think she was teaching theology when she invoked that benediction of the Rain printed on the cover page of this paper, nor did Burns think he was revealing the glory of God in the field daisy in the same way that the Psalmist saw that glory in the heavens or Moses found it upon the smoking mount. But each revealed God as truly as did the others. It helps us to a better conception of God when teachers and seers show us that God cares for the minute as well as the vast, that he "gives lustre to the insect's wing, and wheels his chariot on the rolling world."

* * *

In other ways these surprises have startled us. A few generations ago the work of moral reform was entrusted to the few. Today that work is being carried forward by book and newspaper and magazine and artist and lecturer, and in a score of ways quite unconventional. The progress of reform in the political world is due in part to the pulpit, but men who have no thought of being reformers have contributed the best fruits of their lives to the cleansing of our national household.

* * *

Mr. Bryan, for example, is not an ordained preacher, but what man of the generation has identified himself with the work of moral reform as closely and with as much consideration as he? We are too near him to appreciate the extent of his efforts, or to judge them in their true light, but if we discount all he has done by half, there will be enough to cheer the hearts of those who are laboring for the betterment of the race.

And there are others who might be mentioned, but he will suffice as the type of lay preacher who is helping to bring in the reign of the kingdom.

* * *

If we consider again such work as is carried on by the Layman's Missionary Movement or the Men and Religion Movement we shall find that a great impetus has been given to the work of redeeming the world. The efforts of the Social Settlement have made vast contributions to the welfare of communities and individuals. They teach people how to live, and make it possible for men to live today as well as nobles and barons lived five centuries ago. The work of the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. has made an indelible impression for good upon our country everywhere, while such organizations as the Salvation Army are reaching down to help the outcast who was doomed and ready to perish.

More agencies are operating today to help on the work of Christ than can be computed, and our task is to bid them Godspeed.

* * *

The work of the magazine is a mighty factor in exposing wrong and pleading for a better system of living in many fields of activity. It is a mighty preacher of righteousness. Possibly an editor may not even be a Christian in the sense of having made a profession of faith and having been received into the membership of any of the churches, but he is imbued with the spirit of Christianity, and the ideals of Christ have been woven into his thinking, unconsciously perhaps. With such ideals possessing them, many magazine editors believe that Christ should possess the land; they cannot be still and allow it to lie under a curse.

* * *

With unsparing hand the wickedness in high places is exposed, the slaughter of children, the extravagance and wastefulness of the rich, the indifference that would allow men to be sacrificed that a few might be enriched. Reforms have been proposed, and constructive measures set in motion, with the result that a better land is ours today then before the voice of the magazine was heard. They have a great hearing, and many of them have a great message. The ideals of the pulpit have borne their fruit in such efforts as these.

* * *

Outside of direct church agencies, too, the missionary work of Christianity is being reinforced. The great universities of this country receive annually hundreds of the best young men of China and Japan, attracted here by the unique educational opportunity. Many of these youths are impressed with the Christian religion. They return to their own lands as leaders of their people. Never again can they conform to the religious thinking and practices to which from childhood they were accustomed. How far their influence is positively cast on the side of the Christian missionary propaganda depends upon the kind and depth of impression they received while here. Nevertheless this is one of the indirect ways through which God promotes his kingdom among men.

* * *

What shall we say of the innumerable channels called secular through which the life of God is flowing in cleaning streams today? The Hyde Park Church of Disciples in Chicago, for example, finds it possible to articulate itself with more than a score of local organized enterprises each making for the uplift of the community. The kingdom comes through a net-work of activities with which the clear-visioned churchman will wish to ally himself and his church in knowledge, in sympathy and in actual help.

* * *

These are a few of the unconventional ways in which the clouds that hide God are being lifted from the world, so that men may no longer grope after him in vain.

E. B. B.

Social Survey

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN.

The Purpose of Punishment

The history of punishment is also the history of civilization. Once justice was in the hands of the individual or the family. The law of revenge demanded that the next of kin take up the feud. Hence we still have in belated communities the vendetta of Corsica or the feud of the mountain whites. It was a step forward when in the legal legislation of the Hebrews, there were provided cities of refuge where a man might stop until the merits of his case were inquired into. This city of refuge, however, was but a refuge for the accidental homicide. Found guilty of wilful homicide the culprit was turned over to the avenger of blood. The lex talionis, the law of exact justice and limited revenge, was a further step in civilization. By this law a man might not exact any more punishment for an injury than he had suffered.

As we come on up to the modern time, we find more or less clear survivals of every theory of punishment that has been held in the whole development of civilization. Perhaps most people nowadays think the function of punishment is to prove a terror to evil-doers. Hence a man is punished to prevent the next man from committing the same crime. That there is some deterrent effect in punishment perhaps we would all admit, though doubtless less than many would suppose. It is often the experience of a community that a hanging is immediately followed by more murders. A lynching often is followed by an increased number of rapes. The deterrent effect of punishment is a legitimate notion but an over-worked one.

Another notion of the function of punishment is the protection of society. It is in behalf of this notion that hanging and imprisonments are often advocated. It is obvious of course that we can protect society for a time by killing every criminal, though perhaps such a process would so brutalize the community that there would be still more crime.

The largest and highest notion of punishment is reformation. Society by this notion does not despair of men. We would protect society by reforming the criminal. Criminals locked up may get out again to harass us but a criminal reformed is so much conservation of human values. This reforming work is the highest notion we can conceive with reference to the treatment of the criminal. Our skepticism with reference to the success of such an effort is by no means justified. There are men in every state who have been convicted and who have worked out from under their disgrace against terrible odds, into decent citizenship. This soul-saving work of the modern criminal system is not far removed from the soul-saving work which is carried on by the church.

Jury Reform in This Country

At the present time the American people are making a good many complaints with reference to their criminal procedure. Mobs are being justified upon the basis of the slowness and uncertainty of the law. It is true that we cannot confess those outrages of criminal procedure that characterize Latin countries. No officialdom in this country can do men to death. But we all believe that many men slip through the meshes of the law and that it takes much too long to convict a man. The terror of the law depends not so much upon its severity as upon its speed and certainty.

Legal experts have selected our American jury system as the weak spot in our procedure. We are well aware that the selection of a jury is a long and tedious process where the interests involved are important. In the first place, it is difficult to get competent men to serve. They will disqualify themselves by claiming they have a prejudice or they will offer flimsy excuses which are often accepted by the court. By their failure to serve, there are now in every large city professional jury-men who hang around the courts for a job. It is such men as these that are venal and from them comes most of the scandal in our procedure. It was undertaken in Cook county in Illinois to convict such venal jurymen of having betrayed their trust but they in turn had to be tried before other professional jurymen in part so the whole effort was a fiasco.

Another weak spot in the procedure is that the lawyers have power to reject so many men and to ask them so many questions. The lawyer will often question a prospective jouryman for two hours until at last he thinks he knows how the man will vote in the jury and then rejects him. Thus the work of securing a jury becomes exceedingly expensive and the interests of justice are by no means advanced in the process.

Furthermore, the American jury, even when carefully selected from the ranks of the people will often find a verdict in clear opposition to the law and the evidence. This is shown by the difficulty in securing a conviction in sections where a lynching has occurred. Often the prosecuting attorney and the judge are perfectly willing to do their duty but they find their hands tied in an effort to secure conviction of popular criminals.

The Parole System

There are periodical attacks on the parole system. It would seem that the statistics showing that ninety per cent of the men paroled make good and never return to a penal institution ought to be convincing but every time some paroled prisoner falls from his good resolutions, there is an out-cry among the conservatives in legal procedure and they demand the abolishment of the system. Recently in Illinois a summer sensation was sprung charging that the parole board in that state had been venal and incompetent only to be immediately attacked and withdrawn. The parole system is but one of the methods of making punishment in any real sense reformatory. It is hoped that is one of the great redemptive forces in human life. Paul says in one connection that we are saved by hope. The prisoner who can work in prison and help his destitute family finds some meaning and significance to life. The man who is let out on promise of good behavior on the parole system also finds society treating him not only with justice but transcending justice in an effort to give him a chance. We shall hope that every attack on the parole system will prove as abortive as the last one has.

—According to the daily press, there is a great dearth of laboring men in Pittsburgh and the surrounding district. So acute has become the labor famine that jails and police stations are being combed by the big industrial concerns that are working against time to get out material on orders calling for delivery within thirty to ninety days. The rush of orders for finished material has not been equaled since prior to the panic days of 1907. The Monongahela River Consolidated Coal and Coke Company representatives are said to have visited all the precinct police stations recently, seeking to get men to man the coal fleets ready to start south on the temporary boating stage caused by rains at the headwaters. Men who were charged with minor offenses were given an opportunity to work. If they signed up to the work, sentence was suspended and they were guaranteed good wages and transportation back to Pittsburgh. About forty men were rounded up in this way. Agents of the Carnegie Steel Company visited the county workhouse and with permission of the warden scanned the dockets. Those committed for minor offenses in default of payment of fines were called in and offered work. Those who accepted had their fines paid by the Steel Corporation and were taken away, guarded carefully lest they should escape.

—The National Congress of Mothers and Parent-teacher Associations has inaugurated an American "child-welfare" campaign, with the purpose of arousing the whole country to a sense of its duty and responsibility to childhood. The National Congress of Mothers asks in this campaign the co-operation of every governor, every mayor, every father and mother, every church, every school, the press, and every organization, whatever its purpose, because the love of childhood is the common tie that unites us in holiest purpose.

— A report issued by the Babies' Welfare Association shows that during the first week of July—the beginning of the period most dreaded by welfare workers—267 babies died in Greater New York, as compared with 347 deaths in the same week a year ago. The saving of lives is attributed to the work of the pure milk stations, which are now serving milk to 13,000 registered infants.

—Chicago has 600 moving picture theatres, with a daily attendance of 150,000 people who pay $15,000 for their entertainment. If the Christian people of Chicago, numbering 200,000, would contribute at this rate, they could pay the foreign missionary bills of the entire United States.

—Figures collected by statistical experts seem to show that suicide is increasing at a rapid rate throughout the United States. Reports from 100 cities show a general rate of 19.6 for each 100,000 of population last year, as against 17.7 for 1910.

—Mrs. Lucy Rider Meyer did not permit herself to be re-elected as secretary of the Methodist Deaconess Association recently, desiring more time for the work of training young women and for Christian social service in which she has become deeply interested.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

The Beecher Memorial

It is proposed to erect a memorial for Henry Ward Beecher at Plymouth church, Brooklyn. The circumstances will help the present generation to review the character of that wonderful genius in his different spheres as orator, journalist, author, statesman, and preacher. A critic says of him: "I fully believe that nowhere yet in the tide of time has there appeared on the planet a mightier master of men by speech than Henry Ward Beecher. . . . What affluence of language, rolling out inexhaustibly, like an Atlantic set astream—affluence, not simply in words, but in construction, endlessly different, and often surprisingly beautiful, as in a kaleidoscope! The greatest pulpit orator that the world ever saw—who might also have been the greatest preacher!"

Such testimony from a competent authority, a teacher of literature in one of the great universities of this country, would be sufficient to compel us to take account of any man of whom such things could be said. But his oratory was only one expression of his many-sided genius. The youthful Spurgeon in the first flush of his London success, declared the Brooklyn preacher to be "the most myriad-minded man since Shakespeare," and allowed the judgment to stand as recorded when asked towards the close of his life if he wished to modify it. The significance of Beecher's work in America and England is an inspiring as well as a perplexing problem to the student of history even today. It will always be perplexing to understand how a man who chose the unpopular side of many questions should still retain his hold upon the masses of the people in both countries, and how he could override the most violent opposition. The following from the Congregationalist is a resumé of the plans proposed for the memorial.

The congregation of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, has not been moved to such enthusiasm for a long time as was the case Sunday morning, June 30, owing to several announcements made by Dr. Hillis just before his departure for vacation. They related chiefly to the plans which the Beecher Memorial Committee are to carry out this coming year. The committee has already entered into a contract with Gutzon Borglum, the distinguished sculptor, for the memorial statue of Henry Ward Beecher and for eight large bronzes dealing with the history of Plymouth Church. The ground all around the church has been secured or safeguarded, and during the summer the arcade at the right of the church will be built. The plot for the Beecher Park and Memorial Building now measures 160 by 100 feet. Plans are already under way for the celebration of the centennial of Mr. Beecher's birth next spring. Plymouth Church is to be renovated throughout. Dr. Hillis begins next fall a long series of evening sermons on the life and work of Beecher, and next May the ministers of the nation will be asked to preach on the contributions of Henry Ward Beecher to American liberty, patriotism and theology. It is expected that the remains of Mr. and Mrs. Beecher will be interred in the little park by the church on next Memorial Day.

Liberality Among New York Presbyterians

We have called attention more than once to the fact that New York City, the modern Babylon, or any other name that stands for anti-Christian influences, nevertheless continues to astonish the nation with its intense religious activities. The Episcopalians, year after year, build new churches, and increase their appropriations to the various departments of their work. The Presbyterians are doing great things in their congregations for missions and benevolences. May it not be that light and darkness have their appeal one to the other, that wherever wickedness flourishes, there the spur of necessity compels the powers that make for righteousness to put on the whole armour and fight it to the death? It must ever be that wherever sin abounds grace must much more abound. The spirit of giving requires great cultivation, but once matured there is nothing that can give the giver and the receiver a greater joy. We are indebted to the Congregationalist for the following data:

The New York Presbytery, criticized widely for its alleged liberality in doctrinal matters and not always harmonious and peaceful in its deliberations, increased its gifts to others last year by about $200,000. The Presbytery comprises the boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx. It cost to maintain all Presbyterian churches in these boroughs last year $757,000. After paying this maintenance cost Presbyterians in these churches and through them usually give about $600,000 a year to missions, to the poor and to all causes beyond their own needs. Last year they gave $817,000. Their numbers now stand at 32,049, a gain of 368 over the previous year. There is a steady stream of families going out from this Presbytery into Westchester, Queens and New Jersey. This is shown by a decrease in Sunday-school teachers and scholars from 21,364 in 1911 to 19,542 in 1912. The loss was almost wholly between Fourteenth and Fifty-ninth Streets; a loss that will continue in these districts and increase in others. It has long been true that pressure for space on Manhattan Island for great hotels, theaters and warehouses, to meet national and world needs, has steadily driven homes from it. Now the same pressure is felt in the newer Bronx.

Efforts Toward Reunion Among Lutherans

The rising tide of union within denominational families is one of the cheering signs of the times. In a recent issue we had the pleasure of relating some of the plans for union among the Presbyterians. Now the Lutherans, who are sorely divided, are contemplating steps that will heal their differences. The following is taken from the Churchman:

An important step toward reunion is marked by action recently taken by Lutheran bodies in the Northwest. For thirty years Norwegian Lutherans have been at variance on doctrinal points. There are two principal organizations, known as the Synod and the United Church, with a third somewhat smaller body, known as the Hauge Synod. Last year both the Synod and the United Church appointed committees which, after joint meetings, agreed to recommend union to the constituent bodies. As the General Synod meets but once in three years it was decided to refer the report to the five district meetings of the Synod and to the United Church at its meeting in Fargo. Two of the district synods have met and approved the recommendations of the committee and it is believed that the other three, which meet before the end of July, will follow their example. The United Church gathering unanimously approved the proposed union and the Hauge Synod at its recent session in Red Wing joined the movement and gave its adherence to the principle of union involved. There are nearly half a million Norse Lutherans in this country, with some 3,000 pastors, and the prospects seem bright for their union in one great organization. Details will be easy of adjustment once the principle is admitted. The correspondent who sends us the clipping from a Minneapolis paper giving the facts we have noted above says that he considers this an important step, especially when it is considered that it is taken by Lutherans, "who have been so dogmatic and prone to repeated schism." Bishop Anderson has warned us of the inadvisability of confessing other people's sins with too great enthusiasm, but the step is certainly an important one and marks the growing consciousness of the sin of division among all Christian peoples.

—Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, of Philadelphia, has given the use of his magnificent estate at Lansdowne, Pa., as a vacation home for members of his various Bible classes. By this movement, Mr. Biddle hopes to enlarge his classes to a total membership of 10,000 by the fall. His classes now number 3,400. About four years ago, Mr. Biddle conceived the idea of mixing prize fighting and other athletic sports with religion, to the benefit of the latter. It was Mr. Biddle's idea that the best means for carrying out his scheme would be through the medium of a Bible-class for young men. As an illustration of how rapidly the movement is now increasing, it may be mentioned that last November Mr. Biddle had 700 members in his Bible-class, while at the present time there are forty-five Bible-classes in Philadelphia churches under Mr. Biddle's direction, and he has 3,100 men and 300 women in these classes. The inclusion of women in the Bible-classes is of very recent origin.

—China is becoming greatly interested in Sunday-schools. A remarkable Sunday-school awakening is manifest in that country, with 100,000 in the schools. Rev. E. G. Tewksbury, of Shanghai, for many years a Congregational missionary, is secretary, and has Chinese secretaries in several provinces, whom he trains for service. Six translators are constantly at work on Sunday-school books. Korea presents a most hopeful field for Sunday-schools, under the leadership of National Secretary J. G. Holdscroft, of Pyeng. Many schools are being organized, several having a regular attendance of from 1,000 to 2,000. In one town of 4,000 population, there are 2,300 in the Sunday-school. Bible institutes are held in all parts of Korea, and the work has greatly prospered.

—The churches of St. Louis are not going to sleep the drowsy sleep of summer in the city where it is hot when it is hot. That veteran, Rev. Samuel J. Niccolls, has been elected president of the Council of Church Federation, and a vigorous campaign for the summer is being carried on. Street preaching and services in tents are on the program. An effort will be made to collect a fund of $15,000 to carry on this evangelistic work.

—Between 1902 and 1912, the Missionary Education Movement distributed 1,129,297 mission study text-books. In 1912 there were approximately 175,000 persons enrolled in mission study classes.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—SILAS JONES, IDA WITHERS HARRISON, ORVIS F. JORDAN, ELLIS B. BARNES.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy, 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

United Religious Press Building
700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

Earnestness

Earnestness, the dictionary informs us, is restrained eagerness. Eagerness is ardency of desire. The eager man sets his mind on the object of desire and thinks of nothing else. He is impatient. The earnest man has intense desires but he controls them in the interest of his personal and social ideals. He gives to each its place according to its importance.

Earnestness is integrity. It is soundness of aim. Its value therefore must be determined by the aim with which it is connected. Ardor and self-restraint may be enlisted in the service of selfishness or of unselfishness. Saul, the enemy of the church, was desperately earnest; he zealously and carefully sought the destruction of the church. But he was ignorant of the motives of his victims. He thought he was opposing evil when in reality he was fighting against God. Paul, the disciple of Jesus, lived in a larger world than that of Saul the persecutor. We admire the earnestness of the Christian apostle because it was joined to a worthy aim.

To present the body a living sacrifice to God is said by the apostle to be a spiritual or reasonable service. Before he makes the statement he discourses on the power, wisdom, and goodness of God. Having shown that these are sufficient for all the needs of man, he can consistently exhort his readers to commit themselves without reserve to God. Whatever a God of supreme wisdom and goodness offers, that the wise will choose. Once the choice is made, zeal in living up to it widens the vision, purifies the heart, and gives peace to the soul.

Love of life is taught by all the New Testament writers. They would have us resist every enticement to vicious practices and endure every hardship that adds to the strength and dignity of life. Meanness and littleness, cowardice and selfishness lead to death, and against them the disciple must wage relentless war. He should delight in love, joy, peace, purity, faith, hope, and goodness, for these constitute life. They should be sought with earnestness; they never appear suddenly as the reward of carelessness and indifference.

The earnest man is sometimes thought to be beside himself. The morally stupid cannot understand the actions of the zealous good man. "It is singular," says the editor of Wallace's Farmer, "that the average man assumes that he himself is not only sane but wise, and that any man who has a higher ideal and truly puts his life into his work is, well, a little 'off,' neither safe nor sane; is at least 'queer,' and of course impractical. The man, for instance, who thinks he has as much money as is good for his children, quits making more and devotes his time to spending wisely what he has made; well, he's 'queer.' Of the man who believes morals should govern in business and politics as well as in religion, it will be said: Well, he's a good man, but an idealist, a dreamer of dreams. Won't his friends induce him to calm down and rest?"

The fanatic exhibits a spurious earnestness. He is unacquainted with the world of fact. He represents only himself or a group whose interests are as narrow as his own. He lacks humility though he may profess entire submission to the will of God. To a committee from the churches of Chicago which came to tell him what the Lord's will was, Mr. Lincoln said: "I hope it will not be irreverent for me to say that if it is probable that God would reveal his will to others on a point so connected with my duty, it might be supposed he would reveal it directly to me." The fanatic has no doubt that he knows what the will of God is for others as well as for himself and he will not admit that they have a right to learn for themselves what their duty is.

Earnestness, then, is characterized by sobriety. It has no affinity with riotous passion. The earnest man is modest in estimating his own abilities and generous in his praise of what others do. He can occupy the lowest station and be thankful for the privileges of serving God and he can be chief among his brethren and remember that he is one of them. The truth he has discovered is precious to him, but he does not say it is all the truth for all time and for all men. He respects the honest man who holds opinions which he rejects. Men are partners in the search for truth and in the winning of character. That the best results may be obtained there is needed not only formal freedom of thought but the actual freedom that exists among right minded men. [Midweek Service, July 31. Rom. 12:1-12.] S. J.

A Significant Step, a Sound Practice

It is not often that a newspaper makes a "leader" of an editorial published in another paper as did The Christian Century last week. But the Congregationalist's recital of the story of the forward step taken by the Mount Morris Baptist church in New York City was of such a character as justly to entitle it to the place of honor in our pages.

The Mount Morris Baptist church did the straightforward thing by its fellow Christians and sister churches of other names. It said right out: These Congregationalists and Methodists and Presbyterians are Christians like ourselves, and their churches are churches of Christ; we must therefore treat them as such. In determining its course the church was guided by the Bible and the will of Christ and so avoided two irregularities into which some churches with a similar purpose have fallen.

It declined to create a so-called "associate membership", that anomalous annex to a church of Christ in which some Baptist and Disciple congregations afford shelter for their unimmersed brethren. It recognized that so to classify any whom Christ had received into his full fellowship was to carry over into the local church the very sect principle which now divides the whole body of Christ and which they are striving to abandon.

The Mount Morris church also avoided the unscriptural and misleading practice of "deferred baptism" which pervails among some Baptist churches in England. The so-called "open membership" churches in England receive not only the unimmersed but the "unbaptized" into their membership. That is to say, a candidate who does not wish to be "baptized", is received on profession of faith, his "baptism" being deferred until such time as he may elect. This procedure is justified by the theory that baptism is purely an individualistic "ordinance" and should be left to the conscience of the individual precisely as participation in the communion is left to the conscience of the individual.

This theory, of course, has not an iota of Scripture to support it. In the New Testament baptism always is administered as the rite of initiation into the Christian life. It is not a mere individual act: it is a social act—a joint act in which church and candidate participate, by which the candidate commits himself to Christ and the church, and the church, by Christ's authority, confers upon him the status of a Christian, incorporates him into the body of Christ. To abstract the physical and symbolic features of baptism from its function, and to set up the physical act as an "ordinance" by itself is to invent an ordinance which had no existence in the New Testament church and to which no New Testament allusion to baptism corresponds.

This divorce of baptism from initiation is the cause of all our woes in respect of this rite. Those Baptists who say that baptism may follow the act of uniting with the church and those Disciples who say that baptism is a preceding condition of uniting with the church are equally wrong. Baptism in its New Testament sense neither precedes nor follows the act of uniting with the church: it is the act itself, an act which, it may be said incidentally, in the nature of the case must be performed ceremonially.

Therefore the Mount Morris church conserves the scriptural meaning of baptism when it proposes to baptize all who apply for membership on profession of faith. Being a Baptist church it proposes to administer the ceremony of initiation by immersion and nothing else, according to the prevailing custom of Baptist churches.

Thus the church keeps baptism where it belongs, where the scripture places it and where it has a real function.

Not the least gratifying feature of the action of Mount Morris church and its sister church at Ithaca is the fact that both seem to have been actuated by a desire for Christian unity. In England the "open-membership" practice is not determined generally by a wish for unity, but by the theory of baptism. They are not so much interested in practicing Christian union with Christ's people of other denominations as in adjusting their practice of baptism to their theory. Therefore they make no distinction between unimmersed Christians and the unbaptized.

But these two American Baptist churches do make such distinction. In conformity to the scripture and the custom of American Baptist churches they propose to baptize the unbaptized. But they propose to abandon the practice of insisting upon the re-baptism of those who are already Christians. They will receive them into their fellowship because Christ has received them into his Church. And in this they are acting in accordance with the scripture and the will of Christ, though contrary to the custom of their denomination.

This is practicing elemental Christian unity. Whatever else Christian unity means—and it means much else—it means nothing at all unless those whom Christ has received into his Church receive one another, without prejudice, without discrimination.

It is in such congregations of Baptists and such congregations of Disciples that hope for the union of these two bodies lies. The considerations that keep Disciples and Baptists from receiving Congregationalists and Presbyterians into their congregations keep them from practicing union with each other. Baptist churches that insist on re-baptism will always be Baptist. Disciples' churches that insist on re-baptism will always be "Disciple". But Baptists and Disciples who receive all whom Christ receives will find it easy, where location and occasion invites it, to merge their separate communions into one corporate life, illustrating the unity of the whole body of Christ and hastening the coming of his kingdom.

These two great Baptist churches are of one mind and character with those progressive churches of the Disciples which have taken their plea for Christian union seriously and already begun to practice it. On behalf of such congregations and the many others, whose faces are being turned toward the larger fellowship, we extend congratulations to these Baptist brethren and pray that their tribe may increase!

Lorimerism Repudiated

The United States Senate upheld the minority report of the committee which conducted the second investigation of the election of William Lorimer, junior senator from Illinois, and by a vote of fifty-five to twenty-eight, declared the seat vacant. The action taken is not so much a repudiation of Mr. Lorimer as of Lorimerism. His expulsion is a declaration that the methods which were proved to have been used in bringing about his election, invalidated that election. The fight on Lorimerism has been one of the chief elements in the rapid rise of the progressive movewent. Mr. Lorimer and his friends have been the rock ribs of conservatism—men who, while they stood for the old order of things, were among the most influential men in congress. But the burden of Lorimerism was more than even the defence they made could withstand. Their fight compromised the conservatives and they were placed in the light of defending corruption and machine control. They held back the flood in the senate, but when they faced the country, one by one they were swept away. Many of the oldest and strongest did not run for reëlection when they felt the undertow, and many failed of reëlection because of their support of Mr. Lorimer. Several senators elected to take their places were selected with the distinct understanding that they were to oppose Mr. Lorimer's efforts to retain his seat. Progressivism, thus brought before the country as the exponent of clean politics, can give no greater service to the country than to maintain uncompromisingly at all times the same attitude toward corruption.

The Unity of the Spirit

In times of controversy such as the religious world is passing through just now, and particularly in the transition which our own brotherhood is profoundly experiencing, it should be kept before us that the goal of all discussion is the discovery of the truth as it is in Jesus. At times we lose sight of that, yielding to the temptations to secure a party triumph at any cost, and stifling the voice of conscience which bids us defer the hour of victory by allowing others, it may be, to gain a sectarian triumph.

It is a real problem to know when to speak and when to keep silent. They are hypocrisies to be exposed, falsehoods to be denied, fallacies to be corrected. But, on the other hand, it may be that more harm would be done by giving them attention than in passing them by. Herein lies the danger of controversy. Human nature is at the fore, and not many are able to adopt the large view which demands patience and time for the proper solution of our problems.

The wise will wait; others will rush in where angels fear to tread. Truth, finally, will come from discussion, for in the collision of opposing views the truth is struck like fire from the flint. By comparing differences of opinion we arrive at clearer conceptions of truth and duty. What may not wholly convince us today may be satisfying tomorrow. Time sifts the error from our thought as sunlight crystallizes the pool.

So if Christians endeavor to keep before them their common aim and common destiny, reminding themselves often that the things wherein they are agreed are much more important than those in which they differ, their most serious discussion will not disturb their unity of spirit.

—Race degeneracy is on the increase in New York state and there is a continued increase in the number of inmates for constitutional defectives, according to the annual report for 1911, presented by the superintendent of the state board of charities and correction. The number of inmates of institutions in New York state in 1911 was 12,422, or 1.33 per cent of the total population. Since 1897, this ratio of dependent persons had increased from 1.11 per cent. "Degeneracy will continue its inevitable increase in New York until proper preventive measures are taken," said the superintendent. "Defectives increase twice as fast as normal persons. We always are letting in more of them at Ellis Island. There are two ways to prevent this—segregation and surgical methods were provided for by the legislature when a bill was passed empowering the governor to appoint a board of examination." Governor Dix has not yet acted in appointing this board.

—One would have supposed that the coining of cautious or invidious terms to denote our Christian brethren who wear denominational names had reached the limit long ago. But here is a brand new one. A California Disciple pastor reporting a reception tendered to himself by his congregation says that the ministers and members of other churches, whom he calls "near Christians", attended also, "and the fellowship was fine." One wonders if the fellowship would have been so fine had they known by what term the guest of honor classified them. One wonders whether they would have been present at all.

—Ten thousand navy yard mechanics will pass under the protection of the civil service law when President Taft signs the executive order being prepared by navy department officials and the civil service commissioners. Men now in the yards will not be required to undergo examinations, but newcomers will be subjected to severe practical tests and physical examinations. A regulation that anyone leaving work and seeking reinstatement must place his name at the bottom of the roll of eligibles, is regarded as a probable deterrent to strikes.

—Rev. H. A. Stimson, pastor of the Manhattan Congregational Church, New York, has presented to the Grenfel Labrador Mission a boat called the "Fleur de Lys," and it is chartered by a New York party to visit the Labrador coast. The Cluett, which has been in Boston for some days taking cargo, has sailed with supplies for St. Anthony, Battle Harbor, Indian Harbor, and Forteau. Rev. Jesse Halsey, who has had the appellation of the "Saint in Overalls," with a crew of six or seven college volunteers, goes with these vessels.

—If the orthodox religious press and pulpit keep on "exposing" the silly doctrines of Pastor Russell it may be safely predicted that he will soon become a more powerful religious leader than the late Dr. Dowie.

—A D. D. degree, 4,000 conversions and a $10,000 collection are some of the good things that happened to "Billy" Sunday during the six weeks spent at Beaver Falls, Pa., this summer. As "Dr. Billy" himself would say, "That's goin' some"!

—Miss Helen Keller, who is deaf and dumb and blind, and nevertheless a college graduate, has been appointed a member of the Board of Public Welfare in Schenectady, New York.

Fellow Travelers

By Edgar White

A ruddy flame shot up from the thicket where Dixie Red had thrown the match that had lighted his disreputable black pipe, and for a moment he feared that a sinister gentleman with a forked tail, whose name he had often taken in vain, was drawing near. Investigation disclosed a greasy scum mixing with the small pools of water in the shallow ravine. The man, whose clothes were pretty much of a color with the dead grass and leaves upon which he had been reclining, got up and traced the mysterious fluid to a railroad embankment. Then he understood the source. The pipeline was leaking.

Dixie climbed up to the road-bed and ambled down the track. When he struck the town, and noticed the oil pumping station near the depot, he went to the office, opened the door and thrust in his head.

"Pipe-line's busted," he said, casually, and moved on.

The news seemed of greater consequence to the man in the office than it did to the tramp. He jumped up, hurriedly asked a few questions and then ordered the pumps shut down. Then he sent out a crew to repair the damage. While this was happening Dixie sat outside on a box, quietly smoking his black pipe. The superintendent did some telephoning, and then calling Dixie into his office handed him five ten dollar bills.

"Your information was worth that," he said. Then he explained that the company had had to pay $6,000 damages that summer for bottom land overflowed through a leak in the oil line. Naturally they didn't want anything like that to happen again.

Dixie, who had been expecting a possible quarter, thrust the bills in his pocket and went up in town. It had been twenty years since he had felt the fascinating touch of that much money. He wished his old pal Sandy Jim was along to help him spend it. But Sandy was now resting from his work—for tramping is one sort of work—beside the right-of-way in New Mexico, along with some forty head of other stock killed in the same wreck. It was too bad that he had not lived to see this day.

Fifty dollars in real money! Those smartly dressed young fellows who passed him on the village streets and who turned up their noses at Dixie's rags were not worth half so much.

It is said that it has always been a problem with the sudden rich what to do with their money, and that nine times out of ten they do the very worst thing. The question did not vex Dixie. He knew what he would do. It had long been figured out, but on a much more moderate basis than fate had proffered him. Ten dollars was the limit of his dreams. He would get a square meal, a shave and a new collar, possibly a shirt, and then ride somewhere in a varnished car. To see a conductor or brakeman walk by without having to dodge them would be a novelty worth telling the boys whom he should meet along the endless road.

Fifty dollars broadened the plan. He bought a whole suit of "hand-me-downs," as he called them, a figured shirt, white collar, blue and red tie and a pair of strong shoes. With all this extravagance he still had money left for space in that shiny car. If Dixie had had any folks anywhere it might have occurred at this point to have his picture taken that they might see how he was prospering. But there was only Sandy, who was on the evergreen shore.

At the station Dixie tendered a tener and called for a ticket to the big city on the river, some 200 miles across the state.

"Would you like an accident ticket, too?" suggested the agent, winking to a friend.

"Sure," said Dixie, as he had at the barber shop, "I'll take anything you got."

The traveler found a comfortable seat in the chair car. People of quality were on every side. There were pretty girls, nicely dressed women, business-like traveling men. All seemed to take Dixie's presence among them quite as a matter of course. When the conductor came in suddenly, Dixie's first idea was to duck back of the seat, but he recovered from his fright in time and bravely held out his ticket.

The train merchant sold Dixie something of everything he carried. He regretted that he had not fetched along a line of mining stock for such an easy customer.

A small boy and girl, seeing Dixie's treasure house, toddled around to his seat, and were generously invited to "pitch in." Other little ones, noticing the free supply bureau, broke away from their mothers' detaining arms, and put in their applications for a divide. The urchins soon cleaned out the traveler's stock, and he summoned the willing train merchant to bring the wherewithal for the increasing demand.

Dixie's fame spread into the adjoining car, and people came in to see the little folks raiding the commissary. If the question of the most popular man in that car had been put to a vote of the children, Dixie wouldn't have had a rival worth talking about. To them his wide mouth, furrowed cheeks and coarse, reddish hair were all elements of manly beauty.

Sixty miles from the city was the junction. Dixie bade his little friends goodbye and got out to take the train for the big city. It was now gathering dusk. The sky had become overcast with rain clouds. A train of two coaches and a baggage car was waiting for the passengers to the city. An old lady pushed heavily against Dixie.

"Excuse me, sir," she said, "I'm blind."

She had several large packages, and was entirely unattended.

"Are you goin' on this train, ma'am?" asked Dixie.

"Yes, sir, if it is the train to the city. My son and daughter-in-law drove in with me, but they said it was going to rain and they would have to leave before—"

"All aboard!" shouted the conductor.

Dixie seized the blind woman's biggest bundle with one hand and with the other assisted her up the steps and into the rear car. There he found her a seat and stowed her bundles about her. The train started.

"I'm going to the city, too," said Dixie, seating himself beside the old lady, "and when we get there I'll help you hunt up your friends—I guess they'll be at the depot."

The blind woman shook her head sadly.

"I have no friends to meet me," she said; "I'm going to the county house."

Her companion had been good and showed an interest in her, and to him she told her story without reservation. She said her son lived on a farm not far from the junction town; he had always been kind and affectionate to her, but within the year he had married; his wife was young and just a "little bit exacting," as she expressed it, and after some difficulties there had been a family council and it was decided that she should go to the county house for a while; they were to send her clothing and supply such things as she might need and would visit her occasionally.

"They are poor, very poor," said the old lady, in extenuation, "and my boy has to work awful hard to make a living. But—but I—I never thought he'd send me to the poor house."

She turned her head and rested it for a while on the back of her seat.

Out of the darkness and the rain a gossamer form, with a white, sweet face and dark, earnest eyes, appeared and hovered between the man and the woman.

"You have been a good and obedient boy, and have never caused me an hour's uneasiness. I am going to leave you now, my son, and I just want to say this to you: If you treat all women with the respect and kindness you have shown your mother you will be a good man, and we will meet again."

That was years ago, when he was a bright-faced schoolboy, before he started for the land of unrest. He had something of an idea as to how his own mother would have felt had he turned her over to the charity authorities. Worthless as his life had been, there was no haunting spectre of ingratitude. There were viler things than just being a tramp.

Dixie soothed the blind woman as best he could, trying to drive all the gloomy forebodings away. She clutched pathetically at every straw of hope he held out, but her mind constantly returned to the unspeakable dread:

"I'm going to be a county pauper."

The rain beat heavily on the roof of the car. Beside the window the diamond drops glistened. Now and then a great white light appeared on the parallel track, and a long train rushed by with an ear-splitting roar. As they approached the city, tracks began to converge on the terminal line. The semaphores were more numerous, with here and there a tower for the men whose duty it was to keep the tracks clear.

Dixie got up and walked to the rear end of the car. He noticed, with an experienced eye, that the red lights were properly placed on the rear platform. It was a black night, one that tried the nerves of enginemen and dispatchers. There were tracks on all sides now. On some, long freight trains were standing awaiting the passenger. Suddenly the train shot by a small suburban station. On the sidetrack there was a passenger train. Dixie noticed it start up soon as his train passed. Presently the bright electric headlight was on the track directly behind. This was no cause for uneasiness, because the engineer knew there was a train just ahead and could keep a safe distance behind. For a while the white light kept back, and then seemed to leap forward suddenly. Dixie noted with swift intuition that something was wrong in the cab of the following train. While crossing the Rockies on the blind baggage he had been seized by engine crews and "drafted" to help feed the furnaces. There he learned of the tricks sometimes played by air and steam by which an engineer for a brief space loses control of his big machine. Dixie was satisfied that something like this had happened to the train in the rear and that disaster was imminent. There was nothing of the hero in Dixie's anatomy. The chances are he would have made a very indifferent soldier. He took all sorts of chances on the rods and the bumpers, but it never occurred to him that it required any bravery to do that, because somehow he had always pulled through. In a second he had thought out a plan to save that car of people. With quick step he walked forward and in low tones advised those there to move rapidly into the car ahead. Walking to the rear he quietly made the communication to those he passed, urging them to move quietly and to not block the way. Of course many excitable ones uttered exclamations of terror and caused more or less confusion, but the evacuation was carried on with a fair degree of discipline. Until he was back in the rear end again Dixie had forgotten his fellow traveler. She was still in her seat, seeming to comprehend that something was about to happen, but not knowing which way to turn. The other people in the car, anxious for their own safety, and unaware that she was blind, had not offered her assistance. Dixie took her arm, and started pushing her ahead of him toward the front. The car was flooded with dazzling radiance through the rear door, there was a compact as of two worlds meeting, a harsh, ripping sound, and then all was dark.

In the railway hospital a wreck of a man lay picking at the covers, and tossing nervously. A physician walked to the cot, placed his hand on the patient's brow a moment and then sat down beside him.

"You—you found that, Doc?"

"Yes. It was for $5,000. She'll get it all if—"

"I know. I know. You told her son about it?"

"Yes. He and her daughter-in-law are with her now. She will get well."

"Are—are they good to her?"

"Why, yes," replied the physician, "they seem very affectionate. They can't do enough for her."

The invalid suddenly raised up. His lips parted, and he murmured the one word, "Mother." Then his head fell back on the pillow, and something like a smile swept across his gaunt face.

"Doc," he whispered.

"Yes, my boy."

"Don't ever let her know I was just—er—a 'bo.' We was traveling together, me and her, and I guess that's the way she thought I done all my ridin'."

The Evangel of Grace

By G. Campbell Morgan

"The Gospel of the grace of God."—Acts xx 24.

The text is not a complete sentence; it is only a phrase; but what a phrase it is! The mere reading of it lifts the soul to the highest levels of thought; the horizons are set further back, and the sense of the spirit is that of space, beauty, and strength.

The three outstanding words suggest the supreme things of man's hope and confidence; Gospel, Grace, God. The seven words leave the three shining in a connected glory, "the Gospel of the Grace of God." The music is in an ascending scale. "The gospel," and the word is suggestive of hope and expectation; "of the grace," and immediately we are in the presence of the mystic melodies that merge into the ultimate harmonies; "of God," and once again the music ascends into the sublimity of unuttered silence.

The phrase was used by Paul at Miletus in his farewell to the elders of the church at Ephesus. He was on his way to Jerusalem. At the time his experience of the communion of the Holy Ghost was that of the Spirit's witness that bonds and affliction awaited him. The sky was dark with gathering clouds of trouble; yet he did not count his life dear to him, but he did count it of supreme importance that he should fulfil his ministry of testifying to the gospel of the grace of God. There is not a note of anger in this message. There is no syllable of judgment within this gospel. It may be necessary sometimes to strike severer notes, and to tell foolish, wayward men what must be the inevitable result of refusing to listen to the message of the gospel; but no condemnation is in the gospel itself, it is the note of escape from condemnation. There is no judgment here, it is the message of the infinite compassion and mercy of our God.

There is no definition of grace save by the way of the activity of grace. I know what grace is when I observe what grace accomplishes. I understand the real meaning of the grace of God only when I am brought to an apprehension of what grace does. So leaving the word in its mystic glory, in that mystery which is revelation, and that revelation which ever enfolds itself again in infinite mystery, we proceed to enquire what grace has done for its own self-revelation.

A Declaration and Revelation and Proclamation.

I propose to say three things concerning this inclusive gospel. First, the gospel of the grace of God is a declaration concerning the attitude of God toward sinning men. Secondly, the gospel of the grace of God is a revelation of the activity of God on behalf of sinning men. Finally, the gospel of the grace of God is a proclamation of the fact that man, sinning man, may be accepted by God.

The glory of God revealed in nature is such that I am amazed, as I think within my own limited experience of myself, that God can have any thought for me, or visit me; but when, turning my eyes from the wonders of the Divine revelation in nature and looking within, I know my sin, not merely the inherited poison, but the actual rebellion, that I myself have chosen evil when I have known good; I turn back to nature and I ask for good news, I find that nature has no good news for the one who breaks law! To break law is to be broken by law. To sin against the rhythmic operations of nature is to be ground to powder by the magnificent forces of nature. There is no gospel in nature.

The Gospel in Human Religion.

There is no gospel in human religion. Human religion may be perfectly sincere. Human religion may have certain values. These things I am not now discussing. But there is no gospel in human religion. The sincerest souls of men that have groped after some form of religion have confessed that they found no gospel. The ultimate note is always one of hopelessness. After many reincarnations the soul may reach at last forgetfulness, nothingness, loss of individuality. That is not a gospel. It may be the last speculation of despair; but there is no gospel in it.

If we would have a gospel we must come to the Son of God, for it is only in and through him that we hear its music, know its promise, or are brought to understanding of all its gracious facts and forces.

Love Fundamental.

The gospel declares in the first place that God's attitude toward the sinning man is that of love. That is fundamental. All this gospel is contained in that one verse, the simplest and profoundest in all the New Testament, the most familiar to this congregation, and the least explored as to all its rich and varied values, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son." Oh, that we knew how to preach it, that we knew how to say it, that we know how to proclaim it to men fast bound in sin and nature's night; this great and gracious fact, the first value of the gospel, its fundamental message; God loves the sinner in his sin.

If that be fundamental, the resultant truth is that the gospel teaches us God's hostility to sin. That is not to contradict the first statement, but to give true exposition to it. Because he loves man he cannot compromise with the poison that destroys. The intensity of the Divine hostility to sin is the Divine love for the sinner. The white heat of his anger against every form of iniquity is the abiding fire of his infinite love for man. So that no man can be at peace with God and with sin at the same moment. The gospel declares that; that is its burden, its message. It was the message of the life of our Lord, the message of his perpetual teaching; it was the last and awful message of the Cross, that if a man be at peace with sin, God is at war with him for very love of him. I do not say that no man can sin and be at peace with God. A man may be at peace with God, and yet blunder by the way, fall into sin, but the moment he has sinned the sin, he is at war with himself and with his sin. That is evidence that he is at peace with God.

Must Remove Sin.

But that is not all the gospel declares concerning God. If the gospel did but reveal to us these attitudes, love toward the sinner, and hostility to sin, there is no message of hope in it. The attitude of God revealed in the gospel is an attitude essentially of purpose and of power in order that the sin against which his wrath is kindled may be removed, so that the sinner for whom his love burns may be delivered.

God cannot rest in the presence of sin, without making possible its removal. That is the heart of the gospel, the reason of it, that is the grace of God. God hates sin, and therefore all the resources of his might and of his wisdom must provide a way of salvation, and the must depends, not upon any human standard of right and wrong, not upon any claim that man can have upon God; the must depends upon his nature, his being, his heart; he must, because of what he is in himself, make a way by which his banished ones may return—he must accomplish the possibility of human redemption. Grace in God is compassion, and compassion is sorrow, and compassion is passion in action.

Our second declaration grows immediately from our first. The gospel not only reveals the attitude of God, but declares his activity on the part of sinning men.

When Man is Awakened.

Man awakened to a sense of his spiritual life is always awakened to the consciousness of sin. Man, awakened to the consciousness of sin through being awakened to a sense of his spiritual life, looks back, looks in, and looks on. He looks back and there is with him the burden of the past; he remembers the sins of the years, and asks what can he do with them? He looks within and is conscious of the importance of the present, the inability not to do again the thing he did yesterday. The sin of yesterday, how it burns, like a phantom of the night it haunts the soul; in the gay hour of brightness and frivolity, the sin of yesterday passes before the vision, and the sun

(Continued on page 11.)

THE HIGH CALLING

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS."

Copyright 1911, George H. Doran Co.

CHAPTER XI.—(Continued.)

"It was Van Shaw," said Helen with a short laugh. "Walter spoke last Christmas about the solid silver dog collars Mr. Van Shaw purchased for his kennel. Fancy Mr. Bauer buying solid silver dog collars! Fancy him even buying a dog!"

"Unless it was to prevent someone from abusing it. I never met a young man with such a kind heart as Bauer."

Helen did not answer. She sat with her hands clasped over her knees, looking off through the window. At last she rose and went into her room, and returned almost immediately.

"Mother," she said, with a note of hesitation that was new to her, "would it be all right for me to help Mr. Bauer out of my allowance? If the rest of the family is going to help I'd like to give twenty-five dollars."

She put the money into her mother's lap and sat down in front of her.

Mrs. Douglas was startled at the girl's perfectly transparent act. She thought she knew Helen, but for a moment she questioned her own insight. Then she did what she had always done in the intimacy she had encouraged between himself and her children.

"Why do you want to do this, Helen?"

"Because—because I can't help feeling—"

"Well?"

"I don't love him, mother,—no,—I am sure of myself. But it seems dreadful to think of him dying, just because of the need of a little money. I have never been sick. I wonder how I should feel to face such a fate. I believe it would drive me crazy."

"But how do you think Mr. Bauer will understand your gift? If he is so sensitive as Walter says———"

Over Helen's face the warm color swept.

"Why does he need to know? We are all going to help, aren't we? But we don't need to tell him. I would not have him know for the world."

"Wait till father comes home. We will talk it over with him," said Esther after a pause. "I don't question your sincerity. It is a terrible loss to lose the physical strength and face death at a sure distance. Poor Bauer! And all that family trouble, too. He never hinted at that when he was here."

Helen recalled her innocent questioning of Bauer about his people and the silence he had maintained at the time. In the light of what she knew now, the figure of the German student assumed a tragic character, invested with deep pathos, and she had to confess that it was treading on dangerous ground to dwell too long on the picture. Still she asserted stoutly that her feeling was one of simple friendship, and even went so far as to anticipate a possible question again on her mother's part.

"You must not think, Mommee, that I have any other feeling for him. That is not possible. The man I marry must have money. And poor Mr. Bauer has lost all of his. That is the reason I am willing to help him. Money seems so absolutely necessary in this world, mother, isn't it?"

"Not so necessary as a good many other things."

"But in this case, mother, what else can do any good? It is money that Mr. Bauer needs. Not sympathy nor—nor—even friendship, just money. Is there anything else that can save his life?"

"It seems not."

"Then money is the thing," said Helen with a show of getting the better of her mother in an argument. "I don't pretend to hide my admiration for money. You know, mother, it is the most powerful thing in the world."

"There are other things," said Esther quietly. She did not try to argue with Helen over the subject. They had several times gone over the same ground and each time Esther had realized more deeply and with a growing feeling of pain that Helen had almost a morbid passion for money and the things that money could buy. She was not avaricious. On the contrary, she was remarkably generous and unselfish in the use of her allowance. But there was a deep and far-reaching prejudice in the girl's mind for all the brilliant, soft, luxurious, elegant side of wealth and its allurements that made Esther tremble more and more for the girl's future, especially when her marriage was thought of.

All this had its bearing on Esther's thought of Bauer. He had never been to her a possible thought as Helen's lover. All his own and his people's history were against him. But no one had ever come into the Douglas family circle who had won such a feeling of esteem, and Esther had felt drawn towards the truly homeless lad with a compassion that might in time have yielded to him a place as a possible member of the family. Now anything like that relation seemed remote, and Helen's own frank declaration put the matter out of the question. Over all these things Esther Douglas pondered and in her simple straightforward fashion laid them at the feet of her God for the help she could not give herself.

When Paul came home to luncheon both Esther and Helen could see at once that something had happened greatly to please him. Paul was transparent and never made any pretence at any sort of concealment of his feelings.

"Yes, now you people laugh at that," he said as he handed the eastern publisher's letter over to Esther.

Esther read the letter out loud. It was an extended business statement acknowledging the receipt of the book manuscript and Paul's blunt announcement of the terms he was willing to make for its publication; cash down, waiving all royalty rights, the book to be published entirely at the publisher's risk and the plates to be the property of the publishing house, no rights reserved for the author.

The eastern publisher acknowledged the frankness of the author's note, which he said was unusual. Also the terms, which were not generally considered, few manuscripts being purchased outright by the firm. However, the book was more than favorably reported by two of the three principal readers and by the senior member of the house, and they were prepared to make an offer in the shape of the enclosed check which it was hoped would be satisfactory to Mr. Douglas.

"Five hundred," said Esther, reading the amount as she held up the check for Helen to see. "Why, isn't it worth more than that?"

"The way you people have been talking lately," said Paul, pretending great indignation, "it wasn't worth five cents. I'm satisfied. At ten per cent royalty they would have to sell five thousand copies and it would be two or three years before I got the money. No, I prefer the cash, and let them take the risk. Now we can help Bauer. That is, I can. This is all my philanthropy. I'll send one hundred dollars to Masters for the mission work and the balance for Bauer. Walter's estimate of three hundred dollars a year is too small. It won't give the fellow the things he needs. My! But won't it be fine to help him! There's nothing like money, is there, Esther?"

"Just what I keep telling her," said Helen, her eyes sparkling and her lips smiling at the sight of her mother's somewhat grave acceptance of Paul's statement.

"I'm glad he is going to get the benefit of it," said Esther heartily. "And I think we owe you an apology for the way we have treated your little book. I feel proud to think my husband can write a five hundred dollar book. I hope it will be one of the six best sellers."

"If it is, the publishers will make a lot," said Paul. "But I hardly think it. Trashy fiction makes best sellers. My book is written to make people think, not to lose their thoughts. So I've no false ambitions for it."

As a matter of fact, in course of time Paul's volume sold between seven and eight thousand copies and then the sale ceased. But the book had good notices from several thoughtful reviewers and gave him considerable advertising, encouraging him to go on with another volume on popular government.

"Now the problem will be to get Bauer to take the money," said Esther. "It's going to be a delicate matter."

"Do you think so? I hadn't thought of that. Surely Walter can manage it. He will have to take it."

"I think you will find it is not so easy. It seemed to me last winter that Mr. Bauer was about the most stubborn and independent young man I ever saw."

"But what can he do? He can't help himself. He will have to take it."

"Leave it to Walter to manage," said Esther. "He is better acquainted with him than we are."

So Paul wrote Walter, enclosing a check for $400, and asking him to manage the matter with Bauer the best he could, and at the same time he wrote Masters telling him of Bauer and making inquiry about the climate and especially concerning the possibility of Bauer fitting into any work about the mission.

After Paul had gone away from the table to his office to attend to this matter, Esther took out Helen's money and quietly handed it to her.

"You won't need to offer this now."

"No, not now," said Helen, blushing.

"Nor any time, I hope. If Mr. Bauer gets well there at Tolchaco he will probably be able to secure permanent work and take care of himself."

"Yes," Helen said, after a pause in which she seemed to her mother about to make a confidence. But she did not seem quite certain of herself and finally without any more words went up to her room.

Two days later Walter received his father's letter which he read with a sense of great rejoicing.

"Why, it's just like a story book! Dear old pater! He's the best ever!"

Then he took up the check and began to consider how he would present the matter to Bauer. No one knew better than himself how sensitive Bauer could be on occasion. But he was helpless, and under the circumstances, what else could he do but let his friends come to his assistance? If there was no other way he could probably be prevailed on to take the money as a loan and pay back when his royalties came due on the incubator sales.

He was going over the matter when Bauer came in from his room across the hall.

"How goes it?" asked Walter cheerfully.

"All right," said Bauer gravely. "I don't believe anything ails me. Haven't had another since the last one."

"No? Well, what you want to do is to get right out to the painted desert. Why don't you start?"

"The walking is poor, and I never did enjoy the hot, dusty cars."

"Letters!" said one of the boys who roomed on the next floor. He opened the door as he spoke and threw Walter two letters and seeing Bauer, he said, "One for you!" threw it at him and went on.

Walter opened his letters, which were from his mother and Louis. When he looked up from his reading and glanced at Bauer he saw that something had happened.

"From him," said Bauer briefly.

He handed his letter over to Walter. It was dated and postmarked at Monte Carlo and contained a draft on New York for four hundred dollars.

"I don't ask you to do anything or forgive or anything like that. But as proof that hell is better than this place, I am sending you the last dollar I have after losing the rest of it at the table. Perhaps, even in hell where I am going, there will be some respite granted me for not being totally depraved."

That was all, not even an initial signed.

"It means——" Walter stammered.

"That he has committed suicide—yes—I suppose——"

"But there's been no newspaper account. No item in the New York journals."

Bauer shook his head. "The cases at Monte Carlo don't get into the newspapers." And then to Walter's embarrassment, Bauer broke down and sobbed as if he would never stop. But after all, his father, in spite of his sins, had really loved the boy, and Bauer was of a very affectionate nature which had never in all his lifetime been satisfied.

Before Walter could offer a word of sympathy Bauer got up and bolted for his room. Walter suspected what was coming and before Bauer could lock his door he had gone in after him. The hemorrhage was severe. When Bauer was through with it and on his couch, Walter rapidly outlined a plan for Bauer. He must get out to the painted desert at once.

"I wanted to wait until you could go, but it isn't fair to ask you before term closes and that won't be for six weeks. Oh, yes, I can make it alone all right. Don't worry over that. And now I've got this money, that settles it."

Walter wondered if he ought to tell him about the money from home. Finally he did tell him frankly and was pleased at the way Bauer took it. When Walter suggested that in case he had to stay out there any length of time, the money would be held in trust for him, Bauer did not object, simply saying that by that time he would either be well or dead.

Two days after this, Paul wrote that Mr. Masters at Tolchaco had written cordially, saying Bauer would be welcome at the mission and could have the old Council Hogon. He thought if his case was like a number of others he had known, that it would be perfectly possible for him in a year or two to be of real service about the mission.

Walter gave out all this information as he helped Bauer pack up. He had misgivings about letting him start alone, but after consulting the doctor, concluded there was no special risk for Bauer and when the day came for him to leave, he was much pleased to note Bauer's good spirits in spite of the shock of his father's act and his own dubious future.

Masters had sent word that Bauer was to go to Canon Diablo where a wagon would be waiting to drive him the twenty-four miles to Tolchaco. Walter went down and saw him comfortably started and then went back to his room, feeling relieved to know that matters were going so well, after promising Bauer that if possible he would come and see him during the summer. It would depend on the financial outlook.

(To be continued.)

The Evangel of Grace

(Continued from page 9.)

is eclipsed and the whole world is plunged in darkness. But the agony of all agonies is that the man, conscious of that sin of yesterday as guilt, is yet more conscious that it is in him as power mastering him. He vows in the silence of the night that he will never sin the sin again; and ere twenty-four hours have passed over his head he has sinned it, and knows he will sin it again, and yet again.

The guilt of the thing done yesterday, God have mercy on my soul, how terrible a thing is that! It is that sense of sin that the greatest master of English poetry expressed in the tragic and awful language of Lady Macbeth, "Out, out damned spot." You do not need to go to a theater to see that acted, it is acted in your own soul. Yes, but keener than that, more terrible is this, that I shall put another stain there, and I cannot help it! That is the tragedy of sin.

Sense of the Past and Fear of the Future.

With that sense of the past upon the soul, and the sense of present incompetence weighing upon the spirit, the eyes are lifted to the great future with its terrors; they are inevitable, they are the results of these things of yesterday and today, the guilt of past sin, the power of present sin; all the future is lurid with the grey of gathered thunder-clouds. That is the tragedy of a soul conscious of sin! If the gospel is worth anything, it must deal with all that.

"The gospel of the grace of God" first proclaims pardon for the sinner, the forgiveness of sins. You tell me it is a moral impossibility, and over against your moral impossibility I place the mystery of the cross. If you can explain the cross in the terms of time, if you reduce the cross to the level of a Roman gibbet on a green hill in Palestine, and a dying man; of course it can never deal with moral guilt to the satisfaction of a human soul, to say nothing of the satisfaction of an eternal, holy God; but when the cross is seen as a mystery, a mere unveiling in time of that which is eternal in principle; an unveiling in the awfulness of a vulgar tragedy in blood of the breaking, crushed heart of the God who suffers because men sin; then I begin to feel that the spot will come out; I begin to know what can only be expressed in the imperfect language of material symbolism, but which is in itself the essential mystery of redemption. "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." The gospel reveals the divine passion, pain, agony, sorrow; whereby the past is canceled, made not to be, put away, forgiven.

The Supreme Event.

But that is not enough. I must be superlative; this is a superlative theme. I will speak for myself. Hear me as a witness rather than as an advocate. It is not enough that the thing I did yesterday is forgiven. Unless the power that compelled me to do it, is broken within me, it is not enough. If the message for the past is the mystery of the cross, the message for the present is the might of the resurrection. The one lonely, supreme event in human history, is that he rose from among the dead, and that by way of that resurrection he revealed to men the fact, not only that his life was perfect, and that by his passion it is possible for him to forgive sin; but that his life, perfect within itself, bruised in the mystery of the great atoning work, is liberated that it may be bestowed upon sinning men, that they may share his purity in power, and that by living relationship with the risen Lord they may obey his sweet and mighty word to "Go and sin no more." The gospel not merely proclaims pardon for the past, it proclaims power for the present. If not, it is not a sufficient gospel. But it is sufficient. The witnesses are here. It is not the habit to call witnesses in this building; I sometimes wish it were, but they are here, men and women, young men and young women, who know that the power of Christ is equal to snapping chains, putting fires out, and setting their feet in the highway of holiness that leads to life.

Tomorrow.

Finally, has the gospel anything to say to me about tomorrow? For I call the testimony of the saints, wherein I bear my part, that whereas we know the joy of sin forgiven and whereas in part we know the power that triumphs over sin, we also have to say as this same apostle said when he wrote to his Philippian children, I am not yet perfected, I have not yet apprehended that for which I was apprehended in Christ. Is there to be ultimate deliverance? Is there to be a day of full realization? Will all the powers of my personality one day harmonize with the good and perfect and acceptable will of God? Let my question be answered from the same letter. He has already said, "Not that I have already obtained, or am already made perfect . . . I count not myself yet to have apprehended." Buut he did not sit down and sigh. What did he do? "One thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal." What goal? Read to the end of the great paragraph. He speaks of a day in which the Lord shall "fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory." That is the last and final perfecting of the life. All my life, mysterious, complex, made more wonderful than ever by the revelation of his gospel, shall harmonize with himself; and I shall see God and be satisfied, and to Mr. stand unashamed in the light of the he spaces. "He shall present me faul fore the throne of his glory." hurch.

ole woman of ork, widow of

What I must do is all that not what the people think.—

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison.

Mrs. Harrison will be glad to receive communications from any of her readers offering suggestions concerning woman's welfare, criticisms of articles or inquiries concerning any matters relevant to her department. She should be addressed directly at 530 Elm Tree Lane, Lexington, Ky.

A JULY GARDEN OVER THE SEA

Our June Garden paper was closed with a glimpse of the perfect beauty of a garden in the wilderness of our Kentucky mountains; possibly, its flowers had blushed unseen by human eye, till our little party of tourists gazed on it with wonder and delight.

Our July garden will be one of the finished products of the old world, where art and wealth have labored for centuries in loving companionship with nature.

Two years ago this month, it was my happy fortune to be a guest in a beautiful town in southwestern Scotland, not far from the English border. Every lover of English literature has felt the charm of its country life, with parks and gardens as a background for the beloved heroes and heroines of the English novel. My fellow traveler and I had planned to go from Edinburg to London down the east coast, stopping at as many of the cathedral towns on the way as possible. In our crowded itinerary we had the alternative of giving up this attractive trip, or declining the invitation of some kind friends to visit them. We reasoned, that in our coming journey on the continent we should see many cathedrals, but we might never again have the chance of seeing English town life at its best—so we gave up the cathedrals and went to this typical town for a week-end visit.

The Home and the Hosts.

The house was all beautiful within and without, and our hosts were of the class that has made England what it is—high-born, with wealth, leisure and culture, and of sincere and unaffected piety. Every morning after breakfast, all the household was gathered for prayers; the host (who was a Presbyterian) read a passage from the Bible, commented on it, and offered prayer—the hostess presided at the organ and lead in the singing. All the house servants left their tasks at this busiest part of the day, to join in the service; but there was no hurry, no rush to return to the day's work—everything was deliberate, tranquil and devout.

The Grounds.

The home was set in surroundings of surpassing charm; the view from the front had the park with its hedges and noble trees for a foreground, and a mountain for its background; in the rear, the level lawn sloped gently down to the Solway, which shone like silver in the sun. But, alas!—the sun shone but fitfully during our visit there; showers would come up without a moment's warning, and would go as suddenly as they came. I have always been sorry we did not count the showers that pelted down on us during our three days' stay there—but no one seemed to pay any attention to them; as I watched the men mowing and rolling the lawn, with the silver rain streaming down on them, I had a vivid remembrance of the old darky who worked in my garden in Kentucky, reaching for his coat, and beating a hasty retreat to shelter before the first drop of a summer shower would fall. Our hostess took us out for a pleasure walk, while a rou nteady drizzle was coming down.

have any Climate for Green Things Growing.

not possible. were the plants set in such an enmoney. And—sun, and shower, and an equable of his. That gave them all they needed for to help him. Mit. So green was everything, necessary in this part of the Emerald Isle d over the Irish Sea to this favored and sheltered spot. The growth was so close and so luxuriant, that it seemed one could make a hedge out of anything—the hawthorn, the rhododendron, the yew, trimmed with geometrical precision, made those walls of living green that the English love. How different is this mild, misty air of alternate sun and shower from our sudden changes of temperature, and long, wasting droughts! And when you add to these advantages of climate, wealth and taste, and the most expert gardeners, you certainly find the ideal location for the perfect garden.

The Kitchen Garden.

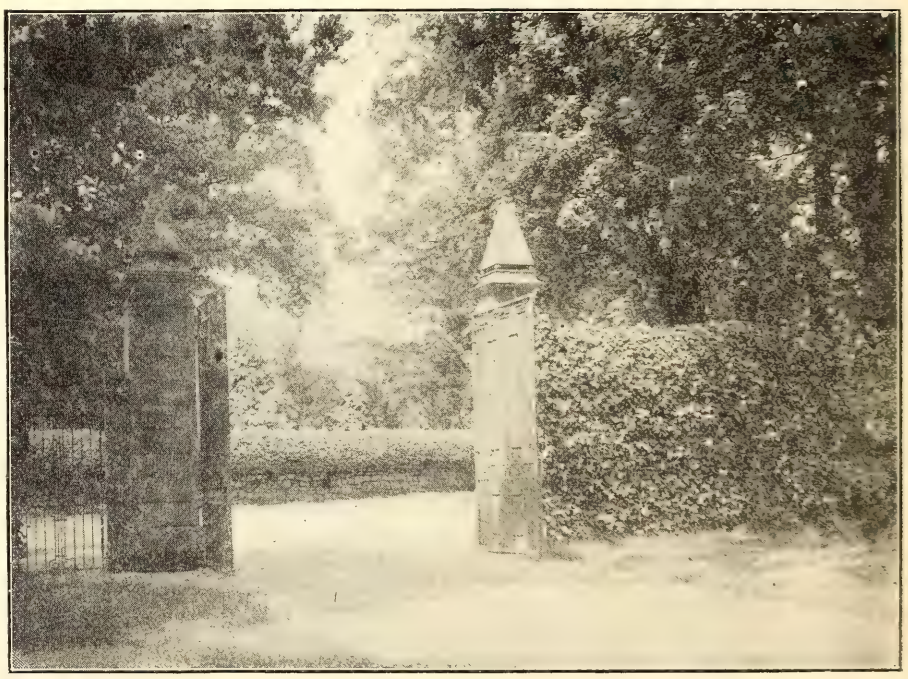
The kitchen garden was a combination of the artistic and utilitarian, that filled us with delight in its beauty, and despair of ever emulating it. All around it was a brick wall, fully twelve feet high, which looked like it might have grown there, so covered was it with verdure; on the outside, ivy and other vines clambered over it, on the inside, fruit trees were trained flat against it, espalier fashion—there were apricots, peaches, cherries, and to my surprise, figs; it seemed strange to see a semi-tropical fruit growing outdoors in this northern latitude. The gooseberries and currants were the largest I had ever seen; the strawberry bed was protected from birds and bugs by a wire netting, and were of surpassing size and flavor. Everything was arranged in beds, with bordered walls between and was as charming to the eye as it was tempting to the palate. My friend and I took a certain satisfaction, where everything was so perfect, in noting that there were no tomatoes and corn in the garden—there was not enough sunshine to ripen them in this land of cloud and mist.

The greenhouses were without the wall, but were a kind of annex to the kitchen garden. These were used not only for forcing plants and early vegetables, but for growing fruits and flowers of a more tropical clime. Several of them were for pineapples and hothouse grapes: in one of the flower houses, a superb bougainvillea, almost covering the sides and roof with its gorgeous blossoms, is a perpetual picture in my memory.

The Flowers.

Certainly some kind fairy lead us to this place at this time, for these early July days seemed to be the cream of the year for flowers in southern Scotland. The roses were in their prime; all the tea roses grew out there, and I have never seen finer specimens and greater varieties than in this old garden. The pansies were of astonishing perfection and profusion—there was a bed of lavender pansies on the lawn that was the most exquisite thing of its kind that I have ever seen.

And it was worth crossing the ocean to see the rhododendrous; they were not only in the pink and purple shades I had seen at home but their range of color ran from white through delicate pink and mauve shades to deep crimson. Our host took special pride in his shrubberies, and had sent to many parts of the world for rare specimens. I was admiring one strange shrub, and he said he had sent to Chili for it.



Entrance to a Scotland Garden.

Everything showed the touch of the trained gardener—the gardens, the grounds, the home, had the finish that only comes when time and art and nature work harmoniously together—that intangible something that differentiates the beauty of the old world from that of the new. A garden wall, like the one I have mentioned, a yew hedge, a stately avenue of beeches, like those on this ideal place, takes many years of quiet growth to reach their full perfection.

We glory in the fact that we have no primogeniture, no law of entail (except in a limited sense) in our land. Our property cannot be tied up for generations—it is the exception for a child to pass his days in the home of his fathers in our restless country—the older son has no more privileges than other members of the family. It is our blessing that we have no privileged class by right of birth—that all are born equal. And yet we pay a price for these inestimable privileges; it would not be possible to find such a home as this in our changing, restless western world—all the wealth of a Morgan or a Rockefeller could not make it; it takes the mellow touch of time, the loving labor, not only of the living, but of generations long gone, to bring nature and art to such consummate perfection as we find in these finished gardens of the old world. I. W. H.

Mrs. Wilson's Ideas

A Philadelphia reporter who went down to Seagirt to apply an opinion extractor to the Wilson family, says that he found Mrs. Wilson still surrounded by the aura that clings to the soft South, and more particularly to the old-fashioned Southern woman—the woman who was once described by a distinguished visitor from abroad as "God's agent on earth."

In the interview which followed, the prospective "first lady of the land" is quoted as saying: "The happiest life for a woman contains three elements—a husband with whose tastes you sympathize, your home, and your children. I've often said—and I'm sure my husband, practical theorist that he is, agrees with me—that husbands and wives reach their truest and noblest development when they are complementary to each other. That's the way I feel about my husband. I want him to feel that I am always at his side.

"Mr. Wilson has an opportunity to do enormous good if he is permitted to carry out the principles and the high ideals for which he stands and has always stood. I know my husband better, perhaps, than any other person in this country. I have faith that he will live up to his opportunities.

"I believe that Mr. Wilson will be elected. If he is, I believe he will make a good president. To my mind, he possesses one of the most essential characteristics of a good president—sincerity.

"Mr. Wilson is the very essence of unselfishness. He never thinks of himself. I have to do that part of his thinking for him. That is one reason I say we are supplementary.

"It seems to me that a woman has almost enough to do in attending to her home. While I believe it wise for a wife to know everything about her husband's business affairs, I do not believe in a wife interfering in his business affairs. The home is woman's sphere, the world is man's.

"A man does not want to be bothered with housekeeping details. As a rule they are too trivial to be discussed. It is a good rule for wives not to trouble their husbands with the vagaries or idosyncrasies of the butcher and baker."

Touching upon the new social duties that will develop upon her in the event of Governor Wilson's election, Mrs. Wilson said:

"I have only been to Washington once. It seems curious, but I visited the national capital on only one occasion. This was a few years ago, when I accompanied Mr. Wilson to Washington, where he was to make an address.

"I have splendid health. I conserve my strength as much as possible, and I do not attempt things beyond my strength. If I did, something more important would probably suffer in consequence. I think that American women as a rule have too many interests at once. Thus they draw upon their strength far in excess of what they should to keep their health.

"However, the tireless energy of the twentieth century woman is wonderful to behold. It is a manifestation of the awakening spirit of American womanhood—a spirit that is destined to help us maintain ourselves in the vanguard of civilization. I am a great believer in the intellect, strength of character and optimism of the American woman."

Church Life

W. H. Bayley has resigned at West Side, San Francisco.

Hamilton, O., church will remodel its edifice with a view to accommodating the Sunday-school more adequately.

John Mullen has resigned the pulpit of First Church, Findlay, Ohio.

D. H. Bradbury has accepted a call to Rockwell Church, Syracuse, N. Y.

Mark W. Williams, Second Church, Milwaukee, is organizing a new congregation at Minot, S. D.

T. E. Brown, pastor at Lebanon, Ind., delivered twenty-eight commencement addresses this year.

Huntington and Kokomo, Ind., Sunday-schools are in a contest. At last report Huntington was ahead.

H. O. Pritchard, pastor of University Church, Bethany, Neb., is spending his vacation days with home folks in Indiana.

Charles C. Wilson, who resigned at First Church, Milwaukee, some time ago, will spend the summer in the country, near Malvern, O.

Pasadena, Calif., Church loses it pastor, W. C. Hull, who has resigned, with the intention of returning to the East. Mr. Hull was formerly pastor at Tonawanda, N. Y.

K. F. Nance has accepted and begun upon his work as pastor of First church, Hutchinson, Kans., where O. L. Cook labored for a number of years. He is greeted by large congregations despite the hot weather.

F. W. Emerson of San Francisco's First Church is spending sometime in Illinois. He visited Rockford, where he was invited to make a temperance address. He also spoke at the Christian and Methodist churches.

Piedmont Assembly will be held at Gordonsville, Va., July 26 to Aug. 4. The program includes many attractive features. Prof. W. M. Forrest, W. H. Book, H. P. Atkins, Earl Wilfley, E. B. Bagby, President S. T. Willis—these are a few of the inviting names on the program.

Mr. Grafton's "Keynote" Sermon.

The "keynote" sermon of T. W. Grafton on assuming his new pastorate at Third Church, Indianapolis, was an elaboration of the thesis that the church must be progressive in its practice. He explained the only one and one-half per cent of growth of Protestant churches during the last year as due to the fact that "the church is not utilizing modern methods to present the gospel."

Church Has its Own Printing Plant.

Seventh Church, Indianapolis, has its own printing press and prints its weekly bulletin and other literature thereon. Clay Trusty, the pastor, says it is both economical and convenient. The church is collecting funds for a new house of worship. Six thousand dollars is the mark they have set as a minimum on which to start operations. This amount is nearly in sight.

Debate the License Bill.

The men's Bible class of First Church, Youngstown, Ohio, held a debate July 22, with the men's class of First Church of Niles. The subject for discussion was "Resolved that the license proposal 151, known as the Anderson amendment to the constitution of the state of Ohio, should be approved by the people of Ohio at the polls on September 3." The debate was held on the lawn of Upson C. Greenwood, a member of the Youngstown class, and was a great affair.

Union Services in a Casino.

First Baptist and First Christian churches of Atlanta, Ga., joined together to hold services in a Casino located in Lake View Park. Howard T. Cree, of the Christian church, presided and the Baptist pastor preached. A great throng attended. The services are being repeated throughout the summer months. Special street car service has to be provided to transport the people. The deacons from both churches acted as ushers and distributed the hymn sheets, upon which were printed a score of hymns in familiar use with Christian people.

Religion Competing with Hot Weather.

A. R. Adams, pastor of Lansdowne Christian Church, East St. Louis, issued a request to the men of his congregation to attend services in hot weather in their shirt sleeves. The result was that about 100 men turned out without their coats. The Men's Club of the church by unamious vote adopted a resolution requesting the pastor to preach in his shirt sleeves. The pastor responded wisely that he feared it would establish a disrespectful precedent, but admitted that "another Sunday as hot as last Sunday would almost win him over."

L. N. D. Wells, pastor at East Orange, N. J., took "progressive" ground also on the matter of men appearing at the evening services in "negligee." Mr. Wells is described by a member of his church as "a sensible minister, who eschews frills and nonsense. He gets the maximum of religion out of us with the minimum of friction."

In the hope of increasing the attendance during the summer months the Sunday-school at Coshocton, O., has issued invitations to boys, urging them to attend services in their bare feet. This it is hoped will induce boys who usually play "hooky" during the heated season to attend regularly.

Maintaining the Disciples' Honor.

Finis Idleman, pastor of Central Church, Des Moines, Ia., who has undertaken the task of collecting funds for the Disciples' share of the expense of the Federal Council of Churches calls it "maintaining the honor of the Disciples" and asks the churches and personal givers to join him in no less solemn a league than is described by those words. The amount shames our pages by its littleness—only $1,300. But there are no resources except the voluntary gifts of those whose hearts the Lord has touched. A total of $448.60 has been received. "May we not redeem our word," asks Mr. Idleman, "namely, that we care with a passion for the union of God's people? The Federal Council has been more than patient, it has been long suffering." The following gifts have been received:

Previously reported	$301.00
Central Church, Denver, Colo.	25.00
First Church, Los Angeles, Calif.	25.00
First Church, Springfield, Ill.	25.00
J. H. Garrison, St. Louis, Mo.	10.00
First Church, Mason City, Ia.	10.00
University Place Church, Des Moines, Ia.	25.00
Dr. H. T. Morrison, Springfield, Ill.	10.00
Central Chruch, Denver, Colo	25.00
First Church, Columbia, Mo.	5.00
Wm. Bayard Craig, Redlands, Calif.	2.50
Total to date	$448.60

All gifts or pledges should be sent to Mr. Idleman.

Would Assist Pastor of Strong Church.

A highly cultivated and capable woman of wide experience in church work, widow of one of our most successful and distinguished younger ministers, desires a position as assistant pastor in a strong church. She is a leader in woman's missionary work, Sunday-school, young people's society and the social circle. Any church wishing such a helper will find her rarely gifted in the qualities essential to the most effective service. She would also be interested in a Y. W. C. A. position. Address Editors Christian Century.

New England Needs Ministers.

Lowell C. McPherson, 88 Park Ave., Worcester, Mass., says there are five parishes in New England needing ministers right now. Some of these are cities of more than 10,000 people. Bridgeport, Conn., is one. "A place for life for the right leader of a good people," says Mr. McPherson. "I know of no better field than New England. We want permanent men, not university students whose stay is but temporary." The New England convention will be held in Boston in September.

California Pastor Goes to Transylvania.

W. C. Bower, recently pastor of Wilshire Boulevard Church, Los Angeles, has been appointed to the chair of Religious Pedagogy at Transylvania University, succeeding Prof. W. F. Smith. Mr. Bower received his training in Tri-state College, Butler College, Columbia University and Union Theological Seminary. He will soon receive the Ph. D. degree from Columbia. He has particularly equipped himself both in theory and in experience for his new position. His work at Lexington will be taken up September 9.

Church Keeps Open House.

El Paso, Texas, church is installing a pipe organ during the ten weeks' absence of the pastor, Perry J. Rice. The church house is kept open each week day from 9:00 a. m. to 7:00 p. m., and passers-by are invited to enter for rest or prayer. Situated in the center of the business section, the invitation is often accepted. Mr. Rice has been preaching in the north during his vacation—revisiting his two former pastorates, South Bend, Ind., and Minneapolis. He will preach at Monroe Street church, Chicago, next Sunday.

A Sunday-school Leader's Call.

The contest between the eleven Disciple Sunday-schools of Cleveland and the one school of Canton, O., mentioned in these columns last week, was announced to the latter school by Pastor P. H. Welshimer in the following words: "Eleven schools to one. You ought to be glad you are alive in Canton, and can attend the Christian Bible-school and help excel Cleveland. We desire, we need, we invite, we plead for, we pray for, we expect every member of the Christian Church in Canton to get into the Bible-school and whoop it up for July and August. Also every member of the school to be on hand regularly, doing his or her best. Watch 3,000 roll into Bible-school at 9 a. m. Lord's day. The entire country will watch this contest. Be in it."

A Pastor's Appreciation and Sacrifice.

The parish paper of First Church, Lincoln, Neb., presents a picture of a leading member who recently withdrew, with about 100 others, to form the new Tabernacle Church. Pastor H. H. Harmon, of First Church, writes an appreciative word of this layman, Charles E. Hunt, and his wife. He says, among other good things: In one particular perhaps above others, Mr. Hunt has made a lasting contribution to our work. He has persistently insisted that if the members of the church were properly encouraged, each and all might be persuaded to become contributors in a financial way to the support of the work locally and for missions. His encouragement in this direction was a great factor in committing the First Church to the budget system and in lifting pledge taking and persistent calls from the pulpit. He was personally active in the solicitation of pledges and his example was an incentive to others who worked hard to realize this aim. Mr. Hunt has likewise been one of our best missionary leaders and was appointed missionary elder and chairman of the missions committee." That Mr. Harmon should have planned and worked for the building of a new congregation, knowing that it would take such workers as this from his own congregation reveals the magnanimity of his spirit and gives a clue to the secret of his great success in Lincoln.

Preacher Provides Municipal Entertainment.

A Houston, Texas, local paper tells the interesting story of the remarkable success of a "Municipal Entertainment" scheme devised and carried out by W. S. Lockhart, pastor Central Christian church. A moving picture entertainment is given on Sunday afternoons in the great auditorium which seats some 7,000 people. The purpose is to supply a legitimate satisfaction of the demand for diversion denied the people by the enforcement of the law against Sunday theatres of all kinds. Mr. Lockhart enlisted the co-operation of the mayor who backed the project with public funds in the interest of public welfare, and appointed the minister censor of the films and manager of municipal entertainments. The response of the people was tremendous from the start. Over 5,000 persons attended each Sunday. The films were educational, religious, scientific, historical, sociological and scenic. Musicians, lecturers and readers have been utilized. The plan is expanding for the coming season which will be begun as soon as the extreme hot weather has passed. The effect upon the private "shows" is said to be considerable. Through Mr. Lockhart's censorship of the films, but probably even more through the healthful influence of the municipal entertainment, the private managers are putting on a cleaner and higher grade of films. The good is overcoming the evil. This is a fine type of social service. Mr. Lockhart has resided in Houston two years.

Saturday Afternoon Junior Congregation.

Geo. W. Brewster, pastor at San Jose, Calif., conducts what he calls a "Junior Congregation" on Saturday afternoons in his church. It is a combination of entertainment, instruction and worship. Mr. Brewster says: "The service is held on Saturday afternoon so as to compete with the cheap shows and moving picture houses. It is also a holiday and many people come in from the country and bring their children with them. Some of them leave their children with us while they do their shopping and this all helps to meet a real social need and at the same time it is benefitting the child and parents in extending the scope of our church influence. Our congregation now runs from 300 to 500 and there are more children in our services on Saturday afternoon than in all the moving picture houses combined. It has been a great factor in interesting children and adults who are altogether outside of the sphere of our church influence and in that way is helping to not only build up our Bible-school but also our Sunday church services." This is both a shrewd and gracious enterprise, and could be duplicated to advantage in many communities.

Missionary Hardship By No Means Banished.

The impression is widespread that missionaries nowadays do not have to endure hardship, that the suffering incident to pioneer service in foreign lands has passed. In a degree this is true. There is less hostility on the part of the natives, more companionship through a greatly enlarged circle of workers, and much fellowship in an already substantial native church. Moreover the development of transportation enterprise has brought many western commodities to the doors of the missionaries. But the experience of Mrs. Olive L. Wakefield, wife of Dr. Paul Wakefield, in China, awakening and finding a six-foot snake in her bedroom should disillusionize those who imagine all hardship has vanished. Dr. Wakefield was away from home at Wu Li Pei in the interest of the mission at that place and Mrs. Wakefield was at home with her children. The big reptile got into her bedroom, no one knows how. In writing to Seventh Church, Indianapolis, whose "Living Link" Mrs. Wakefield is, she tells her experience with frankness. She says: "It gave me an awful fright. It was there in the morning and awakened me by the crash of knocking over the lamp on the dresser right by my bed. The house has been so overrun by rats that I supposed it was a rat, but you can imagine my horror when I jumped up to see two feet of the snake's tail waving back and forth from the side of my dresser. I could see by the dim light of the night lamp in the hall. I don't know how I managed to get by the dresser into the hall, but I did some way, raised the woman servant, got the door into the children's room shut and called the men from the outside. When they finally got there the big snake was coiled around the curtain pole above my bed. It was a hideous thing, but I learned later it was not poisonous and that I should not have been alarmed."

But she was alarmed and greatly unnerved, requiring many days in which to recover her courage and self-control.

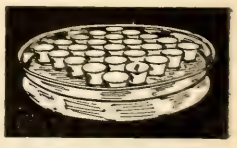
New York City Notes

Geo. W. Kramer has been chosen as president of the Disciple's Missionary Union for this year.

July 4 an interesting event took place at our Russian church. Jacob Rutsohn and Miss Mary Kettal, both members of the church, were married by Johns Johnson, our Russian missionary. A distinctly Christian Russian wedding is not a very common thing even in New York City, so the announcement called together a considerable company of friends to witness the ceremony. Mr. Johnson first preached an instructive sermon, presenting the teaching of the scriptures on the duties and obligations of the marriage relation, after which the ceremony was performed. Dinner was provided and about fifty-five remained to join in the wedding feast.

The warm weather is fully upon us and the exodus to the country has come. Everybody who can get away is out of the city. All our churches are open for the Sunday morning service and several of them will hold all the regular services throughout the whole summer. An open air meeting is held by our Russian church in the Russian section of Manhattan and some profitable gatherings have been held. The gospel is preached to the multitude in their own tongue.

H. B. McCormick has entered upon his work at 169th St. Church. This church has a splendid young men's organization of

DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE INDIVIDUAL
"Noiseless"
CUSHIONED TRAYS
4 Different Features
WHY?


1st—"Noiseless"—As all cup holes are cushioned.
2nd—Dust-proof—The Trays interlock.
3rd—A short glass—no need of tipping back the head.
4th—Automatic Filler—Fills rapidly and evenly.
Does not mar the sacredness of the service.
Write for booklet. Outfit sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 E. Randolph St., Dept. T., Chicago.

thirty-two members and a Bible-school enrollment of 300.

There are eleven churches of the Disciples in Greater New York and vicinity, with a total membership of 2,165 and a Sunday-school enrollment of 2,073. They contributed last year for missions and benevolences, etc., $5,847.46 and gave for local work $33,046.38.

JOSEPH KEEVIL,
Sup. of New York City Missions.

Many Are Interested

Our mail indicates that many friends are deeply concerned about the financial situation of the Foreign Society. For this evidence of sympathetic interest we are profoundly thankful. The prayerful thought for the missionaries is one of the most encouraging features of the work. They need and command the prayers of a large circle of spiritually minded people. The supreme interest in the receipts, of course, centers in the well-being and comfort of these men and women who have given themselves unreservedly to the proclamation of the gospel in the darkest portions of the world.

The receipts for the first fifteen days of July amounted to $26,006, a gain over the corresponding fifteen days of last year of $15,708. It will be noted that this is a most splendid gain, and what is most gratifying is that it comes from different sources and has to do chiefly with the regular receipts. The Sunday-schools alone gave $17,906, a gain of $7,574; the churches, $3,216, a gain of $165; and the gain in individual gifts amounted to $3,277. These figures show a total gain in regular receipts of $11,016. There was also a small gain in annuities and miscellaneous gifts.

Summing up, the total receipts for the first nine and one-half months of the current missionary year amounted to $221,774.59, a gain of $2,509. The gain in regular receipts amounted to $14,456.99. The gain from the Sunday-schools is $8,526 and from individual gifts, $9,654. A host of Sunday-schools have done far better this year than ever before. We regret to record a loss in annuity gifts of $16,427. However, we are encouraged to hope that this will be largely, if not ltogether overcome before the year closes. Nearly $4,000 will come in within a few days and we are expecting a gift of over $9,000 within the next month which will wipe out almost all of the loss on annuity gifts.

Only about two more months remain before the books close, September 30. We can make a great advance in that short time if we will. The call of the foreign fields was never louder or more insistent. Will you not please see that your church and Sunday-school are in line with generous offerings? And individual friends will bless their lives by sending generous contributions. Now is the time to act. We hope the friends will not defer the matter a single day.

We are the Lord's children, engaged in His service, sounding out the word of life with the means that He has placed in our hands. We cannot withhold if we are loyal to the last marching order of our risen Lord. We must be a missionary people. We must reproduce the New Testament church in teaching and spirit to the world. We must stand for the gospel in all of its teaching.

The Northern Presbyterians expect to send 100 new missionaries to China alone within the next three years. Other religious bodies are increasing their forces in China and other lands. We are abundantly able to keep abreast of the onward march if we will. This is no time to halt or look back. Onward is the emphatic word to pass all along the line.

STEPHEN J. COREY,
F. M. RAINS,
Secretaries.

Illinois

A revival meeting is in progress at Grayville, under the leadership of E. E. Violett and W. H. Kern.

Centralia church is being led in a revival meeting in a tabernacle by Evangelist Lew D. Hill. The pastor is A. L. Huff.

La Rose Church recently concluded a revival meeting held by its pastor, H. F. Kern, in which there were ten additions, eight of them being on profession of faith.

At Poco, W. M. Morris is holding a meeting which had resulted in four additions at last report. The church is a mission church not far from Unionville congregation.

F. W. Burnham, of Springfield, delivered the Sunday night address at the closing session of the State Christian Endeavor Society at Quincy the second Sunday in July.

At Grand Chain, where James Sharratt and daughter are in a revival meeting, there have been a number of additions, and with the interest prevailing so that others are yet expected.

The church at DuQuoin, of which Charles E. Smith is pastor, is to have a revival meeting in the fall led by Evangelist Violett. The church here has taken on larger life since the ministry of Mr. Smith began.

R. Sheeler Campbell, who formerly was pastor of Girard church, and more recently an assistant with the Scoville Evangelistic Company, has become temporary pastor of Taylorville church. It is understood Mr. Campbell will remain with the church at least three months.

Bellflower congregation is to have a new edifice constructed at once. Plans have already been adopted, and the work of construction will be pushed toward an early completion. The edifice complete will involve an expense of $18,000, making it a commodious and practical house in every respect. The plans prophesy one of the completest houses for the smaller towns among the Disciples of Illinois.

Secretary's Letter.

The new church at Monticello was organized by Andrew Scott while he was serving as district evangelist and they bought the vacant Baptist church with the help of R. E. Henry, district secretary. The house was renovated by the church and, after calling F. B. Jones, Decatur, for their minister, there was an all day service last Sunday for a good, cordial time and the raising of the balance on the property. R. E. Henry preached a fine sermon at the morning hour and followed with a money solicitation. At the afternoon service Eugene M. Smith, Decatur, delivered a sermon on the New Testament Church and more money was contributed. With some friends to be seen the church is sure they have the money to pay their debt and they are entitled to be very much pleased with their house.

Several neighboring churches were represented, among them DeLand, Bement, Champaign, Farmer City, Montic and Decatur; and of the ministers there were J. H. Stambaugh, D. H. Lovejoy, and S. E. Fisher who conducted the communion service in the afternoon.

The program of the state convention is now in press and will be mailed along with our fine poster announcing the convention to be held at Centralia, Sept. 2-5.

Charles W. Ross and Guy B. Williamson will assist J. W. Porter and the Rantoul church in a meeting to begin in September.

The fifth district is making an effort to get each minister within its bounds to hold one missionary meeting during the year.

The field secretary spent a Sunday with the Table Grove church in the celebration of their sixty-seventh anniversary, E. A. Cary minister. Mrs. Wilson was the only living charter member and she had the place of honor. R. P. Shepherd was the speaker of the occasion.

Begin now to plan for the state convention, for all those good Centralia people are wanting you. The rate of entertainment will be 75 cents for lodging and breakfast.

W. D. DEWEESE, Office Sec'y-Treas.
J. FRED JONES, Field Secretary.
Bloomington, Ill.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 27
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

This is Where
The Lincoln Cabin Rests
In "My Old Kentucky Home"

The Lincoln Memorial near Hogdenville, Ky.

And Thousands are Going to Visit This Famous Spot While in Attendance at the Great International Convention of the Disciples of Christ

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, OCTOBER 15 - 22

Write me for full particulars as to all the side trips and "Meet us in our Old Kentucky Home."

Geo. H. Jones, Secretary, Care First Christian Church, Louisville, Ky.

Winona Summer School of Missions

The eighth session of the summer school of missions under the auspices of the Interdenominational Committee of the Central West for Missions has just closed. The total registration numbered 355, representing 15 denominations and 17 States.

The program was of unusual strength and the most intense interest was manifested during the entire week. The devotions each morning, in charge of Mrs. C. E. Vickers, of the Friends' Church, but led by the women of the different denominations, were the source of much strength and power and in a most vital way insured the spiritual atmosphere of the day.

Sectional conferences relating to woman's work, young woman's work and children's work were held each day. Dr. I. T. Headland, author of the foreign mission study book, "China's New Day," gave us three addresses that were inspirational and practical. Mr. B. C. Milliken conducted the foreign mission study class as well as the normal study class twice each day. Rev. Bruce Kinney, D. D., author of the home mission study book, "Mormonism—the Islam of America," delivered two addresses that were most helpful. We also heard Mr. Hans P. Freece, who was born a Morman, tell of his father's conversion to Mormonism and his repudiation of it after a fair trial. Mrs. D. B. Wells, who has been with us the past eight summers, taught the home mission study book.

Wednesday, June 29, was devoted to young women. Sectional conference of the Westminster Guild and all young women's organizations were conducted by the young women themselves. Our own Mrs. E. M. Bowman had charge of the various activities of the day. At noon she had arranged for a luncheon at the Winona hotel. One hundred and thirty ladies enjoyed the hour together, the young women exhibiting much originality in responding to the toasts. The "old girls" present sang a couplet composed by Mrs. Bowman, affording quite a little amusement. The field day "stunts" were full of fun and effected complete relaxation for the company. The evening was spent on the lake, with song, story and refreshments.

Several phases of this year's summer school should be carefully noted. The teachers of the text-books used entirely different methods, thus ensuring unabated interest.

The twilight conferences with the missionaries on the hillside were especially helpful.

LENA B. KNIGHTS.

Chicago.

An expenditure of something like $400.00 has just been made for repairs on the church building at Mount Morris, Ill. W. T. Hacker is pastor.

SEND TO US TODAY FOR

The Works of Herbert L. Willett, Ph. D.

HIS LATEST BOOK JUST OUT—Cloth, $1.00 net. Postage 10 cents.

The Call of the Christ

The Chicago Daily News says: "Christ calls men to himself, and through vision, love and possession one grows on to likeness. Jesus is the living expression of God's life in terms of humanity, and he is the supreme manifestation of the normal humanity. His life is the one character most easy to reproduce. Christ's call is to intellect, heart and will, to rouse the best manhood of this age, and for it all the world, says the author, is waiting. This is an illuminating, hope bringing, strengthening work."

The Baptist Commonwealth says: "Only a few men could have written this masterly exposition of the character of Jesus. It is a work of striking power and reality—a vital, living, convincing portrayal. Scholarly, yet simple, philosophical yet understandable, original in phraseology yet lucid, a positive yet persuasive presentation of the claims of Christ. It will strengthen the faith of those in doubt, cheer the sorrowing, give courage to the fearful, bring hope to the despairing—in a word, impart to every reader a satisfactory and realistic vision of the Master."

The Watchman says: "People who have listened to Prof. Willett as a public speaker have been impressed by the clearness, simplicity and logic with which he expresses his ideas. The same characteristics appear in the volume under notice. It is a scholarly, philosophical and understandable presentation of a great theme."

Basic Truths of Christian Faith

Paper, 127 pages, 35 cents.

A powerful and masterful presentation of the great truths for the attainment of the life [illegible] spirit. Written in a charming and [illegible]

Sharp Rev C M Dec12
5522 Kimbark Ave

"For [illegible] book is that on the Resur[illegible] into the lives of the Apostles [illegible] on morn. It is a historical study indeed [illegible] hears the tread of conquering hosts and the beating of the wings of twelve legions of angels."—P. C. Macfarlane.

"The spirit of controversy is quite absent and yet it is sufficiently argumentative to indicate the positive convictions of the author."—C. C. Rowlison.

Our Plea for Union and the Present Crisis

Cloth, 140 pages, gold stamped, postpaid 50c. Written in the belief that the Disciples of Christ are passing through an important, and in many respects, transitional period. The author says:

"It is with the hope that * * * present forces and opportunities may be wisely estimated by us; that doors now open may be entered; that hopes only partially real now may come to fruition that these chapters are given their present form."

The Teachings of the Books

Cloth, $1.25, net. Postage 10 cents.

An introduction to the literature of the New Testament. The book is a work of collaboration with James M. Campbell, D. D., the prominent Congregational minister, who supplies the interpretative material in connection with each of the books of the New Testament. A handbook widely used by individual students and classes.

The Life and Teaching of Jesus

Cloth, 35 cents.

A small handbook prepared for classes desiring to study the outline of the life of Christ, and a brief statement of the most important teachings of the Master. It is based upon the entire material of the four Gospels arranged in chronological order.

The Prophets of Israel

Cloth, 35 cents.

A handbook on this, the most important theme of the Old Testament. It gives a survey of the history of prophecy in Israel from the beginning of the national life to the close of the Maccabaean age. It has been widely used in institutions of education and in Bible classes, and has passed through several editions.

Studies in the First Book of Samuel

Cloth, $1.00 net. Postage 10 cents.

One of the volumes in the Constructive Series of handbooks. It is prepared for the use of classes in secondary schools and in the secondary division of the Sunday-schools. It presents the entire material of First Samuel with explanatory notes, questions, and illustrations. It is used in a large number of Sunday-schools, in grades of the ages of eleven to fourteen

The Ruling Quality

Board 35 cents net. Postage 4 cents.

A small book of sixty pages dealing with faith as the conquering quality in human life. The theme is interwoven with comments upon the quest of the Holy Grail as illustrated in Mr. Abbey's panels.

Send Order To—

THE BETHANY PRESS
The New Christian Century Co.

700 E. 40th St.
Chicago.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Vol. XXIX. August 1, 1912 Number 31

THE RELIGIOUS BARGAIN COUNTER

BY WILLIAM E. BARTON

THE RELIGIOUS VALUE OF AN EDUCATION

BY JOSEPH L. GARVIN

BEFORE HE WAS A DEAN

BY ELLIS B. BARNES

ANNUAL EDUCATION NUMBER

CHICAGO

DRAKE UNIVERSITY

DES MOINES, IOWA

Department of Religious Education—This department has challenged the attention of the educational world for its original and efficient methods and courses of study.

Provides the same sort of training for Bible-School and religious teachers that normal schools furnish for public school teachers. Trained leaders are now demanded in all departments of religious work. Unusual vocational opportunities to those who are trained to meet the demands of the times in religious work.

The Bible College—Courses of study include New Testament Literature and History, Apologetics and Doctrine, Church History, Sunday-School Methods, Sermon Building, Pastoral Duties and similar studies.

Correspondence Courses—The History of Israel, the Prophets of Israel, the Life of Christ, the Acts of the Apostles, and other courses. Located ministers and all religious workers should avail themselves of the opportunities of extension and correspondence courses.

College of Liberal Arts, College of the Bible, College of Law, College of Medicine, College of Dentistry and the Institute of Fine Arts provide broad, liberal, well balanced courses. These courses are so correlated as to give the most practical training for professional or business life. The Institute of Fine Arts includes three distinct departments, Conservatory of Music, School of Painting and Drawing and School of Dramatic Art.

The School of Education—Courses in Domestic Science, special teacher training for Kindergarten, Primary, Grade and High School teachers.

Drake University was never better qualified to meet the educational needs of the times than it is today. Splendid equipment, strong faculty, courses of study adapted to the educational, cultural and practical needs of the day.

Write for catalogue or announcements. Booklet "Possibilities of a College Education" sent free on request. We want the names of all young people who are considering attending college. Address

HILL M. BELL, President

Drake University, - - - Des Moines, Iowa.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—a dozen leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor. Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

EVERY QUARTER ADDS TO THE NUMBER OF SCHOOLS INTRODUCING THESE LESSONS.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT . . . . . EDITORS

Disciples and Their Colleges

THE PROBLEM OF EDUCATION IS ONE to which every religious body must set itself with deliberation and generosity if it proposes to make its ministry effective and its youth capable of rendering the most efficient service. The Disciples of Christ are no exception to this rule. Their educational work grows yearly in importance. Some men there have been from the first who have been concerned to provide equipment of an educational character for our people, but for the most part the churches have concerned themselves but little with this duty. Nearly all our schools have been private foundations to which support has been sought by such endeavors as officers and instructors could put forth in their campaigns of publicity. But the Disciples as a body have never been profoundly interested in the institutions which are seeking to provide them with an educational equipment.

Notwithstanding this fact, the signs are most promising at the present moment for a new era in our educational work. Almost all of the colleges are undertaking campaigns of enlargement both in finances, equipment and instructional force. It is easily perceived that to command respect and win patronage, the colleges must respond to the educational requirements of the time and perform the service which the schools of every religious body seek to render. The institutions whose names are most familiar among us are no longer satisfied with the day of small things, and though too little heed has been given to the call of those charged with their promotion, it is a gratifying fact that in spite of all the indifference shown by our churches and people, the colleges are winning through to a degree of competence and effectiveness not hitherto possessed.

This fact is shown not so much in the securing of endowments, though this is an important item in any educational programme. No school can accomplish its proper task unless it is capable of offering opportunities for study commensurate with the standards of the time. A school needs buildings, laboratories, libraries, and other important assets of a competent equipment, but far more than this it needs the kind of men and women in its faculties who have the proper training for effective work as instructors and a certain quality of sympathy with student life and its problems. These two qualities need to be combined in the faculty that renders the most efficient service to education.

* * *

It is a satisfaction to record the fact that the colleges are demanding with insistent voice the services of men who have enjoyed the advantages of the best grade of university work obtainable in America and abroad. There was a time when some of our people seemed to be alarmed at the idea of higher education. It was supposed to lean too strongly toward liberal opinions in matters of religion. Thoughtless denunciation of higher education carried far in certain circles and there are still belated voices that insist upon the danger of university work. This cry has, however, become so obsolescent and unconvincing that the Disciples are no longer disturbed by it. It has become so evident that nothing but the soundest educational preparation can fit a man to be a competent college instructor that now every one of our institutions worthy of the name of college is seeking men of real university standing to occupy its positions as rapidly as they are left vacant.

This is one of the most encouraging features of our college situation at the present time. The class of men chosen in the last two or three years to take positions of importance in our leading colleges is a guarantee of careful and scholarly work and of the right spirit in classroom and on the campus of these institutions. More than this, the representatives of our college faculties are taking advantage of graduate instruction to a degree not hitherto thought of. The number of those in residence at institutions of university grade which offer summer courses is greater than ever, while an increasing number are securing vacations of longer duration for more extended university work in American and European institutions.

* * *

All this is in harmony with the growth of our churches and their demands for a better training for the ministry. The Disciples of Christ, if they are to be taken seriously in the cities where they are capable of speaking with emphasis and authority, must be represented by men who have a message and who understand the most effective methods of enforcing it. We have had and still possess ministers of efficiency and consecration who have never enjoyed university training. It is a part of the glory of our people that we have always held such men in appreciation and count it no discredit that they should not have been able to avail themselves of such advantages. Many of them have more than made up for the lack of such training by their own untiring efforts at self-culture.

None the less the demand increases for men who have deliberately set out to secure the most adequate training for themselves and have been willing to pay the price of this harder preparation both in time and money required. The churches are asking for such men. They know that on the whole men with this kind of preparation are likely to be adequate and effective interpreters of the message the Disciples wish to give the world. They know that their standing and influence among the religious forces of the community will be enhanced thereby and they desire to provide themselves with such service as will stand the test of permanence and results. For this reason, the problem of education becomes ever more insistent. For all graduate instruction wherever obtained must be built upon a solid foundation of honest academic work. There is a place for the Christian college in spite of the tendencies in other directions, and the Disciples of Christ can render no more effective service to their generation or even to those ideals which a proper self-interest suggests to them than in the equipment of their colleges to a point of adequacy and in suitable encouragement to these institutions to provide themselves with the accessories of educational competence in buildings and other equipment, but especially in men who have the right kind of preparation and the spirit of scholarship and Christian faith.

Social Survey

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN.

Political Turmoil

This is certainly a year of political trouble. Not only have the ancient bodies been engaged in internecine strife but the newer parties have also been undergoing change and reconstruction. The issue that seems to underlie most of this change is the repudiation of boss control in the party and the ushering in of a large measure of democracy in the control of the parties.

First we had the old party conventions. The Republican bosses, utterly misinterpreting the noise that was going throughout the land, insisted on carrying out their pre-arranged plan. They prophesied that all trouble from this kind of procedure would disappear as soon as the convention was over. How badly they misinterpreted things is being evidenced every day. We are unable to find any one with the hardihood to prophesy the election of the Republican candidate.

Likewise the democrats came near to division. Only the victory of the progressive principle in this party and the nomination of a candidate acceptable to the liberal element in the party prevented a split here also. The Bourbons of the democrats, wiser than those among the republicans, saw the inevitable and accepted it for this year.

The Socialist Trouble

The socialists are even now torn with dissension. We noted some weeks ago the election of a campaign manager by the name of Barnes. He had previously held office in the party but had retired under fire. His election to this responsible position immediately made him the target for certain elements in the party. The Christian Socialist openly charges upon its pages that he is an adulterer and in view of the prejudice against socialists generally with reference to their views on the family relationship, this paper regards the placing of Barnes in leadership as utterly objectionable. Another journal of the party objects to Barnes but upon an entirely different ground. This journal claims the party has boss rule the same as the older parties and that Hillquit and Spargo put the man in against the wishes of the party. The objections to Barnes were not so serious a factor until the presidential candidate, Debs, insisted that Barnes should submit to a referendum vote of the party as to whether he should remain. To this Barnes agrees and as soon as enough sign the petition, Barnes will be presented to the rank and file of the voters to have his future place in the party determined.

The Prohibition Fight

The prohibitionists, also, have been passing through a strenuous time. Among them there have also been charges of boss rule which occasioned war in the party for the last eight years but which came to a climax this year. Even the official organ of the party admits that the convention was about the stormiest in their history and in their own words, "the most like a political convention." The object of attack was the national chairman, Jones. It was objected that he did not represent the rank and file of the party and that he had not been a successful executive. Here again the issue of people's rule came in. It was proposed that the election of a national chairman should be in the hands of the convention and not of the national committee. This was acceded to and with secret ballot the whole convention of nine hundred delegates proceeded to vote. It was apparent after the first ballot that Chairman Jones represented only a small minority of the party and he withdrew after the first ballot. While the favorite candidate of Jones was elected, the new man seems to represent a good majority of the party and doubtless peace will reign in the ranks of the prohibitionists for a while again.

All of these stories indicate the coming of a new era of democracy. It will not do to say how politics have always been carried on. The people are demanding a new way and the leader who will not observe the tendency will be led quickly to the political guillotine.

The New Party

At the close of the republican convention there were many who freely prophesied that Roosevelt was no longer a power in American politics and that the progressive movement was successfully curbed. If the movement had indeed not been founded on principles, if it had been a mere scramble for place and power, then doubtless the steam roller would have pretty thoroughly ironed it out. However, insurgency in the party was too strong with the rank and file and too thoroughly aware of itself to be killed after this fashion.

The new Progressive party is a fact. "Teddy's hat" is still in the ring and will have to be reckoned with by all the politicians this year. However, the difficulties that beset the movement are many and varied. One of the first is the difficulty of status. In some states the progressive party is the republican party and Taft has no electors on the ticket. In other states, the conservatives control and the Roosevelt electors will have some difficulty in getting on the ticket and must do so by petition. In some states the new party will be a bipartisan combine. The lack of unity that has characterized the other parties this year might easily characterize this one.

Another pressing need of the new party is that of funds. The expenses of campaigns have now for generations been borne by those interests that have fattened upon legislation. It is hardly to be expected that they will be interested in paying the bills for a party which professes at the very outset to give the people their dues. It is conceivable that the people themselves might finance their party if the party truly represents the people. The development of machinery for collecting popular subscriptions, however, would be a difficult task in the comparatively short period that now remains before election. There are many other difficulties in the way. While the Progressives are not very confident in claiming victory this year, they will be a factor to be reckoned with and may possibly be a balance of power in the next Congress.

The Conservation of Human Life

Humanity long ago discovered the possible economies in living. The Chinese today show how little is really necessary to sustain physical life and keep a race hardy and efficient. Throughout its history, however, the race has been prodigal with human life. The rate of infant mortality was once scandalously high. Though greatly reduced in this country, it is still too high. The wars of the world have destroyed hordes of the most vigorous and promising of the masculine population.

In more recent times the industrial accidents have taken an annual toll of life that makes it like war all the time in this country. Bad sanitation has wiped out millions of human lives. The mothers of the race know the cost of human life. They can never take the cold and brutal attitude toward war, accidents, bad sanitation and all the rest that has often characterized the men. One of the good effects of the increasing interest of women in public questions will doubtless be the development of every kind of measure for the protection of human life. Some have argued for the uninterrupted operation of the law of the survival of the fittest.

In war, famine, pestilence, and industrial danger, it is not the fittest who survive. The law of evolution must go on, and nothing we do can interfere with it. It will be an evidence that we are mentally "fit" when we take care of the most valuable of our national resources, the lives of human beings.

—A government publication of interest to those who are considering the question of leaving congested industrial centers for the purpose of engaging in agricultural pursuits is a bulletin entitled, "Agricultural Opportunities," which is being used for free distribution by the division of information of the bureau of immigration and naturalization, department of commerce and labor. The bulletin is in seven separate sections, as follows: The North Atlantic states; the South Atlantic states; the North Central states (Eastern group); the South Cenral states (Northern group), including the Territory of Alaska; the Western states (Southern group), including the Territory of Hawaii. Each state is discussed briefly under the following headings: Climate, surface, and soil; irrigation and dry farming (where they are practiced to any extent); principal crops; stock raising; prices of farms, and inducements to settlers; farm expenses; general and special inducements. At the end of each article is given the address of the state official who can furnish additional information with respect to his particular state.

—"The country church is dying out, largely because the rural people have no adequate conception of what they owe the church financially," said Rev. M. B. McNutt, of the Presbyterian department of church and country life at the rural conference in Iowa recently. "The church must pay country pastors decent salaries, and they must have business management."

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

The Growing Menace

Our exchanges are interested in the continued menace of Catholicism in this country. A new movement has been organized with the significant title of the Guardians of Liberty, of which General Nelson A. Miles is president. Catholic journals predicted that the distinguished soldier would not accept the position, but in this they were disappointed, and the general avows himself as a champion of its principles and a member of its "national court." Associated with him are Major General Daniel E. Sickles, Admiral George W. Baird and General Horatio C. King representing the army and navy, while many names of civilians of prominence give distinction to an already impressive record.

Challenged by Edward J. Cooney, the president of the Catholic Press Association, as related by the Continent, General Miles denies warmly accusations of bigotry against the organization in the following manner:

He cites its declaration of principles as stating this precise platform: "We deny the right of any political or ecclesiastical organization to manipulate or control the sovereign citizenship of our people or to dispose of their civil rights and privileges for political office and power." Does Mr. Cooney, the general inquires, affirm such right? "If you or any of our associates believe in making the affairs of state subordinate to the dictation of your church; if you or any of your associates believe in openly or secretly manipulating, controlling or dictating the political action of any portion of our citizens, in order that in time our republic may become subject to and subservient to your church, then there is a decided difference of opinion between us."

This is certainly defining the issue clearly, and there is no shadow of bigotry—only a fundamental question of patriotism—involved in the pronouncement. If the Guardians of Liberty stick to these simple principles of free citizenship they will do the country a sane patriotic service without becoming involved in the embittered fanaticism which destroyed the unlamented "A. P. A."

Disciples and Congregationalists

The Journal and Messenger (Baptist) makes light of the recent conference between representatives of these two bodies which formulated some plans in the interest of a closer relation between them. All the pronouncements of the Journal and Messenger are given to the world with a confidence which seems to say that this is the last word which can be spoken on the subject. One who peruses its pages each week is compelled to ask, What is there in the atmosphere of Cincinnati that blights the growing spirit of the age, and inspires men with pride in their sectarianism? There may be excellent journals in that city, but if we may judge from the few with which we are familiar, we would not endow a college within its precints to instruct aspirants in the principles of religious journalism. Our contemporary is sitting in the seat of the scorner when it speaks as below; it rarely is found elsewhere when passing judgment on those of its brethren who are not of the Baptist faith and order. And even some Baptists are peculiar. Here is the Journal's compliment to a well directed effort. It is worth noticing only as a reflection of one type of journalism that is fast outliving its usefulness.

During several years past, the "Disciples" and the Congregationalists have been doing a little courting, each enamored of the other's charms, and neither caring for the freckles on the other's countenance. Still, there has been no promise of immediate "union," the thing "so much to be desired," in the estimation of some in either fold. Of late, the billing and cooing has been resumed, and, at a meeting held in New York in April last, a possible "affiliation" was considered. Representatives of both parties deliberated, and finally reached a conclusion which brings them nearer together, possibly, than they have ever been before. They agreed that, when a church of either denomination, too weak to go alone, has, as a neighbor, a church of the other denomination, the two may combine in the support of a pastor, without insisting upon uniformity of customs, "the ordinances to be administered as individual members of each communion from time to time reasonably desire." It is not proposed that all the members be regarded as of the same denomination, but the individual choice of each is to be entered, after the name, on the union church roll, each being at liberty to give money and influence to the promotion of churches and causes of personal choice. The minister of such a church is to be regarded as in regular standing in both denominations. It may be that the plan will work, and there may be a drawing together of those who are inherently different in their views. But there is reason to expect a widening, rather than a narrowing, of the line of separation between the two parties to the contract. It will be worth while to watch the operation of the scheme. With all their courting, it seems to be time that our "Disciple" friends had found some one of the different denominations willing to enter into the fellowship for which they seem to be longing and sighing. We can not yet chronicle a union between Congregationalists and "Disciples."

Noble Creed for Black Men and Women

Every race like every man must make its own record, and win its own character. We may do all in our power to help the colored race, but like an individual to whom we give a letter of recommendation, his success is wholly in his own hands. The letter gives our friend the opportunity to start in the race, but we can't run for him. He must do for himself finally all that is ever done. The danger in the south, so far as the black man is concerned, is to make him a menial by too much help. We believe that when the authentic history of that race is written it will be found that its true friends were those at whose hands the race suffered most. Since the days of slavery the weaker race has been cared for, and encouraged to stand upon its own feet, often by mistaken methods, it is true, but for all the great help has been from those among whom the negro lives. And the element that has always been lacking is that spirit of race independence without which progress is impossible. The negro too often wants to be like the white man—an impossible goal; he ought to be taught that he cannot adopt the characteristics of the white man any more than he can adopt his skin. The traits in the negro constitution that are worthy must be developed, and those that are base must be suppressed. He must stand or fall by himself. As has been justly said, "the man who insists upon being carried all the time should not be carried any of the time." And what is true of the race is true of the individual. These "Ten Things the Negro Must Do for Himself," taken from a leaflet put out by an organization of colored Baptists, we pass on as embodying a worthy creed for that race.

"1. We must get right with God and make our religion practical. Less noise and feeling and more quiet, wholesome, everyday living.
"2. We must be honest, truthful and reliable.
"3. We must keep our bodies clean.
"4. We must keep our homes clean.
"5. We must keep our yards clean—back and front.
"6. We must stop hanging over the gate and out of the window.
"7. We must behave ourselves better on the streets and in public carriers, and stop talking so much and so loud.
"8. We must make the word 'negro' a synonym for honesty, cleanliness, intelligence, industry and righteousness by doing with our might what our hands find to do.
"9. We must be loyal and helpful to our race, by encouraging all worthy efforts put forth for its uplift.
"10. We must respect our women, educate our children and stay out of the saloon and dives. Where we have the franchise we must vote for men who are opposed to the saloon."

Counsel like this well appropriated will build up in any race manhood and womanhood which the most fanatic prejudice could not refuse to respect. That it should be counsel emanating from the colored race itself makes it a token of lively promise.

St. Paul Preacher's Declaration

In St Paul, Minn., what is known as the People's Church has recently celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of the birthday of its pastor, Dr. Sam'l G. Smith. It did not do it as some folk think the temper of the time is, by politely or brusquely intimating to him that he had crossed the dead line. On the contrary the purpose of the celebration was to show the enthusiastic devotion of the people to their pastor. A novel item in the part he bore in the celebration was the declaration of purposes formulated as follows:

1. I promise from this time forward to try to forgive my friends as well as my enemies.
2. I promise to remember that I have not really done all the good things that have happened in my lifetime.
3. I promise to be openminded to new ideas and to new plans, and to be thinking of the future more than of the past.
4. I promise to believe that there are many things that young men can do better than I can.
5. I promise not to neglect manifest duties with the excuse that I have already done my share.
6. I promise to be more severe against the sins of age than against the faults of youth.
7. I promise henceforth to have more charity, a better temper, and a more quiet spirit.
8. I promise to be thankful for all the good of this world, and yet to live in the faith that sometime and somewhere I shall find a better world.
9. Mindful of the manifold temptations that beset the mature, I promise, as much as in me lies, to endeavor not to talk too much.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—SILAS JONES, IDA WITHERS HARRISON, ORVIS F. JORDAN, ELLIS B. BARNES.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy, 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

United Religious Press Building
700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

The Necessity of a Holy Life

To be holy is to be dedicated to God. All religions have their holy persons, that is, persons belonging to deity or set apart for religious exercises. Naturally, the servants of a god become like the god. Vile gods have vile ministers. Bishop Thoburn says: "The institution of the nautch is based upon the example of the god Krishna. The nautch girls are taught in early girlhood to read, dance, and sing, and instructed in every act of seduction. They are the endowed ministers of the temples. The muralis are devoted to the god Khandoba. * * They are licensed by law and dedicated to lives of impurity in the name of religion." We must know, then, the character of the deity worshipped before we can know what holiness is.

The Christian idea of holiness is thus defined by William Newton Clarke: "Holiness is the glorious fulness of God's moral excellence held as the principle of his own action and the standard for his creatures." "To the thought that God's inward character is that of perfect goodness we must add the thought that God always holds that character as the principle of his own action, and is always consistent with it." "He cannot have one standard for himself and another for his creatures; hence he requires men to be holy, and endeavors to make them so. He says: 'Be ye holy, for I am holy;' and his meaning is, 'Take perfect goodness as your standard of character, and steadily and consistently act upon it. This is my way, and therefore it must be yours!' In the light of such a command we see how it is that holiness means the same in man as in God."

Abstinence from the evil of the world is one aspect of holiness. The vision of God brought from the lips of Isaiah the cry, "Woe is me, for I am a man of unclean lips." His first thrill of joy in the God he had seen came when his lips were pronounced clean. The coming of Christ into a life reveals the sin of the life. We cannot behold a character of surpassing holiness and remain unconscious of our defilement. We cry out for deliverance. There is joy in our hearts when evil habits revealed to us as evil by the presence of Christ are overcome by the same presence. The true converts of the missionary are conspicuous for the practices which they cease to follow. The opium habit of the Chinaman is put away. The witch doctor quits deceiving the people. The licentious and the drunken turn to purity and sobriety.

Holiness is more than abstinence. It is a positive quality. Isaiah was fitted for the mission of a prophet by his contact with the divine. Evil gave place to good in his life. Holiness is social. The holy man is worthy of the companionship of other men. He has something to give them that increases their worth. Holiness is power and efficiency. It can be in the world and yet escape the sin of the world. Its retirement from the world is that of self-control and independence of thought. The holy man compels the world to conform to his ways. He is found in the school teaching science, history, morals, and religion, and training the hands of youth to do well the work of the world. He is in business making money, but never at the cost of his integrity. In the church he is more interested in doing what Jesus would have him do than he is in defending the metaphysical statements of his creed, though he may have great respect for the theologian who teaches religion as well as theology.

The holy God is without respect of persons. He looks at the heart and he measures achievements. The children of a holy God will do the same. At the Christian Conservation Congress James Alexander MacDonald said: "Our quickened moral sense must be alert not only as regards the wrongdoing of common offenders, the publicans and sinners of outraged social life, but even more keenly for that wrongdoing which society designates by some more euphemistic name than adultery and theft." "Christianity can do nothing for governments in America more effective than making Christ's principles of political economy and social justice apply justly and in the Christ spirit to the details of every-day life, not for the vulgar lawbreaker but for men as decent, as highly respected, and as nominally religious as any man among us." This conception of the saint makes him a prophet of righteousness. He sees what is just and good and he announces it. That is not all; he votes it. He believes that the kingdoms of this world are to become the kingdom of Christ and Christ is accomplishing this result through his people who dare to live his life among men. [Midweek Service, Aug. 7. 1 Pet. 1-13:23.] S. J.

Kissing the Pope's Toe

There are many who believe that the toe of the Roman Pontiff is one of the pillars of the earth. Indeed, it is the prop and stay of a mighty religious system. We must not think that this form of worship is confined to the Catholic communion. It is equally true of Protestantism, which in all its varieties could not endure without a toe of authority. It is just as essential to the well-being of ecclesiastical governments as a head. Good people, sensible people, fly into a frenzy when we praise the devotion that kisses the pope's toe; but it is that toe that saves us all from anarchy. It is the barrier against a sea of troubles.

I confess that I do not understand why any human being should want to kiss another's toe, or why another should want his toe kissed. However, all such perplexities are resolved into simplicity when we refer to Mr. Chesterton, that famous master of paradox, who without hesitation will tell us that kissing the toe of the great is the most natural thing in the world, and that none but fools and heretics have ever questioned the wisdom of such a performance. He would tell us further that the contradictions, the absurdities, the inconsistencies of life are the most natural expressions of one's existence, and that the simple and the commonplace are the results of an artificial civilization.

It is a fact that the practice referred to has been developed under the highest civilization the world has ever known; it was not imported from Africa, or evolved from a condition of servitude. It is known only among peoples who have enjoyed liberty to the full. Kings, who are supposed to enjoy more liberty that their subjects, have been known to bow at this lowly shrine.

We do not speak hyperbolically when we say that among denominations the homage of the devout to the powers that be is as marked as in that great institution which regards submission as the highest form of loyalty. The paradox ever pursues us that among those who boast most loudly of their freedom the servility is often the basest. Those who on paper give us to understand that the papacy is doomed convince us by their conduct that the papacy endureth forever.

So often have we seen a papal pope denounced by a Protestant pope that we have almost concluded that popery is as necessary to the perpetuity of the one system as of the other; that it is not as much a theological creation as a temporal necessity. We can more easily live without cooks than we can live without popes. Not only human frailty, but human strength, assertiveness, ambitions lean on him, believe in him, kneel at his feet, and gratefully kiss his toe. And the pope never dies. If the one that now dominates the elect should be called away from the scene of his activities tomorrow another would be nominated before he was cold.

Beware, therefore, of the man who denounces the pope; he is only grasping at a coveted seat. These things are not an allegory; for what people have talked of freedom more than the Disciples, and what people have felt the scathe of tyranny more than they? The yoke has ploughed a furrow in their necks, and the burdens of the past have fitted their backs for any impost in the future. Of course there is liberty among us, but wherever there is liberty there will be tyranny, as surely as "where there's a will there's a law-suit." Between the freeman and the pontiff there is always war, and the victory is certain to perch on the banners of the latter, not because he boasts of his power, but because he preaches of the freeman's rights; not because he enlightens the world on the duty of the freeman to submit, but on the duty of the freeman not to submit. He talks loudly of "our heritage," meaning that he is sole owner and proprietor. The complimentary language is only a silken mesh in which the victims die. He will talk of our educational institutions, and the duty of protecting them against the assaults of the enemy, but the possessive pronoun is only the eye that fascinates that it may destroy. He really means that he will preside over their destinies, and assume all the prerogatives that belong to infallibility. He will assert his undying devotion to our cause, whatever it may be, but if ever a pope died for any cause his election was out of due time, for the function of his office is to see that an innocent bystander makes all the sacrifices that are needed.

Group of delegates at the Spring meeting of Association of College Men. Those seated are heads of their institutions. From left to right they are Chancellor William Oeschger of Cotner, President Miner Lee Bates of Hiram, Principal Charles T. Paul of the Missionary Training School, President Charles E. Underwood of Eureka, President Thomas C. Howe of Butler, President R. H. Crossfield of Transylvania, President Carl Johann of Christian University and Dean Charles M. Sharpe of the Bible College of Missouri, now of the Disciples Divinity House.

The language of popery like its practices has been reduced to a system. It can be detected in Protestant folds as easily as in Roman. It is the language of the father, the patron, the distributor of offices, and always unselfish, and in the interest of the cause. Secrecy and sanctity are as essential to the office as salt to the sea, and to break down the cunning of secrecy and the reputation for sanctity would destroy the system. Because of these safeguards which the skillful know so well how to use, the doctrine of infallibility has been invented. It is the most natural and therefore the most logical claim that any system of authority can make. It may be found at work in many communions which abhor the doctrines of Rome. To question the wisdom of the editors who set up these mighty claims is as dangerous as to dissent from the decrees of councils. In either case the hunger of the sword or the anger of the pen claims another victim. It is because of the papal attitude toward modern issues that many of the strongest arguments for progress even in Protestant circles are drowned in a Dead Sea of ink.

Finally, the struggles in Disciple ranks are not the result of too much liberty, but of too much popery. We are servile rather than rebellious. The rebels are yet to be born. At present we protest against the arrogance of the pope in private, and serve him with true devotion in public. We whisper our grievances in each other's ears, and shout our approval of the papal decrees from the housetop. We despise him in our study, and cheer him at close range. Those who do not advertise his shrine are slated for slaughter; those who worship elsewhere are infidel. Still, there are compensations for his presence in our midst. We cannot go far wrong if we accept his wisdom. If a missionary or a college professor is appointed without obtaining his imprimature, the avenging sword will be withdrawn if the rash will make a pilgrimage to the shrine where the great toe is exposed for the adoration of the faithful. The kiss of peace will save their scalps as the pipe of peace saved scalps in earlier days. There the rash will be taught prudence, the unwise profound philosophies, and the heretics will be reclaimed. For there all problems are solved, all questions answered, all offices bestowed, all errors remembered, all punishments visited, all transgressors absolved. But the toll must be paid in the shambles of the great toe. Then will follow a peace such as was breathed o'er Eden, and ample compensations offered for those who advance the temporal interests of the spiritual rulers. So it we will all agree to substitute the kiss of submission for the kick of remonstrance, all our troubles will come to an end. As a remedial agent the big stick is not to be mentioned in the same breath with the big toe.

E. B. B.

Sometimes it seems as if selfishness were the supreme sin. It is surely the soil in which the root of all evil develops its noxious growth.

Real self-denial is marked by interest in others for their sake with no thought of reward, by interest in self for Christ's sake alone, and by love for God because he is what he is, God.

Of one thing we may be certain, that our times of sorrow and dismay are but the natural signs that we are mounting fast—we need not fear them! What we have rather to fear are the times when we recline in indolent content.—A. C. Benson.

The Bible is a noble book, all men's Book. It is our first, oldest statement of the never-ending problem—man's destiny and God's ways with him here on earth; and all in such free-flowing outlines—grand in its sincerity, in its simplicity and in its epic melody.—Thomas Carlyle.

Editorial Table Talk

Bread and Milk for One Hundred Years

And now comes a centenarian who publishes to the world his secret of longevity. It is nothing more or less than confining one's self to a bread and milk diet. The question naturally arises, Is it worth while? In a boyhood now somewhat far removed but still distinctly remembered, this writer read a great deal of advice upon how to keep well and be strong. The water-cure craze had shown signs of exhaustion, and the enthusiasts looking for some new fad were beginning to cry up vegetarianism. The youthful reader and convert entered upon the simple life with zeal. First of all, he discarded meats. Next condiments were banished from his menu. Tea was given the double cross, and then, with a distinct struggle, the coffee cup was turned down. After a six months' adherence to a regimen which might have satisfied a medieval hermit for its austerity, the adolescent reformer found himself just where he was when he started—neither better nor worse for having denied himself the abundant fare which the rest of the household continued to enjoy. Naturally, he began to ask himself, What's the use? He went back to the healthful, hearty, delightful food of an American well-to-do family—and while he has not yet lived to be a hundred, he has outlived all the theorists who tried to persuade him that the polyp would live forever. Reaching the conclusion that he was not intended for an oyster, the boy learned how to use the good things of the table without abusing them, and he has found no reason to regret his course.

The Last Strike

The most pathetic scene we have lately witnessed was that exhibited last week by the group of excavators who stood about the cellar of a building in process of construction within the loop. It seemed that a strike had been ordered after working hours the day before, and about fifty men had met in the morning to resume the labors suspended then. Each man carried a mournful little roll in his hand, which was made of his overalls wrapped tightly and tied with their own strings. Not one of these men whose labors had been suddenly arrested spoke a word to his neighbor. Not a face exhibited anger, resentment, or the spirit of hostility. All that their faces expressed was simply suffering, suffering too deep for verbal expression. It was evident they could not bring themselves to go home and announce to their families that their job was "off." The papers said the next day that the tie-up was due to the employers having given work to some non-union laborers. If there be anything more cruel and stupid than the methods employed in modern "industrial wars," we do not know where to look for it. The sight of those silent, serious, idle men, looking down upon a job which had promised so much and from which they were now warned off, was a sight we shall not soon forget.

That Gold-mesh Bag

The cynic could scarce repress a smile at reading in the police reports that a robbery had been committed one night last week in a fashionable residence in the very heart of the most aristocratic quarter. It was not the fact of the burglary that was amusing, but the fact that the thief had stolen a $500 gold-mesh hand-bag in which, as it proved, there was only the sum of 30c. The value of the bag seemed ridiculously out of proportion to the poverty of its contents. Somehow, we could not help thinking of the book that lay upon our table, issued by one of our most famous publishing houses, bound in the most sumptuous manner, and written in a highly rhetorical style. But to estimate the value of the thought at thirty cents, would be to over-appraise it. The "400" are not the only persons in America who carry thirty cents in a $500 bag. We have sometimes seen the parson do it in the pulpit.

The Pace That Kills

It seems to be well established that the last railroad wreck in the vicinity of Chicago was due to the same passion for speed which destroyed the Titanic. After having ridden upon all sorts of railroads in perfect safety for many, many years, it befell the editor to take the cars one day for a short suburban trip in a train engineered by a driver who wanted to "hit her up a bit." Within thirty minutes, the engineer was lying under his locomotive, and his passenger was fired through an opposite window. The auto that is content with twenty miles an hour never "turns turtle"; the motor-cycle which sets out to break the record is the one that breaks the rider's neck; and the aviator who is bound to climb higher or fly farther or dare more than his competitor is the one upon whose life the insurance companies decline to issue any policy. That the men who are "in haste to be rich" are the ones who "pierce themselves through with many sorrows," was as well known in St. Paul's day as in our own; and in any pursuit of life the man who "hits only the high places," is the man who is later dragged, a shapeless mass, out of the muddy ditch.

The Mistake About Wilson

The mistake which the New Jersey politicians made regarding Woodrow Wilson seems to have been due to the fact that they did not realize what it meant to be president of a big university in these modern days. They thought of such an official as sitting in a class-room or quiet office and now and then looking over his gold-rimmed glasses at a college student who asked a question. At best, he was only a bookish man with more knowledge of nature through science than of human nature through experience. It did not occur to them that the attendance at a great university represents tongues, tribes and nations, with a considerable infusion of the old Harry, that the president of such an institution is often startled by the college yell, that there are rushes which make the ground shake, that wild hordes of sophomores sweep down upon platoons and processions of freshmen and do them up with the ferocity of Comanches, and that there are times when the frightened citizens go in and shut the doors and fear the end of the world or something like it. And added to this is football and the whole round and excess of athletics.

To manage all this kind of thing successfully qualifies a man to run the rest of the state without serious difficulty. In fact the problem at Trenton must have seemed to Governor Wilson dead easy compared with his former job at Princeton.

For the same reason the country must now regard the Democratic candidate as qualified to handle everything under the flag, from the slums of New York to the wilds of the Philippines. No doubt Governor Wilson's popularity is largely due to the fact that the people instinctively recognize that a man who has successfully handled so many spoiled sons of the modern American family in college will be equal to anything in the governing line which the presidency may impose upon him. That is to say, the country, almost without knowing it, has been sighing for a man in the White House who had been tried in the fires of university experience. Of course Colonel Roosevelt has killed coyotes on the plains and lions in Africa, but Woodrow Wilson has kept bands of howling sophomores and freshmen from exterminating one another, and this seems to be no less a feat.

The Best Profession

Bishop W. O. Shepard of the Methodist Church, formerly pastor of the Oakwood Boulevard M. E. Church, Chicago, thinks that the ministry is the best profession there is. "Young man, if you desire to follow a good, practical profession, enter the ministry," is the advice of the bishop. "The ministry is the best profession there is," said Bishop Shepard. "And here are some of the reasons: A minister has his place in life made for him. He receives more salary to begin his profession with than lawyers or doctors. He doesn't have to sit around a couple of years waiting for his work to begin. A minister is a power—greater than in any other profession. He is an upholder of morality; therefore, his influence over the people is greater. He is always sufficiently paid to live well. The influence of the ministry is becoming greater every day. Those are a few of the reasons why the ministry is the best profession, but there are many others. When a young man becomes a minister he does not have to seek a place; the place is waiting for him. Usually in other professions, the first five years are a great struggle, trying to the patience and endurance of a young man."

—The King George V. Institute for fishermen and seamen, erected under the direction of Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, the medical missionary of Labrador, at St. John's, N. F., has been formally opened. Dr. Grenfell attended the ceremonies. Messages were read from King George, at whose touch by telegraph the foundation stone was laid on coronation day, 1911, the Queen Mother Alexandra, President Taft, Colonel Roosevelt, and the Duke of Connaught, governor-general of Canada.

—The memory of Tom Johnson was observed in Cleveland on July 18. Had the former mayor, champion of the single tax and 3-cent fare, lived, that day would have been his fifty-eighth birthday anniversary. Nearly all city offices were closed. There was a formal memorial celebration at a park. During the celebration a sufficient sum was raised to increase the Tom L. Johnson memorial fund to $20,000.

—Word comes from the district of Chaocheng, Shansi, China, that something like 500 families have put away their idols, and that many of them have expressed a desire to enter the church.

—There are twice as many persons engaged in delivering mail free to farm houses in the United States as there are missionaries delivering the free gospel of Christ to the whole non-Christian world.

—Over two thousand persons have been baptized in India in the Methodist Episcopal Church for each month of the last quadrennium.

The Religious Value of an Education

With Especial Reference to the Culture of Young Women

By JOSEPH L. GARVIN

President William Woods College.

A college career is a means to an end and its value is religious. It brings wealth to the mind and gives richness to experience. Both the means and value are suggested in an exclamation of the Apostle Paul. "Thanks be to God who always leadeth us in triumph in Christ and maketh manifest through us the savor of his knowledge in every place." The consciousness of God leading us in triumph through all experiences and showing, through us, the flavor of his knowledge wherever we are—such is Christian education's value.

Every girl who can should go to college. Every girl who wills can go. The reason has been suggested also in the essay by Schiller on "The Aesthetic Nature of Man."

"The artist, it is true, is a son of his age, but woe be to him if he is also its pupil or even its favorite. Let a beneficent divinity snatch him betimes as a suckling from his mother's breast and nurse him with the milk of a better time and let him ripen under a distant Grecian sky. When he has attained his full growth, let him return a foreign shape into his century not, however, to delight it by his presence, but terrible like Agamemnon's sons to purify it."

Children of Their Age.

Young women are children of their age; they must not become either its pupil or its master. They dare not become its favorites and try to prophesy. They should be fed with ideas and ideals of a better time and ripen to womanhood under a "distant Grecian sky."

The Christian College is that Grecian land. It stands in some historic spot among the mountains on their eastern slopes where the daughters can see the dawnings of new days and catch the first whispers of coming truths.

Within its magic environment it draws the girls of strong desires and aspirations, thirsty for knowledge, hungry for life. Here they find themselves; feel their powers; learn judgments; discover values.

They come as maidens and leave as women, matured in mind and strong of heart. They come as "babes crying in the night" and go forth as "voices crying in the wilderness."

When they have attained their full growth they go back to their homes, churches, business world and friends, not knowing how much they have changed, but changed to all who know them. They return no longer to merely adorn their communities with their presence but by service to make them better. They go out into life, as Hall Caine said, to make this "a century of humanity" because they live to emphasize the "moral interests of their day."

Treasures Multiplied.

In these colleges the young woman finds all needed forms of knowledge and discipline in the use of all methods by which knowledge is obtained. The very mechanisms of college life are mastered and become instruments of subduing kingdoms and increasing happiness. She becomes a queen indeed, and the scepter of learning is a magic wand. Her treasures are multiplied. Opportunities crowd upon her.

Better still is that "force of a life example"—the professor whose consecration and friendship ennoble her ambition. As within the shadows of the University of Leyden a stone marks the spot where John Robinson lived, taught and died, so in the memory of college women is enshrined the name of some rare souled teacher.

So she lives those golden years in an atmosphere charged with an enthusiasm for truth. No wonder she learns the lesson of integrity. Taught that power is more than possession, principles better than acquirements, a college girl recognizes true standards of excellence in life. She gets the sense of ideal values. The admirable is admired, the trashy is disesteemed. She can see the mistakes of people yet sympathize with them. She can feel the pathos of lost causes yet applaud those who champion them.

This is what a Christian college can do for a young woman. She learns how to be herself; make her way; "to cheer, to raise, to guide" others by showing them facts amid appearances. She is "the world's eye and the world's ear."

World Needs Educated Women.

The world needs her badly. It needs a healthier, happier tone. It needs girls who can see, who can hear, who can feel. It needs cultured, skilled girls who will return to their homes and love them all the more; who will return to their churches and be intelligently active in its service; who live by sympathies and admirations and not by dislikes and disdains.

Such women realize they have been led in triumph in Christ and all who know them know that through them God is manifesting the savor of His knowledge. Such women never deteriorate. They maintain the high levels upon which peace, joy and the beauty of life can flourish.

Such women live their own life. But as Chibiabos sang one song which inspired the stream, the bluebird and the robin, and was loved for the magic of his singing, so the homes, the churches, and all the community feel the invigorating presence of the college woman. She is loved for the magic of her living.

A FINE LOOKING MAN LIKE MYSELF

BY SMITH BAKER.

Many years ago, when James K. Polk was president, he made a trip to New England and visited Augusta. Such an unusual event as seeing a live president created quite a sensation in the surrounding towns, and the farmers went to see the great man. Among those from Litchfield was one whom I will call "John." He was neither very good looking nor very bright. The next day as quite a company were gathered at the postoffice someone said: "John, did you see the president?" "Yes, sir, walked clear out." "What kind of a looking man is he?" "Fine-looking man about like myself." There was no egotism in John's answer, for he knew no better, but its comicalness represents the silly egotism of many people who ought to know better, but whose conceit makes them blind to their own silliness. I heard a tenor singer not long ago rise before an audience and pose this way and the other before he commenced, as much as to say, "Now look at me, hear me," reminding one of a barn-yard turkey gobbler strutting around and calling attention to himself. But he was no worse than the alto who followed him. Her dress was a sensation in itself, and then the attitude she struck, as though trying to show off the most recent exercises of physical gymnastics, seeming to say, "You have heard him, now hear me." I thought of over fifty years ago when some of us heard Jennie Lind, when, with child-like modesty and almost bashfulness, as though afraid to be seen, she sang like an angel and the singing was all the more powerful because of the perfect modesty of the artist. For fear, however, that the singers may think we are severe upon their profession, we will confess that it is sometimes seen among preachers. For instance, I heard of a minister who, when he went into the pulpit, did it with such conscious dignity that he reminded you of a cathedral; but his sermon was so commonplace that he seemed only a wood-shed. I was present when two young men applied for work in a shoe-shop. The proprietor said to the first: "Can you do good work?" He answered, "No one in the state can do better." The same question was put to the other, and he said: "I can try." Both were engaged, and at the end of two months the first one was discharged and the second was promoted. A quack physician brags and advertises, telling what great cures he has wrought and can do.

Modesty of Ability.

A man of science lets others tell what he has done. I once asked a skilled specialist upon rheumatism with a national reputation as authority upon disease, if he could cure any one; and his answer was: "I never promise to cure anyone; sometimes I can help, and sometimes cure." That was the modesty of ability. I once examined the circular which came with a bottle of patent medicine and found it promised to cure thirty-seven diseases, all for eighty-seven cents. There were a great many brigadier-generals in the army who were a thousand times more displayful than General Grant. Real merit does not need to advertise itself. Brag and vanity always weakens even a man of ability. Good work is the best advertising. A good workman always has enough to do. If a man is a good carpenter, everybody will know it and want him. Years ago I knew a shoemaker called Uncle Caleb. He thought he did not amount to much and a compliment made him blush like a little girl, but he knew how to make women's kid shoes, so that for miles around all the women wanted Uncle Caleb to make their shoes, and he had more than he could do, yet his name was never in the papers, only when he got married and when he died. Thus everywhere—in mechanics, in law, in music, and in preaching, a good workman always has enough to do. It is proper that men in all departments of life should seek work; that is, let it be known that they want a chance. Such is the privilege of every man. It is also a man's right to refer to his friends and those who know him as to his special qualifications for any particular kind of employment. Such is the value of friendship, when it is a pleasure for men to help each other by saying a good word, one for the other, as brother for brother. What we wish to rebuke is the egotism, which praises and recommends one's self. I stood by a dry-goods merchant when a young man presented his card seeking employment. The merchant said: "Do you think you can sell cloth?" "Don't I look as though I could. If I can't make women buy goods, no one can?" The merchant said: "I think I do not wish anyone today." When the young egotist had gone, he said: "He knows too much for me; with him in the store, I should be nowhere in a little while."

A Smaller—Not a Larger.

I received a letter from a minister of a small village, saying: "I feel like a ship in a little brooklet. Can you recommend me to a certain city church where I shall be appreciated?" Of course, I did not. What such a man needs is to go to a smaller place, not a larger. Henry Ward Beecher commenced in a little village, but he never said he "felt like a ship in a brooklet." As the boys say, "Such a man's head is too big for his hat." All this applies to character. When a man professes to be perfect, then put your purse where he cannot find it. Self-righteousness is the worst form of egotism. Always doubt a man who thinks he is not a sinner. The man who thinks he is too good to need to be saved is the most lost man in any community. Humility and a sense of unworthiness is the surest sign of goodness. As in education, the more a man knows, the more he realizes how much he does not know; thus in goodness. The better a man is, the more he realizes how imperfect he is. Our Savior's condemnation of such a man is that of the Pharisee, who thanked God he was not as other men and boasted of what he had done. Let another praise thee and not thyself.

Conceit of any kind, intellectual, moral, or religious, is disgusting everywhere, and in particular in young people. Do not be afraid that people will not appreciate you. True merit reveals itself.

Before He Was a Dean

How Frederick O. Norton Laid the Foundations of Scholarship

By Ellis B. Barnes

When the present dean of the College of Arts in Drake University drifted into Lexington in the early nineties, none suspected that fires of genius were smouldering in his bosom or his brain. He was an inoffensive, angular looking youth who stood far apart from the maddening crowd's ignoble strife, made few friends, never was expelled from the school, had no love affair that we knew of, took no stock in athletics, never won an oratorical contest, belonged to no fraternity, and gave no promise of future greatness. He did a remarkable thing for a college student—he spent most of his time with his books, and let it be known as far as he could that he had come to the college for the purpose of getting an education.

Startling Thoroughness.

When after the first few weeks he burst upon the attention of the university, all stood in admiration at the thoroughness with which his work was being done. The professors whispered wise words to each other about the genius of the student from Prince Edward Island; some of the students admired, while others talked entertainingly, as only students can, about the merits of a new broom. But our friend Norton moved along the noiseless tenor of his way, in total ignorance of the admiration and the gossip of which he was the center. He followed the grooves of mental habits, determined that no grit should invade their oiled smoothness. He was a student who meant business. In earlier days he had been a college student on his native isle, and there had acquired his remarkable habits of study; later he riveted and soldered into the body of his being all that he ever knew by teaching school. It was while teaching that he determined to enter the university at Lexington.

A Remarkable Mind.

In those student days it soon became apparent that the present dean had a remarkable mind. It might be described as a hungry type of mind. It was a robust mind that needed food, rather than a brilliant that needed richer settings. For when one task was finished there was still an inner craving for another and a greater task. We might say that his was the athletic type of mind that grew stronger with every grapple, and gained confidence with every triumph. The difficulties before him were mowed down, and his eye never lost sight of the goal. Without ever his saying so, it soon became known that Norton could never be content with any second place. He was as thorough in one department as in another, in history as in mathematics, in chemistry as in Greek. In every one of his classes it was always known who led.

Professor Frederick O. Norton, Ph. D.

Capacity for Work.

Joined to that strong intellect was a remarkable capacity for work. Day and night were much alike to him. Time was a secondary factor in the preparation of his lessons. Most of us worked by the clock; he worked according to his tasks. He may have had a clock, but its greatest use, in all probability, was to indicate that he must get ready for the classroom. We were done at certain hours; he was done when the recitation was perfected. That may have been at 2 or 4 a. m. When the occasion demanded he would rise after an hour or two of sleep, and become absorbed in his studies, only to be aroused by the ringing of the breakfast bell.

Always Prepared.

I doubt whether he ever went to a class with fear and trembling, or ever had the feeling to which many of us can subscribe that an hour in the classroom on many occasions could only be surpassed in terror by the last hour of life one spends before mounting the gallows. When several students in a row had been bowled over by the jeers or the impatience of professors, and retired to our seats in confusion, our friend Norton was called upon to show that there was no excuse for failures, and the ease with which he achieved what to others had been impossible only added to the humiliation. At such times we wanted to dynamite him, but were powerless; he was playing the game and we couldn't, no matter how much we wanted to. While I think he pitied our ignorance, there was never a sign of egotism or bumptiousness in him. He would have told us that he worked while we slept, and the results were apparent at the time of recitation.

A Genius in Taking Pains.

And all his mates coveted that marvelous energy that could cast contempt into the teeth of sleep, and that powerful absorbing brain that took in everything and begged for more. For the genius of this scholar is after the definition, "an infinite capacity for taking pains." On and ever on he pushed his way, until, when the end of the school year came, the dean's eyes were too large for his head, his clothes were too large for his frame, his face was drawn and tense. He was worked down and played out, but there was no sign of a break in his constitution or his program. On he went and relaxed only after the doors of the university were closed for the summer.

Goes to the West.

After carrying off all the honors and the learning that Lexington had to give (I think he remained on that historic ground a year or two gathering up any loose ends of knowledge that might have escaped him in the hours of slumber) he proceeded to the far West where he conducted a school with much success. But while thus engaged there dawned upon his consciousness, as the wise men say, the fact that there were some phases of the Greek tongue—I suppose it has phases—with which he was not perfectly familiar, and his dreams were so disturbed by this revelation that sleep departed from his eyes and slumber from his eyelids.

"Greek Roots Sticking Out of Pockets."

He told his troubles to the school directors who smiled at his simplicity and scoffed at the value of Greek roots in an educational system any way. However, it was agreed that the present dean should go to the University of Chicago to run to earth any curiosities of the Greek tongue that demanded investigation; and after spending several years in such a pursuit he came away with Greek roots sticking out of his pockets, and some say through the crown of his hat. But he had left behind him a great reputation for scholarship, and barely enough remnants of the Greek language for the university to do business with until a new stock should be imported. Life there was much more strenuous than at Lexington, and his work more arduous, if such a thing can be imagined.

Ancestry and Relatives of Greek Words.

So thorough was his work, however, that at the mention of a Greek word the dean can introduce you to its family and friends, can tell you all about their ancestors, their church relationships, their views of the currency and the tariff, and which branches of the family voted for Andrew Jackson and which for Martin Van Buren, which have the largest assortment of skeletons in their family closets, and what branches are opposed to the use of the organ in worship. He knows Greek ancestries better than his own. There may be some things about our verb "go" of which he knows nothing, but in the Greek he will tell you how it began to go, how it has continued on the wing in spite of all the efforts of standpatters to make it choose some other means of locomotion, and how it might call an airship to its aid without doing violence to the best usage. The dean is a Greek scholar.

In the years during which he has been at Drake University the fine traits of his student days have been the inspiration of many who came under his influence. To impart the scholar's enthusiasm and ambition to the young is his delight and his reward. For this reason the merit of his work is recognized in the university and far beyond its walls.

The Religious Bargain Counter

Some Fads and Their Disastrous Results

By William E. Barton

It is not so difficult to manufacture a religion as it is to find a market for it. This statement applies also to the majority of commodities. The difficulty of manufacturing automobiles, or $3 shoes, or opera glasses, or airships, is not so much that of getting materials together and putting them into shape as it is of finding customers in sufficient numbers to make it commercially profitable. The writing of a book is not always an easy matter; but it is very simple compared with that of finding a sufficient number of buyers and readers to pay the printer, and keep the pot boiling above the author's fire.

It is very easy to invent a religion. It requires no great amount either of learning, imagination, or piety. The chief difficulty is in creating a market for it, and this is less difficult than is sometimes assumed.

If anyone were to invent a religion whose fundamental tenet is that two and two are five, it is entirely possible that he, or more probably she, could enroll ardent and enthusiastic disciples, mostly women; among them might be some college graduates. It would be necessary, of course, to invent some forms, some mysteries, and some rather high-sounding philosophy, together with a sufficient amount of mathematical circumlocution to slip an extra unit somewhere into the computation.

At the present time there is a perfect bargain counter of strange religions. Their devotees for the most part are American women; some of them of average intelligence, and a few of them rather exceptionally bright and of more than average scholarship. I have chanced to see a number of these cults at close range, and two or three of them were born, grew to maturity, lived and died under my observation. It may be fitting that I give some results of my experience in these matters.

Mr. Beekman and His Evolution.

Something more than thirty years ago, the Rev. Mr. Beekman was pastor of a little church at Bryon, Ill. At that time I was a boy of eighteen, working in the postoffice of a nearby town. The postmaster was a retired minister, and he and his wife visited back and forth with Mr. and Mrs. Beekman. At their table I came to know this lady who founded a religion and succeeded in securing several thousand very ardent followers. Mrs. Beekman was a bright woman, not more intelligent, but more brilliant than her husband, gifted in conversation, and with a pleasing personality. During the time that I lived near them her husband was taken sick, and she supplied his pulpit for several Sundays. The novelty of seeing a woman in the pulpit increased the congregation, and Mrs. Beekman felt the flush and distinction of public recognition. When her husband recovered, there was danger that the congregation would fall off, or the church be divided, unless she continued to preach. She preached in the evening, and her husband in the morning, and for a time it seemed that the arrangement was singularly advantageous to all the interests of the church. But more and more the morning and evening congregations grew apart. The evening audience hung upon the words of Mrs. Beekman with a growing adulation, and the flattery which she received quite turned her head. The words which she spoke seemed to her followers more than words of human wisdom. She liked to hear her followers say that her utterances were those of an inspired prophetess. In time, she came to say it of herself. She turned to the eleventh chapter of Revelation, that fertile passage for all women enthusiasts, and there she found a picture of herself as the woman standing in the moon and clothed with the glory of the sun. From this point of vantage she looked down upon the world waiting for the system of doctrine to which she was to give birth. At last she brought it forth, and a reverent company of nearby farmers, augmented by some wise men from afar, brought to her their reverent and adoring acknowledgment of the truth of her revelation.

Nothing New.

Her doctrines were neither very new nor subtle. The male and female principles in creation she declared to be equal. The principle of motherhood, as truly as that of fatherhood, she said, was inherent in the character of God. The divine life which came to earth in the masculine person of Jesus Christ must come again, and had come again in feminine embodiment. She now chose twelve disciples, but instead of a Judas or a Mathias she named a John the Baptist, one—George Jacob Schweinfurth. Her Peter was a brother of the good woman in whose house I was living at the time. He had been a deacon in the church of which Mr. Beekman was pastor. By this time the little church was rent in twain. Mr. Beekman was preaching to the remnant of his former congregation, bearing his increasing trials with fortitude, resignation, and the dignified silence of a Christian gentleman; while his wife, who now set herself up in a separate establishment, was receiving a veneration that continually approached and at length attained the point of actual worship.

She now went from place to place organizing bands of disciples in several states. People emptied their pocketbooks into her lap, and the sect grew and multiplied.

She Died.

On one of these evangelizing tours Mrs. Beekman died. Her followers gathered around her, denying that she was or could be dead, and triumphantly declaring that at the end of three days she would rise again. The three days passed, and her followers still had the body on their hands. The apostolic group in her home town requested that it be sent to them and it was returned, but did not rise from the dead. Then came Mr. Beekman from his saddened home and took the body of his wife and gave it quiet burial. Throughout this period of trial and sadness, he bore himself like a man, and what he suffered he never told the public.

A Worse Sequel.

This story would be sad enough if it could end above the grave of Mrs. Beekman on the banks of Rock River; but this is only the first chapter in this story. Comes now George Jacob Schweinfurth, later known as John the Baptist, and makes solemn declaration that on the third day after Mrs. Beekman seemed to mortal sense to have died, he felt within him the entrance and possession of her resurgent spirit. The weeping followers of Mrs. Beekman dried their tears and fell at his feet. What followed after this is too sad to tell; yet some brief outlines must be sketched. A rich farmer gave Schweinfurth his farm, and there he established a place which he named "heaven." For an account of the scandals that followed, reference must be made to court records and the investigation of the committee of the legislature of the state of Illinois. It is a story full of shame.

The cage of unclean birds finally was broken up. George J. Schweinfurth died in Chicago a year ago last summer under an assumed name. His followers, robbed, deluded, and some of them corrupted, are scattered in many places throughout the Northwest. Some of them returned to their former church relationships and are living sincere and humble lives. Some of them are said to have become atheists and blasphemers, believing all religion to be a fraud.

I give this story somewhat in detail, because the whole scope of it fell within my personal knowledge. My own room-mate, with whom I first went to hear Mrs. Beekman preach, became one of her followers. I witnessed the rise, progress, and decline of this cult, and visited at the home of Schweinfurth after his exposure and disgrace.

It would be false and foolish to pretend that women only were deluded. Some very sane and sensible men went into this movement, heart and soul, and remained with it in complete subjection to its teachings until the very end of the chapter. But at the head of it was the worship of a woman, and the sex feature of it which permitted its ultimate and complete degradation, while used by a wicked and designing man, grew out of excessive sex consciousness on the part of sincere, but neurotic women.

Brought By the World's Fair.

The World's Fair brought to America representatives of many Eastern faiths. Had these merely attended the Congress of Religions, conferred with well-trained scholars, and gone their ways, good would have resulted from their coming. The vice of the movement lay in the fact that these men were taken up as social lions by groups of silly women, some of whom then went to studying the occult and esoteric, and established little coteries of devotees. Foremost among these women who exploited these Orientals was Sarah Farmer of Greenacre, Maine. Miss Farmer spent her winters in Boston, and in the years immediately following the World's Fair, was an attendant at the church of which I was pastor. She is now said to be an inmate of a Massachusetts asylum for the insane. Recent magazine articles have given her the doubtful credit of making more women heathen than any one woman in America. It would be unbecoming of me to speak ill of a woman who was at one time my parishioner. As to her personal character, Miss Farmer was an excellent woman, but her head was turned by these vagaries till her brain reeled, and now there are in nearly every prominent city in America little groups of silly women, muttering heathen gibberish, and some of them actually bowing down to Indian idols. Meantime, some of these Oriental teachers whom they feted and with whom they chatted and drank tea, went back to their Eastern homes, interpreted the free conduct of these women in terms of the degraded life of womanhood in their own lands, and have said such things about these American women that if the husbands of those same women could first get hold of the Oriental teachers and then exercise some decided self-restraint upon the conduct of their own wives, it would be doubly to the credit of American manhood.

Other Instances.

A number of other instances have come under my immediate knowledge, but some of them are too definitely personal to be told in print. One or two women now are publishing occult magazines, whose beginnings I knew and whose growth I have witnessed with varied and mingled emotions. I trust it is unnecessary for me to say that I never have belonged to any of their cults; but I have been near enough to know something of their inside workings.

Last summer a letter came to me from a minister in Philadelphia, asking me to assist in the recovery of a lad who had been taken from his home, and was supposed to be at that time an inmate in a Chicago institution, bearing the name of Mazdaznan. I was away on my vacation at the time. When I returned in the fall, the worst fears of my friend appeared to have been realized. The place was that of a "sun" cult, of which the boy's mother had become a devotee. The case since has been up in the courts and unpleasant things have been said about it, of which I need make no mention here.

A Healer.

Last summer I was in a city on the Pacific coast where a widely advertised healer was then located and at work. I told him who I was and asked him if I might sit and talk with him about his method and watch him at his work, merely asking that when his patients came in he would proceed as if I was not there and let me be a witness to what he did. I spent a considerable part of two days with him. I have been watching faith cure in its various forms for the last twenty-five years. I think I never saw it in a more crude, superstitious, or avaricious form than that of this healer. I do not name him—first, because it might not seem courteous for me thus to reward his hospitality; and secondly, because I do not now care to advertise him. But he moves from city to city, and I was told that in one city where he did a widely-heralded work, not less than 10,000 letters were held for him in the postoffice to be forwarded when his next address was learned. All kinds of people visited him while I was there, but the vast majority were women; and of his healing, it need only be said that even as judged by rather charitable tests of mental therapeutics, it was thoroughly crude, illogical, and with a mercenary motive scarcely masked at all. I am inclined to think this man started his work with a considerable element of sincerity, but that his own cupidity and the credulity of his patrons have made him a conscienceless fraud and a wrecker of human hopes.

A Yearning for Novelty.

What is the reason for all this and for all the rest which might be told, but which it is better to leave unwritten? First of all, women are by nature more religious than men, and in their religious life more deeply emotional. In the second place, there is in our American womanhood a mental and spiritual restlessness, an unwholesome yearning for novelty, an eager desire for fads which readily lends itself to these numerous delusions. In the third place, women have been in all ages the dupes and tools of charlatans, both in the physical and spiritual realm. They are the victims of the surgeon's knife and the dupes of the faith curists.

In all this I speak without prejudice against womanhood. More and more, I am inclined to believe in the wisdom of George Eliot's blunt and sensible Mrs. Poyser, "I do not deny that women are fools; the Lord made them to match the men." None of these cults have been the exclusive monopoly of women. I never have known of any absurdity even to that of basing a religion upon the theory that the earth is flat, which did not number among its adherents some men and men who were college graduates. There is in my files at this present moment a hysterical pamphlet endeavoring to prove as a fundamental principle of religion, that the sun goes round the earth every twenty-four hours, and the writer has a string of academic titles after his name, and his name is the name of a man.

Woman's Prerogative.

It is the peculiar prerogative of womanhood to lead the world in spiritual things. It always has been so, and it is more so now than formerly it was. Upon the women of the country must rest to too large a degree the burden of discerning between truth and error in the sphere of religion. The great body of American womanhood is religious, and intelligently so; but there are few more pitiable sights at the present hour than the religious bargain counter, heaped with its job-lot of cults, of fads, and follies, from abject worship of graven images and disgraceful perversions in sex instinct, up to the various reaches of the mysterious and occult, into star-gazing and adoration of the sun and the utterances of philosophical platitudes supposed to work marvelous results in the transformation of the soul.

Good-by

O'er the never-beating breast,
See, they fold my hands to rest!
Say what work those hands have done,
Left what mark beneath the sun.

O'er the stiff and moveless feet,
See, they spread the winding sheet!
Who shall tell, when all is o'er,
In what paths they walked before?

O'er the white and silent lips,
From the spade the earth-mold slips!
Sexton, bury every word
From those lips that e'er was heard—

Saving only words of faith—
They already conquer death;
Saving only words of love—
They forever live above.

To the long, undreaming night,
Leave the eyes that have no sight;
Let them close in calmest sleep,
Eyes that never more shall weep.

Now in fair succession rise
Sights that call for deeper eyes;
Those were muddy, these are clear;
Things invisible appear.

Those dead hands, feet, lips and eyes,
Scarcely can I recognize;
That dull, lumpish effigy,
Did they ever call it me?

Body, mixed of moistened clay,
Thou hast had thy little day:
Good and faithful servant, thou
Art discharged with honor now.

Yet, I never gave thee rein
But thou brought'st us both to pain.
Hardly was it fault of thine;
Mine the loss, the lesson mine.

Close companions many days,
Now we go our separate ways;
Thou shalt crumble to thy kind,
I rejoin the Eternal Mind.

—Charles Gordon Ames.

—Jack London and his wife have just arrived at Seattle in a sailing vessel after a trip around Cape Horn. To satisfy his ambition to round the Horn in a square-rigged clipper, the brilliant novelist and his wife, with a Japanese servant, signed up for a voyage in February. They left Baltimore March 1 on the Aryan. Jack London signed the ship's formula as third mate and his wife as stewardess. The Jap was one of the crew. London was to get $35 and Mrs. London $15. The clever author of "Local Color" and "The Call of the Wild" is a sailor sure enough, and loves nothing better than the big, blue sea.

THE HIGH CALLING

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS."

Copyright 1911, George H. Doran Co.

CHAPTER XI. (Continued.)

At Chicago, Bauer changed to a tourist car and found as companions, two other young men, both going to Flagstaff to live in tents at the base of the San Francisco Mountains. Before reaching Albuquerque the three young men had become well acquainted and had good naturedly exchanged joking statements about their "cases," and Bauer, who had suffered from a slight flow just after leaving Kansas city, boasted that he was able to control his lungs by pressing his tongue hard against the roof of his mouth and resting his chest on the back of the car seat in front.

When the train reached Hardy, a few miles north of the Little Colorado, there was a long stop, explained by the conductor as caused by a cloudburst at Winslow. The train made several attempts to start on to Colfax, but finally backed slowly down into Hardy, where it was stalled for the night. In the morning the information slowly reached the passengers that there were fifteen miles of washouts east of Winslow and it would be an indefinite time before repairs could be made.

A few cowboys, Mexicans and Indians were evidently chronic and constant loafers about the little station. Among them was a teamster loading stuff on a wagon. Bauer noticed two boxes marked Tolchaco and asked the man about them.

"I'm taking them over by Mr. Masters' orders. Usually go to Canon Diablo, but no telling how long it'll be to get there with number two. Mr Masters wants the stuff bad. Truck for them Injuns at the mission."

"But aren't we on the north side of the river here? How will you get over to the mission? Isn't that on the other side?" asked Bauer.

"Sure. We can ford it there, if the water ain't too fierce."

Bauer thought awhile and then asked if he might go with the teamster. There was room in the wagon for his trunk and bag, and after securing his effects from the train he transferred to the wagon, and bidding a cheery farewell to his traveling companions, who he said might have to stay on the train two or three days, the teamster drove off with Bauer across the shimmering desert.

They reached the river the next day about noon, after a glorious night which Bauer will never forget, as he slept with his face upturned to the diamond stars of that desert expanse, breathing that pure air of God's all out-of-doors.

The river was high from the recent heavy rains in the mountains but the teamster said he could make the ford all right. This was at a point nearly a mile above the mission which was not visible owing to a bend in the stream.

Bauer, who was totally unfamiliar with the country, the river, the customs, the entire situation, calmly sat in his place as the driver started his team down the shelving bank into the chocolate colored stream.

The water was a little over the hubs of the wheels at first and it seemed to be of that uniform depth as the horses slowly walked along. But suddenly without warning the off horse sank down clear over his back. The next minute the wagon wheels tipped down as if they had run over the edge of a precipice a mile high.

The driver yelled and swore in several languages, but the nigh horse plunged and then sank over his back. The current caught the entire outfit and turned it completely over, tumbling horses, wagon and stuff over and over like a roller. As Bauer felt the water closing over him he had a momentary glimpse of two figures on the south bank of the river running and gesticulating, one a man, the other a woman. He felt himself struggling in a confused tangle of wagon wheels, floundering horses, yelling driver, boxes and muddy water. Then something struck him on the head. He struggled to help himself, throwing his arms out blindly, was aware that someone had hold of his hair and was striking him in the face, of a great roaring and rushing sound, and then he lost all consciousness as the river bore him and his would-be rescuers down the stream together.

CHAPTER XII.

The penetrating light of the desert came into the east opening of the Council Hogon at Tolchaco, and bathed in its enveloping flood the strip of sand that lay in the opening, up to a white and black Navajo rug on which was lying a quiet figure over which had been thrown a bright colored Mexican serape.

An old Indian was sitting outside the hogon close by the entrance, and within an arm's length just inside sat a white man gravely watching the recumbent figure on the rug.

Across the figure on the rug, opposite the white man, sat a young woman, also quietly and gravely watching.

Outside, the 'dobe flats stretched brown and bare until they melted into the confused and fantastic rock piles of twisted and pictured desert stone. In the other direction an irregular streak of light green trailed along, marking the winding of the river bound by twisted cottonwoods and vivid patches of corn fields. Through the shimmer of the heat far off, fifty miles distant, were flung up against a turquoise sky the peaks of the San Francisco mountains, across the front of which a trailing cloud had begun to form. On a slightly rising ledge of rock stood the mission buildings, and through the clear still air, children's voices came floating down to the hogon, where the white man and the young woman were silently watching. A group of Navajos was gathered at the trader's store, some little distance away, their faces turned in the direction of the hogon, their ponies standing near by or tethered to the cottonwood, by the river.

Suddenly the figure on the rug stirred, its right arm rose slowly and the hand made an effort to touch the fringe of the serape.

The white man stooped forward, gently took the hand and held it a moment in his own. As he laid it down, he smiled at the other watcher and said:

"I believe he's coming on all right. The Father is good to him."

The young woman put her hands over her face and her fingers were trembling. A tear was on her cheek when she took her hands away and clasped them over her knees. Then she rose and went out of the eastern doorway, when she stood a moment, her clear gaze resting on the old Indian sitting there with his back against the hogon. He raised his head and asked her a question.

"Yes, the Father is good. He will live, Mr. Clifford says."

She went back into the hogon and to her surprise the figure on the rug was sitting up. It was Bauer, and he was saying in his slow, deliberate fashion:

"I'm not certain, I seem to be confused, but this is Tolchaco, isn't it? When did I arrive? I don't seem to remember well."

"You arrived rather unexpectedly yesterday," said Clifford, with a smile that had a good day's nursing in it. "In fact, you arrived in a hurry. Don't talk. You don't have to."

"My head," said Bauer, and he laid down again.

"That's right, son. We prescribe perfect quiet for you. You don't need even to ask a question. There will be time enough."

And so Bauer found out as the desert days slipped by and he slowly and surely drank in health and strength. He would lie there in perfect contentment, each day noting a little more of life. The nights were splendid with God's own peace. The friends would place his cot near the opening of the hogon and from where he lay he could see the stars come out and blaze all up the half dome of the visible sky. Peshlekietsetti, the old silversmith, who had been near the door the first morning after the accident on the river, would come and sit down inside the hogon to relieve the other watchers. And even after there was no particular need of special nursing, the old man would come and gravely, without attempt to speak, sit there by him, occasionally working at some bit of silver ornament. Groups of the children from the mission would come and stand at the hogon opening, and often come by twos or threes sent by Mr. Clifford with some token which they left on the sand and then shyly ran back to the mission. The doctor at Flagstaff had been over and he had pronounced Bauer's case to be entirely susceptible to climate, diet, and time. And Bauer, who had heard him talking with Clifford, from that moment made wonderful progress, and to Clifford's delight was soon able to walk about, and even go as far as the river, where he would sit down on the fallen trunk of an old cottonwood and watch the Navajos on the other side cultivate their corn and melon patches.

He was sitting there one afternoon watching the thick waters trickling by and wondering how such an insignificant and shallow stream could overturn a heavy wagon and two horses, when the man called Clifford, who had been mending a harness at a bench under a tree near by, came and sat down by him, bringing a part of his work from the bench.

"I have a lot of questions I want to ask," said Bauer, watching the mission worker as he sewed on a buckle.

"All right. But before you begin, I might as well say to you, I was born in Vermont."

"Born in Vermont?"

"Yes; ever hear of it?"

"Yes," said Bauer slowly. "But what has that to do with my asking questions?"

"You'll see when you begin."

Bauer smiled at the other's irresistible grin. He had already made up his mind to like Clifford tremendously.

"Well, then, I want to know, first, who saved my life when I was drowning?"

"Why don't you ask Miss Gray?"

"I will, if you can't tell me."

Clifford chuckled softly.

"I don't know why I shouldn't tell you. But do you feel strong enough to stand a good-sized shock?"

"It takes a good deal to shock me," said Bauer gravely, his mind recurring to his father.

"Of course, we haven't encouraged your talking much up to this time, and you don't strike me as a very rapid-fire speaker, not exactly what is called garrulous, you know. We've been wondering whether you would care to hear about your little upset in there."

Bauer colored a little. "I feel somewhat ashamed to think I haven't asked before—But—"

"Yes, we know. Perfectly. You don't need to say anything. But you feel pretty strong now, don't you?"

"Yes," said Bauer, patiently. "I feel strong enough to know a good many things about this wonderful place."

"'Tis wonderful, isn't it?" said Clifford, laying his work down on the log and pointing at the river. "That old stream is one of the queerest productions God ever made. I'm not criticising it, or saying I could have done any better. But one day, it rares up big enough to drown a pair of hippopotamuses and the next day a child can dam it up with a piece of mud, and the dust blows out of the channel so bad that it needs a sprinkler to settle it. That's the Little Colorado. It will bear watching."

Clifford picked up his work and seemed to be waiting for Bauer to repeat his question, but that was not Bauer's way, and Clifford, after glancing at him sharply, laughed and said:

"You can thank Miss Gray for pulling you out of the river."

"Miss Gray?"

"Yes. We sort of suspicioned that Tracker, that's the teamster you came up with from Hardy, would try the ford and we went up there that day to tell him not to go in because a part of the ford ledge had broken off and we feared he hadn't heard of it. Well, we were too late. You had driven down the bank and were half way across before we sighted you. Miss Gray was in the water before you upset. She knew it was bound to come. I got tangled up with the horses and Tracker—"

"Wait!" said Bauer with more emotion than he could control, "do you mean to say that Miss Gray and you swam out to us while we were being rolled over—"

"Well, what would you do? I was occupied, as I said, with Tracker and the horses, and half the time I couldn't tell 'em apart. But I saw Miss Gray grab you by the hair and then she—you'll forgive her for it, I hope—she struck you with her fist right in the face."

Bauer looked bewildered. "What did she do that for?"

"I thought maybe you would want to know. I would. Well, how could she save you when your arms were thrashing around like a windmill and you were liable to grab her arms and drown her and you, too. So she had to strike you. I know she is waiting till you get a little stronger so she can apologize."

"Apologize," murmured Bauer.

"Yes. It wasn't a ladylike thing to do in polite society. But there wasn't time to ask your permission or tell you why it was necessary. Well, after that little incident, Tracker and the horses and I got so mixed up with each other that we haven't hardly got untangled since. There was one time there when I wasn't quite certain whether I was a horse or a wagon wheel. We drifted down here and it just seemed providential and saved a lot of carrying when we finally got out right here."

Clifford pointed to a spot down the stream a short ways from where they were sitting.

"We saved the horses, cut the harness to bits off of 'em, but the wagon went down and got sucked into the Black Bear quicksands and you can see one of the wheels. See! over there."

Clifford stood up and Bauer in his excitement got up on the log to see better. Far down the channel near the opposite bank, one wheel of the teamster's wagon showed a little, the rest of the vehicle buried in the treacherous sands.

"You and Miss Gray came ashore up above. Right there." Clifford pointed to a great root of a tree that swayed out from an old stump six feet above the channel.

It protruded from the bank like some fantastic sprawling arm.

"She grabbed that old root as you went whirling down and I guess it was about time. We had quite a time pumping the water out of her and for one while,—but it's lucky you have a good head of hair and that you hadn't been to a barber lately. Miss Gray got a regular grip on it. We had quite a time separating her fingers from your locks. You see, I'm telling you because I thought maybe she might be a little timid about the details. If she has to apologize for hitting you in the face, it would be too bad to have to go on and ask to be excused for pulling your hair."

"Pulling my hair," murmured Bauer in astonishment.

"Yes," said Clifford, winking one eye. "Pulling it as if she wanted a lock to remember you by. But that's nothing. You ought to see Miss Gray pull two Hopis out of the river one day last winter. That was just above the Black Falls. A Hopi can't swim any more than a sailor. But they never cut their hair, so it's just made for rescue work. You're the fifth person Miss Gray has pulled out of this so-called stream. She's entitled to that many Carnegie medals, but no one knows about it down east and our daily papers here at Tolchaco never mention such common events as rescue from drowning. That isn't news."

Bauer was silent for several minutes as Clifford resumed his work. He had been obliged to thread a needle and in the process had put the end of the thread in his mouth.

"You don't mind if I ask more questions? It's all so remarkable here and all that's happened. I would like—"

"Don't hesitate. It is one of the rules of the Mission here never to get offended, no matter what anyone says. You couldn't hurt our feelings if you tried."

"And I don't want to try. I don't know how I'm going to express my thanks for all you have done, and especially to Miss Gray."

"That is a kind of difficult place, isn't it? Now I was never rescued by anyone; and I don't know just what I would say. 'Thank you' sounds kind of tame. Perhaps you could throw it into German and make it sound better."

Bauer looked embarrassed and Clifford at once hastened to say:

"Don't worry over a little matter like that. You don't need to say anything about it. Miss Gray will say she was 'only too glad to do it, no trouble at all, don't think of such a thing,' etc. You know how the ladies talk. If you go to say anything about it that's what she will say, ten to one. You needn't be afraid she'll ask you to marry her or anything like that."

Bauer blushed furiously and Clifford laughed so heartily that Bauer could not help joining him, although he had never met anyone like Clifford and did not exactly understand him.

"Tell me about yourself, Mr. Clifford. I'm not a native of Vermont but I am curious and I've been wondering as I lay in the hogon what your position here was, if you will pardon me?"

"Pardon you?" said Clifford cheerfully, as he proceeded to punch holes in a tug. "There's nothing I like to talk about so much as myself. You couldn't hit on a more interesting topic of conversation for me. Well, I'm a general all around missionary at large and handy man. One day I shoe the horses and next day I help Mr. Masters translate the Bible into Navajo. Next day I dig a well and day after that I help old Touchiniteel build a house. Then I send word to the President of the U. S. to let him know that the cattle men at Flagstaff are trespassing on our rights at Canon Diablo and next day I'm medicine man for some poor devil that has tumbled over the twisted falls at Neota. I teach school while Mr. and Mrs. Masters are gone right now over to Tuba to the convention. And when there isn't anything else to do, I help Miss Gray rescue people from that old mud hole. Being a missionary is no end of fun. It's a wonder to me how most people get any fun out of life unless they are missionaries."

"And the elderly woman who wears glasses is your sister. She has been so kind to me. I can never repay her."

"Don't try. Yes, Hannah and I have been here at Tolchaco a long time. We have had the fun of our lives here. She does about everything in the house from washing the dishes to converting the heathen. She works for nothing and throws in her time."

"And—Miss Gray?"

"I thought maybe you might enquire about her, after awhile. Well, Miss Gray is one of the salt of the earth. She's a whole salt mine. She's not been here long, but she's got 'em all going,—Indians, cowboys, traders, gamblers, missionaries, teamsters, everybody. Everybody is in love with her. I've asked her to marry me several times, that is, I've only asked her to marry me once, several times, and I get the same answer every time. She's a graduate of Mt. Holyoke and used to be physical director of the girls' school at Peekskill. That's where she learned to swim and rescue people. She knows several languages and can talk Navajo better than Peshlekietsetti. And she is the friend of every Indian, Navajo or Hopi, between Sunshine and Castle Butte. And she is not proud a little bit. And cheerful? Well, she is just as cheerful every time she says no to me as if it was the first time. And she can sing—you've heard her Sunday nights. She can sing a rattlesnake out of its skin. Well, there is a lot more, but I consider that much a pretty good introduction. If I had one like it, I'd feel as if the press notices had the performance distanced a mile."

(To be continued.)

A. J. Earling, president of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, says crops along the lines in Wisconsin, Minnesota, the Dakotas and Montana are better than for twenty years, that the sentiment among the farmers is optimistic and the outlook for traffic very bright.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison.

Mrs. Harrison will be glad to receive communications from any of her readers offering suggestions concerning woman's welfare, criticisms of articles or inquiries concerning any matters relevant to her department. She should be addressed directly at 530 Elm Tree Lane, Lexington, Ky.

THE BIENNIAL AT SAN FRANCISCO

Our notice of the Eleventh Biennial of the General Federation of Women's Clubs two weeks ago only got as far as the address of Mrs. Philip N. Moore, the retiring president. The two candidates for the presidency, Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker of Texas, and Mrs. Philip N. Carpenter of New York, conducted a spirited but dignified campaign, which resulted in the election of the Texan by a handsome majority. Mrs. Pennybacker has served the federation in various capacities, and is a striking combination of courage and progressiveness, calmness and sanity. She is a typical Southern woman, born in Virginia, but a resident of Texas since her early youth. Her husband, who was a noted educator, died about twelve years ago, and she is a model mother and home maker. She has a devoted following in her own state, and has been honored with leadership in many lines. She is the second Southern president that the Federation has had and enters upon her duties with the brightest prospects for a successful administration. Her fellow officers, and the eight new directors are each from different states and represent all the great sections of our country.

Department Meetings—Bible Study.

The federation does its work through about a dozen departments, and the meetings devoted to their reports were of unflagging interest. While the club movement has long passed beyond the purely cultural stage, yet the report of the Department of Literature is always an event. Two years ago at the Cincinnati Biennial this resolution was passed:

"This department recommends the Bible as literature worthy of first consideration, and urges that every club belonging to the federation devote at least one entire day's session to the discussion of this subject, taking it up in individual papers, or in the lecture form."

During the intervening two years, Bible study outlines had been prepared with great care upon the literature of both the Old and New Testaments. Some of the clubs had given the whole year to Bible study. The San Francisco Biennial re-affirmed this resolution, and urged that the Bible be given the foremost place in study courses for the coming two years. This means that the Bible will be studied by hundreds of clubs; the club, of which the writer is president, has a course of twelve lectures on the Hebrew prophets for next winter.

The Department of Literature is also aiming for a purer drama, and has affiliated with the Drama League of America, which is organized for that end.

Social Hygiene.

No department of the federation was more active or far-reaching than the Public Health Department during the 1910-1912 period. It formed a new sub-committee, that of Social Hygiene, under Dr. Rachelle S. Yarros, of Hull House, Chicago, and its work has been far beyond the expectation of even the most hopeful. The able chairman outlined the purpose of the work as follows:

"The Social Hygiene campaign is for the purpose of restricting the spread of social diseases among the innocent, especially women and children, and incidentally to raise the standard of clean, wholesome living for all the people. It gives information as to the disasters, remote and immediate, curtailed by these diseases, as well as their prevention."

The meeting of the Social Hygiene Committee was one of the most important of the biennial. Doctor Yarros and other speakers presented not only the ravages of these terrible social diseases, but their source, the white slave traffic, that is undermining the very foundations of modern society. It would seem that with this new conscience and new publicity that is being aroused over this ancient evil, that the time is not far off when those who break the Seventh Commandment, whether men or women, shall be regarded as much as enemies to society as perjurers, thieves, or murderers.

Time and space fail to tell of the reports and meetings of the departments of civics, education, industrial and child labor, conservation, civil service reform, household economics, library extension, music, art, and their varied lines of work. When we remember that the women who lead these departments represent the high water mark of efficiency, and receive no compensation for their services, the wonder grows at the love and enthusiasm in a good cause which prompts them.

Death of Mrs. Sarah Platt Decker.

The eleventh biennial was an exceptionally brilliant and successful meeting, but its close was shadowed by the death of the best beloved woman in the general federation. Mrs. Sarah Platt Decker came to the biennial in apparent good health, and her reception by the three thousand delegates and visitors, when she made an address at one of the evening sessions, was a veritable ovation. The next day she was taken sick at her hotel, and was removed to a hospital for a surgical operation; the day after the biennial adjourned, she passed into her last sleep.

She had been a leader in the general federation almost from its organization, and she declined the nomination twice before she was elected president in 1904. Her four years' administration witnessed a splendid growth, both in policy and membership. Her personal popularity was a contributing cause—her kind heart and quick perceptions made her a discoverer of the best in women, and wherever she went, she left enthusiastic friends and workers behind. She possessed a fund of humor, and was as inexhaustible in anecdote as Lincoln himself. Her very presence radiated good will and good cheer.

Recognition by Government.

Twice her administration was given a recognition by our national government, never before accorded to a woman's organization.

In the early days of the digging of the Panama Canal, it was discovered that it was a social as well as an industrial problem ;the women, upon whom depended the family life in the canal zone, felt keenly the lack of social interests in the new land, and the administration at Washington turned to the Federation of Women's Clubs to help them remedy the prevalent unrest and discontent. The government sent the representative of the federation, Miss Helen V. Boswell of New York, to the Isthmus, so that she might organize women's clubs there. The result was the establishing of a large number of clubs, and the formation of a Canal Zone Federation, which is auxiliary to the General Federation.

The second tribute was paid to Mrs. Decker herself. When President Roosevelt called the conference of governors at the White House in May, 1908, he invited Mrs. Decker to attend as a delegate from the Federation, and she was the only woman present on that notable occasion.

Mrs. Decker was as influential in her own city and state as in national movements. She was easily the leader, both of the women of Denver and of Colorado, in all civic and social service. When Governor Shafroth heard of her death, he telegraphed to San Francisco, and asked that her body might lie in state in the capitol, and ordered all the flags on the state and city buildings put at half mast until after her funeral.

Thus does a state honor its women when they are given the right of citizenship!

I. W. H.

Sophie B. Wright

"The first citizen of New Orleans," Miss Sophie B. Wright, died recently at her home, following an attack of heart disease.

She was the best known and the best beloved woman in Louisiana. Pain, poverty and sacrifice were her portion, yet she toiled on through the years, a mother to thousands of children, a benefactor to the needy and suffering.

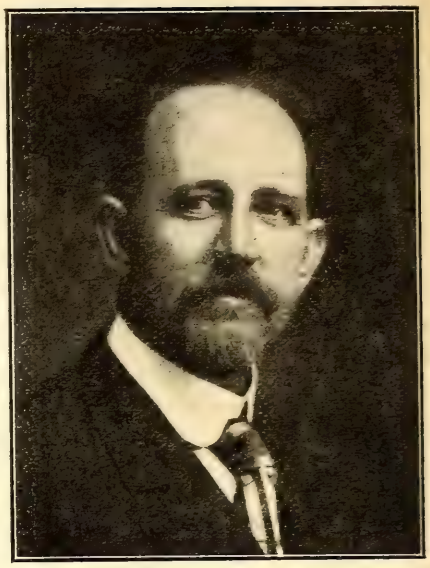
At the age of three years she suffered a fall which crippled her for life. For six years she was strapped to a chair. When only fourteen years old and going about on crutches, she opened a private school for girls, now known as the Home Institute and as one of the most successful among the girls' schools in the South. Before she was twenty, she founded the first night school in the city for the education of the poor boys and young men who had to work during the day. These two schools she continued for the remainder of her life. Although in limited circumstances herself, Miss Wright never refused a girl who applied for an education, no matter what her condition financially. Her night school was free.

An active worker in the King's Daughters and in church and charitable organizations, she was a part of nearly all the agencies that related to the welfare of the city and state. She was closely identified with the Home for Incurables, and raised the fund for the building of its children's annex. She founded "Rest Awhile," a summer resort for needy women and children. Her private gifts and benefactions were many, but given so silently that their number is unknown.

All over the South Miss Wright was recognized as a leader in education. The people of her city appreciated the gentle, comprehending woman who went about on her crutches doing good, and who, however distraught with pain, never failed to meet her classes. Of late years, honors were shown her. In 1904 the Picayune loving cup, offered to the citizen rendering the most distinguished service to New Orleans during the previous year, was awarded to Miss Wright. Its presentation was marked by a great public ovation. Professional and business men testified that they owed all they were to the beloved teacher; and men and women in all walks of life paid her tribute. A check for $10,000 was contributed by her friends to pay off the mortgage she had placed on her home in order to meet the expenses of educating boys and girls.

Professor A. W. Fortune

Professor Charles M. Sharpe



Professor William Hill

Educators Now in the Public Eye

Recent Accessions to and Promotions in Disciples' Academic Ranks

Professor A. W. Fortune

A. W. Fortune, who becomes professor of church history and New Testament theology at Transylvania University, leaves the pastorate of Walnut Hills Church, Cincinnati, where he has conducted a ministry of signal success. Mr. Fortune went to Walnut Hills from the University of Chicago, where he had been in residence three years, during which time he was associate pastor with Charles Reign Scoville of the Metropolitan Church in Chicago. He had also held a pastorate at Chagrin Falls, O., following his graduation from Hiram College. Mr. Fortune's personal temper in his pastoral ministry augurs quite as much for the richness of his professorial ministry as does his scholarly equipment. He is a thorough evangelical in faith and spirit, a lover of men and possessed of a passion to save them. In Cincinnati he was prominent in all missionary and charitable enterprises, as well as in civic reform activities. He is now on a tour through Palestine.

President Charles E. Underwood

Charles E. Underwood became president of Eureka College the first of last February. He has taken hold of the work in a very remarkable way. This is due to special natural fitness and thorough training.

Mr. Underwood was born April 2, 1875, in Pennville, Ind. His father was a Quaker and his mother a Presbyterian. He early became a Disciple and is ardent in his loyalty to their plea and principles. His first public work was as an apprentice at the printer's trade. He spent several years in the printing and newspaper business, part of the time as editor. He entered Butler College in 1899, and received his A. B. degree 1903. In 1904, he received his A. M. While a student in college he supported himself by preaching. He held brief pastorates at Summitville, Ind., and the Fourth Church of Indianapolis, from 1904 to 1907. In the fall of 1907 he entered Yale University and spent three years in study, taking his A. M. degree in course. During 1907 and 1908 Mr. Underwood was director of religious education of New Haven, Conn., under the direction of the Religious Education Association. He was professor of Old Testament language, literature, and interpretation in the Bible College of Missouri in 1910-11, and served for a short time as professor of New Testament language, literature, and interpretation in that institution. He came to Eureka February 1, 1912. Having finished his residence work in Yale, he prepared his thesis and was granted the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in June of this year.

Professor W. C. Bower

W. C. Bower, who was recently elected to the A. C. Hopkins chair of Bible school pedagogy in Transylvania University, made vacant by the resignation of Prof. W. F. Smith, took undergraduate work at Tri-State College and Butler College, receiving his bachelor's degree from the former institution.

After a successful pastorate of eight years in North Tonawanda, N. Y., in which he developed one of the largest and most successful Sunday-schools in the East, greatly enlarged the membership of the congregation and made the church one of the leading religious forces in the city. Professor Bower resigned his charge in order to study in Columbia University and Union Theological Seminary. After making the degree of Master of Arts in Columbia, he completed his residence work for the doctorate. On leaving New York, Mr. Bower accepted a call to the Wilshire Boulevard Church, Los Angeles, located in the most cultured and exclusive section of the city.

Professor Herbert Martin, Ph. D.

Mr. Bower will offer courses in Bible School Pedagogy, The History of Education, Missions in the Sunday-school, and Christian Sociology.

Professor Willis A. Parker

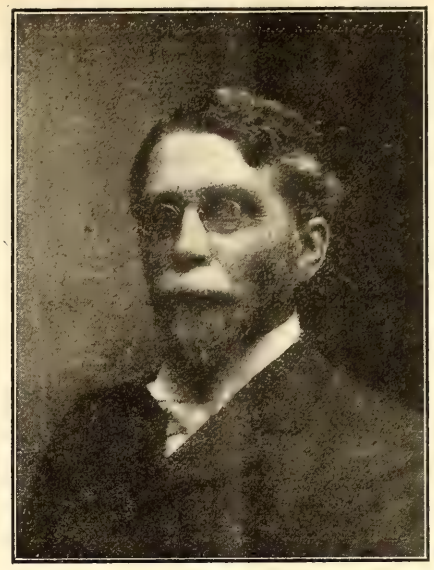
Willis A. Parker, who has been appointed professor of philosophy in Pomona College, California, is the son of a Disciple minister—G. A. J. Parker, who resides at Vienna, Ill. Willis A. went to Eureka College three years. Without taking a degree, he filled three pastorates successively: Murphysboro, Ill., 1895-97; Paducah, Ky., Tenth Street, 1897-99; Emporia, Kan., 1899-1909. During the latter pastorate, he took the A. B. degree at the State Normal College at Emporia, and served as instructor in psychology and philosophy in the same institution. His notable influence among the students suggested to him to devote his life to teaching. He entered Harvard Graduate School in 1909; received M. A. 1911, and Ph. D. 1912.

Pomona College, to which he now goes, was founded by New England Congregationalist influences at Claremont, Cal., to perpetuate the New England type of education. From the first, the institution has taken high rank. Ten years ago it became undenominational. Disciples were invited to participate in its control. F. M. Dowling, C. C. Chapman, A. C. Smither, and other California Disciples have served as trustees. Among the trustees is the Episcopal bishop of Southern California.

Professor Hill and Bethany College

Probably no college among the Disciples has made more marked progress in the past three years than old Bethany, in West Virginia. The signal achievement of the past year is the purchase of the Alexander Campbell farm of 200 acres, together with an adjoining farm of 100 acres, and the leasing of 300 acres more, with all of which a School of Agriculture has been established. The money and the ground plan was provided for this enterprise by Mr. E. W. Oglebay; the brains for its carrying out are being supplied by Prof. Wm. Hill. Dr. Hill was for nearly twenty years a member of the faculty of the University of Chicago, teaching in the department of economics, with especial interest in agricultural economics. In recent years, he has been associated with some of the most resourceful farm owners in the Middle West, counseling them in the development of model and intensive farming. His acquisition by Bethany College for this new department was a notable event. The new agricultural hall, costing $75,000, is nearly complete. A model $10,000 barn has been finished, the farm itself much improved and other improvements planned. It is not the purpose of the trustees simply to run the farm as a means by which students may work out their education in other departments, but to dignify farming by putting it on a scientific basis requiring a four years' course to secure a degree.

Professor William Clark Bower.



Chancellor Emeritus W. P. Aylsworth, LL. D.

Professor Harvey H. Guy, Ph. D.

Professor Herbert Martin

His ingrained love of his church and intense interest in religious problems induced Dr. Herbert Martin to resign the professorship of psychology in Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, to accept the chair of philosophy and psychology in Drake University, Des Moines, Ia. Dr. Martin is a native of Prince Edward Island, Canada, like his colleague, Dean Norton. He studied at Transylvania University and received his Ph. D. degree at Columbia University in New York. His first year at Drake has been completed. He rejoices in his new relationship, prophesies great things in the future for his school, and is making a rich contribution of personal graciousness and scholastic ability to bring them about.

Professor H. H. Guy

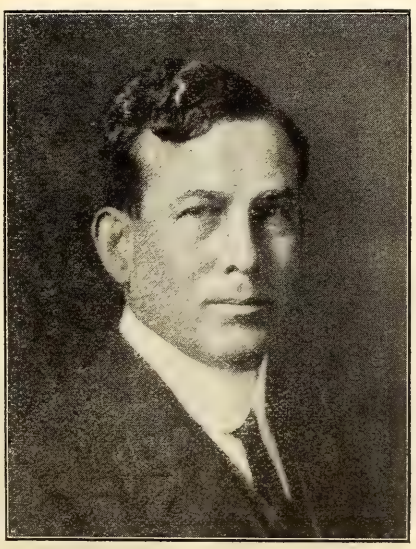
Harvey H. Guy was the Disciples' first "Living link" missionary. He was sent to Japan by Central Church, Des Moines, Ia., nearly twenty years ago. Returning home on his second furlough, he studied in Yale three years and received the degree Ph. D. He was elected Dean of the Berkeley Bible Seminary in California some three years ago. With the refusal of the board of trustees to join with Pacific Seminary (previously Congregational) in building up an undenominational seminary, Dr. Guy's friends and the friends of Christian unity raised a fund for his support as a professor in Pacific Seminary, to represent the Disciples. Dr. Guy's influence among the churches on the coast is broadening and uplifting. In association with Rev. H. J. Loken, Disciple pastor at Berkeley, and President Nash whose interests are totally unsectarian, and others, there is little doubt that history of significance to the entire Christian world is being made by the Christian forces on the Pacific Coast.

Professor Charles M. Sharpe

Prof. Charles M. Sharpe is one of the best known educators among the Disciples. For many years his name has been the symbol of higher education through his deanship of the Bible College of Missouri at Columbia. He is president of the national association of Bible teachers in state universities. His resignation at Columbia to accept the chair of systematic theology in the Disciples' Divinity House at the University of Chicago, greatly strengthens the already distinguished faculty of the latter institution.

Chancellor Emeritus W. P. Aylsworth

Indelibly linked with the history of Cotner University is the name of W. P. Aylsworth. He was on the committee to draft articles of incorporation, and on the board to organize the work. He served the school first as acting president, later as vice-president, then president, and from 1900 to 1911 as chancellor. Throughout all this time he was a faithful teacher in the department of Hebrew and Sacred Literature. Now as chancellor emeritus, he is still head of the Sacred Literature department, loved and honored by students and teachers alike.



President Charles E. Underwood, Ph. D.

Dean Martin L. Pierce and Phillips Bible Institute

Just before his death, which is reported elsewhere in this issue, Thos. W. Phillips, of New Castle, Pa., launched an enterprise in connection with the church at Canton, Ohio, known as Phillips Bible Institute. Mr. Phillips was attracted to the Canton church because of the work which it has done, the size of the congregation and Sunday-school and its splendid organization and equipment. The church has been built on definite, positive lines peculiar to the restoration movement.

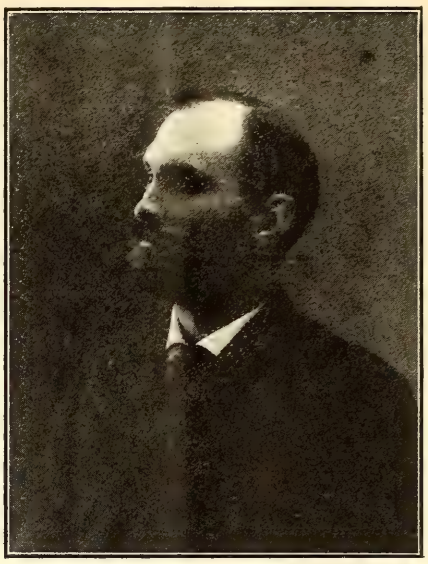
The courses of study will be practical. Four days in the week will be given to class room work, and two days will be spent in the field doing practical work.

The institution is intended to reach five distinct classes of students. First: elders, deacons and Bible-school workers, who feel the need of additional equipment to fit them for efficient work in their local churches. Second: Ministers who were unable, while in college, to get courses dealing with the history of the Disciples. Third: Many young people who wish to dedicate themselves to Christian service, but are unable to take the regular college course. Some of these have not the money, others are debarred by our present college entrance requirements, while others are beyond the college age. Fourth: Those who have had courses in college but have no idea of procedure in Christian service. Fifth: Those who have completed the high school course, but wish to devote their time to those studies which will directly equip them for their life work. The courses of the institute have been outlined to suit their needs. The courses, as outlined, will cover a period of three years of three terms per year.

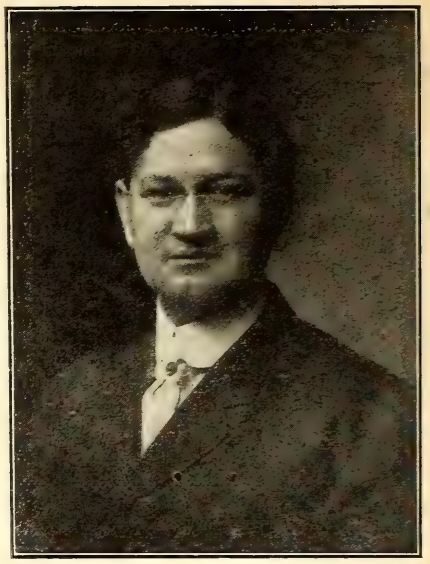
The institute is fortunate in securing the services of Dean Martin L. Pierce. Mr. Pierce was for fourteen years connected with the Johnson Bible College, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn. He has been a student at Hiram, Butler, Kimberlin Heights and the University of Michigan.

Thos. W. Phillips has helped to launch many enterprises in our brotherhood and has been a liberal contributor to many of our colleges. He is not only the founder of the institute, but it is the child of his thought. The institute is planned to carry out the plan which has been in the mind of Mr. Phillips for many years.

Chancellor William Oeschger, B. D.



President Nash of Pacific Seminary.



Dean Martin L. Pierce.

Progress of the Colleges

What They Have Done and Intend to Do

Christian College

Christian College at Columbia, Missouri, is the pioneer college of the Disciples for the education of women. It was founded in 1851 by men of ability and of Christian ideals who believed that young women should have equal educational opportunities with young men. Above all, they believed that this training should be Christian. Thus the college was christened, not from the idea of giving it the name of a specific church body, but because this new college for women was to be distinctly Christian in its standards and training. It is also significant of its broad beginning that one of its founders was James Shannon, L.L. D., president of the University of Missouri, the doors of which institution at that time being closed to women.

To meet the advanced standards of a Junior college, Christian College has recently, through the generosity of a great friend of education, completed a splendid $36,000 Academic Hall, the J. S. Dorsey Memorial. Here with adequate class and lecture rooms, laboratories, study hall, gymnasium, and chapel, all the requirments of this advanced standing are being met.

A fund of $27,000 has been given toward a proposed endowment of $100,000. The alumnae of the college have pledged themselves to give $25,000.

A beautiful event of the autumn will be the dedication in October (date to be decided) of the Rogers Memorial Entrance. This splendid memorial will be the gift of alumnae and friends of the college and will be an expression of the devotion and interest of many who knew and honored this great educator. Mrs. J. K. Rogers, who is much interested in this tribute to her distinguished husband, is planning to be here for the dedication with her daughters, Mrs. T. T. Crittenden and Mrs. A. B. Holland. It is expected that many of the alumnae and former students will also be present for this occasion.

Drake University

Drake University, Des Moines, Ia., has just closed a successful endowment campaign through which $400,000 endowment has been added to its resources. This additional endowment will be used in the College of Liberal Arts, and will enable Drake to more fully take advantage of her large opportunities here in the Middle West. The university now has buildings, equipment and endowment to the value of $2,000,000, and has facilities in educational work unequalled in its part of the country.

The department of religious education at Drake is challenging the attention of religious workers throughout the country. This is mainly because of its course of study, worked out on original lines by Professor Walter S. Athern, director of this department. Its plan is to provide for the Sunday-school and other religious teachers the same sort of training which colleges of education and normal schools furnish for public school teachers.

Hiram College

Distinct progress has marked the year 1911-12 at Hiram College. The strengthening and extension of college courses found response in the largest enrollment of college students in the history of the school.

Gifts received during the year totaled above $11,000. Of this amount, about $5,000 was for current expense and the remainder for special purposes. Notable among the former was the gift of R. A. Long of nearly $1,600, according to his generous offer made on the Brotherhood tour last fall.

The semester system which will go into effect with the new school year will make possible a somewhat wider selection of courses. One new instructor in English will be added to the faculty, and Miss Gould will return from her year's study in Columbia University to be dean of women and professor of history. The appointment of Miss Jessie Smith as college librarian, and a better arrangement of work, will make possible still further strengthening of college courses. Prof. H. G. Hayes, of the department of economics, sociology and government, and Miss Margaret Duncan, of the department of modern languages, will be absent on leave for university work—Professor Hayes at the University of Michigan, and Miss Duncan at the Sorbonne in Paris. Mr. Howard T. Lewis, of the University of Wisconsin, will substitute for Professor Hayes, and Miss Jean Campbell, formerly instructor in Washburn College, Topeka, Kan., will supply for Miss Duncan. Other new teachers will be Miss Lillian Hammers,

(Continued on page 22.)

Three University of Chicago Buildings. Arrow shows eves of Hyde Park Church, which stands on Lot of the Disciples Divinity House.

A Unique Mission Study Tour

Reported in a Series of

Fascinating and Authoritative Articles

in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Beginning Next September Continuing Nearly a Year

No feature of American religious journalism during the next twelve months will surpass the articles by PROFESSOR H. L. WILLETT from the Oriental mission field. Dr. Willett is now forming the personnel of the class which he is to take through Japan, China, Korea, India, the Philippines, Egypt and Palestine. The party will sail September 10, and will spend eight months, not in casual sight-seeing but in earnest study of the social and moral conditions of these countries and of the problems of missionary service among their peoples. The enterprise is conducted under the auspices of the University of Chicago. Dr. Willett has been invited by both mission and native educational institutions in the various lands to deliver series of lectures before students and faculties on Christian themes. The most intimate aspects of political, educational and social life as well as the teeming life of the masses, will be accessible to him. His mission both in purpose and plan is unique in missionary history.

The account of his observations and experiences will be published in THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY in a series of articles written as only such a scholar and world-traveler as Dr. Willett can prepare, and generously illustrated by original photographs.

We have every right to say that these articles will be the most significant contribution to the missionary enterprise that has appeared in current literature.

Facts about the missionaries.
Facts about the Oriental religions.
Facts about Oriental social conditions.
Facts about Oriental types of civilization.
Facts bearing upon the practice of Christian Union on the mission field.
Facts as to the Church in the mission field.

Facts, gathered at first hand, by a competent and discriminating observer, and reported in fearless and graphic fashion, are what the Christian people of the Occident want.

This they will receive through Dr. Willett's articles.

Present readers of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY will do their friends an important favor by calling their attention to Dr. Willett's Travel Story and advising them to subscribe

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

700 E. 40th St., Chicago

Church Life

CALLS.

J. T. Houser, Bloomfield, Ia., to First, Davenport, Ia. Accepted.

John Mullin, First, Findlay, O., to San Angelo, Tex. Accepted.

J. B. Brown to Tucson, Ariz. Accepted. Begins September 1.

W. A. Young to Richmond Street, Cincinnati.

A. R. Moore, Birmingham, Ala., to First, Savannah, Ga. Work begun.

C. C. Wilson, First, Milwaukee, Wis., to Ashtabula, O. Accepted.

RESIGNATIONS OF MINISTERS.

H. J. Hostetler Newman, Ill.

Robert A. Sickles, Illiopolis, Ill.

T. J. White and L. I. Mercer, evangelists of Ohio Christian Missionary Society.

F. A. Woten, Palmer, Neb.

J. Cross, Lewiston, Ill.

J. F. Ghormley, Central Church, Portland, Ore.

DEDICATIONS.

New Worthington, O., June 16; C. R. Oakley of Mansfield, O., officiating.

Tucson, Ariz., Tabernacle—W. H. Salyer, state secretary, promoted the enterprise and raised funds to pay for same.

Gladstone, Ore.—C. F. Stephens, pastor. W. F. Reagor of Portland made address.

East Liberty, O.—No pastor; $13,000. P. H. Welshimer of Canton, Secretary I. J. Cahill, and E. W. Thornton of Cincinnati, made addresses.

Akron, O., East Market Street—.President M. L. Bates, of Hiram, made address and raised $12,000. G. W. Moore of Tiffin, O., preached in evening.

EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

J. M. Lowe, evangelist, spends August and September in Des Moines, Ia.

Sapulpa, Okla.—Oscar Ingold, evangelist; 99; continuing.

Mitchell, Ind.—H. A. Wingard, pastor; R. W. Abberley, evangelist; 110.

Princeton, Ky.—Roy L. Brown, evangelist; 61.

King City, Mo.—George L. Snively, evangelist; continuing.

Culver, Ind.—Fife brothers, evangelists.

Campbellsburg, Ky.—Fife brothers, evangelists; continuing.

Bernie, Mo.—V. E. Ridenour, evangelist; 6; continuing.

Santa Clara, Cal.—R. N. Davis, pastor; Kellems and Humbert, evangelists; 27.

Reidsville, N. C.—Henry Bulger, pastor; C. L. Organ, evangelist; 156.

Bloomfield, Ky.—J. W. Lowber, evangelist; 150.

Wisconsin and Illinois Conventions come the first week in September.

Red Oak, Ia., church will build a new $25,000 edifice. George H. Nicol is pastor.

The report from Africa shows 901 baptisms on the Congo during the past year.

West Point, Ga., church has just paid its last installment of a debt of $3,500. L. M. Omer is pastor.

J. J. Tisdall, pastor Wilson Avenue Church, Columbus, O., was elected president of the Union Ministers' Association for next year.

S. T. Willis, president Virginia Christian College, is supplying the pulpit of C. M. Watson at Norfolk, Va., while the pastor is on vacation.

Dean W. J. Lhamon of the Bible chair of Drury College, Mo., has charge of the department of Sacred Literature in the Winfield, Kan., Chautauqua.

Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, and the state of Ohio will greatly miss the presence and active services of Mrs. A. R. Teachout, who recently passed away.

Tipton County, Ind., holds a big county meeting next Sunday at a country grove. Dr. R. H. Crossfield, president of Transylvania University of Lexington, Ky., is the chief speaker.

O. F. Barcus, lately appointed missionary of the Foreign Society, goes to Shanghai in September to take up the work. He is a graduate of Hiram College. He will be associated with James Ware.

The Disciples of Stark County, Ohio, will hold their annual outing at Myers' Lake, Canton, August 2. Dean Martin L. Pierce, of the Phillips Bible Institute, will be the chief speaker.

Jasper S. Hughes of Holland, Mich., is preaching at Gibson to a neighborhood church, where Disciples, Congregationalists, Methodists, and Lutherans "dwell together in as perfect accord as I have ever seen."

A. F. Stahl, pastor at Steubenville, O., spends a portion of his vacation at Kenton, O., with relatives. The remainder is devoted to a ten days' trip with Mrs. Stahl to Mackinac, Snow Islands, and Sault Ste. Marie.

First Church, Omaha, which has been without a pastor for some time, is looking forward with much hope to the coming of A. D. Harmon, formerly of St. Paul, Minn. The congregation is not prosperous, and needs shepherding.

Basil S. Keusseff, missionary among the Chicago Russians, reports that two young men have decided to enter a training school to prepare themselves to preach the gospel to their own countrymen. He reports also the baptism of another convert.

Jefferson Street Church, Buffalo, N. Y., believes in "catching them while they're young." It has a Cradle Roll of more than 200 babies. B. S. Ferrall's ministry there indicates that this method actually builds strong material into the church.

Excursion managers for the National Convention in October have been appointed for each state by the Louisville local committee. In most cases the manager is the state secretary. "Convention prospects grow more rosy with each day," says George A. Jones, the general secretary.

P. H. Welshimer, Canton, O., dedicated the new house of worship at East Liberty, O., Sunday, July 14. The building cost $13,000. On dedication day, $7,335 was raised in cash and pledges. Paul J. Cahill of Cleveland, son of State Secretary I. J. Cahill, was the architect. The house was built of cement blocks.

J. E. Lynn, formerly a well-known city pastor, but who has for several years lived on a ranch in Colorado, has been made chairman of a commission on the rural church appointed by the Colorado Missionary Society. Mr. Lynn's work on this unique commission may be depended upon to be thorough and illuminating.

Eight hundred dollars was raised at a recent morning service of the Christian Church of St. Joseph on Sunday, for the payment of the debt that has stood for two years. The total amount of the debt was $1,200, and the balance is expected to be raised this week. J. Fred Jones, state secretary, conducted the services.

J. H. Goldner of Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, has returned home after a trip through Palestine. He was given a reception upon his return. Prof. E. E. Snoddy of Hiram College, supplied the pulpit during the pastor's absence. He performed the same service ten years ago on Mr. Goldner's former visit to the Holy Land.

Edgar D. Jones, of First Church, Bloomington, Ill., on departing for his vacation preached on "Holy Days and Holidays," declaring that the only way we shall preserve our holy day is to fill it full of the joyousness of the holiday, and the only power that will hold in check our holidays is to keep them in the spirit of a holy day."

W. R. Quiggin, pastor at Las Vegas, N. M., was stricken with apoplexy on his way home from prayer-meeting July 17, and died the next morning. Mr. Quiggin came to this country some two years ago from England. His brother, George R., is a Disciple pastor at Birkenhead, Eng. Another brother, Ernest W., is engaged in business in Montreal.

Office-bearers to be Regularly Ordained

Central Church, Spokane, Wash., revised its by-laws to provide for thirty-five officers one-third of whom are to be elected annually and to be formally ordained to their office when elected. This step will add to the dignity and efficiency of the officiary of the church. J. E. Davis, the new pastor there, is greatly esteemed by his people.

Sunday-school Recreation Ground

The Sunday-school at Fullerton, Cal., is opening up a large recreation ground near the church. Basketball, handball, boxball, lawn tennis, croquet, quoits, and swings will be installed. Attendance at Sunday-school gives free admission to the grounds the next week. Dr. H. W. Wickett is superintendent. Bruce Brown is pastor at Fullerton.

Illinois Headquarters at Louisville

The Galt House, Louisville, Ky., is engaged as headquarters for Illinois during the National convention, October 15-22, and the rate is $1.00 and up. Where two occupy a room the rate is $2.00 for the $1.00 rooms and $2.50 for the $1.50 rooms, $3.00 for the $2.00 rooms, $3.50 for the $2.50 rooms and $4.00 for the $3.00 rooms. Write the house direct for assignment.

A Pastor's Work With Boys

I. H. Beckholt, pastor at Viroqua, Wis., conducted a summer camp for boys for one week. He has organized and conducted summer work for the girls of the city, and the guardians will conduct a summer camp for the girls. Recently the city attempted to hire him for the entire time to work with boys and girls, but he will continue with the church and do this work in addition. He spent two weeks at the Y. M. C. A. summer school at Lake Geneva July 10-24.

Canton Chooses Another Living-Link

The C. W. B. M. and Young Ladies' Circle of Canton, O., have selected T. F. Reavis of Canton, Mo., as their living-link missionary to Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic. Mr. Reavis and family visited the church at Canton July 18 and 19, on their way to their new field of labor. They spoke at the midweek service on Thursday evening. Their presence was an inspiration to the church. Canton also supports Mrs. W. E. Macklin of Nanking, China, as a living-link missionary.

Miss Florence Miller Married

Miss Florence Miller, prominent teacher and platform speaker, representing the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, was married recently to Mr. William Black. Mrs. Black's most notable single service was her tour from Pacific to Atlantic coasts with Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, proclaiming in prophetic and fascinating speech the missionary opportunity that modern womanhood faces. It is hoped that she may continue her splendid leadership of the women of the churches.

A Big Preacher and a Little Paper

Hermon P. Williams, pastor at Alberquerque, N. M., who was threatened with a suit at law for publishing and mailing an indecent paper (his local parish paper which has recently been attacking flagrant social vice in that city), actually had to stand trial on the absurd charges. The prosecution collapsed in the midst of the trial, and the case was dismissed at the motion of the state's attorney. Mr. Williams is making his little four-page weekly a genuine civic power, which goes to show that size doesn't measure influence.

A Missouri "Retreat"

The third annual "Retreat" of the preachers and district workers of the seventh district of Missouri, was held at Camden Point last week, from Monday until Thursday. This is a meeting for rest. fellowship, acquaintance, and conference. A program was arranged for the four days, and liberal time was given for rest and recreation. The problems of the district work were talked over and prayed over, and the workers came to feel the joy of real fellowship in the Lord's work. Graham Frank, pastor at Liberty, delivered one of the sermons at the "retreat."

A Fine Five-year Record

C. R. Stauffer, who began his new pastorate at Norwood, O., last Sunday, accomplished an excellent work at South Geddes Street mission church, Syracuse, N. Y., during the five years of his ministry there. Following are some items indicating the degree of his efficiency: Added to the church. 251; Sunday-school increased from an enrollment of 70 to 517; property provided valued at $17,000 against a value of $1,000 five years ago; congregation led into voluntary self-support. During his pastorate, Mr. Stauffer studied in Auburn Seminary and Syracuse University, besides serving the brotherhood in general as state secretary for two years.

Civic Life Responding to Church Influence

Marked improvement in the civic life of Urichsville, O., is credited directly to the efficient work of the churches. J. A. Canby, minister of the Disciples there, discussed the subject with a traveling man who remarked upon the strong temperance sentiment, and the general high moral tone of the community which had formerly been branded as "one of the vilest on the map." "I cannot explain the change," said the traveling man. "It is the work of Christ," replied the minister. This is by no means a too pious explanation of the improvements in streets, dwellings, lawns, parks, cold water fountains, decency in politics, and every kind of civic virtue. When churches interpret Christ aright to the cities, he will work out just such material values as these and many others that might be named.

Sociability and Patriotism at Augusta

The Emily H. Tubman Society, which embraces the three societies for women in First Church, Augusta, Ga., entertained all the women of the church and congregation with a "spend the day" party at a fishing resort seven miles from the city. Automobiles Transported the large group to the club, where fishing and such feminine pleasures as women enjoy were indulged in to the fullest extent. It was one of the social events of the season, and was a demonstration to those socially inclined that in the name of the church as pleasing a time socially may be had as in any other way. Howard T. Cree has been for almost nine years pastor of this congregation, and has a large hold not only upon the hearts of his people, but of the entire city. Fourth of July in the South is not usually observed; but this year Mr. Cree, who is chaplain of the Daughters of the American Revolution, delivered an address on "The Passion of Patriotism" at a public service held in First Baptist Church. This is taken to mark the beginning of an annual celebration of Independence Day in this old conservative city. Since the war between the states, this day has not been observed in any special way by Southern cities; but the feeling now exists that the people of this section should utilize the occasion for a sane celebration. Mr. Cree's address was most favorably reported in the press of the city. Justice and Mrs. Lamar of the United States supreme court, members of Mr. Cree's congregation, are spending several weeks this summer in Augusta.

A Pillar Fallen.

Thomas W. Phillips, notable figure in the business world, philanthropist, churchman, and author, died at his home in New Castle, Pa., July 21, at the age of 77. He leaves a widow, a daughter, Grace (Mrs. Charles Johnson) of New Castle, and two sons, Thomas W., Jr., and Benjamin. The sons carry on their father's oil business. They also may be depended upon to carry forward their father's ideals, both with their families being devoted members of church. Mr. Phillips had served in Congress two terms, and was the author of the bill creating the Industrial Commission, of which he was made vice-chairman. He was known in both politics and the church for his opposition to the Standard Oil Co., having in the former field resisted the earlier aggressions of that corporation which he refused to join, and in the latter field opposed himself to the reception by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society of any gifts from Mr. Rockefeller or his company. Among Disciples, it is generally known that Mr. Phillips is the author of the widely-advertised book, "The Church of Christ," whose title page says simply: "Written by a layman." This book was pushed by a fund of more than $25,000 set apart for that purpose by its author, and over 50,000 copies have been sold. Not many Disciple enterprises for missionary, educational, or benevolent ends failed to receive generous support from this man. His home church building at New Castle was the gift of himself and his brother to the congregation. Drake, Hiram, Oklahoma, and Bethany Colleges have benefited by his gifts. The last-named was particularly near his heart, and for many years he was a trustee. His last gifts were made to the founding of the Phillips Bible Institute at Canton, O., in connection with Mr. Welshimer's noted Sunday-school there. It is not yet known to what extent he has provided for the needs of this institution.

An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women SIXTY-SECOND YEAR

Christian College

Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $36,000 building, completed. 25 College-trained, experienced teachers. Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior college course leads to an A. B. degree. College-preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character-training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field. Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern colleges. For illustrated catalogue address

MRS. LUELLA W. ST. CLAIR-MOSS, President, COLUMBIA, MO.

Next Session begins September 17th.

Bible College
OF MISSOURI

LOCATION: At Columbia, within 30 miles of the center of the State.
Just across the street from the main building of the State University.

EQUIPMENT: Plant worth $50,000, with an endowment of $150,000; three full paid professors who devote their whole time to teaching Biblical and religious subjects.
Full access to all the academic advantages of the State University with its plant worth $3,250,000, an annual income of over $600,000, and with over 200 teachers.

OWNERSHIP: The Bible College belongs to the Christian Church. The State University belongs to the citizenship of Missouri.

TUITIONS: Bible College: Free.
University: Free to Missourians. Students from other States, $20 per year.

PURPOSE OF BIBLE COLLEGE:
To train students for the Christian ministry, missionary work, and social service.
To supply Biblical and religious instruction to students of the State University.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS:
A young institution, but already has eight of its students on the foreign field, two more sail this month, and another is under appointment to go next year.
Has sent out more than 50 preachers to home churches.
Has instructed hundreds of University students.

EDUCATIONAL STANDING:
Interchange of credits with the State University.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES FOR MINISTERIAL STUDENTS:
Intimate contact with instructors and fellow students in the college family, thereby strengthening religious zeal and conviction.
Close association with students of Journalism, Law, Medicine, Agriculture, etc., in the State University, thereby developing mutual sympathy and understanding between the ministerial student and those of other vocations to whom he must minister later.
Remarkable opportunities for self help. 150 churches within easy reach of Columbia, eight trains in and out daily. More churches want student preachers than we are able to supply.

Progress of the Colleges

(Continued from page 18.)

of Columbia University, and Mrs. R. A. Tallcott, a graduate of Syracuse University, both in the department of English.

The work of the Biblical department, now called the Department of Christian Literature and Service, will go on strongly with President Bates and Professors Peckham, Snoddy and Dean as teachers. Vernon Stauffer, who has been elected to the Chair of New Testament and the position of dean of men, and who had planned to begin his work in the fall of 1912, will continue his studies in Columbia University for another year.

Texas Christian University

Texas Christian University has just concluded in many respects the most successful year in its history. The enrollment, 528 in all departments, and 414 exclusive of the College of eMdicine, was the largest so far recorded.

The magnificent new plant at Fort Worth includes an administration building, costing over $100,000; a young ladies' dormitory (Jarvis Hall), costing over $50,000; a Bible College dormitory (Goode Hall), costing over $45,000, and a young men's dormitory (Clark Hall), now in process of erection, which will cost $65,000. In addition to these buildings the school has a central heating plant, costing over $15,000. Over $40,000 has been spent in furnishing and equipping the buildings mentioned above, while the minimum valuation placed upon the fifty acres of campus in South Fort Worth is $50,000.

At a special meeting of the Board of Trustees held on June 25, plans were laid for a campaign for $1,000,000 of productive funds for the university. Since launching the campaign one gift of $50,000, the Hubbard Foundation, has been received. The trustees, at their recent meeting, elected A. F. Sanderson, of Houston, chancellor of the university, and he will lend his active assistance in forwarding the campaign. Mr. Sanderson is a man of wide experience, and possesses a special talent for this work.

The main thing happening in T. C. U. the past year is the coming of President Frederick D. Kershner to assume the presidency. He is a resourceful and vigorous leader, possessing scholarly talents and tastes and high ambitions for the school.

William Woods College

The two outstanding events during the past year were the death of President J. B. Jones and the coming of his successor, Joseph L. Garvin. Plans are projected for a Memorial Hall and Gymnasium to be built in honor of the late president. Forty thousand dollars will be thus expended.

W. S. Woods has been the leader in nearly every enterprise for the enlargement and perfection of the college, having given from first to last over $150,000. He is making possible this vacation $10,000 worth of very valuable and attractive improvements.

Mr. Woods makes a standing offer to duplicate every dollar given by the Missouri churhes in the interests of the college.

Eureka College

Eureka College has entered upon an era of greater prosperity. The college now has an endowment of $170,000. This will enable the college to maintain its present status. The success of the past campaign encourages us to believe that the funds necessary for the enlargement of the work will be forthcoming. The feeling of greater security enables the administration to add to its consideration of financial problems the formulation of a thorough and systematic policy of business direction and educational advancement. Plans submitted to the semi-annual meeting of the board during the commencement season commit the institution to a centralization of its business direction in such a manner that the problem of raising, expending and investing funds will be greatly simplified. It is hoped that a maximum of efficiency, with a minimum expenditure, may be obtained through the enlargement plans.

A New College

It looks as if another college is about to be established. This time in the great Inland Empire, at Spokane, Wash. The purpose is to begin as a Bible college, later extending to other fields of instruction.

A faculty of six has been chosen to have charge of the work when the school first opens its doors. Other instructors will be added as the occasion demands.

The faculty as chosen follows: S. M. Conner, college pastor; J. E. Davis, minister of the Central Christian Church, instructor in practical theology; B. E. Utz, A. M., and W. D. Willoughby, A. M., instructor in the Bible and kindergarten subjects; Cora Utz, B. L., instructor in the history of missions; Russell Morrison, vocal instructor.

B. E. Utz is actively leading in organizing the new college.

Transylvania University

Transylvania University and the College of the Bible are expecting great gains in the way of students and material equipment during the coming session. Not for many years have the prospects for ministerial students been so encouraging; and certainly not within the past quarter of a century have so many of the friends of these institutions manifested such substantial interest in providing buildings, equipment, and endowments as recently.

Already subscriptions are coming in promptly for the new dormitory. It is hoped that final arrangements will be made for this building before the first of the year, and that it will be ready for use at the beginning of the session one year hence.

Among the recent additions to the faculties may be mentioned Dr. Ansel F. Hemenway, in the department of Biology; Prof. Homer E. Robbins, in the department of Latin; Prof. W. C. Bower, in the department of Bible Sschool Pedagogy; and Prof. A. W. Fortune, in the department of Church History and New Testament Theology. At the last meeting of the board of curators, it was announced that the law school of the university would not continue. The purpose of the board is to intensify the efforts of the institution in training men for Christian service, for leadership in the various departments of Christian life, the ministry and the mission field, rather than for technical service. This they consider the function of the Christian college.

Hamilton College

In a recent visit to Hamilton College, Lexington, Kentucky, I was much pleased with the attractive buildings, beautiful grounds and the scholarly standards of the school. There is a freedom of both faculty and pupils which gives the place a homelike, comfortable look, and convinces one that there is no unhealthy constraint about the place. The large dining-room was well filled with laughing, chatting girls. There was none of the subdued, quiet manner so common to the boarding-school-girl. The intelligent attention given during the chapel services, an hour later, showed a seriousness of manner is marked contrast.

Cotner University

Three new teachers have been added for this coming year. Prof. Hoff last year held the chair of biology, hence is not strictly a new man. The teachers are Miss Cora Marsland, of Ossening, New York. She takes the chair of English. She is a graduate of the New York State Normal, and a graduate student of Wellesley. She occupied the chair of English in the State Normal School of Kansas for years.

The chair of biology will be occupied by Prof. T. J. Fitzpatrick, late of Graceland College, Lamoni, Ia. He is a graduate of the Iowa State University. He has written much for scientific journals in his field of science.

In the School of Expression Miss Edith Anderson, of Toronto, Canada, has been secured. She is a graduate of the Toronto Teachers' College, and the Toronto School of Expression.

A Trip in Western Canada

There is no place on the North American continent where such marvelous increase in population has been witnessed as that now going on in the western provinces of Canada. The people are coming from everywhere with the majority perhaps from the states. Millions of acres of fertile prairie land are being put under cultivation. Towns and cities are growing up almost in a day. There is an air of permanency about everything.

Our first convention was that of Alberta held in Ponoka. M. B. Ryan is the provincial superintendent of missions supported by the American Society. He is doing great work. This is the strongest of the western provinces for the Disciples. We have about a dozen organizations. A year ago, Mr. Ryan and Percival Baker were the only preachers permanently located in the province. We have two others today—J. W. Brown, in the Erskine field, and J. D. Pickell, in the Lethbridge field. Lethbridge is the largest point in the province in which we have a church, and this is newly organized. Calgary, the

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 27
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.
NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business
FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet
THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.
1109 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, U. S. A

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE INDIVIDUAL
"Noiseless"
CUSHIONED TRAYS
4 Different Features
WHY?
1st—"Noiseless"—As all cup holes are cushioned.
2nd—Dust-proof—The Trays interlock.
3rd—A short glass—no need of tipping back the head.
4th—Automatic Filler—Fills rapidly and evenly.
Does not mar the sacredness of the service.
Write for booklet. Outfit sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 E. Randolph St., Dept. T., Chicago.

metropolis, and Edmonton, the capital, are both great centers of population that Disciples hope soon to enter. The convention was sufficiently well attended to secure railroad rates, and the sessions were inspiring. O. B. Stockford of Okotoks, J. C. Bergman of Erskine, H. H. Cox of Ponoka, H. W. Wood of Carstairs, F. W. Crandall of Calgary, and H. N. Stevens of Vermillion, are earnest business men, members of the provincial board, giving their time without limit.

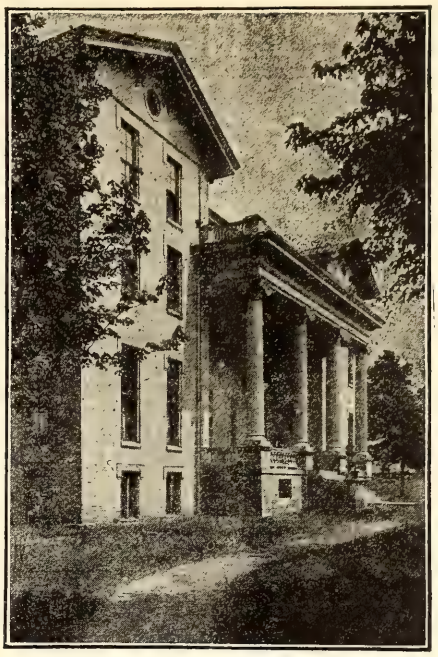
The Saskatchewan convention was held at Milestone. We have really only two churches in this entire province whose population is a half million, 400,000 of whom have come into the province in the last ten years. W. G. Kitchen, pastor at Milestone, is president of the provincial board, and is seeking in every way to build up the cause. He is ably assisted in his efforts by D. W. Madden, pastor at Yellow Grass. Mr. Madden is secretary of the provincial board. We have little banks at Drinkwater and also at Saskatoon. This latter field is the second city in the province. In it is located Alex McMillan, one of our strong men. He has felt it necessary to take a temporary vacation from the ministry. In his home every Sunday morning the Disciples gather to study the word and break bread. No missionary money is at present being spent in Saskatchewan. The brethren from the two churches and these scattered groups raised $1,000 to be spent during the year in the province with the hope that it would be supplemented by the American Society. We certainly must look for a strong man to give his entire time to the development of the cause in Saskatchewan.

The Manitoba convention was held in Winnipeg. This city is the third city in Canada, and has a population of over 150,000. A. N. Simpson is pastor of the church, and in personal appearance and sweet spirit closely resembles Carey E. Morgan. Under his leadership the Disciples have taken some wise steps in the establishment of the church at Winnipeg. The women have bought a lot and built a house now nearly paid for in St. James, a promising resident suburb in the city. In the meantime, the brethren have bought two lots, both of which have greatly increased in value since they were purchased; and within a year the present property and one of the lots will be sold and the proceeds will be used to build a new modern house of worship in the best resident part of the city.

At Portage La Prairie, E. C. Nicholson is the pastor. This is our strongest church in western Canada, and has been greatly helped by the large ingathering so recently held during the evangelistic meeting of the Minges forces. The church at Kenora, Ont., affiliates with the Manitoba brethren, and C. A. Tharp ministers here. Mr. Tharp came to the convention with a report of impending disaster on account of a flood that had recently undermined the foundation walls of the church which our brethren had been seeking to build. The little band gathered in this convention raised $1.000 with which to enable the Kenora congregation to make the necessary repairs to the building. In addition, about $800 was raised for provincial work—a part of which will go to secure a good man for the St. James Mission.

The Manitoba convention was one of the best conventions I have ever attended. The devotion of the scattered Disciples gathered at Winnipeg is not surpassed anywhere. The consecration of such business men as Dr. Charles Cornelius, A. T. Stewart, B. C. Yuell, and W. A. Sissons will guarantee permanent establishment of our cause if they are rightly guided and assisted.

ROBERT M. HOPKINS,
National Superintendent of Sunday-schools.



Hamilton College

1869 - 1912

FOR YOUNG WOMEN

LEXINGTON KENTUCKY

Standardized Junior College Course, requiring two years for a high school graduate to complete. Also preparatory courses for conditioned students.

Faculty of 29, from Vassar, Yale, Wellesley, Columbia, Berlin, Leipzig, Paris, Cornell, The University of Virginia, The University of Chicago, The New England Conservatory, etc.

A faculty of seven teaching Music, Expression, and Art. A three-story gymnasium; outdoor sports.

A select student body from 20 states. 756 graduates.

One of the Colleges of Transylvania University, founded in 1783.

Grounds, buildings and endowment held in trust by an incorporated Board of Trustees, under the auspices of the Disciples of Christ.

Large, shady, park-like campus. Five modern buildings, heated by steam from a central plant, and lighted by gas and electricity. $68,000 recently spent in improvements and addition.

Delightful dormitories. Home care. Cultural surroundings and scholarly ideals. Libraries, laboratories, etc., fully equipped.

Forty-fourth session begins Sept. 9, 1912. Write for Catalogue.

H. G. SHEARIN, A. M., Ph. D. (Yale), President

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

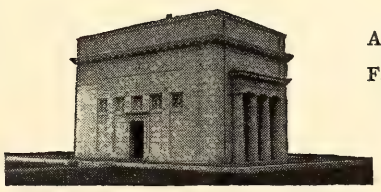
An Up-to-Date College for Young Women
CAMDEN POINT, MISSOURI

COURSES:		COMMODIOUS BUILDING:
College Preparatory Bible Normal, Music Elocution Physical Culture		New Addition to Building New Gymnasium Steam Heated, Acetylene Lighted, Large Campus

TUITION REASONABLE AND RIGHT—SEND FOR CATALOGUE

Sixty-fourth Year Opens in September FRANK G. RICHARD, President

This is Where The Lincoln Cabin Rests In "My Old Kentucky Home"



The Lincoln Memorial near Hogdenville, Ky.

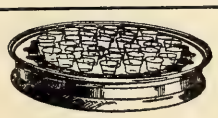
And Thousands are Going to Visit This Famous Spot While in Attendance at the Great

International Convention of the Disciples of Christ

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, OCTOBER 15 - 22

Write me for full particulars as to all the side trips and "Meet us in our Old Kentucky Home."

Geo. H. Jones, Secretary, Care First Christian Church, Louisville, Ky.



THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
OUR SPECIAL SELF-COLLECTING Cushioned Tray has no equal. NOISELESS, DUST PROOF, INTERLOCKING. Best for pew or altar communion. Uses short, shallow cup, glass or aluminum (indestructible) no tipping of head. Saves ONE-FOURTH cost other services. Over 12,000 churches use. Send for catalog and "Special Introductory Offer." Thomas Communion Service Co., Box 120 Lima, Ohio

LET US help TRAIN your DAUGHTER

WILLIAM WOODS COLLEGE

KNOWS HOW

Over 3,300 young women in 22 successful years and more are coming.

RECORD YEAR PROMISED

DOES IT

School of superior merit: chartered, controlled by Christian churches of Mo.

IN CULTURED FULTON, MO.

How the girls feel—one of their college ditties.

"A pocket full of rocks; a head full of knowledge, I'd rather go to William Woods, than any other college."

From James Ware, Missionary in China: "To my mind there is no finer home school in America than William Woods. It has meant a great deal to us, living amid all the uncertainties of the Far East to know that our daughter was absolutely and always safe."

Accredited thorough courses. Choice faculty. European trained teachers in Music and Expression. Department of Modern Languages under Fraulein Luise Bucher, from Munich, Germany. Unusual advantages in Art, Domestic Science, Etc.

Buildings modern, airy; hot and cold water convenient to every room; elliptical dining room, hotel appointments; electric lights; newly equipped throughout with modern sanitary bath and toilet facilities convenient to every room; sanitary bubbling drinking fountains on each floor; pure water from 1,200-foot well; every outside door and window equipped with Chamberlin Metal Weather Strips; entire building heated by efficient high pressure steam plant; hardwood floors throughout; entire boarding and academic department will be re-furnished, re-papered and re-painted before the next school year begins.

Beautiful shaded campus of ample proportions; situation high and salubrious. Gymnasium—out door sports.
Cultured, happy home school life. Attractive features of the best colleges.
The more you learn about W. W. C. the more you will want to come.

Capacity limited.	Ask for our illustrated, interesting new catalogue.	Safeguards of home.
Terms reasonable.	Tells all the story.	Liberal opportunities.

Address JOSEPH L. GARVIN, President,
Box 1101, Desk "Y," Fulton, Mo.

The Divinity of Christ

BY EDWARD SCRIBNER
AMES

Is a popular statement of both the theological and practical truths centering in our evangelical faith in Christ.

It is schol

Sharp Rev C M Dec12
5522 Kimbark Ave

It lifts th character of Christ out of the setting of the old-time dogmatism of the more empirical, human and meaningful thought of our own day.

Its Treatment of Unitarianism is original, fresh, illuminating. A single chapter entitled, "Why I am not a Unitarian" will furnish any reader, conservative or liberal, a new point of view.

It is glowing with religious earnestness. It is a living word spoken to the hearts and souls of living people.

Appreciations

Professor George A. Coe says: "These sermons display a remarkable union of intellectual boldness and spiritual warmth. I know of nothing else in print that brings out quite so clearly the positive religious values that can be reached by a rigorous application to Christian dogmas of the functional and valuational point of view. Even readers who cannot accept Professor Ames' position at all points must agree that such a book helps to clear the air, and to focus attention at the right point."

The Indianapolis News says: "One would go far to find a finer interpretation of religious thought and experience in terms of spiritual laws. Mr. Ames is emphatically a man with a message."

The Chicago Inter-Ocean says: "Six sermons full of broad humanity."

The Watchman says: "Professor Ames is avowedly a "liberal" in theology but his liberalism seems to be of a wholesome kind, in the sense that he is less concerned about doctrines and creeds than he is about service and the helping of people to their best life."

The Independent says: "Dr. Ames does not deny being a liberal, but strongly objects to being styled a 'Unitarian', quoting with enthusiasm a saying of one of the early leaders of his denomination: 'I am neither a Unitarian nor a Trinitarian, but strive to be simply a Christian.' The sermons are thoughtful, moderate in tone and straightforward in expression."

Unity says: "Those who were privileged to listen to these sermons must have found their spiritual natures quickened."

The Advance says: "These are strong, virile sermons, appealing to the reason and satisfying the heart."

Professor Edward C. Moore, of Harvard, says: "It is a very clear and convincing statement of the issue as it stands in the minds of modern men. It makes us realize how the old formulation of the question has become obsolete, no one any longer states the question in the old terms. Dr. Ames has availed himself in admirable fashion of the opportunity for a new statement of the case, and the spirit in which he writes must convey confidence and reassurance to all."

A Most Wholesome Book for Those Troubled Over Christian Doctrines.

Published at 75 cents by

THE BETHANY PRESS
The New Christian Century Co.

700 E. 40th St.
Chicago

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Sharp Rev C M Dec12
5522 Kimbark Ave

Vol. XXIX August 8, 1912 Number 32

OH, my dear friends, you who are letting miserable misunderstandings run on from year to year, meaning to clear them up some day; you who are keeping wretched quarrels alive because you cannot quite make up your mind that now is the day to sacrifice your pride and kill them; you who are passing men sullenly upon the street, not speaking to them out of some silly spite, and yet knowing that it would fill you with shame and remorse if you heard that one of these men were dead tomorrow morning; you who are letting your neighbor starve, till you hear that he is dying of starvation; or letting your friend's heart ache for a word of appreciation or sympathy, which you mean to give him some day—if you only could know and see and feel, all of a sudden, that "the time is short," how it would break the spell! How you would go instantly and do the thing which you might never have another chance to do.

—PHILLIPS BROOKS.

CHICAGO

The Quest

A man once longed for peace complete.
He sought the ocean strand.
Where waves came singing soft and sweet
To the untrodden sand.
But soon they built a little town
Where bands began to play;
And then a tidal wave came down
And washed 'em all away.

He sought the wooded mountain height
To shun the crowds below.
A big hotel soon met his sight
With artificial show;
And next an earthquake shook the place
Until the mountain fell;
The devastation left no trace
Of mountain or hotel.

Out there upon the level plain
Where far his gaze might roam
He turned his quest of peace again
And sought to make a home.
But savage huntsmen 'round him crept
Or raised a warrior shout;
And then a cyclone came and swept
The whole collection out.

And when the cyclone dropped the man
He said: "Right here I'll stay
Here will I strive as best I can
To use what comes my way.
From toil and strife I shall not flee
Nor shirk the issue grim.
No more will I seek peace," quoth he.
And straightway peace sought him.
—Washington Star.

—Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wife of the Democratic presidential candidate, has accepted the invitation of the Women's National Democratic league to become its honorary president.

An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women — SIXTY-SECOND YEAR

Christian College

Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $36,000 building, completed. 25 College-trained, experienced teachers. Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior college course leads to an A. B. degree. College-preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character-training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field. Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern colleges. For illustrated catalogue address

MRS. LUELLA W. ST. CLAIR-MOSS, President, COLUMBIA, MO.

Next Session begins September 17th.

1869 — HAMILTON COLLEGE FOR WOMEN — 1912

LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.

HUBERT GIBSON SHEARIN, A. M., Ph. D. (Yale), President.

Standardized Junior College courses under a faculty of twenty-nine, all graduates of leading American and European institutions. Faculty of seven for Music, Expression and Art.

Five modern buildings. Complete gymnasium, laboratories and libraries. Home care. Delightful dormitories. Cultural surroundings and scholarly ideals.

The forty-fourth session begins September 9, 1911. For catalogue address THE SECRETARY.

WILLIAM WOODS COLLEGE

Fulton, Mo., successful school for young women.—23rd year.

Reason—we Specialize—Class 'A' standards

What Parents Want to Know.
1 Equipment—Buildings first class; homelike; heated; modern.
2 Curriculum—Courses "accredited"; well arranged for study, recreation and proper social life.
3 Faculty—Teachers from best schools, sympathetic; know their business.
4 Features—College atmosphere, gymnasium, right kind of good time.

Over 3,300 girls in 22 years

These questions answered to your satisfaction. Write President Joseph L. Garvin.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

An Up-to-Date College for Young Women
CAMDEN POINT, MISSOURI

COURSES:
College Preparatory Bible
Normal, Music
Elocution
Physical Culture

COMMODIOUS BUILDING:
New Addition to Building
New Gymnasium
Steam Heated, Acetylene Lighted, Large Campus

TUITION REASONABLE AND RIGHT—SEND FOR CATALOGUE

Sixty-fourth Year Opens in September FRANK G. RICHARD, President

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—a dozen leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

EVERY QUARTER ADDS TO THE NUMBER OF SCHOOLS INTRODUCING THESE LESSONS.

The Christian Century

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT . . . . . EDITORS

The Grace of Forgiveness

IT IS DIFFICULT FOR US TO appreciate the effect of Christ's teaching on the subjects of forgiveness and love of enemies. We need not wonder that men looked upon him as a dreamer with a whimsey in the brain. To them his inspirations were derangements of intellect. They laughed at the thought of the sword's becoming obsolete, and of the triumph of brotherhood over bloodshed. But that Christ's law was infinitely superior to the law of Cain, there is now no doubt in the world. As we think of his times and his opposition to much in them that was considered revolutionary, we can appreciate once more the pathetic fact that the men who speak to all ages must be the victims of the cross or the hemlock. The man who speaks to his time receives his reward; the man who speaks to all time suffers the reproach of his generation.

* * *

This law of forgiveness startled the proprieties of Jesus' day, and has startled the conventionalities of every day. The commentaries throw scant light upon the utterances of the great Teacher in this particular. Their difficulties are obvious. We are prone to ask, if we forgive an offense do we not break down the distinction between good and evil? If we forgive the evil, blotting it out of our memories, how can we show our appreciation of the good? Would not our resentment and punishment of the wrong-doer result in preventing further wrongs? And how can we forgive a wrong when our natures rebel against the offender? If all of us spoke our heart-felt sentiments with reference to the difficulty of living up to such high demands upon us, our cry would be, Lord, increase our faith!

* * *

How then are we to apply this teaching of Jesus? I should say, first of all, let brethren not be sensitive to the slights or injuries put upon them. Many of our misunderstandings are the result of an oversensitive nature. Many good people are thoughtless, and we take umbrage sometimes at what was simply meant for a pleasantry. Some persons have a sense of humor that is little short of brutality, and we must keep in mind their failing. What is honey for them is poison for others; but others can remember the source, and govern themselves accordingly.

* * *

In the next place, wrongs done us can often be made right if we do not allow the sun to go down upon our wrath. Our natural inclination is to "nurse our wrath to keep it warm." The sooner differences and misunderstandings are talked over, the better. If the one who does us an injustice does not seek us out to make amends or ask forgiveness, there is no reason why we should not seek him. Wrongs, like oaks, harden with age, and drive their roots to the depths of our being, and their branches cast a shadow over the memory of happy days. If the saplings are cut down, permanent injury will not be possible. If brethren who feel aggrieved cannot settle their differences alone, let the friendly witnesses be called in; if then the conference should fail to do what should be done, wise brethren in the church should lend their counsel to bring about fraternal relations. This is Christ's method of dealing with differences between brethren.

* * *

But suppose all efforts at reconciliation should fail, what then? We might dismiss the offender from our consideration, and let him be to us as the heathen and the publican. That, however, must be an extreme resort. If we desire to save him from his errors, even when he is resentful, full of hatred, and determined to inflict all the injury he can upon his brother, we may ask, how can there be love between one who is trying to live in conformity with Christ's law and another who feels that his grievances are so pronounced that Christ's law makes no demands upon him? In such a case, I am sure that one may feel for the other with a pity that is akin to love. If our enemy hunger we can feed him; we can heap coals of fire on his head. When he speaks bitterly of us we can say whatever good we can of him, or hold our peace. Where he is small we can be magnanimous; where he is bent on injuring our good name we can refuse to use his weapons. I believe that is loving one's enemies. We can wipe the slate so far as the past is concerned, and take a fresh start, profiting by our own errors and being warned by his. However difficult Christ's law may be of realization, it is immeasurably superior to any "get even" policy that the world ever saw.

* * *

There are people in some sections of our country who look upon a mountain feudist as a wild animal who should be chained. I think we have all witnessed the spirit of the feud in polite circles where knife or gun was unknown. We associate carnal weapons with the feud, but let us not forget that ages before gun or knife was known there was the carnal heart which brought deadly weapons into existence. And many a man will be excluded from the favor of God at last, not because he killed his brother, but because he hated him.

* * *

There is no baser passion of the heart than hate, and no holier than love. There is no deadlier enemy to the soul than unchristian resentment, and no more beautiful flower that blooms than forgiveness. Jesus' teaching on these subjects is certificate enough for me that he came to do the Father's will. Those who have grown to sufficient stature to do the will of Christ in these particulars need but few recommendations to show that they have learned the spirit of Him who, when darkness and death were settling upon him, prayed, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

E. B. B.

Social Survey

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN.

The Parcels Post

Americans have often wondered why they could send parcels by post at a low rate to China but could not enjoy this rate in our own country. This wonder grew when it was learned that the other civilized nations had all adopted this method of handling packages long ago. The secret of our delay in adopting this device was the strong lobby that the express companies have maintained in Congress. The express interests of the United States have been so unified that a few families now control nearly all of them and these few families act together on all matters of common interest. It is to the credit of the democrats that parcels post bill has passed the house and is now before the senate for consideration, where it is freely prophesied it will be amended somewhat and then sent back to the house.

The democrats are so much interested in getting this bill through Congress that they will accept the amendments of the senate and then it will be up to President Taft. Whether he will dare to veto it, is not yet known. The objections that have been urged against the parcels post are those of privilege. One of these objections that has deceived many people has been the argument that the measure would help build up the mail order houses. We fail to see this as a calamity, but to offset this, it is easily recognized by the progressive merchant that all kinds of merchandise that the mail order houses can ship with profit this way can also be shipped by other merchants the same way. Our reforms seem to come with much difficulty under the present boss system in politics, but one by one the favorite measures of the people are being adopted.

The Progressive Movement

As these lines are written, we are on the eve of a great political convention to be held in Chicago by the new Progressive party. What the week brings forth will be of the utmost importance to the whole nation. There seems to be no difficulty in maintaining unity among the progressives on national issues and on the leadership of Roosevelt, but the divisions in the ranks of the party are over local issues. The question whether the various states shall launch state campaigns is one that is being bitterly contested in many states with varying results. Where it is decided to put up a complete party ticket for all the offices there is then considerable scramble as to who shall run for these offices.

The movement has been described as a young man's movement and the young men are securing nominations that older leaders who have come over from the Republicans covet. Up to the present time, it is fair to say the Progressive movement has steadily grown in strength. Whether it will do so up to election time remains to be seen.

Two Great Hierarchies in America

The separation of church and state is fundamental in American institutions, but the principle has never been accepted by certain religious organizations in the country. The ambitions of the Roman Catholics have long been observed by the country at large and are not denied by them. Their recent victories have been the order of President Taft allowing sisters to teach in Indian schools in uniform, a favorable settlement of the church lands question in the Philippines and the recognition of the Roman hierarchy at state functions in Washington. Even so irenic a scholar as Professor Briggs who dreams of the reunion of Christendom recognizes the political pretensions of the Roman pontiff as the chief barrier against such union.

Then there is the Mormon hierarchy in Utah. It now has large holdings in the Union Pacific railroad and in the sugar trust. It was founded as an institution hostile to the American republic but under the necessities of the situation has been driven to make terms. It has an organization even more closely knit than that of the Roman Catholics. The army of missionaries sent out into the world at their own expense indicates power that exceeds that of the Roman Church. They have in recent years achieved the victory of sending a Mormon senator, Smoot, to our national legislative assembly The Mormon influence in politics is felt through many of the Western states and with the growth of the church there can be but little doubt that there will be still further political enterprises undertaken.

Antocracy in Church Government

There are varying degrees in democracy and in lack of democracy in churches. Perhaps no church system in the world is so thoroughly autocratic as Christian Science. All authority is vested in the "Mother Church" in Boston. This church has authority to appoint and dismiss all lecturers and readers in branch churches. These lecturers and readers must all belong to the Mother Church. The Mother Church is administered by a committee of five which is not elected but which appoints its own successors. There is in Roman Catholicism a certain measure of democracy in that the cardinals may elect the pope, but in Christian Science we reach the very acme of the autocratic in church government. There are not lacking signs that the church is growing restive under this kind of rule. It is hard to believe that such a method of conducting ecclesiastical business will prove permanently congenial to any considerable portion of American people.

Extension of English Franchise

The program of progressive legislation of the Liberal Party in England was only begun by the passage of the bill limiting the veto powers of the house of lords. The latest cause to be espoused is a bill for reform of the franchise. What is wanted is a solution of the present situation that will be both simple and fair to all. The law now in force has been patched and tinkered with until it is too intricate to provide a fair representation of the people. The purpose of the new bill is to simplify the registration system. Plural voting is one of the worst features of the old system. It is said there are 525,000 plural votes in England. Privileged classes are strongly entrenched behind these plural votes and it is estimated nearly fifty seats in parliament are held by Tory members through the aid of plural votes. That being true, Americans will not need to be informed on which side of this question special privilege may be found. The new bill proposes to take up the franchise question in a thoroughly business-like manner. Town clerks of boroughs and the clerks of county councils and counties will be required to keep and publish corrected lists each month. All objections would be referred to the county courts. Hand in hand with the abolition of the 525,000 plural votes will come the abolition of the 49,000 university votes. But while, by this franchise measure, the total voting strength would be reduced by approximately 574,000 votes, there would be an actual, net increase of about 2,500,000 votes brought about by the extension of the franchise. It is hinted that should women be given the franchise there would be an increase of 10,500,000 votes. Some regret is expressed that the bill does not provide for a common election day for the country. But fear that to overload the measure would preclude its passage has acted to simplify its provisions. Opposition of the Conservative wing has largely been based upon the claim that redistricting is an imperative need and should be taken up first since there is scarcely time to consider both measures. The author of the bill promised that redistribution would be taken up but, at the same time, he was insistent about the franchise measure. The first real test on the legislation came when it was read in parliament for the first time by a majority of 274 to fifty.

—The day school of religious education for the young which is being held this summer at the First Congregational Church of Rockford, Ill., is a splendid idea. There are one hundred pupils in attendance and the work is adapted according to grades, from kindergarten to high school. The method is along advanced pedagogical lines, being the Herbert German system. Pupils of high school age will study the apostolic church, survey of the last hundred and fifty years of missions, origin, preservation and translation of the Bible, and a memory course on the sermon on the mount. The work of the seventh and eighth grades includes, with other instruction, studies in the life of Christ and home missions. The fifth and sixth grades take up Bible heroes and the life of David Livingstone. The third and fourth grades study the stories of Moses and missionary heroes. The younger grades receive instruction suited to their years. Each family sending children is asked to contribute one dollar. In order to secure the school, members of the First Congregational Church guaranteed the expense. The school of religious instruction was organized at Eau Claire, Wis., in 1900, and has been successful wherever it has been tried.

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Celibate Priests

A writer in the Churchman makes a strong appeal for an increase of celibate priests. The arguments in favor of such are interesting to those who do not belong to the Anglican communion. He says, "the need of priests with every faculty concentrated on and consecrated to the service of our blessed Lord is the crying need of holy church today." He thinks the respect due a priest can never be won so long as he has all that the layman has in earthly ties of home, and love, and wife and child. "To the priest," says he, "are given powers which are given to no other man—even to the power of calling into being the very Incarnate God. . . . . For the sake of that intimate relation permitted him with God, he must have given up that which mere man cannot, thereby demarcating himself by a barrier unsurmountable and impassable. He must go through life aloof from the world, alone in the world, in untrammelled, undistracted devotion to his bride, holy church."

All of which falls strangely upon Protestant ears. The hope of reaching "the sectarian masses, the reformation-deformed sons to the faith of their fathers," lies in the revival of the celibate priesthood. This is a wail that we give ear to in our time only because it carries us back to almost forgotten periods of the world's history, and which the world has long since allowed the dust of unconcern to hide. The premises are so unscriptural and even shocking that we can only hope that the advocate of a revival of celibate priests in great numbers as a panacea for the ills of the Episcopal body is like some extremists in our ranks, useful in helping us to cultivate the virtue of patience, and warning us of the dangers into which it were fatal to fall.

Foolish Pulpit Performances

A preacher in one of the Western states has been the victim of a self-imposed, unpleasant notoriety because of his assault on old maids, advocating that they be sent to a barren island as waste humanity, thus surpassing Doctor Osler in his recommendation to chloroform all who had passed their sixtieth year. There is an endless amount of work to be done by the fool-killer among the preachers, if he could only be made to do what ought to be done, and we suggest that he begin speedily on the preacher in question.

Preachers should be careful how they arraign any class, for there are certain to be exceptions, and the exceptions save the class. Old maids may be such from choice as well as from necessity, but in either case they might have done worse than have remained single. At any rate there is no reason why a preacher should gnash his teeth on the class which do as much to promote his work as any other.

We are still suffering under the tyranny that only parents are competent to train children. The old adage that old maids and bachelors can always tell one how the children can be trained, spoken in derision, is becoming obsolete so far as the old maids who devote their life to school teaching is concerned. The finest discipline in the world is to be found where the old maids have control; they save many a parent from the imputation of being a failure in the management of his own children. But this is not a tribute to the worth of this noble class of women. We are glad they resented the slander, and we copy the letter written to the rash preacher by Miss Helen Gould, which has attained even greater publicity than the preacher's original statement.

"Glancing over a Denver paper I notice an item concerning your sermon on 'Love, Courtship and Marriage,' one part of which I especially notice, saying that old bachelors and bachelor maids should be isolated on an island so they could not hinder the progress of civilization. I do not know why you made this statement, but I feel that it is a great injustice to the bachelor maids of our country. There are, I admit, many man-haters in the world, but a great many bachelor maids are not living alone because they so choose, but because they have been unable to find a suitable companion.

"I must admit that I am speaking from the standpoint of the bachelor maid. I feel that such persons as myself are not hindering the progress of civilization, but advancing it. If I had found a suitable helpmate I might have spent my money in a different way, and a way which might not have done as much good as it has.

"Please think this question over, and before preaching on this subject again make up your mind that there is some good in living a single life."

Converts Versus Church Reports

The quadrennial conference of the Methodist Church at Minneapolis sounded a note of alarm concerning the meagre increase in its membership. The opening sermon of the Presbyterian Assembly at Louisville a week later sounded the same note of alarm. Government statistics show a large increase in the church membership of the country; the individual churches, at least two of the largest bodies, and one of them the most evangelistic and aggressive of all the churches, find grounds for complaint. Why the discrepancy between the facts as reported by the churches and the facts as reported by the census bureau?

Whatever may be the reason for this distressing condition, it can only be relieved by all the churches inaugurating a campaign in the interest of saving the unsaved. The churches must be recruited from those who may not be at all interested in the work of the church; their attention must be gained; and their point of view changed completely. They must be born again. The church that does not propagate itself must die. Children must be trained in the church to grow into its membership, to partake of its ideals, to live its life. The pastors must urge the claim of Christ upon all who come within the circle of their influence. There is no other way of saving the world than Christ's way. The friends of Christ must seek the lost until they are found.

Possibly, our untempered zeal in some instances has defeated the very purpose for which the church exists. The evangelist has been more anxious at times to break all records than he has been to break down stubborn wills; he has been more anxious to enroll the names of converts in the press than to give them the assurance that their names have been written in heaven; while he has prayed to be hidden behind the cross his practice has been such that the cross has been hidden behind him; and the net result is distrust of the evangelist and his work. Men are saying today that it is just as well to leave souls unsaved as to save them by methods that make one doubt whether the salvation is of heaven or of men.

The church needs to be reminded that her future depends upon her fidelity to her mission today.

Fighting the Fighters

With the love of pugilism strongly ingrained in human nature, possibly the rudiments of that far-off era when the fists of the man were army and navy to him, it seems as if there were scant hopes of prohibiting prize-fighting in America. But occasionally there appears a sign of promise as in the following taken from the Congregationalist. The spiritual is surely bound to triumph over the carnal, but the process is slow.

When the good people of England, led by the militant and dauntless Rev. F. B. Meyer, effectually quashed the proposed championship bout last year, Mr. J. Arthur Johnson, dark-hued champion of the world's pugilists, had some irritable comment to make upon the officiousness of the ministers. On the Fourth of July the same gentleman participated in another contest, which resulted, we are delighted to report, in a $20,000 loss for its promoters. A Denver newspaper had made arrangements that George Creel, formerly on its staff but now the newly appointed police commissioner of the reform régime, should report the proceedings. Mr. Creel received a little call from a delegation of the Denver ministers, in which they gave him to understand that they would consider the acceptance of such an assignment by a public official as reflecting little credit on the new order of things in Denver. Mr. Creel immediately requested to be released from his task and the paper as quickly consented. The police commissioner expressed his views at some length in a letter to the chairman of the delegation, Rev. O. W. Auman, in which he took occasion to say: "You must see, therefore, how little sympathy I have with the 'reform' that seeks to make people good by making them 'stop doing things.' And as your group talked to me yesterday, and as I have read the various letters with which others of like thought have favored me, I could not help thinking how splendid it would be if this passion of protests over my humble attendance at a prize fight could only be directed against some of those industrial, political and economic evils that curse our society.' Possibly a good many people would class prize-fighting as a factor not so far removed from that complex "industrial, political and economic" situation to which Mr. Creel refers. Nevertheless, it is welcome to find him saying before the close of his communication, "I make bold to call myself a Christian, and in the administration of the police department with which Mayor Arnold has intrusted me I am trying, as much as I may, to give practical application to the teachings of the Gentlest Soul the world ever knew."

To a friend's house the road is never long.—Danish Proverb.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—SILAS JONES, IDA WITHERS HARRISON, ORVIS F. JORDAN, ELLIS B. BARNES.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy, 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

United Religious Press Building
700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

Hungering and Thirsting

"The greatness of the soul is measured by the number, the intensity, and the quality of its desires." That we have few desires is not necessarily a credit to us. We do not blame a hog for being satisfied when he has enough to eat and place to sleep and grunt. We expect a man to be more ambitious. Our educational institutions aim to strengthen the life of the individual by the proper cultivation of his desires. They present to him the appeals of science, art, philosophy, and religion that they may help him to fulness of life. We advocate the beautifying of our homes, our churches, our public buildings, and our streets in order that all the people may have a better life, that is, have the right kind of interest in a large number of things.

If we hunger and thirst after righteousness, we shall have it. The politician who supports a good measure because it is popular and not because he sets righteousness before party success does not grow into greatness of character by means of his public services. The citizen who supports the churches and assists in suppressing open vice for business reasons only is not becoming a saint. Men without a passion for righteousness are easily led from the paths of formal virtue into the practice of lawlessness and notorious crime. Hunger and thirst for righteousness may compel us to act against common opinion and to incur the wrath of fellow citizens and fellow members of the church whose ease we have disturbed. The statesman is called fool, dictator, meddler, and traitor when he jeopardizes party success for the sake of principle. But it is he who finally writes just laws for his nation.

"If you really want to be good, your progress may be slow, but at last you will be good. Christ is pledged to satisfy, if you only go on wanting." Hunger and thirst must be constant if they are to lead us to righteousness. If they are genuine, they are permanent. The shame of being caught in wrongdoing often deceives us into thinking that we hate the evil and love the good. Moved by this shame we promise ourselves and our friends to leave our evil ways and walk in the paths of righteousness. Our promise means nothing for the reason that we are thinking only of how to escape something disagreeable and have no longing for the free life of doing the will of God. It behooves us, then, to become acquainted with Christ that we may know what goodness is and be mastered by the passion for it. In justice to ourselves we should jealously guard against the influence of the insincere and the cynic.

The methods adopted by passionate lovers of righteousness often give offence to the guardians of propriety. They may be crude. If they are, we can understand the reason. Men who are more concerned for the substance than for the form may easily underestimate the value of form. They may also know that new wine must be put into new bottles. General Booth and his noisy army scandalized the religious world when they began their mission to the underworld. Dignified bishops and preachers would have nothing to do with a movement that ran counter to so many hallowed traditions. But the army and its general went on their way and did what they set out to do. Now the general is one of the world's heroes. In his old age and blindness, he has the sympathy and love of millions. And this suggests that we ought to ask first what men are trying to do, and why they are trying to do it. After we have learned these, we may not be so ready to criticise their methods. It may be perfectly clear that new methods are needful for the kind of work that is to be done.

Is the church in earnest about the evangelization of the world? Has it a social message, or is it only pretending to have one that it may be in the fashion? Does it really want to aid the weak and oppressed, or does it use the language of the ancient prophets and of its Master without having the love for souls that makes the words living? Does it care whether the drunkard and the harlot are saved? Or has it entered into rivalry with the amusement park? Is it seeking respectability or righteousness? Before the world asks what we believe it asks about the intensity of our belief. An indifferent church is ignored. A church that has the love of its Master for men, the sinful, the outcast, the sick, and the weak will force attention to itself. It will gather strength and wisdom day by day. It will speak with power, and its interests will broaden to meet the needs of humanity. [Midweek service August 14. Matt. 5:1-3.] S. J.

The Earnings of College Men

The following table will be of interest to those who are laboring in behalf of education. Does education pay? A Princeton dispatch to the New York Times brings into reduced compass the results of an elaborate tabulation of statistics in which the earnings of college men are exercised. It also views in comparison the results of the Yale investigation and some figures derived from a Harvard canvass. We quote:

"The average incomes [of Princeton, 1901] were: First year, $706.44; second year, $902.39; third year, $1,198.94; fourth year, $1,651.15; fifth year, $2,039.42; sixth year, $2,408.30; seventh year, $2,382.33; eighth year, $2,709.37; ninth year, $3,221.89; tenth year, $3,803.58. This record includes only individual earnings and is exclusive of allowances and lgeacies. Those men going to professional schools or taking graduate courses after leaving Princeton were not considered until they had finished their studies. To make the record complete the cards which the 1901 men filled out were confidential and anonymous.

"The class of 1906 of Yale is the only satisfactory basis for a comparison with Yale or Harvard classes. The first five years' record of Princeton, 1901, and Yale, 1906, shows that the Yale men earned more during the first three years, but the earnings of the Princeton men increased more rapidly, and, at the end of five years, are almost $200 more than the Yale average. The Yale average incomes were $740.14, $968.80, $1,286.91, $1,522.98, $1,885.31, as compared with the Princeton averages of $706.44, $902.39, $1,198.94, $1,651.15, $2,039.42.

"Other statistics compiled by the 1901 men show the comparative number of marriages of Yale, Harvard, and Princeton, and the number of children which have 1901 fathers from these several colleges. The class of 1901 from Princeton shows that of 268 men, 175, or a percentage of 65.2 are married. They have a total of 219 children, or a percentage of 1.25 to a marriage. The class of 1901 of Harvard has 720 members, of whom 398 are married, a percentage of 55.2. They have a total of 413 children, or a percentage of 1.03 to a marriage. At Yale from a class of 236 graduating in 1901, 128, or a percentage of 57.6, are married. They have 99 children, or a percentage of only 0.77."

The table of incomes gives the following results:

"Business for the first ten years gave the following average incomes from the first to the eleventh: $705.54, $934.42, $1,196.19, $1,956.51, $2,402.77, $2,860.30, $2,756.50, $3,703.64, $3,861.46, $4,684.69.

"Teachers for the first ten years earned the following average incomes each year: $784.72, $839.70, $1,005.58, $1,110, $1,215.35, $1,404.16, $1,532.08, $1,715.38, $1,729.16, $1,779.16.

"The clergymen's averages began the third year after graduation, and were: $520, $1,001.25, $1,187.33, $1,242.85, $1,421.42, $1,550, $1,607.14, $1,714.25.

"Lawyers earned during the ten years beginning at once after graduation: $355.20, $610.16, $900, $1,389.41, $2,094.61, $2,890.10, $3,089.16, $3,344.18, $4,140.08, $4,994.88.

"Physicians earned the following, beginning the second year after graduation from Princeton: $1,106.25, $1,714.87, $1,471.15, $1,366.22, $1,503.60, $2,116.13, $2,434.48, $3,094.45.

"Engineers earned $648.88, $1,029.50, $1,218, $1,328.18, $1,878.18, $2,620, $2,387.55, $2,700, $3,002.

"The average incomes of journalists were $741.25, $825, $1,096.66, $1,213.33, $1,413, 1,412.50, $1,740, $1,983.75, $2,115.

"The average incomes from other occupations, such as farming, chemistry, forestry, etc., were as follows: $766.53, $878.57, $1,016.42, $1,409.23, $1,758.33, $2,032.30, $2,684.61, $2,830, $3,025.38."

The soul which knows no self-seeking, no interested ends, is thoroughly candid: it goes straight forward without hindrance: its path opens daily more and more to perfect day.—Fenelon.

Editorial Table Talk

Classical Versus Practical

The press of Europe has been given to "innumerable laughter," as Homer would say, over the statue of Herr Krupp, lately unveiled at Essen, the site of his vast gun-works. The memorial is heroic in size and of the finest bronze, but the great inventor wears a frock coat, carries a cane and in his right hand bears a "stove-pipe" hat. The classicists burst into fits of merriment whenever a picture of the monument is shown them. But we doubt if the statue be more ridiculous than the white marble bust of Washington at the Capitol—minus a shirt and swathed in a Roman toga. The modern man is not so anxious about the folds in his tunic as about the pockets in his trousers. He is willing to renounce the graceful for the useful, and the people applaud his choice. When Edward VII was crowned in London the elaborate uniforms of the king's bodyguards elicited no cheer, but the troops in khaki, just back from South Africa, moved amid a cyclone of huzzas. And what is true of dress is true of words. The English of Samuel Johnson and Joseph Addison is sonorous, rhythmical, charming to the literary esthete; but if the minister would reach the people he must clothe his thought in the language familiar to "the man in the street." It is not necessary that his sermons be literary models for future ages but it is necessary that the man of his own day feel their force.

A Postage Stamp

We have never been much interested in the hobby of the stamp collector. To tell the truth, we have sometimes turned over a highly valued album with a feeling akin to weariness, and wondered how anyone could become profoundly impressed by changes which seemed scarcely more than such as might be made by a slip in handling a graver's tool. Notwithstanding the fact that King George V. of England is said to be the greatest philatelist living, the making of such a collection has not seemed to us quite worthy of royalty. Perhaps it was some suspicion of such judgments that suggested the placing the crowned head of his Queen Mary upon the new penny stamps, one of which we received this morning from Newfoundland. Not being an expert in these high matters, it struck us as something new, this portrait of the queen taking the place usually assigned to the sovereign himself. Perhaps the suffragettes have gotten after King George, and he has in this way sought to save himself from the rough handling which so often lies in wait for the unhappy premier of his realm.

But in the same mail we found another stamp which we carefully removed from its envelope and have put as carefully away among our treasures. It is the familiar Chinese imperial post stamp for "one cent." It is of a yellow brown color, having for its center the well-known imperial dragon, with presumably a statement of use and value in Chinese characters upon the encircling band. But across the face of the stamp are four characters added by a rubber stamp in bright red, which—so the enclosed letter tells us—asserts that the empire has passed away and the Republic of China taken its place. Was ever so momentous a change told in words so few or by a process so significant? That seemed ages away at the time of the Boxer outbreak in 1900. But this postage stamp, itself adopted after that attempt at revolution, is already "out of date," and the imperial dragon is rudely defaced by a big red character obliterating its head and proclaiming that "old things are passed away and all things become new" in the land where nothing had changed for a millenium. It is all gone now, and if anyone doubts that, he may look upon this tiny print less than an inch square which contains the most momentous bit of history in the affairs of the modern world.

The Gambling Vice

The lottery is the only financial enterprise which openly advertises that the investors will get back less than they put in; yet the fascination of gambling is such that few governments have sufficient force to suppress it. If one should visit the Black Museum in New York City, where are kept the gambler's confiscated kits, he will find there duplicates of the cheating devices which characterize similar tools dug up at Pompeii. Not content with any "rake-off," the gambler has always been a thief. But he is more and worse. Recently in New York City a gambler was called out of a crowded hotel into a busy street and shot dead by men said to be in connivance with the police force of the city, with whom he had refused to share his ill-gotten gains. Some years ago intent upon certain sociological problems, we visited a central bureau of detectives in the East, only to find the office in dire confusion. Half the force had been put under arrest just before our entrance, accused of collusion with the gamblers they were supposed to run down. Men who like to call sin by euphemistic names tell us that drunkenness is "not a sin so much as a disease." What about gambling? It in no way affects the physical man but it degrades, enslaves and ruins the soul. The boy or the society matron who trifles with it is a fool.

Big Addition of Lawyers

The most hardened of practitioners gasped and the callous "turned pale" when the examining committee for the courts opened the gates to the aspirants for legal fame and fees and they proved to be 261 in number, most of them residents of Chicago. The states attorney welcomed them in words which recalled to the minds of the elderly readers the promise of our southern brethren before the war, that they would welcome the northern "hordes"—but "with bloody hands to hospitable graves." Even the most Chesterfieldian of our lawyers could only promise half rations to such a sudden accession. But it would be well if our ministerial brethren would make something of a study of the sister professions. According to the last report of our Bureau of Education there were in the United States 9,583 students in American theological seminaries, 18,000 in the law schools and 22,787 in the medical colleges. The theological institutions graduated 1,644 last year, the law schools 3,999 and the medical colleges 4,802. Forty per cent of the students of theology are college graduates, while only 21 per cent of the law students are, and less than 10 per cent of the doctors. The ministry may not be "experts" in the "original tongues" or the sciences, but they constitute the only "learned profession" we have. The minister may be underpaid, as he believes he is, but what must be the pitiful case of this vast number of young lawyers and young doctors whom the schools turn loose every summer?

Country vs. City Schools

There seems to be "something rotten in the state of Denmark" when our postal officials in this great city advertise for clerks and carriers, stating in their call that "graduates of country grammar schools are preferred." Two-thirds of the applicants coming from the grammar schools of the city are said to have failed at the last civil service examination. It is rather a sad commentary upon a very expensive and much lauded system that so large a proportion of its alumni should balk at so simple a test. We teach our kindergartners to dance and our high school pupils to cook. But what are we teaching our children in the grammar schools when the Chicago post-office has to call for "graduates from country schools" to fill its humbler positions?

No More Prize Fight Pictures

Husky, tough young men will probably continue to swat each other on the nose with boxing gloves for the enjoyment of a so-called sport-loving public for a while to come, but no longer will moving pictures be shown in this country of their brutal and bloody contests. On July 19 prize fight moving pictures became a thing of the past in the United States when the House passed a Senate bill prohibiting the transportation of such moving picture films between the various states and territories or from foreign countries. Heavy fines for violation of the proposed law are fixed by the bill. Southern members of Congress were especially interested in the proposed law because of the race feeling stirred up by the exhibition of the Jeffries-Johnson moving pictures in their section of the country. Senator Simmons of North Carolina and Representative Sims (Tenn.) pressed the bill in the Senate and House.

It is a well known fact that the defeat of James J. Jeffries by the burly but most scientific colored fighter, Jack Johnson, two years ago, in Nevada, caused a more bitter race feeling than ever to spring up and resulted in many killings throughout the country. We suspect, however, that if it had been Mr. Johnson and not Mr. Jeffries who had been jolted into insensibility on July 4, 1910, there would have been no such active demand on the part of the constituents of Mr. Simmons and Mr. Sims that the moving pictures of prize fights be suppressed. While the powers that be at Washington are putting a quietus to boxing pictures, it might be a good idea to suggest that they look more closely into the murder, suicide and hold-up pictures that are thrown on the screen in a good many of these five cent theatres for which there is such a craze just at present in this country. A good many, in fact a large majority of the patrons of these cheap show houses, are women and children who are not helped by looking at mimic crime of any sort.

—There are now 1,744 organized bodies of the Y. M. C. A., with a total membership of 563,479, in North America, according to the year book of the association issued on August 1st. There has been a gain of 27,500 members in the last year. The value of the new buildings opened is approximately $5,500,000, making a total value of about $73,000,000.

Dr. Washington Gladden on Unity

A Sermon Preached to a Concrete Situation

EDITORS' NOTE: The following sermon by Dr. Gladden was delivered in the little village of Dublin, O., near Columbus. A bit of history lies back of its delivery. A severe storm had demolished the Presbyterian church building, leaving the Methodist and Disciples houses standing. The Disciples have a splendid house but no preacher. The Methodists are a small, struggling band. The Presbyterians have a pastor and are active. When the Presbyterian house was destroyed people began to talk about uniting the three congregations and using the Disciples' house of worship for the united church. Dr. Gladden was invited to speak two Sunday afternoons to the people of the community. On the second of these occasions he delivered this discourse. It was reported in full in the Columbus daily papers and brought the problem of Christian unity before the larger community as well as the rural village.

"I beseech you, brethren, through our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye speak the same thing and that there be no divisions among you."

"Two weeks ago we found reason for believing that all the Christian people in any community constitute the Church of that community; that there ought to be only one Church in any community. If the community is populous there may be several or many congregations worshipping in different places and perhaps with different forms of worship and methods of work; but all these congregations should be considered as belonging to the one community Church, and should be working together, intelligently and harmoniously, for the Christianization of the community.

Against Division.

"If the community is small it is manifestly inexpedient that the Church should be divided into several congregations. Where the number of worshippers is not so large but that they may all conveniently be seated in one room of moderate size, it is the dictate of reason, economy and common sense that there should be but one place of worship.

"Protestant Christians are agreed on all essential things; the things that they differ about and divide over are not essential things. Not one of the things that we stand for as denominationalists was ever mentioned by Jesus Christ.

"Therefore we all know that when we divide and weaken the Church of Christ in any community in the interest of any kind of denominationalism, we are sacrificing things which are vital and essential for things that are non-essential and superficial; we are sacrificing life to form. And that, I submit, is a very serious thing to do.

"You would not feel justified in chopping a human body in two because its proportions do not quite accord with your notions of symmetry; but the Church, which is the body of Christ, is cloven asunder and hacked to pieces, over and over, in thousands of our communities, to suit our notions of ritual or polity or dogma. This is the sin of schism against which Paul warns the Corinthians in this very epistle. We have been committing it so long and so shamelessly in this country that many professing Christians have lost all sense of the enormity of the transgression and have learned to consider it a virtue.

"It is a hopeful sign that Christians in all the denominations are beginning to search their hearts and to try to clear their skirts of this wickedness.

Discusses Church Surveys.

"The department of the church and country life in the Presbyterian church, under the leadership of the Rev. Warren H. Wilson, is making some extensive studies of rural conditions. Four surveys have been made, in four different states, each covering considerable territory, and bringing to light the facts concerning the religious, social, educational and economic life of these rural communities. In Indiana three counties are studied, in different parts of the state, with populations averaging about 25,000 each. In these three counties there are 232 churches making about one church for every 320 of the population. These counties have all been decreasing in population during the last ten years. In Daviess County the population has decreased 7 per cent, and the church membership 14 per cent. In Marshall County the population has fallen off 4 per cent and the church membership 7 per cent.

"In Boone County the population has decreased 6 per cent and the membership has increased 10 per cent. Of the 232 churches in these three counties 38 per cent only are growing; 13 per cent are standing still, and 48 per cent, or nearly one-half, are losing ground.

Rural Church on Decline.

"This steady dwindling of the rural churches is an ominous fact. It is true that the population is decreasing, but in almost all cases the church membership is decreasing much more rapidly than the population. And the time has come when it is necessary to ask this question: to what extent is the lessening population due to the enfeeblement of the churches?

"It is not the only reason, but it is one strong reason why rural districts are being depopulated. The feebleness and pettiness of the religious life of those districts accounts, in part, for their diminishing population and their lessening productiveness. I am sure that if the religious life of the country and the villages were vigorously maintained many who now go away to the cities and large towns would stay in the country, and many would come into the country to live who do not now come.

"The country church, which ought to be the center of life and inspiration and attraction for the community, is, in many cases, a drag upon its progress and a blight upon its prosperity.

"What is the reason of this? It is simply the enormous overchurching of the rural population. It is the fact that in a community which could be amply served by one church there are generally from three to seven churches.

Eight Churches to One School.

"Here is a map of a little district in Pennsylvania, where there are 662 inhabitants. The schools in that district have been consolidated. There is but one school, in the center, doubtless a good one. And now how many churches do you suppose there are in that district? Well, there are eight! They can get their children all together in one school, but for their religious life they have to have eight churches!

"There is a little township in Indiana with 1393 inhabitants and nine Protestant church buildings and no resident minister. Churches enough surely and denominations enough, too. How many denominations do you suppose they need in Marshall County, Indiana? Twenty-nine!

"One is assured that with one-half the number of churches and one-fifth the number of denominations the religious life of these communities would be much more vigorous. In this same county, where there are twenty-nine denominations and ninety-one churches, only 27 per cent of the population are church-members.

"What I am showing you is the simple operation of cause and effect. Where the body of Christ is hacked to pieces after this fashion and its dismembered fragments are scattered over the face of the earth, you must expect just such results as these—a great number of feeble and petty and uninfluential churches, steadily decreasing in membership; religion a by-word in the community; the spasmodic efforts that are made from time to time to increase the membership only intensifying the rivalries by which the religious life of the community is perverted and enfeebled.

Reason for Condition.

"These reports spread before us with remorseless realism, the kind of spites and jealousies and squabbles which their brainless sectarianism produces. It is only too evident that this is the kind of character which such conditions must bring forth. There is no wonder that churches dwindle where such a spirit animates them. And there is no wonder that the rural communities are in so many cases losing ground. Communities where religion takes on such forms as these are not communities where intelligent men and women want to live and bring up families.

"The Church ought to be in every community the unifying, reconciling, harmonizing influence. What all these rural communities need is the spirit of co-operation. It is the business of the church to develop this spirit. Instead of this, in many communities, it divides the community into competitive and contentious cliques: instead of promoting peace and good-will it propagates rivalry and strife.

"That is a dreadful thing to say, and I would not say it if truth did not compel me. It is by no means true of all rural communities, but it is true of great numbers of them. The conditions described in these reports exist all over the land. And the time has come when American Christians must face these facts and deal with them courageously.

Urges Number Reduction.

"The first thing to do is to reduce, relentlessly, the number of churches. As a general rule, in a community of 1,000 people one church would be infinitely better than five, much better than three, considerably better than two.

"A church building with a seating capacity of 500 would be ample for all the needs of such a community. For it has been ascertained that not more than 58 per cent of the inhabitants of any community can ever be at church at any given service. The aged and infirm, the sick and disabled, the infants, and those who are compelled to remain at home to care for these, make up, at any given hour, more than two-fifths of the population.

"If every one in the town came who could come, there would be only 580 persons in church. But among the 580 who could come there are still, in every community, a good many who don't come and won't come. A building which would seat 500 would therefore be ample for a town of 1,000 souls. And one church, worshipping in such a building and drawing into its assemblies all men of good will in the community would be an infinitely greater force for good than two or three or five competing churches dividing the population among them, and tearing ahe seamless robe of Christ into sectarian rags.

Question Becomes Problem.

"This is the problem with which the churches of the country have got to deal. The only possible way out is the wiping out of existence of thousands of churches. It is the only thing that will save Christianity from death by dry rot.

"I do not believe that the good Lord is going to permit his Church to be destroyed, and therefore I am sure that he will find some way of enforcing the conservative surgery which is necessary to save its life.

"I do not believe that things have ever been so bad in Dublin as in some of those towns which I have described; but you have had too many churches here, as you all know and feel. And now, without your seeking it, the opportunity has been thrust upon you of removing this hindrance and putting the religious organization of your community on a reasonable and Christian basis. I am sure that the people of this community are too clear headed and too sound hearted to evade or neglect this opportunity.

Figures are Advanced.

"In this village there are by the census less than 300 inhabitants. In the township of Washington there are about 1,200. There are two churches in the township, outside the village—five churches in the township.

"We may assume that the outside churches will remain for the present and that they will provide for a part of the population—say one-third of it. Dublin then will be responsible for about 800 people. And one church, as we have seen, can easily minister to 800 people. One church here in Dublin would be a radiating center and a reservoir of power for all the region round about.

"My heart is full of the possibilities for such a church which open before my vision. Let me say to you, before I close, that this movement, if it amounts to anything, will mean sacrifice for all of you. You don't get any of the best things without paying for them. I do not refer particularly to money sacrifices, though I think that if you are going to have the right kind of a church here it will cost you something. What I am thinking of are the sacrifices you will have to make of things that are harder to get rid of than money.

You will have to stop thinking that the particluar denomination to which you happen to belong is the only church in the world and that the matters about which you differ from other Christians are matters of vital consequence.

"And, finally, I have no doubt that some of you—perhaps not all of you—will have to get rid of your idea of what religion is and get a new idea, large enough to fit the new conditions. You want to get hold, all together, of one great, big, adequate idea of what religion means. You can state it in one word: Religion is friendship—friendship with God, friendship with men.

Sees Heaven on Earth.

"I believe that this includes everything that is essential in religion. There is nothing mysterious about it; everybody can understand it. And if you can have a church here in Dublin in which all the members are trying hard to be friends with God and with one another, you will find that a great many people who are not in any of your churches will want to belong to it.

"It will become, year by year the dearest place on earth to many; and it will not be hard for men and women dwelling hereabouts to believe in heaven, for they will be living in it every day."

A General Convention of Disciples

Reconstruction and Unification of Missionary and Philanthropic Interests

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

The movement which has resulted in the following report originated in the belief of many brethren that there was a wide-spread demand for a rearrangement of our calendar of missionary and benevolent offerings. A Calendar Committee was appointed at the Buffalo Convention in 1906. It held several meetings the following year. Three hundred letters were received by this committee, and ninety-eight per cent of them expressed an urgent desire for a change. Many of the ministers were embarrassed because the congregations were restive and confused under so many special offerings, and felt strongly that some of them should be abolished or merged with others. To others it seemed as if a rearrangement of the offerings was demanded in order that all should have equal emphasis and opportunity in the gifts of the churches. Also, it would prevent any hurtful rivalry among the different societies, all equally valuable and important.

At the Norfolk Convention, October, 1907, the report of the Buffalo Committee was delayed by reason of the crowded condition of the program until 6 p. m. of the day on which it was presented, when, there being so little time for discussion, it was referred back to the committee for one year.

The report made by the committee at the New Orleans Convention in October, 1908, was tabled in order that a new and more representative committee might be created. This new committee consisted of one member from each state society, and three members from each national society, making a committee of thirty-one members. Three meetings of this committee were held, one in St. Louis and two in Pittsburg. These meetings led to the conclusion that more was needed than a mere rearrangement of our calendar; hence the committee recommended to the Centennial Convention, Pittsburgh, October, 1909, the appointment of "A Standing Committee of Seven, one to be selected by each of our general boards and one by the State Secretaries' Association, to take into serious consideration the reconstruction of our organized missionary and philanthropic work, with a view to the possibility and advisability of unifying all the work under one or two boards with central headquarters." This recommendation was presented at the request of a conference of representatives of all the general societies held in Indianapolis, September 17, 1909, and signed by Archibald McLean, F. M. Rains, Walter Scott Priest, A. M. Harvuot, Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, Mrs. M. E. Harlan, G. W. Muckley, C. J. Tanner, J. H. Mohorter, C. H. Winders, A. L. Orcutt and Jabez Hall.

In accordance with the above recommendation, the committee on "The Reconstruction and Unification of our Missionary and Philanthropic Interests" was appointed as follows: A. B. Philputt, chairman; J. H. Mohorter, W. F. Richardson, C. J. Tanner, W. A. Baldwin, I. J. Spencer, and Mrs. Anna R. Atwater.

This committee reported at the general convention in Topeka, Kans., in October, 1910. After discussion the report was recommitted and, by vote of those present in convention, the chairman of the convention was instructed to enlarge the committee by the appointment of three additional members who should not be officially connected with any of our national societies. The following were appointed: F. A. Henry, Finis Idleman and B. A. Abbott. These, with the seven representatives of the general societies, constitute the present committee.

At the Portland Convention in July, 1911, the committee requested to be given still further time before making its final report. This request was granted and the time extended until the Louisville Convention in October, 1912.

It will be seen from this brief historic note that the matter has not been hastily brought up nor inconsiderately pressed upon our conventions. It has been the subject of much deep and earnest thought, and has already been before six National Conventions, held in the Northern, Eastern, Southern, Central and Northwestern sections of the country; thus affording ample opportunity to the brotherhood for consideration and action. Each of these conventions has felt that some method of organization more satisfactory than the present ought to be found.

The brotherhood has grown to be great, and the mass-meetings to which our societies report are large, and it is believed that such a plan as that recommended in this report will greatly strengthen the societies, give orderliness and dignity to our meetings, and prevent any tendency to the concentration of our work in the hands of the few by keeping it under the direction of all the churches of the whole brotherhood.

Your committee would recommend, therefore, the organization of a general convention of churches of Christ as the most feasible method for promoting the unification and increasing the efficiency of our missionary and philanthropic organizations.

We are confirmed in this judgment by the following considerations:

First: There is a widespread sentiment among our brethren in favor of a closer cooperation of our churches in our present missionary enterprises.

Second: There is a deepening conviction that the churches should have a more direct supervision over the work of the societies for whose support they are responsible.

Third: There is an increasing demand for a more systematic and economical administration of all our organized work, and a conviction that by better methods of cooperation the churches would greatly enlarge their contributions to all our philanthropic agencies and the efficiency of all our societies would be increased.

(Continued on page 15.)

THE HIGH CALLING

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS."

Copyright 1911, George H. Doran Co.

CHAPTER XII. (Continued.)

Bauer stared at Clifford, hardly knowing how to take all he said. The German mind was not acclimated to this special kind of humor. But Clifford was so absolutely frank, and happy, so free from any hint of heartbreak or trouble, that the more Bauer listened to him the more he liked him and the more fascinated he became with his peculiar surroundings. He had never known any real Christian people except the Douglas family, and the spectacle of the genuine self-sacrifice, the bearing of daily discomfort and pain and wrong, with such cheerfulness and even hilarity, moved him with a feeling of astonishment.

Clifford's description of Miss Gray filled Bauer with wonder that a young woman of such character and attainments was willing to go to such a place and give her life to the seemingly impossible task of Christianizing a lot of dirty, superstitious, lazy Indians. That was his definition of her task and of the people whom she had come to serve. But he had not yet learned even the first short lesson of the attractiveness of the missionary call. And he had not even a glimmer of the great fact that the history of missions in every age reveals the beautiful fact that some of earth's choicest spirits have considered missionary work as the most honorable and honoring work in the world, and that no grace or strength of mind or body is too great to pour it all out unstintedly on just such dirty, unattractive beings as Indians. Bauer was destined to begin by pitying a mistake which such a young woman as Miss Gray was making, and end by envying her the place which she had made for herself in the hearts of these neglected people.

He was silent during a period while Clifford was busy with some part of his harness demanding his attention, then Clifford said, after whistling a bar of "Anywhere with Jesus I can safely go":

"Any more of our folks you want ante mortem epitaphs of?"

"Mr. and Mrs. Masters. Of course I've not seen them. I've heard Mr. and Mrs. Douglas speak of them. It was through Mr. Douglas, you know, that I came out here."

"Yes, the Douglases are good friends of the Mission. Mr. Douglas sends us two hundred dollars a year and sometimes as high as four hundred and twenty. Wish he'd come out here and bring his family. Hasn't he got a daughter by the name of Helen?"

"Yes," said Bauer. And try as hard as he would he could not conceal his embarrassment.

"Do you know her? Is she a nice girl?"

"Yes," said Bauer, again blushing deeply. And then he hastened to say, quickly for him:

"You were going to tell me about Mr. and Mrs. Masters?"

"Oh, was I? Well, they're the salt of the earth, too. They don't count any cost and the harder the work, the better it seems to suit. Mr. Masters can live on eighteen dollars a month and board himself. There isn't anything he can't do, from making a windmill out of a bushel of old tin cans to preaching seven times on Sunday. And Mrs. Masters is a prize winner for making trouble feel ashamed of itself. She never complains about anything. One week last summer we had eight days of continuous wind. You never saw a desert wind, did you? Or taste one? Well, you have one of the times of your life coming to you. The sand cavorts around like spring lamb and peas. You can't shut it out of a hard-boiled egg. It drifts into the house and covers the dishes and the beds and the books and the chairs and the floors and does the work of blotting paper while you're writing letters to the Agricultural Department in Washington asking them to irrigate the Little Colorado so we can raise garden truck in the channel between the rainy seasons. At the dinner table the custard pie looks as if it was dusted with pulverized sugar and you eat so much sand that you begin to feel the need of a gizzard like a hen. It fills your pockets, and at night you can shake a pint out of each ear, if your ears are big enough. It drifts up on the porch like snow and sifts through a pane of glass like a sieve.

"Well, all through that eight-day week, Mrs. Masters was so cheerful it was actually depressing. She couldn't have looked cheerfuller if she had been going over to Flagstaff to sit for her photograph on her birthday. The rest of us just groaned and bore it. We lost our temper with one another and never found it again till the wind quit. We were ornery and fractious. We just couldn't help it. But Mrs. Masters went around the house nursing the baby and a toothache and singing so loud you could hear her way out to the graveyard:

"'The sands of time are sinking,
The dawn of heaven breaks,
The summer morn I've sighed for,
The fair sweet morn awakes.'

My! I used to think to myself if the man that wrote that hymn knew how the sands of Tolchaco were sinking into our hair and spirits, he'd a written another verse, to cheer us on our sandy way. But any woman that can keep up her spirits during a desert sand storm is more than a half sister to a cherubim. I don't want to know anyone better than that. It would scare me to be in the same room alone with him."

"I'm sure I shall like them both," said Bauer. "It seems to me that all the people here at this Mission are pretty near the angels."

"Well, some of us are a little lower, I guess. But we do have some jolly times and no mistake. Barring the heat and the sand and the floods and the drinking water and the wind and the canned goods and the absence of pasture and the high price of hay and the lack of shade and a few other little things, Tolchaco is a great resort all the year around for people that aren't too particular about trifles.

"But you've pumped me dry about us; mind if I ask a few questions about you?"

"No," said Bauer with a smile. "There isn't much for me to tell."

"I take it you're a German to start with?" said Clifford gravely, but he managed in some remarkable manner to work and whistle at the same time he spoke.

"Yes."

"You won't have much use for the language out here, except Miss Gray uses it if she wants to. She's reading a book right now in German, written by a Mr. Goethe. If I had a name like that, I'd have it broken up and set again in a new frame. Mr. Douglas in his letter about you said you were an inventor by trade. But he didn't go into particulars. What can you invent?"

Bauer started to tell Clifford about his incubator. Clifford grew so interested that he dropped his work and came over on the log by Bauer to listen. He was just eagerly beginning to ask a number of questions when he looked up and exclaimed:

"There's that old white face broke his hobbles again and he's heading for the corn patch. I'll have to head him off."

He started towards the unshackled offender, and Bauer was amused to see the animal, the moment it caught sight of its keeper, kick up its heels and make a dash for the 'dobe flats into which it madly galloped, Clifford disappearing in its wake, enveloped in a cloud of dust.

The afternoon sun was pleasantly flecked as it sifted down through the cottonwoods on Bauer, and he sat there going over his talk with Clifford and smiling once in a while in his own fashion as he recalled a sentence here and there. It was pleasant to be with friends, to feel the strength coming back, to note the response of his lungs to the full drawn breath. He had not had a hemorrhage since reaching Tolchaco. And in spite of his submersion in the river he had suffered almost no pain. He began to construct some kind of a future, and wonder what he could do while at the Mission to help in any way. He was paying for his board, and by the plan arranged between Douglas and Masters they were to provide medical help or nursing if necessary. But Bauer had surprised everyone by his wonderful response to nature's help and it looked now very much as if in less than six months he would be on the road to full recovery. It was now the last of June and the desert heat was pulsing over all the strange land, but Bauer was drinking in health and beginning to yield to the glamour of the place.

"Guide me, Oh, Thou Great Jehovah, Pilgrim through this desert land"—a voice soared up close by, ringing down past Bauer, and he looked up towards the Mission.

Down the slight elevation came a young woman with a group of children following. As they came down near where he sat, Bauer saw it was Miss Gray and half a dozen of her charges who had been left in her care while Miss Clifford and one of the housemaids had driven over to the Canon to see a sick woman.

She came and sat down on the sand at the side of the old log and said in a perfectly simple and friendly manner, free from all hint of embarrassment:

"I saw you were all alone here, Mr.

Bauer, and came down to see if there was anything you needed. If you want to be alone, I'll go away."

"Why, no, I don't need anything, and I don't want you to go away, at least not until I have tried to tell you what is not easy to say, what a wonderful thing that you—that you actually saved my life from that treacherous stream!"

"Oh, I was only too glad to do it, it wasn't any trouble at all, don't think of such a thing," the young woman tried to speak lightly, thinking she detected a note of unnecessary shyness in the German youth.

To her surprise Bauer burst out laughing.

"I beg pardon, Miss Gray, but that is just what Mr. Clifford said you would say if I tried to thank you, and I couldn't help laughing, it sounded so strange."

"What else did Mr. Clifford say?" asked the life-saver, looking up quickly at Bauer.

Bauer was so taken back he couldn't reply. Miss Gray laughed, the most jolly, contagious laugh Bauer had ever heard.

"Never mind. But isn't Mr. Clifford a character? He's one of the rarest fellows you ever saw. The most self-sacrificing and self-forgetful man I ever knew. And the bravest. I wish you could have seen him in that tangle with Tracker and the horses. I never expected he would get out alive. Did he tell you about it?"

"He told me about you. How you—"

"Had to strike you in the face? It seems dreadful, doesn't it? But I had to or you would have drowned both of us. You'll forgive that, won't you?"

"Forgive?" murmured Bauer.

"Because you see the Little Colorado is one of the most treacherous streams in the world. It's full of sink holes and they make eddies and whirlpools and when it's in flood as that day, it's carrying down all sorts of drift stuff and you are liable to get hit and pulled down. Well, Mr. Clifford went clear under twice, carried down by getting caught between the fork branch of an old water log. All the time he was pulling at Tracker and cutting away with his knife at the harness. If he hadn't cut the harness just in time, I couldn't have got you out, for you were caught around the feet with the lines. I suppose you got tangled in them when you fell over. We had a serious time getting Mr. Clifford back to consciousness. So if you are going to thank anyone it is Mr. Clifford who deserves most of it. I simply towed you to the bank after he had cut you loose."

"Then I owe my life to both of you. That makes you doubly my friends. You do not know how much it means to me."

"Consider everything said," interrupted Miss Gray with a cheery tone, "and of course you will excuse me for pulling your hair?"

"Pulling my hair," murmured Bauer.

"It couldn't be helped. Say no more. Oh, I want to tell you how lucky you are a German. I run across some hard places in Goethe's Hermann und Dorothea. Will you help me out with the translation?"

"Indeed I will, Miss Gray."

"You will have to do it in payment for saving you," she said lightly. And then with a change of manner—"How little we know the real value of life. Of any life. Now, that little girl Ansa. Come, Ansa, come here a minute."

Ansa, a six year old, came at once and stood by Miss Gray, looking up at her out of the blackest eyes. The American turned the little Indian face towards Bauer. "Look!" she said passionately. "Look at one of my beloved ones! Is she not entitled to a full womanhood redeemed and developed by Christ? Has any living being a right to deny her that boon? Can America call itself Christian and go on refusing the water of life to these lost lambs of the desert?"

She seemed to forget Bauer's presence as she swept her arms about the child and enveloped it in a comprehensive enfolding of salvation as if by that act she would compel life abundantly for a soul that otherwise would never know it. Bauer had never seen anything like it and he was almost bewildered by it. He could not accustom himself to the sight of this talented, educated, cultured young woman giving her life to the hard, uncouth, repulsive surroundings. There were whole volumes of life that Felix Bauer had never opened, to say nothing of whole volumes he had never known to be in existence.

After a short silence, Miss Gray said softly, "You know the Douglas family? They are great friends of us here at the Mission. We want them to come out here some time. Do you know Helen Douglas? She and I were together one year at Manitou. She is a lovely girl."

"Yes," said Bauer. At that moment a call came from the Mission house for Miss Gray and she rose to go.

"Don't forget the Goethe when you're strong enough. Isn't it fine you're getting well so fast?"

She nodded a good-bye to him and left him to dwell over their little talk, but most of all he recurred again and again to the sight of her with her arms about the child, kneeling on the sand and looking off to the east, to that far east that might, if it would, with its opulence, save life, instead of waste it.

Mr. and Mrs. Masters came back from Tuba two days after and Bauer found them all that Clifford had said. Never in all his life had the lonely student been so petted and surrounded by friendship. He grew strong with amazing rapidity. Clifford joked him about his appetite and Masters threatened to raise his board bill.

One evening as Clifford and Peshlekietsetti were sitting by the hogon and Bauer was between them, Masters came down from the Mission waving a letter.

"Listen to this! Douglas and his wife, daughter and oldest son are coming to pay us a visit first of August. Isn't that jolly! We'll plan a trip to Oraibi. It's their turn for the snake dance. I haven't seen Douglas since we graduated from Phillips Andover. It's fine!"

Bauer was excited over the prospect.

"When will they be here?"

"First of August. In about three weeks now. We'll all go together. You'll be strong enough by that time. Mrs. Masters needs a little vacation. We'll leave some one in charge here and go and play a little."

Masters was as pleased as a child. Later on, after the papers had come in from Flagstaff, he announced that there were two parties from New York and one from Pittsburg, going to cross up to Oraibi to see the snake dance from Canon Diablo. "The Van Shaws are listed. You remember, Miss Gray. Old friends of yours, aren't they?"

Miss Gray looked annoyed. The first time Bauer had ever seen such a look on her face. She answered, however, cheerfully enough, "The Van Shaws are relatives of mother's." Masters did not ask anything more and Bauer did not dwell on the incident. That night he lay watching the stars through the hogon door. Life was meaning so much to him now. But could he bear to see too much of Helen Douglas in this desert land? He was troubled over the question and its unsettled answer.

CHAPTER XIII.

It was an hour before sunrise at Tolchaco and Bauer had awakened from a restful sleep and from the place where he lay in the Council Hogon he noted with pure enjoyment the splendid color of the sky framed in the opening, the exquisite blending from the pearly grey into the unpaintable, soft moving colors that he had looked at with growing awe during many wonderful mornings in July. He could not remove the impression that it was God's hand that moved over the sky, painting with an art that man's cheap imitation could never approach even in the faintest degree.

It was morning of the day they were all to start for Oraibi to see the snake dance which was to be given in three or four days according to announcements sent out by the runners. The Douglases had come as they had planned and had been visiting at the Mission now for two weeks. Mr. and Mrs. Douglas were delighted with what they saw and heard of the Mission work. Walter had made a horseback trip to the Grand Canon through the solemn dry pine forest from Flagstaff and had returned to Tolchaco in time to join the party for Oraibi. Helen had been received at once as a favorite by all the mission people, had renewed her acquaintance with Miss Gray, and had shown herself friendly, yet not too friendly, with Bauer, who had steadily gained in strength and was looking forward with great anticipation, as they all were, to the Oraibi trip.

He lay there contentedly musing in his deliberate way, for he mused as slowly as he spoke, when he was roused by a voice that came with clear accents across the 'dobe flats. He had heard it often in the early morning, but the sound of it never ceased to create in him a wondering awe and more or less bewilderment to reconcile his first thought of Elijah Clifford with other impressions that came on later. For it was Clifford's voice quietly speaking, yet in such distinct fashion that, although he was kneeling out on the edge of the 'dobe flats, what he said was plainly heard by Bauer where he lay and unless he had covered his ears he could not avoid catching the words.

"O Thou Dayspring from on high, what a glorious world we live in! Forgive us that we shut our eyes to its beauty and close our ears to its music. I thank you, God, for a good night's sleep and a good morning's wakening. Help all of us to make it a good day for one another. We think so much of ourselves, of our body's comfort, and what we shall eat and drink and be clothed withal that sometimes a whole day has gone and we no nearer the Kingdom. We've lost our way in the desert and the water all gone. We are going to start out today to see these poor creatures of yours go through their ancient prayer for rain. Forgive them, good God. How should they know any better? No one ever told them of a better way. And there's old Touchiniteel, poor old savage. I would give anything, most anything, to see him brought into the fold. Is he too old to be saved, Lord Jesus? Can't you save him? It's not easy, I know, but we aren't asking you to do easy things out here. Most of them are hard, but don't you like to do hard things? Isn't that what being God means? And Peshlekietsetti—he's another. I want to see him saved. And old Begwoettin. You know how the old man never told a lie in his life. And he loves his grandchildren. Why, he would die in a minute for Ansa and Riba. He can't be so very bad. Somehow I can't think of his being lost.

(To be continued.)

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison.

Mrs. Harrison will be glad to receive communications from any of her readers offering suggestions concerning woman's welfare, criticisms of articles or inquiries concerning any matters relevant to her department. She should be addressed directly at 530 Elm Tree Lane, Lexington, Ky.

Doctoring the Marriage Ceremony

We often see criticisms of the marriage ceremony, such as the use of the promise to obey by the woman, and the reference to the custom of a bygone and barbarous time, in the question, "Who giveth this woman to be married to this man?"—evidently a survival of the time when the bride was sold, or given, by the father to the husband. Mrs. Humphrey Ward in her last novel, and Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman, in her recent book, "A Man-made World," have criticized these (and other) features of the Episcopal ceremony.

A more radical attempt is made by certain socialists to eradicate its religious and sacramental character from the marriage ceremony. The marriage of Edmund T. Dana, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard R. Dana of Boston, grandson of the poet Longfellow, and Miss Jessie Holliday of Harrow-on-the-Hill, the artist and suffragist, took place this summer on the lawn of the Dana estate. Edmund M. Parker, a justice of the peace, and close friend of the Dana family, performed the ceremony.

A sanctuary of ivy had been formed on the lawn in the rear of the residence, the only addition to the natural beauty of the picturesque outdoor scene. A small table in front, where Mr. Parker stood during the ceremony, was adorned with a huge bouquet of white flowers. The guests, who were immediate members of the Dana, Thorpe, and Longfellow families, were at one side. Both bride and bridegroom were unattended. Henry Holliday, father of the bride, was the only member of her family present.

A simple, low-necked dress and short skirt was worn by the bride. Mr. Dana wore a white flannel suit, with soft shirt and collar, with shoes to match. The double-ring ceremony was used, the bridegroom giving the bride a plain gold band ring, and received a chased silver ring in return. The ceremony lasted only two minutes. The guests then repaired to the front lawn, and bride and bridegroom returned to the Dana residence.

Since the bride and bridegroom are Socialists they arranged the marriage ritual, which is as follows:

Magistrate—We are here to witness the marriage of —— and ——. If anybody present knows any reason why these persons cannot lawfully be united in marriage let him now declare it. I require of you both that if either of you know any impediment to your being lawfully married you now declare it. Do you wish to marry this woman?

Man—Yes.

Magistrate—Do you wish to marry this man?

Woman—Yes.

Magistrate—And do you intend to help and comfort each other, and do you intend to bring up any children you may have to the best of your ability and for the welfare of the human race?

Man and Woman—We do.

Magistrate—Will you then express your minds to each other?

Man—I——wish to live with you, as my lawful wife, and hope to live that you may never regret your choice, as a symbol of which I give you this ring.

Woman—I——wish to live with you as my lawful husband, and hope to be a true comrade and your helpmate, as a symbol of which I give you this ring.

Magistrate—Since you wish to unite in marriage, and have notified each other of the same before me and these witnesses, I now, therefore, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts pronounce you husband and wife.

With all its faults we like the old ceremony infinitely better than this.

Denver Uses Churches for Polling Places

At the recent election in Denver in five precints the polling places were located in churches. Where men alone vote, any vacant store is considered suitable; where women vote, libraries, schools and churches are used for polling places.

When the home-making sex goes into politics, politics becomes home-like and polling places locate themselves naturally in places pleasant and fit for women to go.

It is cheaper, too. The city of Los Angeles saved $50,000 by using public buildings for voting places at the first election at which women voted.

A Woman Who "Hired Out" to Her Husband for a Vacation

The following letter won a prize of $25 offered by the Woman's Home Companion for the best account of a vacation. It was written by a woman who lives on a farm in Wyoming:

"To begin with, then, I'm a rancher's wife, and was a farmer's daughter, so I know what it means to get up early and work till late. I've read a great deal about vacations, but not much about vacations for the woman on the ranch

"Most women who live on a ranch know something about horses, and can harness and drive a team. Now everyone knows that to people who have always worked with their hands, idleness is not rest, and that recreation comes quicker and surer from a change of work; so I 'hired out' to my husband.

"We have seventy-five acres of alfalfa, and here in the West men are scarce and wages are high, so I hired a girl to do the housework and take care of the children, while I donned a pair of overalls, a jumper, a broad-brimmed hat, and a pair of stout gloves, and went forth to take my vacation.

"The first day I mowed, and the first night I kicked levers and drove horses all night. I wasn't so enthusiastic the second morning, but I mowed some more, and raked some, and that night I slept; and I slept every night that followed during the harvest, for I 'stayed with it' till the hay was in the stack, doing team-work altogether, and when we were through, my husband said I was 'the best man on the job.'

"I was decidedly a better woman, for I had gained five pounds of flesh, stronger nerves, harder muscles, and a coat of tan that hasn't all worn off yet.

"I told the girl that I was not to be consulted about anything, so I shifted the whole responsibility of the household, and did just as the men did—washed, ate my meals, and then rested till time to start to work again.

"My girl cost me four dollars per week, and I made twelve, which left me a clear gain of eight dollars per week in cash, besides the other good things. I felt so rested when I took up the reins of the household again, that what had before been a task was now a pleasure. Really, it did seem good to cook a meal once more, and I had not thought it possible.

"And next year I'm going to do it all over again."

Adrift on the Street

By J. A. Adams.

I was sitting at the front window the other morning reading the morning paper when he came along. Of course, we look at few people as they pass, but this man interested me more than the newspaper. His hair was long enough for him to be a poet or a philosopher, but there was no poetry in his general appearance. He was a picture of homelessness, of want, of days of tramping and nights under the sky. His clothes were old and greasy and his face hopeless; and yet there was a something about him that appealed to me. Perhaps it was because he looked like a new arrival from the country, and my mind darted back to the home on the farm, or in the village from which he might have started, as so many boys do, but fare better.

He came up the steps, and I met him at the door.

"I am hungry," he said. "Can't you give me something to eat?"

"Yes," I replied, "if you go back to the kitchen the maid will give you something, but what is the matter?"

"I have tramped and tramped these streets for work," he went on, "but I can't find anything to do."

"How long have you been tramping for work? For a year or two?"

"Well, to tell you the truth, stranger, I have been at it a good while."

"But you were not always in this condition. Come, tell me all about it."

"No, I was once as proud a young man as walked the streets. I came from a country village with good recommendations and got a nice place in a real estate office, and for a while everything went well. But I was in a boarding-house, and didn't know anybody, and at night—the devil's in the night—if I was a preacher, I should preach about that city where there will be no night—but as I was saying, at night I got to going out with fellows that were a little wild, and then began to drink some. I didn't think there was much harm in it, and you know a young fellow in the city doesn't want to act like a goody-goody boy just from the country, as though he was tied to his mother's apron strings. The boys soon laughed me out of going to church, said that they used to go, but their views had broadened out since they came to the city, and a fellow must be liberal if he is going to live in Chicago. Well, to make a long story short, I was soon on the down-hill road, in the broad road as we used to hear in Sunday-school. I thought all the time that I could turn around when I wanted to, but somehow I never wanted to."

"But you look as though you had just come from the country now," I said.

"Yes, but let me go on: Last Christmas I thought I would go down home and see my mother and all the folks, that it might brace me up and help me to reform when New Year came. I had written lots of nice letters home and mother and sisters were just dying to see me. But do you know, when mother opened the door and took one look at me, she fell in a dead faint. She knew it all. When she came to, she didn't scold, but it was like the judgment day.

"They tried to make me happy, but I didn't feel happy. A man who makes a hell of life can't feel happy in a nice home; I know that even some of the preachers say there is no hell. But, stranger, do you know that a fellow who has been going in that direction for years kind of feels that he will reach the place after a while, and when a man goes from bad to worse all the time, where else can he go? It's no use to talk to a hard case like me about everybody going to heaven, for I know I'm not going that way.

"But do you know the hardest thing I had to bear down in the home town was when I saw my old sweetheart on the street one day. She was so handsome, so splendid-looking, and married, and her husband was with her. I tell you, stranger, I've never had anything which cut me up like that. I've had the door slammed in my face when I was starving, and had policemen club me out of nooks and corners where I had fallen asleep after a hard day's tramp, and every day I see all these happy faces while I'm utterly miserable, but to see that woman whom I loved when she was a school-girl and who was to be my wife when I got enough ahead to set up housekeeping, to see her the wife of that old neighbor boy, and me only a wretched beggar, it was more than I could stand. It was like the pangs of the lost. Why, do you know when we were all young together she wouldn't look at him. He was sober like, no dash in him, you know. The girls didn't take to him, and we left him out of our set. But he has come on wonderfully, is a banker, I've heard, and they live in a fine house in his town. And I'm a tramp, and asking you to give me something, just as I've asked thousands of others.

"But then, I've never done anybody any harm."

"No, nobody but yourself and the mother that bore you, and the father that cared for you, and the sisters that loved you and once were proud of you, and the teachers who taught you, and everybody who ever gave you anything and got nothing in return."

"But we can't live life over again. I wish we could. I wish I was where I was when I kissed my mother good-bye years ago, I wouldn't board the fast train, and I wouldn't broaden out my ideas toward perdition. I'd hammer a stout Bible text into my moral nature every morning and stand them all around me at night."

"But why didn't you stay in the country?"

"I just couldn't; that's why. Every look hurt me, every dog seemed to bark at me, and every stump in the road rubbed it in. No, I couldn't stand it, and started out again. I wandered from one town to another, and now I am back in the city. But, stranger, I'm hungry."

"Go around to the kitchen," I said, and then I went back and argued with the maid until I got her in a hospitable frame of mind. She feeds stray cats, but when stray men come along she draws the line. Sometimes I think the stray cats and dogs have a better time than stray men. Anyhow, it is awful to be adrift on the streets of a big city.

—Mary Garden will sing for the Bowery Mission boys this fall, according to a promise she has made to Frederick Townsend Martin. Mr. Martin has interested Miss Garden in the Bowery Mission, and when he arrived in London a few days ago he found a note from the prima donna definitely fixing a date for her appearance before the Bowery Mission boys. Good for Mary.

Church Life

CALLS.

J. A. Barnett, Galesburg, Ill., to Third, Danville, Ill. Accepts. Begins work Sept 1.

J. O. Patterson to Elkins, W. V. Accepts.

L. C. Hammond, Southport, Eng., to Fitzgerald, Ga. Accepted and work begun.

L. M. Moody, Williamsburg, N. Y., to Glenwood Church, Buffalo. Accepts.

C. C. Cowgill, Washington, D. C., to Middletown, O. Accepts and begins work.

H. J. Lunger, Lexington, Ky., to Charlottesville, Va.

Richard Bagby, Clifton Forge, Va., to Wilson, N. C. Accepts.

R. B. Kelser, Centralia, Mo., to Trenton, Mo. Accepts.

Ira M. Boswell, First, Chattanooga, Tenn., to Ft. Smith, Ark. Accepts.

E. W. Allen, Central Church, Decatur, Ill., to "one of the larger churches of the East." Declined.

William E. Sweeney, Baltimore, Md., to First, Evansville, Ind. Accepts. This is Mr. Sweeney's second pastorate at Evansville.

D. J. Howe, Hosington, Kan., to Washington, Ill. Accepts.

RESIGNATIONS.

S. S. Jones, Third, Danville, Ill.

G. E. Roberts, Osceola, Ia., to accept district evangelistic work in northwest Iowa.

Tipton, Ind., church, G. I. Hoover, pastor, recently paid $500 on their debt.

Iowa state convention will be held at Oskaloosa, September 9-15.

Central Avenue Church, Topeka, Kan., has let the contract for a new building.

Nebraska state convention will be held August 12-18, at Bethany camp grounds.

Van Wert, O., Church is planning to modernize and enlarge their building. I. R. Lines is pastor there.

Hiram College has changed the title of its Biblical department to the Department of Christian Literature and Service.

Dean Sherman Kirk of Drake University has been supplying the pulpit of First Church, Chattanooga, Tenn., for Ira M. Boswell.

South Joplin, Mo., church has converted its large lawn into a set of tennis courts and organized a tennis club among its young people.

Dr. J. B. Eskridge professor of Latin in Texas Christian University, has been elected to the presidency of Oklahoma State Normal at Chicasha.

During the absence of F. W. Brown on vacation, the pulpit of Second Church. Warren, O., will be occupied by C. O. Reynard, of Toronto, Ont., a former pastor. Mr. Reynard's work in Canada is prosperous.

J. P. Myer's Young Men's Bible Class at Marion, Ind., had an attendance of 109 on a recent Sunday. Mr. Myers will deliver the baccalaureate sermon for Marion Normal College to several hundred graduates.

Park View Church, Norfolk, Va., laid the corner-stone of a new house of worship the last week of July. Dr. S. T. Willis, president of Virginia Christian College, delivered the address. William Burleigh is pastor.

During the August holiday of Dr. Charles S. Medbury from the pulpit of University Church, Des Moines, Ia., which he is spending on the Chautauqua platform, Hermon P. Williams, of Albuquerque, N. M., is supplying his pulpit.

About fifty Iowa pastors met at Marshalltown recently and organized a ministerial association for that section of the state. W. P. Clark, of Eldora, was elected president and F. E. Smith, of Second Church, Cedar Rapids, secretary.

Robert Graham Frank will begin his tenth year as pastor at Liberty, Mo., when he returns from his August vacation. He is greatly beloved by his congregation and wields great influence in the college community at Liberty and in the country round about.

The Christian Church at Commerce, Texas, will dedicate a modern edifice September 8. A. D. Riall is meeting with the success in this pastorate that characterized his ministry as instructor in Texas Christian University. Geo L. Snively will assist in the dedication service.

Knoxville. Ia., Church held appropriate cermonies in connection with the laying of the corner-stone for its new house of worship last week. Pastor Mattox was assisted by H. E. Van Horn, pastor of Capitol Hill Church, Des Moines. and Mr. B. W. Garrett, clerk of the Iowa Supreme Court, who delivered addresses.

Oceanside, Calif., Church recently passed resolutions, unanimously, endorsing the five-year pastorate of Oscar Sweeney. and asking him to continue with them. These resolutions were passed in view of Mr. Sweeney's frankly expressed convictions in favor of practicing Christian union in the matter of church membership.

Walter Scott Priest, pastor Central Church, Wichita, Kan., officiated at the cornerstone laying of a new $30,000 church building for First Church, Atchison, recently. Mr. Priest organized the church in that city in 1884, built its first house of worship, was ordained to the ministry there and served five years as chaplain of the Kansas Orphan's Home.

Delay on the building of the new Disciples' Hospital, in Kansas City, is due to the failure of the street railway company to fulfil its promise to have a line of its road running on both sides of the proposed hospital property. The contract for the building will be withheld until the transportation connections with the heart of the city are made thoroughly adequate.

J. C. Burkhardt, pastor at Frankfort, Ind., was subjected to a brutish assault two weeks since by a driver of a beer wagon. The assailant used his fists and a blacksnake, fracturing the pastor's jaw and bruising his body severely. Mr. Burkhardt had been making vigorous attacks upon the saloon business prior to his assault.

Dr. Haley Ill.

The venerable Dr. T. P. Haley, of Kansas City, underwent an operation last week, to remove a cancerous growth. It is feared that he will not be able to leave his bed again. Dr. Haley is 80 years old. For fifty-four years he has been a Disciple minister, laboring most of that time in and near Kansas City. Much of the remarkable growth of the Disciples in that city is traceable to his pioneer work and wisdom. The host of his friends will watch the course of his illness with great solicitude.

Fifteen Years a City Missionary.

Frank L. Bowen, city missionary of Greater Kansas City, began his sixteenth year in that work recently. During his term of service ten new church buildings have been erected and the following churches have been established: Jackson Avenue, Ivanhoe, Budd Park, Roanoke, Swope Park, Agnes Avenue, South Park, Rosedale, Grandview, Quindaro Boulevard and Mount Washington. The membership of these congregations now aggregates more than 5,000. Disciples have risen from fourth place, numerically, until among the churches of Kansas City it ranks first in numbers with a total membership of more than 12,000.

Church Progress in Efficiency.

The church in Eldora, Iowa, has made real progress along "efficiency" lines in the past three years. About three years ago a Brotherhood class was formed and a little later a Brotherhood. Each has enrolled a total of about sixty persons, with average attendance at the meetings of each of seven to twelve. The Brotherhood has been distinguished for good team work in carrying through several enterprises of social service highly worth while. The Sunday-school is on an efficiency basis. The church has gotten away from formalism in its prayer-meeting and Sunday-school class periods, and these sessions, while not less truly devotional, are study periods, with much free discussion devoid of argumentative debating. It has required persistent work to put these meetings upon the more natural basis of rational discussion and research. The prayer-meetings are going through Acts now, with increased attendance. For the past year and more W. P. Clark has been doing good work as pastor. C. L. Hays, a prominent attorney, is a devoted member of Eldora church.

Mr. Abbott on Philemon.

B. A. Abbott, of Union Avenue, St. Louis, recently preached a sermon of extraordinary helpfulness, taking as his theme the short epistle to Philemon. The elevation of Onesimus the slave in the mind of Philemon his master, through Paul's interpretation of the essential brotherhood between the two, was declared by Mr. Abbott to be characteristic of Christianity. Outwardly Onesimus was still a slave, but he was to be treated as a brother. "That would end the social ills of both. The doctrine of the brotherhood of man will eventually destroy all caste and break down the barriers of selfishness and self-seeking and make men and women happy in the possession of each other. Once Tolstoy was asked for alms by a beggar in St. Petersburg. He turned his pockets inside out and said, 'Brother, don't be angry with me. I have nothing,' And the beggar said with a new light in his face, 'It is all right. You called me brother.' Passing by that way a little later he found the beggar still standing there, and he heard him say softly, 'He called me brother.' It was the greatest gift he had ever received. It was the sweetest word he had ever heard."

Benevolent Association News

In the death of Thomas W. Phillips, the association has lost a very generous friend. He served on the Board of Directors for several years. He made frequent liberal gifts toward the support of the work and remembered the association by a bequest of $5,000.

Two hitherto unreported annuities have just been received. They both came from persons who have been possessors of the association annuity bonds for several years. One was for $1,000 and the other for $3,000. These good people have formed the habit of investing their money with the Lord for the care to his poor about as rapidly as they accumulate it. Their example is worthy of imitation.

E. T. C. Bennett and wife, who have served the association so well for a number of years, have resigned. Feeling unable physically to endure the hardships of field campaign work and being unselfishly devoted to the welfare of the gospel of the helping hand, he offered his resignation that a younger man might be secured. But the cry of the orphan appealed to him with such force, that he no sooner resigned than he offered himself for service again.

Fred Kline, who has served the association so efficiently and so well for the last five years in the state of Illinois, is now engaged in a temporary campaign in Ohio in the interest of the Home at Cleveland. Mr. Kline is a popular, effective speaker. He is equipped with a good stereopticon and will be cordially welcomed by all the churches.

An Interesting Letter

This letter is perhaps as good an example as could be given of the appeals coming to our Church Extension Board.

When the churches consider that the board is receiving such appeals daily, they can get some idea as to why a growing church needs a million dollar fund and then another million.

This letter is an inspiration to any healthy disciple of Jesus to conscientiously prepare to make a liberal offering in September.

"Kimberly, Idaho, July 23, 1912. Dear brother: We organized the Church of Christ at Kimberly on May 19, with about fifty members; have a Bible-school of eighty members or more. We have secured four lots on which to build but will be almost impossible to build without help. You will no doubt remember me. I did the corresponding in securing the loan at Mason City, Nebr., in 1907. We came to Twin Falls in the spring of 1909, helped to build them a house of worship and have since bought a farm one mile from Kimberly. I began to inquire around for Disciples as soon as we came to Kimberly and found about 100 scattered in the near vicinity. We managed to create an interest and with the above results. This is the most promising field I know of. It is in the heart of the great Twin Falls tract, a mile east of Twin Falls. The town itself is not very large, between two and three hundred, but the country around is ,as all other irrigated tracts, thickly populated. There are about 400 pupils enrolled in the one public school. The Methodists are ahead of us, as usual, but have only about one dozen members. The people in the community are of a high moral class, but seem to care but little for the church. I do not aim to convey the idea that I am the whole thing here, I am only a very small part. We have an official board of seven earnest consecrated men and a congregation of the same material. All they needed was some one to organize them, but we are all poor in this world's goods—that The president of the Kimberly Bank would like to know if you have plans for a neat, is, all but one, N. H. Turner, our secretary, not too expensive building, with seating capacity for about 200 or 300, with basement for Bible-school. We are at present meeting in a hall, but want to build this fall if possible. It seems to me the extenison board should take a special interest in this case, as we are on the ground floor in a prosperous growing country.

"OREN DOLEN, Elder."

Order your supplies at once from G. W. Muckley, 603 New England Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

G. W. MUCKLEY.

Illinois

The congregation at Herrin has decided to build a new home to cost $16,000.

Basil T. Keusseff, missionary to the Russians in Chicago, recently baptized two young men.

Mount Morris Church ministered to by W. T. Hacker has been making repairs and improvements on its building.

At Moline in recent weeks there have been 11 additions, 5 of whom were by baptism. The pastor is W. B. Slater.

Denver Church reluctantly accepts the resignation of its pastor, Mr. Wales, who leaves to accept a pastorate in Missouri.

Wapello Church is soon to be pastorless, due to the resignation of L. L. Harrington recently accepted. It is not announced where Mr. Harrington will locate.

B. L. Wray of Kansas City concludes a revival meeting at Stranghurst in which there were 17 additions. The congregation was also reorganized for more effective work.

The revival in a country school-house in Richland County held by O. M. Eaton resulted in 15 additions. The new members united with near-by churches, there being no church of the Disciples in that immediate neighborhood.

E. T. McFarland, who recently resigned at Memorial Church, Rock Island, is not going to get away if his congregation can help it. His people voted unanimously not to accept his resignation. The pastor's final decision has not yet been announced.

The last Sunday of Elmore Sinclair's pastorate of four years at Watseka was signalized by the reception of eighteen persons to the membership, of which twelve were on profession of faith and six by letter. Mr. Sinclair goes to Kansas City.

Danville church life will seem greatly changed without S. S. Jones in it. Mr. Jones has been pastor in that city for more than twenty years, having served First, Second, and Third Churches. He has just resigned Third Church to enter the evangelistic field.

E. P. Gish of Eureka has accepted the pastorate of Literberry Church and will preach there one-half time while pursuing his college course through the senior year. Mr. Gish has been preaching at Kilbourne, where a new building was recently constructed.

The pastor of Litchfield Church, Charles W. Ross, is to be in a revival meeting during August with East Prairie Church in Missouri. In September this same pastor is engaged to assist the Rantoul Church in a meeting. The minister of the latter church is J. W. Porter.

Louis O. Lehman, pastor at Gibson City, was the chief speaker at the laying of the corner-stone of the new church house at Chandlervile, July 22. Dr. Barton O. Aylesworth, the pastor, is carrying his congregation forward in all the elements of church growth.

Centralia Church will entertain the state convention next month. This is the first time the convention has been held there and probably the first time so far south in the state. It should be largely attended. It is reported a good program has been prepared and the Centralia Church is making ready for comfortable and cordial entertainment for all delegates.

Secretary's Letter.

The Fourth District Board did a most worthy thing in helping in the support of Third Church (colored), Bloomington, to the amount of $250. George Hoagland is the minister and deserves this recognition and help. They are in their new house, which will be dedicated in September.

W. B. Slater, of Moline, reports 133 in Sunday-school, 72 at morning service, 102 at night, two confessions in the morning, five baptisms at night on a recent hot Sunday. How is that for a mission?

We are sorry to say that not as many churches returned the statistical report cards as last year, although we asked them two or three times, with return postage prepaid. What more could we do? Will someone tell us why so many preachers and church clerks will pay absolutely no attention to this important matter? Strange indeed. The tabulating for the new state Year Book is done, and it is too late now to get other reports in; but it is not too late for the report to get into the new national Year Book, so please fill out the card report and mail it to us at once. Do it now!

Meet us at Centralia September 2-5, and enjoy a good state convention. And kindly ask your church for a dollar to help bear the convention expenses—a dollar bill or your personal check—both look good to us. Minister Huff and the Centralia Church has sent out a cordial invitation to the entire state. J. Fred Jones, Field Secretary.

W. D. DEWEESE, Office Sec'y.-Treas.
Bloomington, Ill.

A General Convention

(Continued from page 9.)

Fourth: It is believed that this method of co-operation would strongly appeal to the sympathy and support of our active and consecrated business men.

Fifth: There is a growing sentiment among our people in favor of the representative convention method as is evidenced by the recent adoption of that method by a number of our state societies; as for instance, of the thirty-five state societies out of a possible forty reporting, twenty-five are organized on a delegate or a representative basis; these are: Alabama, Southern California, Northern California, Colorado, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Missouri, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

The ten that are organized on a non-delegate basis are Arkansas, Arizona, Florida, Inland Empire, Idaho, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, and Ohio.

Sixth: This method of co-operation is necessary to the proper exercise of the independence and autonomy of the local church in our co-operative work, since it would have a voice in the general convention through representatives regularly appointed by it and responsible to it instead of as at present, if represented at all, by chance, voluntary attendance of individuals. Such a method of representation would enrich the whole brotherhood by the conscious and intentional co-operation of the local church, and would enliven and stimulate the local church by its conscious connection with the whole brotherhood in its efforts to extend the kingdom of Christ to the uttermost part of the earth.

Believing that sufficient time has now been given for due consideration of all the sacred interests involved, and having fullest confidence in the desire of the brethren here assembled to truly represent the spirit and aims of the Disciples of Christ, we recommend that this assembly provide at once for the organization of such a general convention as outlined in this report, and as an aid to prompt and definite action your committee would suggest the following Preamble and Constitution:

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 27
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE INDIVIDUAL
"Noiseless"
CUSHIONED TRAYS
4 Different Features
WHY?
1st—"Noiseless"—As all cup holes are cushioned.
2nd—Dust-proof—The Trays interlock.
3rd—A short glass—no need of tipping back the head
4th—Automatic Filler—Fills rapidly and evenly.
Does not mar the sacredness of the service.
Write for booklet. Outfit sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 E. Randolph St., Dept. T., Chicago.

How About Attending College This Year?

We want the name of every young man and every young woman who is considering this most important question. We believe we can show them that

DRAKE UNIVERSITY

Offers Great Advantages

It is located in the best residence district in Des Moines—the best city in the West. Surroundings clean and wholesome. Good influences surround the boy or girl who attends Drake University.

Courses of Study: Liberal Arts (including Courses for Primary, Kindergarten, Grade and High School Teachers and Students in Domestic Science), Law, Medicine, Dentistry, Bible, Music, Painting and Drawing, Dramatic Art, Etc. Thoroughly prepared teachers in all departments. The best of equipment. The Drake Stadium, one of the finest athletic fields in the country.

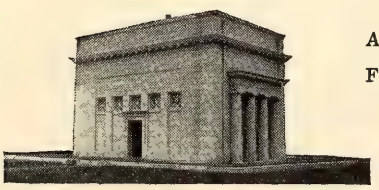
Write for catalogue and full particulars. Any question you may desire to ask will be answered cheerfully.

HILL M. BELL, President,
Drake University. Des Moines, Iowa

This is Where
The Lincoln Cabin Rests
In "My Old Kentucky Home"



The Lincoln Memorial near Hogdenville, Ky.

And Thousands are Going to Visit This Famous Spot While in Attendance at the Great

International Convention of the Disciples of Christ

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, OCTOBER 15 - 22

Write me for full particulars as to all the side trips and "Meet us in our Old Kentucky Home."

Geo. H. Jones, Secretary, Care First Christian Church, Louisville, Ky.

PREAMBLE.

Whereas, There is a widespread feeling among the Disciples of Christ that they need a closer unification of their various missionary, educational, and benevolent organizations, and a more general fellowship of the churches of Christ in all co-operative efforts for the extension of the kingdom of God in the world, and believing that this unity and fellowship would result in their own greater efficiency;

Therefore, We, members of churches of Christ in convention assembled, reaffirming our steadfast adherence to the independence and autonomy of the local churches, and inviting the fellowship of all our sister churches in the accomplishment of these ends, do adopt the following constitution:

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.—NAME.

The name of this organization shall be the General Convention of Churches of Christ.

ARTICLE II.—OBJECT.

The object of this Convention shall be to promote unity, economy, and efficiency among all the philanthropic organizations of the churches of Christ; and to secure equitable representation of the churches in an annual convention which shall receive the reports of and be advisory to such philanthropic organizations, thus securing a closer co-operation in the work of the kingdom of God.

ARTICLE III.—MEMBERSHIP.

This convention shall be composed of members of churches of Christ as follows:

Section 1. Representatives appointed by churches of Christ on the following basis: Each church may appoint one representative, and one additional representative for each one hundred members above the first hundred, provided that no church shall have more than five representatives.

Sec. 2. Representatives of executive boards of such co-operating national and state organizations as shall be approved by this convention, each national board to have three representatives and each state organization two.

ARTICLE IV.—OFFICERS.

Section 1. The officers of this convention shall be a President, three Vice-Presidents, a Recording Secretary, a Corresponding Secretary, and a Treasurer, whose duties shall be those usually pertaining to said offices. These, together with eight other members, shall constitute the Executive Committee. Any member of the Church of Christ in good standing shall be eligible to office.

Sec. 2. The officers named in Section 1 of this Article shall be elected at the annual meeting and shall serve from the close of the meeting at which they are elected to the close of the next annual meeting of the Convention, or until their successors are elected.

Sec. 3. The eight additional members of the Executive Committee shall be elected as follows:

The first year two members for four years, two for three years, two for two years, and two for one year; and thereafter two members annually for a term of four years to succeed those whose terms shall have expired.

Sec. 4. It shall be the duty of the Executive Committee:

In conference with the various missionary and benevolent boards, to prepare the annual budgets of said boards for presentation to the annual convention.

To join the boards in recommending to the church the budgets as adopted by the convention.

In general, to act in an advisory capacity with the said boards in devising ways and means for carrying on their work.

ARTICLE V.—AMENDMENTS.

This Constitution may be altered or amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present and voting at any regular session of the convention, provided that notice thereof shall have been given in writing at the previous annual convention by the Executive Committee or by not less than fifteen members.

Your committee also recommends the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That in order to provide for the organization of the first annual convention under the constitution reported by the Committee on Reconstruction and Unification of our Missionary and Philanthropic Interests, a committee of fifteen be constituted as follows:

First: One to be appointed by each of the following societies: The American Christian Missionary Society, the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, the Board of Church Extension, the Board of Ministerial Relief, the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church, the National State Secretaries' Association.

Second: Eight others, not officially connected with any of our societies, nominated by a committee of five appointed by the chairman of this meeting and elected by a majority vote of the members present and voting.

The committee thus provided shall name and constitute the officers and committees necessary for the holding of the first convention and it shall provide for the defraying of the expenses of the same.

Respectfully submitted,

I. J. SPENCER, MRS. ANNA R. ATWATER,
A. B. PHILPUTT, W. A. BALDWIN,
B. A. ABBOTT, JUDGE F. A. HENRY,
FINIS IDLEMAN, W. F. RICHARDSON,
C. J. TANNER, JAMES H. MOHORTER.

The Divinity of Christ

BY EDWARD SCRIBNER AMES

is a popular statement of both the theological and practical truths centering in our evangelical faith in Christ.

It is scholarly, but not technical.

It lifts the problem of the nature and character of Christ out of the setting of the old-time dogmatism and places it in the light of the more empirical, human and meaningful thought of our own day.

Its Treatment of Unitarianism is original, fresh, illuminating. A single chapter entitled, "Why I am not a Unitarian" will furnish any reader, conservative or liberal, a new point of view.

It is glowing with religious earnestness. It is a living word spoken to the hearts and souls of living people.

Appreciations

Professor George A. Coe says: "These sermons display a remarkable union of intellectual boldness and spiritual warmth. I know of nothing else in print that brings out quite so clearly the positive religious values that can be reached by a rigorous application to Christian dogmas of the functional and valuational point of view. Even readers who cannot accept Professor Ames' position at all points must agree that such a book helps to clear the air, and to focus attention at the right point."

The Indianapolis News says: "One would go far to find a finer interpretation of religious thought and experience in terms of spiritual laws. Mr. Ames is emphatically a man with a message."

The Chicago Inter-Ocean says: "Six sermons full of broad humanity."

The Watchman says: "Professor Ames is avowedly a 'liberal' in theology but his liberalism seems to be of a wholesome kind, in the sense that he is less concerned about doctrines and creeds than he is about service and the helping of people to their best life."

The Independent says: "Dr. Ames does not deny being a liberal, but strongly objects to being styled a 'Unitarian', quoting with enthusiasm a saying of one of the early leaders of his denomination: 'I am neither a Unitarian nor a Trinitarian, but strive to be simply a Christian.' The sermons are thoughtful, moderate in tone and straightforward in expression."

Unity says: "Those who were privileged to listen to these sermons must have found their spiritual natures quickened."

The Advance says: "These are strong, virile sermons, appealing to the reason and satisfying the heart."

Professor Edward C. Moore, of Harvard, says: "It is a very clear and convincing statement of the issue as it stands in the minds of modern men. It makes us realize how the old formulation of the question has become obsolete, no one any longer states the question in the old terms. Dr. Ames has availed himself in admirable fashion of the opportunity for a new statement of the case, and the spirit in which he writes must convey confidence and reassurance to all."

A Most Wholesome Book for Those Troubled Over Christian Doctrines.

Published at 75 cents by

THE BETHANY PRESS
The New Christian Century Co.

700 E. 40th St. Chicago

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Sharp Rev C M Dec12
5522 Kimbark Ave

Vol. XXIX August 15, 1912 Number 33

THE PROGRESSIVE PARTY

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN

REVERIES OF A MINISTER'S WIFE

BY MARIE BALLOU GARVIN

CHICAGO

What Became of a Lie

First somebody told it;
Then the room wouldn't hold it;
So the busy tongues rolled it
  Till they got it outside.
When the crowd came across it
They never once lost it,
But tossed it and tossed it,
  Till it grew long and wide!

This lie brought forth others—
Dark sisters and brothers,
And fathers and mothers,
  A terrible crew.
And as headlong they hurried,
The people they worried,
And bothered and flurried,
  As lies always do!

And so, evil-boded,
This monstrous lie goaded,
Till at last it exploded
  In sin and in shame.
But from mud and from mire,
The pieces flew higher,
Till they hit the sad liar,
  And killed his good name!

—The Christian.

—Prof. Jeremiah Jenks of Columbia University, who has been offered the post of financial adviser to the Chinese republic, is well acquainted with financial problems in the Orient, having served as a member of the United States commission on international exchange in special charge of currency reform in China in 1903-4. He acted as a special agent of the Mexican government in initiating currency reforms there in 1903. Professor Jenks was formerly on the faculty of Knox College at Galesburg, Ill.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE
An Up-to-Date College for Young Women
CAMDEN POINT, MISSOURI

COURSES.
College Preparatory Bible
Normal, Music
Elocution
Physical Culture

COMMODIOUS BUILDING:
New Addition to Building
New Gymnasium
Steam Heated, Acetylene Lighted, Large Campus

TUITION REASONABLE AND RIGHT—SEND FOR CATALOGUE

Sixty-fourth Year Opens in September FRANK G. RICHARD, President

An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women SIXTY-SECOND YEAR
Christian College

Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $36,000 building, completed. 25 College-trained, experienced teachers. Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior college course leads to an A. B. degree. College-preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character-training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field. Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern colleges. For illustrated catalogue address

MRS. LUELLA W. ST. CLAIR-MOSS, President, COLUMBIA, MO.

Next Session begins September 17th.

1869 — HAMILTON COLLEGE FOR WOMEN — 1912
LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.

HUBERT GIBSON SHEARIN, A. M., Ph. D. (Yale), President.

Standardized Junior College courses under a faculty of twenty-nine, all graduates of leading American and European institutions. Faculty of seven for Music, Expression and Art.

Five modern buildings. Complete gymnasium, laboratories and libraries. Home care. Delightful dormitories. Cultural surroundings and scholarly ideals.

The forty-fourth session begins September 9, 1911. For catalogue address THE SECRETARY.

WILLIAM WOODS COLLEGE
Fulton, Mo., successful school for young women.—23rd year.

Reason—we Specialize—Class 'A' standards

What Parents Want to Know.
1 Equipment—Buildings first class; homelike; heated; modern.
2 Curriculum—Courses "accredited"; well arranged for study, recreation and proper social life.
3 Faculty—Teachers from best schools, sympathetic; know their business.
4 Features—College atmosphere, gymnasium, right kind of good time.

Over 3,300 girls in 22 years

These questions answered to your satisfaction. Write President Joseph L. Garvin.

Ten Big Reasons Why

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—a dozen leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

EVERY QUARTER ADDS TO THE NUMBER OF SCHOOLS INTRODUCING THESE LESSONS.

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT . . . . . EDITORS

Loving God

PERHAPS OF ALL WORDS IN HUMAN speech none is more elastic than love. It means as many different things as there are minds. It is the one word which when a man speaks means no more nor less than his personality. It is the gist, substance, and quintessence of what he is; more, of what he longs to be; for

"The thing we long for, that we are
For one transcendent moment."

When you say, therefore, that you love a man, a woman, a child, or God, we cannot have much idea of what you mean until we know you. Pious folk express their most exalted ideal, the feeling of their union with God, and even describe the nature of deity itself by this word; while vicious and perverted creatures use precisely the same word to express their lowest form of selfishness.

* * *

Love is thus self-revealing. Our truest formula of belief consists not in what our minds assent to and our reason acknowledges, but rather in what our desires are drawn to. A soul sometimes deceives itself in what it says, for our words are themselves but thought forms borrowed from others; and in what it does, for few of one's acts carry with them one's utter approval; but no soul is ever deceived in what it likes.

Let us analyze, as far as we can, this thing called love, using the term in its highest sense, and meaning the emotion that beautifies the family, preserves friendship, and appropriates God.

* * *

First of all, it is a distinct emotion. It comes, as we say, from the heart, and not from the intellect or the will. As near as we can define it, it is that pleasurable feeling aroused in us by the presence of the beloved object in our thoughts.

It is well not to drift away from this common-sense basis. No intellectual process, no speech nor art, can be called love, unless it be heated from our subconscious self by this strange fire. We love a man or a book or a flower, only as the thought of the object in question gives us pleasure, and stirs this emotion.

Those who talk of loving God, therefore, when there is no inward joy, no stir of the feeling in some ardent measure, are clearly mistaken. They may obey God, or approve of Him, or fear Him, but they do not love Him except He makes in them some spot of gladness.

* * *

Is it not absurd then, it may be inquired, to command us to love God? Can love be be forced by the will? If it cannot, and it certainly cannot, as it lies beneath the will and moves before the will, why should Jesus put as the supreme "duty" of man the love of God?

* * *

The answer to this plain and substantial objection is this: That the command to love anything essentially good and beautiful is no more nor less than a command to learn to know it.

We are justified in commanding any human being to love, for instance, Shakespeare's or Raphael's works, because by common consent such art ought to and does appeal to a normal, healthy taste.

So we ought to love the beauties of nature, and deeds of heroism, self-sacrifice, and the like, and little children. The obligation here consists in our being human; whoever does not like such things steps aside from the human race, he is perverted, and is a subject for the alienist and not for the moralist.

God, no matter what our religion may be, so long as it is civilized, stands for the perfection of human character. In Him are all those excellencies every right-minded person wants to possess. Naturally, therefore, simply to conceive of such a being must awaken in us love to Him.

* * *

If the thought of God is distasteful to us, we either have a false and distorted notion of what God is, or our tastes are perverted and our backs turned upon what we know to be really worth while.

The command to love God is a command to know God, to think of Him, to come into the influence of His personality. Once we see God we can no more help glowing in love to Him than we can help the glow in our hearts when we see a perfect rose, a gorgeous sunset, a kind deed, or an innocent child.

The curse of sensualism, of selfishness, of hate, of greed, and of all flesh-centered or ego-centered passions is that they stop up the eye of the soul. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

* * *

Lowness, pessimism, and all bitter and base thinking not only prevent us from seeing God, but also from seeing anything else that is worth seeing. Bound in such meshes we cannot see a woman as her spirit should be looked on, nor a man for what he really is, nor any of the moral loveliness of the universe.

I do not ask that your idea of God be the same as mine, for perhaps both of us are far from the truth, but it is right to demand of any man that he have some notion or mental image of the highest, truest, noblest things in life; whatever your God may be, He ought to be no less than that; and you are missing the meaning of life if you don't love Him.

—FRANK CRANE, in his recent book "Lame and Lovely."

Social Survey

BY ORVIS F. JORDAN.

The Progressive Convention

The convention of the new Progressive party has come and gone. No citizen in the United States is ignorant of the happenings of this convention, and few can be blind to the revolutionary significance of the gathering. Whether it has been a gathering of fanatics and disturbers of the social order, as some believe, or the beginning of real democracy in this country, it is no ordinary event.

The convention-goer must have been impressed first of all by the spontaneity and voluntary enthusiasm of the delegates and galleries. There was no need here of hired rooters to put up the semblance of enthusiasm. The feeling of the gathering was so intense that one man exclaimed, "My God, this is not politics; this is religion." All of the pent-up emotions of a people which has suffered long and patiently under a bipartisan rule of Republican and Democratic gangsters found voice in this great assembly.

Again, there was every evidence of high moral purpose. A platform was adopted so radical that the Chicago Journal says, "If this platform is carried out, it is not a reform; it is a social revolution." After years of cowardly trading upon our great problems, it was refreshing to find a convention calling things by their right names and forming policies with reference to their ultimate effect upon the country and not for their temporary vote-getting power.

This convention marks an epoch in another way. It is the beginning of an era of representative conventions. The ideal convention cannot come until the states pass presidential primary acts. But the rules adopted by the Progressives will prevent the recurrence of those abuses which resulted in the split of the Republican party this year. Such politicians as the celebrated Penrose of the Republicans and Sullivan of the Democrats will find it impossible to control under such rules.

The Progressive Leader

The central figure of the convention was Theodore Roosevelt, the most loved and the most hated man in this country today. He received in the convention an ovation such as was never accorded an American citizen before.

Those who hate Roosevelt, and chief among these are the gang politicians and the corrupt corporation interests, charge him with serious faults. They call him an egotist. They have even tried to fix upon him the suspicion that he would like to be emperor. They have called him a demagogue. In their fury, however, they have failed to explain why such a despicable character could all these years remain the foremost figure in American politics.

Colonel Roosevelt is a scholar and an author of authority. He is familiar with the best knowledge of the time in a larger number of fields than most men. He has the most varied experience of any living American, his biography reading like romance. He is called in every country of Europe today, the leading American.

How can two such utterly opposite views of Roosevelt obtain in the public mind? The greater the man, the more difficult is it to assess his worth. Gladstone had enemies not less bitter than those of Roosevelt. Every great man is accused of being greedy of power. Every powerful leader is thought by the mediocre to be egotistic. It is impossible at this close range to do justice to the man, but certain it is that he has given a voice to the best thought of this generation. His enemies would charge that this is hypocritical pretense. If it were, he would be that sort of fool who for one year's cheap popularity was bartering the goodwill of posterity. It seems more likely that he is the sincere advocate of those scientific attitudes toward social problems that have been wrought out in our great universities the past twenty years.

The modern social movement is fortunate to have found a leader so courageous, so versatile, so eloquent and so terrifying to its enemies.

The Progressive Platform

The Progressive platform is the most advanced political document ever put out in this country. Professor Henderson is quoted as saying at the University of Chicago, "This platform advocates all that we have taught for the past twenty years. Whoever is elected will have to meet the issues contained in it."

The catalogue of the leading planks is an impressive one. Honest primaries, courts responsive to popular control, minimum wage, old age insurance, government regulation of trusts, industrial commission, woman's suffrage, child labor laws, cost of living, currency, conservation—these and the other advanced social ideas are covered in the document.

While this program seems like revolution here, it is because our old parties have held us back in reform so long. We are the most reactionary civilized nation in the world. Both England and Germany have for a considerable time been enjoying the policies outlined in this liberal creed. The platform represents not only the judgment of our social experts but the consensus of the great civilized nations.

We already hear, however, the complaints of certain small political movements against the platform. The Prohibitionists will be in print this very week with the story of how a Prohibition plank was rejected by the Progressives by a small majority in the committee. The Socialists are already saying that the platform is a mere palliative since it continues the private ownership of the tools of production. Both of these parties are to be commended for human interest. They have each been misled, however, by the advocacy of certain doctrinaire remedies. The liquor business is a great evil and in the end will be abolished, but it is not the fundamental social evil. Private ownership of tools is our social redemption and not our curse.

As between political faddists on one hand, and stand-pat indifference to social good on the other, this platform stands as the greatest human document of our time.

What the Progressives Are Not

It is worth while for every citizen to make fair assessment of the significance of the Progressive movement.

The Progressives are not bolters.

Many of the present Progressives were in the Republican convention, but many more have not been Republicans. When we call the roll of the illustrious leaders, this will be the more apparent. This is no mere spite convention gathered together to defeat a rival candidate, but a group of earnest people gathered to battle for great ideas.

The Progressives are not hero-worshipers.

It is true that there is no leadership in sight quite so effective as that of Colonel Roosevelt. Without his wonderful personality the movement might not progress so rapidly. But it was in the logic of history there should be such a movement, and it would have been without him.

The Progressives are not Socialists.

The Socialists' journals leave no doubt on this point. They insist that this liberal program is that of England and Germany, but not that of the Marxian theorists. They call attention rightly to the fundamental difference in the philosophy of liberalism and that of socialism.

The Progressives are not malcontents.

They have waited overlong now for this movement. They have been guilty of a reprehensible patience, for there is a time when patience ceases to be a virtue and becomes a vice. In this movement are enrolled not the shiftless and ne'er-do-weels, but the energetic and capable. There is social discontent among saloon loafers. But this party expresses the social discontent of educators, ministers and philanthropists.

The Progressives are the scientific social students.

We have not carried on social study in the universities for twenty years for naught. All of this investigation must in the end affect our institutions. The new movement for exalting human interests above commercial interests has found voice and organization.

Personnel of the Progressive Movement

What a galaxy of great names is this movement! Among the campaign speakers for the movement this fall will be Jane Addams, who seconded the nomination of Roosevelt; Judge Ben Lindsay, who has fought the Beast in that city; Raymond Robins, former Democrat and friend of the laboring man; Charles Merriam, Republican candidate for mayor in Chicago this year, and other leaders equally prominent. We have yet to hear of any of the great students of scientific social reform who have taken an attitude adverse to the movement. It would be utterly impossible to commit a political party more completely to a cause than the Progressives are committed to the cause of human rights. We do not wonder then that social leaders who have never been in politics before are now found in the front ranks of the movement.

What do these names speak of the character of the movement? They must guarantee to us all its solid quality. It would be a hardy man who would impeach the honesty and wisdom of Jane Addams, Raymond Robins or Judge Lindsay. These great souls are sincere friends of human welfare if any are to be found in this country.

Our Attitude to the Progressives

Hitherto this page has not taken positive partisan attitudes. To fail now, however, to recognize in the Progressive movement the voice for all the things we have contended for, would be to display singular blindness. Were this movement only another attempt to tinker the tariff on log chains and sledge hammers, we might well ignore it. To ignore, however, a movement as momentous in American history as was the Republican party in Lincoln's day would be to fail in duty. Then a million slaves waited for deliverance. Now not black men, but white men and children bear the burdens of our social order. For these we will speak, though all the powers of corporate selfishness and commercialism should threaten. With the leader of the hour, we indeed believe that "we stand at Armageddon, and we battle for the Lord."

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

The Resentment Toward Rome

In the pages of The Christian Century attention has been called of late to the aggressions of Rome in this country, and to the resentment with which a good portion of the press of the country regards the assumptions which that ancient church puts forth with so much confidence. We have tried merely to record the passing events with a few comments thereon. Evidently there is an organized press agency constantly employed to advertise the Catholic church in America. We read something of Rome in the daily papers almost every day. Such a medium in the interests of any church is a good thing. But we wish to call attention to the fact that Rome is always plausible; she knows how to attack, and to resist attack; she knows when to fight, and when to flee; when to speak, and when to be silent; how to present her cause in glowing colors, and the cause of those who oppose, to the hurt of the latter. The present agitation is due to Rome's own folly, that of presuming that the American people will tolerate the claims of a church which passed without criticism in the Middle Ages, and which assumes that the genius of American institutions favors the assaults upon American ideals, even in the guise of religion. A cardinal of the Roman Catholic church is entitled to the respect of this country, not because of his position, but because of his patriotism. No matter how plausible a defense of Rome may be written, let it be remembered, her history is also written. She may glory in her age, but that age is a menace to her when under the searchlight. She may boast of her loyalty to American institutions, but the way to prove that claim is not to usurp the chief places at feasts for ecclesiastical reasons, but to practice humility and every other virtue so constantly that on occasions such as started the discussion in Boston, it will be agreed that wherever MacGregor sits, there will be the head of the table. We think it the mark of a great man, because we have been taught by the greatest of all men, to take a lowly place, and allow merit silently to demand a higher. If Rome is in the limelight of censure, she has no one to blame but herself.

Rome's Attempts at Defense

In the Catholic World for August there is a strong defense of Romanism, called forth by the resolutions against the methods and failure of the papacy, passed by the Methodist Episcopal Conference at Minneapolis. The writer of the defense indulges in much good-humored raillery at the expense of the Methodist bishops, but before the article concludes there are some heavy thrusts. We give a few paragraphs which will indicate the general trend:

> The Methodist Episcopal Church affects to view with alarm the growth of Catholicism as a danger to American institutions, but the American people do not view the progress of the church as a danger. Most Methodists, we feel sure, do not share in such alarm. The American people look upon the growth of the church as a support to true American principles. "By their fruits ye shall know them" is the criterion of our Lord. It is the criterion of common sense. It is the criterion that has always been used by the people of this republic. We Catholics are willing to stand or fall by it.
>
> The Catholic church in America has no apology to make for its existence. It is no newcomer here. It was here centuries before John Wesley, that great and justly honored man, was born, and before Methodism was dreamed of. This America, as all men know, was discovered by Catholics before Protestantism in any form was invented. The larger part of it was first explored and settled by Catholics. In the colonial period of this country, two of the first charters of religious liberty were granted by Catholic governors, Lord Baltimore in Maryland and Governor Dongan in New York. American Catholics performed an honorable part in the War of Independence, and the republic could not have been victorious without the aid of two foreign Catholic powers. It was for a long time weak in numbers, but never for an instant weak in its Americanism. During the course of years, it received accessions from king-ruled lands, and it has made of these newcomers the most intense and loyal devotees to American ideals of liberty.

Speaking of the contribution of the Catholic church to American citizenship, the writer continues:

> There were times when our people had to contend with religious and race prejudice. But even in those bad days, the calm judgment and sterling Americanism of the vast majority of our Protestant fellow-citizens saved us from at least the worst assaults of bigotry. At the present day we base our claims to brotherhood in this great family not merely on a general principle of toleration, but on our record as Americans. We take our place, not through sympathy or generosity, but by right—by the right of loyal citizenship, by the right of work done for the upbuilding of this great land; by the right of full acceptance of its institutions; by the right of blood—the blood of Catholics which was so freely poured forth to save this republic from domestic or foreign foe. If blood be the price of citizenship, we Catholics have paid in full for our franchise.

The defender of Catholicism believes the day for the promotion of bigotry has passed, and adds:

> It is too late for this sort of thing (attacking the Catholic church). The hypocrisy of it will no longer delude, nor the intolerance of it attract. The people of this republic know the Catholic church. They have become acquainted with us as neighbors, as fellow-workers, as soldiers fighting side by side. They admire our religious staunchness, our charities, our loyalty to church and country. The Methodists themselves are aware that such is the estimate of our fellows. In a grudging, snarling way, Bishop Burt, as we have seen, acknowledged it. Recent celebrations which have been held by Catholics in our great cities have attracted the attention of the country to our numbers and enthusiasm. They have been as gall and wormwood to the bigots. But they have been a source of honest satisfaction to most of our fellow-citizens. Our church is an American church. Our success is another triumph of American energy, another proof of the wisdom of the American ideal of religious independence and freedom. The increase in the number of our cardinals is a tribute to the greatness of our country, and a strengthening of American power and prestige in the most far-reaching institution in the world.

But the attack will fail, according to the apologist, who closes his able defense with the following:

> Such is the institution which the Methodist Conference set itself to criticize and oppose. Their attack will fail, as stronger attacks than theirs have failed. Their calumnies will not be believed; their shafts will return upon themselves. We need not fight with them; we can commit our defense to our fellow-countrymen. Meanwhile, the old church will go on serenely with her noble work, forming her children up to the level of their vocation as Christians and as freemen, showing to all the world that loyalty to faith and loyalty to country is "a double but not a divided duty."

Penalty Without Fire and Brimstone

An international Bible student's association recently declared by resolution, against which there was not cast a dissenting vote, its conviction that there is no hell in which the mode of punishment is by fire and brimstone. We do not understand that they legislated hell out of the universe, but only that a particular kind of hell was consigned to the limbo of things obsolete. We must always believe in hell, because of its adequacy to meet certain demands of the universe. It is impossible for us not to harbor the conviction that hell is a necessity. Sin must be punished; there must be a line of separation somewhere, and hell and heaven are suited to one's sense of justice. There is much in the statement concerning hell which we do not understand, and we have never met anyone who did, or read any book which threw light upon the penal fires or our own darkness, but we cling to the conviction that despite the orientalism in which much of the teaching is cast, the fact remains, and it is more important to believe in that than to be disturbed about incidental matters.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—SILAS JONES, IDA WITHERS HARRISON, ORVIS F. JORDAN, ELLIS B. BARNES.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy, 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

United Religious Press Building
700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

The Great Necessity

Nicodemus thought well of himself and of the class to which he belonged. He knew how to give instruction and service. He was somewhat clumsy in his approach to one who, he felt, might endeavor to set him right on important moral and religious questions. We can understand his attitude. We all incline to the opinion that good faith and sound judgment are the peculiar possession of our group. We hardly know what to make of them when they appear outside our circle. Our praise of them when they do so appear is duly qualified, lest we should compromise the truth, that is, seem to doubt that we stand on the only spot from which the world can be seen as it really is.

The Pharisee was not told that he had to give up everything he had received from his party. Men have to be associated for work, for play, for study, and for worship. They are made wise by their associated life. The truth one holds must be in a special sense his own, yet he would be greatly impoverished if he could not find truth in his human environment. Much that the Pharisee had received was good. What he had to surrender was his feeling that he was unlike other men. We may rejoice in our party's achievements and be the better for our joy if we recognize that other men in other ways were doing as much good as we are.

The great necessity is not conversion; it is acquaintance with God and joyful acceptance of his will as our peace and righteousness. In so far as we are out of harmony with the will of God, we need to be changed. Conversion derives its value from that to which we are converted. When we hear that a man has been converted to God, we have not heard much unless we know what sort of God the man worships. A man may profess to be a Christian and have a mean idea of God. Those of us who try to teach the way of God are exhorted to speak carefully, that we may not mislead a soul. We in turn may say, "Take heed how ye hear." It is God as he is known to the best of his servants and especially as Jesus revealed him, that the soul needs.

"Ye must be born anew." That is true of us all. We may have thought this was a word to the open sinner and not to the disciple. To the man outside the church our preaching may seem to be summed up in these words: "Come and be as good as we are. We once experienced conversion and now we are models of Christian conduct." If this is the impression we make, there is something wrong somewhere. The faith once for all gained, that does not grow in strength and richness, may be given up without serious loss. Growth in faith is a process of constant readjustment. Evil is seen as evil and put aside; good is seen as good and accepted.

"The only salvation of India, even from an economic point of view, in the opinion of those who have longest and most deeply studied it, is its Christianization. Let England inspire India with a veritable Christian faith, and nine-tenths of the present difficulties would spontaneously cease." The "great necessity" is great because of its inclusiveness. Wrong notions of God, of man, and of nature hold India in bondage. They keep her from fighting effectively disease, famine and injustice. To change a man's opinions on the tariff, on the money question or any other question, is less in the eyes of intelligent and patriotic men than it is to change him from an attitude of indifference to the prosperity of the state to one of steadfast devotion to its interests. To save India from one famine or from one form of cruelty is something; it is much better to change the beliefs of the people so that of their own will they will search for the best means of fighting the scourge of disease and of protecting themselves from the danger of famine.

Whence comes our inspiration? From above or from below? Of course we are civilized people. We look from afar upon the vileness and cruelty of heathenism. But have we abolished polite selfishness? Do we love our neighbor or do we make a pretense of treating him well in order that we may have the name of being a lover of men? Do we cry out for the living God in our worship or for the God whom custom commands us to worship? Desire for respectability will not carry us far. Our civilization is in danger when it loses its passion for God. Superficial and temporary solutions of our difficulties will not save us; we must find our place in God's eternal order. [Midweek service, Aug. 21. John 3:1-15.] S. J.

The Lost Art of Reading

Have the American people lost the art of reading? Certainly not, if we may accept the enormous volume of printed matter as seen in the daily papers, the popular and melodramic novel, as a standard of judgment. But is skimming market reports, the headings of the newspapers, the baseball news, and the sensational and even blood-curdling items, reading? Certainly it is not serious reading. Volume of reading output and a hop-skip-and-a-jump perusal seem to be the order of the day. One may ask the shop girl what she knows of the latest novel, and she may be able to say; ask her what she knows of Carlyle or Thackeray, and it is more than probable that she will tell you that they are out of date. The hurry of American life, the inevitable grind of toil makes the reading that nourishes well-nigh impossible.

An offer of eight millions of dollars, cash, for a great newspaper was rejected by its owner in the past few weeks. It is among the best newspapers in the land. It has no editorial policy, and therefore has no enemies on its list because of differences of opinion; but it certainly prints the news, and the news is of such a character that people will read. They pay five cents a copy for the paper and pass by the papers which compete with it for public support, and sell for one cent or two. Elaboration is its forte: the details of the latest sensation, the deliverances of Sully, the veteran slugger of the diamond, are regarded as of equal value to the public as the opinions of a great statesman on any of the issues of the day. A culprit is held up to scorn for robbing a post-office, and so is the bonehead who robbed the home team of a game by a misplay. All is news that comes within its purview, and seemingly the foul affray must take its place by the side of the salutary item which tells of civic or social reform. Now the public patronage is conclusive evidence that such papers are printing just what the public wishes to read, or the plant would not be worth more than eight millions in cold cash. All of which shows that the public school and the college have a tremendous task to accomplish.

Speaking on this subject, the Continent has to say: "The oft-quoted proverb, 'Reading makes a full man,' must be changed to read, 'Newspaper reading makes a fool man.'" The "Daily Evening Squib," sold before 10 o'clock in the morning, forces from the newsstands by sheer "fizzical" energy "The Atlantic Monthly," which was once the mouthpiece of Thoreau and Lowell and Oliver Wendell Holmes and Alcott and Emerson.

"The shops of booksellers have shelves filled with the treasures of the ages, but in the windows given to advertising are novels, novels, novels. Melodrama long ago drove the essay to the last place in the corner by the wall in the rear of the bookshop. Look over the shoulder of the pretty girl in the chair next you in the parlor car. You will find her reading 'The Prodigal Judge.' Who ever saw even a college girl reading 'Sartor Resartus' or 'The Diamond Necklace' on a railway train? Perhaps the title of 'Diamond Necklace' might captivate her, but the reading of two pages of Carlyle's masterly vigor would condemn humor and satire and history to the limbo of the ash barrel. If the boy and girl readers of today become the fathers and mothers of tomorrow what will their children read? Will they follow in the path of 'Lydia Langish' and hide their books from the vigilant scrutiny of the argus-eyed aunt when she appears? Abraham Lincoln was made on the dirt floor of a log cabin by three great books—the Bible, Shakespeare, and Blackstone. Are America's future Lincolns being made so today?"

There is much food in the above for serious reflection. The serious-minded man skims the newspapers and delves into the eternity books. Is it not too generally true that the flippant scoff at the immortal books, and feast upon the passing page?

Violating a Great Motto

Those who profess to believe that the New Testament has ordained immersion in water as a condition of church membership and as one of the "terms of pardon" are in the habit of announcing as their motto, "Where the Scriptures speak we speak, and where the Scriptures are silent we are silent." But in spite of this great formula of loyalty these advocates of the immersion dogma treat the word of God with less respect than any group of Christians in evangelical circles.

This immersion dogma is based upon the assumption that the word "baptize" in the Greek means "immerse" or its equivalent, and nothing else. Yet most of those who hold to this reading of the text cherish views and make declarations that directly contradict their Bible. All the passages upon which their dogma rests are denied in their hearts and by their lips.

"He that believeth and is immersed in water shall be saved," says their Bible. And again, "Immersion in water doth not save us." But they unhesitatingly affirm that Presbyterians who have not been immersed are saved.

"Repent and be immersed in water for the remission of your sins," says their Bible. And again, "Arise and be immersed in water and wash away thy sins." But they unhesitatingly affirm that Congregationalists who have not been immersed have received the remission of their sins.

"Buried with Christ by immersion in water into his death," says their Bible. And again, "Immersion in water doth now save us." But have not been immersed have been buried with Christ and have risen with him into the new life.

"We are all immersed in water into one body," says their Bible, but they do not hesitate to count many millions of the unimmersed as being in the body of Christ.

And as if this were not presumption enough, the adherents of this dogma read the very words of Jesus where he says, "Except a man be born of [immersed in] water and of the spirit he cannot enter the kingdom of God [the church]," and flatly contradict their Lord by affirming that some men can and do enter the kingdom without being born of water at all!

How can such a teacher as Doctor Garrison, for example, whose recent writings mark the momentary recrudescence of an almost obsolete doctrine of "New Testment conditions of church membership," repudiate his own Bible and the express words of his Lord at that?

One of two things those who hold to Thomas Campbells' motto must do: They must cease speaking where the Bible forbids them to speak, or revise their understanding of what the Bible says.

The latter alternative describes the process already going on in many minds.

A Misleading Source of Information

If the claim of Campbellism that its mission is to unite Christendom is to be judged in the light of its history, it must be pronounced both a farce and a failure. Instead of uniting the different sects, it has created an additional one, which may be justly termed "the straitest sect of the Pharisees," and, of all the sects, the most sectarian. But even more, it is probable that the heralds of this union plea are worse divided and less at peace with themselves than the people of any other denomination.

The above from the Western Recorder, one of our staunch Baptist contemporaries, leads us to remark that it has been taking too seriously the utterances of a certain journal which professes to speak for the entire body of the Disciples. It represents only that portion of them which claims to have solved all the problems of the universe, and pronounces anathemas on those who will not admit that there are a few questions which have not yet been answered, and a few problems to which we ought to give earnest heed. With all its cocksureness in the matter of knowledge, we might expect volumes to roll from its presses which would enlighten the world; but alas! in recent years a few pamphlets on Sunday-school methods, a volume or two of sermons mainly on faith, repentance, and baptism, a few controversial works on some straw problems alleged to belong to the field of Biblical scholarship, are about all that have been given to satisfy the hunger of the world. This is wholly out of proportion to what might have been expected in view of the pretensions and assumptions of those whose learning was hermetically sealed many years ago. No recent light has broken through of late. But really, when one knows how much light there was, it can easily be understood that not much more is needed. So with the spirit such as the Western Recorder interprets to be representative of the Disciples, it is not a matter of wonder that it should seem severe on the claims of those who profess to have a plea for the union of all peoples.

But we are happy to inform our contemporary that the source of its authority misrepresents our people. It is as far away from the original purposes of the Campbells as are those papers which circulate in the interest of the reactionary movements of fifty years ago. The men who are moulding the history of the Disciples in the pulpits are no longer concerned with its plans, its policies, its platitudes, or its penalties. Its hold today is upon the rural community, the last always to accept new views, and to renounce those which have become obsolete. And with worldly wisdom it employs a double-barrelled staff of writers, one for those who live in the present, and one for those who live in the past. But the writers of the past are the authority in the sanctum. Through their influence, the history of the Disciples is being made thoroughly sectarian because of the power of the tail to wag the head. These are a few hints which may enable the Recorder to understand why it understands the Disciples as it does.

Let us assure our contemporary that Disciples are not nearly as bad, though we are deserving of criticism in spots, as we have been painted. We are still adhering to our original program to unite the followers of Christ of every name and creed, on the foundation of the apostles and prophets. It is our regret that we have not succeeded in doing more than we have done, but we propose to continue to plead for unity despite the opposition to it without and within. There are reactionary forces in our midst which are doing their best, ignorantly and in unbelief, to divert us from our original course. We believe that we shall succeed in the face of all opposition in winning the divided forces of Christendom to that unity for which the Saviour prayed. And whereas, when we began uttering this plea, ours was a lonely voice, now a multitude of agencies are at work, and their voices are as urgent as ours, their prayers as fervent, their efforts as untiring; and all these warm our hearts to deeper consecration in this world-wide movement. The prayer of Christ must be answered.

China's Progress

The republic of China is not yet a year old, yet it has already established a national department of health. The United States of America is 136 years old, and is still discussing the question. Dr. W. W. Peter, medical missionary located at Shanghai, China, discusses some of the health problems of China in a recent number of the "Journal of the American Medical Association." He says: "Two thousand miles, 20,000,000 people, 200 cities—and not one sewer! This in brief is a summary of a trip into the interior of China." Congestion, it seems, is one of the important problems in China. Viewed from the top of a city wall, nothing can be seen from wall to wall but housetops. There are no playgrounds, parks, or wide streets. Trees are the exception; streets are very narrow, five feet is considered an ample width for an alley; ten feet is quite a street, and a fifteen-foot wide thoroughfare is regarded as a boulevard. There are no yards; houses and shops open directly on the street; paving is practically unknown, and ten people often occupy quarters barely large enough for two. During the three hundred years of Manchu government nothing was done to safeguard the public health. There are no quarantine laws, no hospitals, no methods of controlling epidemics, no health regulations, and no health officers. With the exception of medical missionaries and a few recent graduates of American and European schools, there are no physicians in the modern sense. But the change has already begun. The new republican government has just completed the organization of a national department of health. Dr. Lin Boon Keng of Shanghai has been appointed as its head. A knowledge of the possibilities and value of modern scientific medicine is rapidly spreading among the people. While the recent evolution seriously interfered with the hospitals and work of the medical missionaries, there are today eight large union medical schools, manned principally by American and English physicians. "Once the Chinese mind acquires a full understanding of modern science," says Dr. Peter, "the benefits will affect not only China but the rest of the world also. Her health problems will increasingly become world problems; her ships manned by her crews will carry her products to the doors of all nations. Will they also carry her diseases?"

Editorial Table Talk

The Erometer

What is that? Why, "eros" means love, and of course we all know that "meter" means measure. And some wonderful genius has invented an "erometer," which has a dial and a recording pencil and can be worn inside a bracelet like a tiny watch. If the young lady is not sure whether she cares for the young man who has begun to call "steady," she will clasp this erometer on her wrist, just over her pulse, when she goes out to lunch with him. After the swell repast is concluded, she will, in her own boudoir, take out the slip of paper on which the nib of the invisible pen has duly recorded her heart-throbs—and then she will know whether she loves him. Meanwhile he, in his hall bed-room, will, we suppose, be examining his lunch check; and we fancy that his emotions upon a study of the same will tell him whether he cares to keep it up. As between the two slips of paper, we give the advantage to the lunch check. Many a young man has found his feet grow cold when he first read that bit of paper, and his heart did the same upon a second perusal. But the inventor has forgotten to tell us what is going to happen when she does and he doesn't.

That Ominous Black Cat

At the opening of the La Salle street tunnel recently, the reporters present were startled to see a coal-black cat leap into the great bore which led underneath the river and deliberately precede the first trolley train. It was deemed an incident of sufficient importance to warrant the publication of the cat's picture in the daily press. All of which shows how slowly superstitions die. The hard-headed Romans who built up a great world empire would nevertheless take their cues from a crow or a garter-snake before undertaking a critical campaign. An oriental sovereign who visited London a few years since sent his Mediterranean steamer specially chartered for his use back empty, returning to Constantinople by rail because something went wrong with his astrologer. How little Christians realize the wretched slavery of superstition from which their faith delivered them, and how easy it is for some of them to trifle with the devil's traps and gins which hold a soul in fatal grip once it is seized.

Long Distance Prophesies

The weather man sent out from the Chicago office some long distance prophecies last week reminding us distinctly of the similar prognostications which used to appear in the "New England Farmers' Almanac." There was the same delightful uncertainty about the regions to be affected as well as the meteorological changes themselves. This would most likely be felt in "the Southwest," and that might be looked for in the "Northwest," and something else would happen—if not prevented—"in the middle section." As each of these areas was left to the imagination of the reader, the whole "forecasting" might be truly said to be "in nubibus." The old-fashioned almanac used to tell the farmer in April, in italic print which ran down a page, "About this time look out for showers"; or in August, "Extreme heat is likely to occur." In the same way, the "crystal gazers" who ply their trade in Chicago warn their clients to "Beware of a short, thick man," or to "Look out for a long, slim individual"—and so on to the end of the chapter. Thus modern science and ancient necromancy approach each other and the omniscience of the one seems to be about as much guess work as the divination of the other.

The Fool and His Money

When the fools of America are numerous enough and rich enough to contribute $120,000,000 a year to swindlers who ask them for their money, the attempt to protect the people from themselves would seem to be well-nigh hopeless. And the discouraging feature of the case is that most of the schemes practiced are old and were never very alluring to persons of business sense. Years ago we chanced to overhear a "promoter" of mining companies explaining to a lady at her request how people in his line of business made their money. With perfect frankness he explained the process of "locating" mines; "organizing" companies; "unloading" on the purchasers the actual development, and then repeating the process with a fresh lot of "investors" ad infinitum. "How many such companies," he was asked, "can you float each year?" "Ten is our usual number," was his answer. "But I should think, Mr. X, people would get tired of pouring their money into such wild-cat enterprises," said the lady. "So should I," was the quick response, "but they never do. We only have to change the nature of the 'investment' according to the fashion of the day. Sometimes people want gold-mining stocks and sometimes silver, and then again they must have rubber plantations. We generally manage to sell them what they want." That was the whole story—except the suffering that followed such legalized robbery.

Leprosy in the United States

A survey of the prevalence of leprosy in the United States and its possessions was recently made by the United States Public Health Service. This report is reviewed in a recent number of The Journal of the American Medical Association. Health officers of the several states, Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines were requested to submit a statement of the number of new cases reported in 1911, and of the total number on January 1, 1912. The results were not complete, because in only eighteen states and the District of Columbia is leprosy a specifically notifiable disease. In all, 146 cases were reported in the United States, of which forty were new cases having been first observed in 1911. In 1911 a commission of officers of the Public Health Service found 278 lepers in the United States. Of these, 145 were foreign-born, and thirteen were of unknown nativity; 186 were reported as probably having contracted the disease in this country. Only seventy-two of the patients were isolated and cared for by the local authorities. The 146 cases reported in the present survey do not indicate a deceased prevalence. Rather these 146 cases reported by health authorities are comparable to the seventy-two cases of patients cared for by health officials in 1901. Three states—California, Louisiana and Massachusetts—have specific provision for lepers in leprosariums. In other states varying degrees of care and isolation are provided. There are known to be twenty-eight lepers in Porto Rico. In Hawaii and the Philippines the disease constitutes an important public health problem. In the Philippines about 6,000 lepers have been transferred to Culion. Cebu, an island with one-half of the Philippines' population, furnished one-half of the cases. On this island many instances indicate that leprosy is a so-called house disease. The Treasury Department recently amended the interstate quarantine regulations to the effect that common carriers may not transport a leper except under specific restrictions, and a special permit from the surgeon-general of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service. A leper who violates this regulation is to be returned to the original state or to a designated Federal quarantine station.

Baseball and Civilization

Some time back this newspaper ran a serial entitled "Rainier of the Last Frontier," which, in addition to being a clever story of the Philippines under American control, contained one of the best descriptions of a baseball game ever in a novel. The author brought out the fact that the little brown men of the far-away islands were begining to take an interest in the great American game, turning from cock-fighting and other mean and cruel sports to the bat and ball. His contention was that with baseball as an opening wedge, the Filipinos might eventually become civilized and Christianized. To back up this pioneer idea comes Prof. W. P. Gorsuch of the University of Chicago just from the islands with the assertion that simon-pure American baseball as an antidote for cockfighting and other sports of similar nature has made such progress in the Philippine Islands that it bids fair to displace them in a few years. "Progress of baseball among the native youth is surprising," says Mr. Grosuch. "It is not only interesting the boys who play but is commanding the attention of large crowds who are deserting the cock pits for the diamond. Everybody likes it; the only opposition to its growth seems to come from the promoters of the chicken fights. Mr. Gorsuch found the strides made in industrial education worthy of comment. American educational methods have been directed to giving the youth of the islands a practical start in life, with the result that the schools teach basket making, hat making, matting and lace manufacture. The department of education is busy forming its final plans for the opening of the new University of the Philippines, which will mean much to the native youth."

Awful Commonness of Murder

The killing craze which has been such a dreadful blot on Chicago of late years has spread to New York. One murder a day was the average in New York City for the month of July, according to the official abulation compiled by the police homicide bureau. Records show that the hot weather always stirs the murderers to action. But during the month just passed they outdid themselves in activity. A year ago the July total was about one fourth smaller than last year. Gang fights or hired gangsters are given as the cause of at least five of the murders in Manhattan and the Bronx, and in a number of the remaining eighteen murders, where no important arrests have been made, gang men are thought to have been back of the killings. Four witnesses testify that one murder was committed by a policeman. In two other murders Chinamen figure. Two little girls were murdered in a shockingly brutal manner and two other children were killed by stray bullets in a gang battle. There are places where human life is more sacred than New York.

Reveries of a Minister's Wife

By Mrs. Marie Ballou Garvin

His reverence says he hopes any future "reveries" I may have about him will continue to be very respectful; and as I have a little respectful material left, at least one more "reverie" seems possible. I think every minister's family ought to be just as respectful to him as they can—especially around the time of the month when the church board meets. The more deference shown at such a time the less likely are the family to bring down on their defenceless heads what really belongs to the wood—I mean board heads. Though usually, whether the family escape or not, the board manages to get off by being dismissed with a word of prayer—on their behalf—part of it silent prayer, as we feel it would be very inconvenient to move just now.

We were all especially respectful once when it wasn't anywhere near the time of month for board meeting. That was when Daddy brought home some fresh crabs—that is they were fresh when he started with them. He had saved five cents by getting them down on the water front early in the afternoon, and they had added many other scents to the five during his travels the remainder of the day—Daddy can't get over the feeling that he is cheating the church if he comes home before six. The crabs preceded him into the house by about a block—or at least scent ahead the announcement of their approach. I shall always be thankful that I thought of his Prince Albert in time to rush it over to the neighbors before the "noisome pestilence" took full possession of the house. Of course few people understand that in a minister's household the Prince Albert is quite the most important article in the house—costs the most and has to last the longest, and so becomes an object of the tenderest solicitude. It took hours to get his reverence fumigated so that he could perform the wedding ceremony for which he was scheduled the next day!

Wedding Ceremonies.

Speaking of wedding ceremonies, whenever Daddy marries a couple he always tells them he hopes they will be as happy "as we are." Dear man, I've known him to say that when two of the children were down with the measles, and the servant had gone because she was afraid she would catch them, and the baby was yelling like election night! That was the day I called up an employment office—just gave Central the number, and as soon as I heard a voice I began, "Please send me a good, live servant right away; one who is not afraid of the measles or of work!" Somebody haw-hawed at the other end of the line, then drawled out, "I'm afraid we haven't any of that kind down here, madam; this is an undertaking establishment!"

But then, men have such a way of rising above the tormental facts at such times, or rather they manage to rise out of them, unless it happens to be along about midnight, then they don't rise at all. They don't even wake up no matter what they hear. But I always make full allowance for his reverence's complete oblivion, as he really is a very sound sleeper. Sometimes the sound is dreadful. I think if he can sleep through his own commotion a mere babe couldn't hope to disturb him. And yet, I always have a wicked impulse to whisper softly when the baby's crying loudest, and he is sleeping soundest, "Daddy, there's a couple wanting to be married!" because I feel morally sure he'd be up and half dressed before I could explain that they didn't want to be married until the next day.

He Helped to Celebrate.

But there was one night not very long ago when I wouldn't have disturbed him for the world. He surely slept the sleep of the just, which is different from being just asleep. You see, the evening before we had a Fourth of July celebration—Roman candles, sky-rockets, sparklers, red light and—Daddy! Heretofore we had always been obliged to depend upon the neighbors to shoot off our fireworks for us, because Daddy had always managed to be called away to deliver verbal fireworks, as it were. But this year when he began to hint that perhaps he would be obliged to be separated from his dear family over the Fourth, I promptly said, "No! those precious children have never had the educational advantage of seeing their papa act as master of ceremonies at a Fourth of July celebration, and they are not going to be denied that esthetic privilege this year!" He said weakly, "Well, of course, if you put it that way . . ." and I said, "Well, I do!" So he went down to the fireworks store and bought whatever the children told him to. As soon as it began to get dark on the eventful evening the children brought out all the different varieties and lined them up on the porch steps. Then they detached Daddy from his book and lined him up in front of them, and handed him a stick of punk, a box of matches and a wet cloth to put himself out with in case he needed it. And then the fun began. He hadn't shot off any fireworks since his boyhood days—I mean that kind—and while he tried to go at it nonchalantly, we noticed that he used a considerable amount of caution. From the first he examined both ends of every piece very carefully to see which one to light. Fortunately he guessed the right end every time, and whenever he could get one lighted—there was rather a stiff breeze that night—it went off without a hitch—that is, when there was anything in it to go off. When a piece didn't go off Daddy always did, so there wasn't a dull moment. He always exclaimed, "Humbugged!" Some of the Roman candles failed to respond, and though Daddy whirled and whirled and whirled, nothing happened except one or two sparks. It was like whirling a sermon that don't seem to be taking the proper hold of the audience, trying to get a few colored balls started up—then they (I mean the preachers) go home and tell their wives that their sermon "missed fire," but they don't tell anybody else.

Sky-rockets Much Easier.

The sky-rockets were so much less work. All Daddy had to do was to prop them up and light them; and when they would stay propped until he could strike the match, and when the match would stay lit until he could get it to the rocket, everything went beautifully. He said several times that he wished he had bought all sky-rockets: that his arms just ached with whirling those Roman candles—couldn't understand how he had to come to buy so many. One thing was certain, he would know what to buy next year. Though the evening was passing rapidly, the pile of ammunition on the porch didn't seem to be diminishing very fast, so Daddy began to hurry things along. As soon as he saw that a rocket was on the point of beginning its upward flight, he would rush to the steps and snatch a handful of torpedoes and throw them. Everytime anything went off he counted what was left. When he came to the sparklers he passed them all around—made us all hold one, even the baby, and some of us had two. He wouldn't even stop to look at a balloon that was passing over us—said he didn't have time. At last he came to the end. When nothing remained but the smell of powder and one or two matches out of a whole box-full, he rubbed his hands and said benevolently, in a Santa Claus tone of voice, "Didn't we have a pleasant evening!" But that was before he discovered the burned hole in his shirt-front.

For the benefit of any one who may be feeling sorry for Daddy because he is saddled with a family which makes fun of him, let me explain that he likes it. Perhaps there was a time when he couldn't see a joke without the aid of a magnifying glass, but that is ancient history. He has long since adapted himself to an "environment" that sees the funny side of everything. And, furthermore, he is quite conscious that my "reveries" have to be mainly about him, because I can't think of anybody but him. They are all really written for his amusement, as he laughs harder than anyone else, and asks for more. So you see he is really the center of an adoring family, the sun of their existence.

A Certain Apple Tree.

My mind travels back to a certain apple tree, in a certain rustic corner, in a certain college town—no, I'll not tell the name. Perhaps the tree and the corner are both gone now—I think I heard something about their having to get out of the way of modern progress—but memories live on! That dear, old apple tree! Scarred with the aimless wanderings of many a penknife, and other wanderings not quite so aimless. Its blossoms always blushed a deeper pink than any others on the hill—perhaps they had reason to—and inquisitive birds came in numbers to build their nests where they could spy all summer on that secluded (?) seat below. And the path—how shamelessly it led straight to the spot! Though all this hasn't a thing to do with Daddy and me! I'm just "digressing," as the preachers say when they have run out of points but still have plenty of breath.

Notes

—The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis has designated October 27 as the date for a national demonstration against the white plague. On that date churches and religious societies will be asked to give special attention to tuberculosis in their services. It is expected that more than 100,000 churches and societies will observe the day.

—Every state in the union except Wyoming, New Mexico, Arizona, and Utah is represented in the list of delegates already registered for the World's Seventh Sunday-school Convention, to be held in Zurich, Switzerland, July 8-15, 1913. Every province in Canada is represented.

—The church census of Australia shows that during the past ten years the Methodists increased 8 2-3 per cent; the Baptists 8 2-3 per cent; the Church of England 14¼ per cent; the Roman Catholics 16½ per cent; and the Presbyterians 31 per cent. The population increase was 18 per cent.

THE HIGH CALLING

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS."

Copyright 1911, George H. Doran Co.

CHAPTER XIII (Continued).

He isn't half so bad as Jake Rambeau, the trader. And Jake's had a high school education and calls himself civilized.

"We are all in need of the Spirit's presence today. I want more of the presence. My heart longs to walk with the Master today. If the Master will be gentle with me as he was with Peter two or three times when he didn't deserve it, I would be glad. O Master, tell me your will. I need you so much, so much—"

And then the sound of the voice trailed off into a murmur indistinguishable to Bauer from where he lay. But he knew that Elijah Clifford had thrown himself full length on the ground and was pleading in his own way for the divine presence, for victory over himself and triumph for the Kingdom in that desert, for once in the dawn when he had heard his voice, Bauer had poked a hole through the dirt over the wall of the hogon and for one moment, during which he felt almost ashamed for looking, he had seen Clifford prostrate himself thus and lie there outstretched for how long, he did not know. It did not seem right to him to look for more than a minute.

After a silence of about half an hour, during which Bauer had risen, Clifford appeared in the doorway of the hogon with his usual cheerful "Good morning; Sehr gut?"

"Ja, sehr gut," replied Bauer. "When do we start?"

"Right after breakfast."

"How long will it take us to make the trip to Oraibi?"

"Oh, it depends on how often we lose the way. May take two days, may take three."

"Have you been there before?"

"Seen the snake dance five times."

"Is it as wonderful as they say?"

"Is it? I am just as much interested in it now as I was the first time. But the poor devils! Half of 'em don't know what their rigamarole means. And Mr. Masters thinks the government ought to put an end to it. Last time there were over a hundred tourists came up from all over the country and turned Oraibi into a sort of bargain day. The dance confirms 'em in their superstitions. But no mistake it's a wonderful sight to be going on in the U. S."

"Mr. Masters said several parties were going to come this year from Pittsburg and New York.."

"Yes. The Van Shaws are among them. I understood Miss Douglas to tell Miss Gray that one of these Van Shaws was in the same school with her brother and you. Do you know him?"

"Yes—I know who he is," said Bauer, slower than usual. He could not forget the incident that occurred in Walter's room when Van Shaw had started to relate an objectionable story and Walter had prevented him from telling it. Van Shaw's general reputation for fast and questionable habits corresponded with this incident and Bauer felt annoyed at the possibility of a chance meeting with his party.

But in the bustle of preparation for the journey, everything else was soon forgotten except the immediate interest. Bauer was not expected to do anything except get his own few traveling necessities together. But he quietly helped Mrs. Masters in a number of ways and she afterwards told Clifford that the laconic German student was the most remarkable young man she ever knew to anticipate a want and do a thing right the first time.

"Just the opposite of me," said Clifford. "I have to do a thing twice anyway to make sure, like the doctor in our old town in Vermont, who used to say that if he didn't kill with the first operation he was dead sure to cure with the next."

When the chuck wagons were all ready Bauer found to his pleasure that he was assigned to the light platform spring wagon in which Esther and Helen, together with Clifford and Mrs. Masters, were going. Mr. Masters, Miss Gray, Walter and Miss Clifford were assigned to one of the chuck wagons and Peshlekietsetti with two of the older pupils in the school and one of the younger Indians had charge of a third wagon containing the tents and the water.

The party was on the way shortly after sunrise and reached the place of the ford in about an hour. The river was very low and as the wagons went over on the rock ledge, only a few inches of water were trickling through the wheels.

"You wouldn't believe, would you, Miss Douglas, that Mr. Bauer and I had a good swim right about here a few weeks ago?"

"Oh, tell me about that," cried Helen, who with all the rest of the visitors had of course heard of Bauer's rescue, and in her heart was envious of Miss Gray for her physical prowess. But she had never been able to prevail on her to give any but the most unsatisfactory account of the rescue.

So Clifford launched into a glowing account of the affair, obliterating himself entirely and making it seem that Miss Gray was the only person present, so that Bauer had to give Helen the full account as near as he could of Clifford's part in the rescue.

"It's a wonderful land! I wish such things would happen in Milton! And, oh, look at those colors! Was anything ever like them!" Helen exclaimed as the wagons came up out of the river bed and in full view of the painted desert as it stretched out in its weird, fascinating beauty. "Oh, I just can't contain it all!"

"You remind me," said Clifford, who was driving, and now gave the horses a free rein on a hard 'dobe stretch, "of a young lady who was writing letters home from her first trip abroad for the use of the county paper. She said, when she was in Venice, 'Last night I lay in a gondola in the Grand Canal, drinking it all in, and life never seemed so full before.'" Clifford winked at Bauer, who was on the front seat with him, and Helen, who was not yet used to Elijah Clifford's ways, at first turned red and looked vexed, but afterwards laughed with the rest.

"Well, if your young lady was here she would have to say the same thing about all this. I never had any thought that a desert was like this. I supposed it was just nothing but sand spread out on a flat surface. But look at those flowers! Did you ever see anything more delicate for color and form?"

"Most people think that way about the desert," said Clifford. "There are more than sixty distinct varieties of vegetation this side of the river between here and Red Stone Tank. Mr. Bauer can tell you the names of some of 'em. He has begun to make a collection."

Bauer modestly replied in answer to a question from Helen that he had classified only a few distinct species that he had found in his short strolls from the Mission.

He had the book with his things at Tolchaco and would show it to her when they came back.

"I didn't know you cared for botany," said Helen, a little flippantly. "I supposed you were all absorbed in your inventions."

Bauer's face changed color slightly.

"I have always enjoyed God's earth," he said. "Anything that grows is always more wonderful than anything that has to be made."

"I should think this would be a good place to try your incubator, it's so hot," said Helen, feeling that she had made a foolish remark, but letting it go rather than try to apologize to Bauer for her poor judgment of him.

"Oh, say, tell us about that incubator," said Clifford. "Must be a lot of money in a thing like that. I believe we could use some of 'em out here to good advantage, and make something for the Mission. There's a great demand for broilers at Flagstaff, and the Harvey eating houses would give us big money for any quantity of either eggs or young chickens. If we could only educate 'em to live on sand and cactus. Trouble is, feed is so high and we're so used to eating up everything, that there ain't anything left over from meals, to give to chickens. I suppose there ain't any way to fatten chickens without feeding 'em."

When Clifford spoke of Bauer's invention as a money-maker, Helen was reminded again of what she had almost forgotten, that Bauer had lost the largest part of his profits from the sale of the patent rights.

Walter had written home about Bauer's father returning a part of what he had stolen, and of Bauer's quiet acceptance of the event. Helen, as she caught the look on his face whenever he partly turned about to speak to those on the seat behind, could not help feeling a real interest in him—if only he were not so plain-looking, and so serious, and above all, so poor, and so destined to remain poor. No; she shut her eyes, opened them again, looked at Bauer pensively, shook her head as if in answer to a question, and then with a feeling of determination, turned her attention to the remarkable land through which the party was traveling.

The sky was cloudless. The heat was dry and penetrating, and as the forenoon wore away, everyone grew thirsty. The cloth-covered canteens were called for often. At noon the wagons drew together and camped for dinner. Two of the wagons were driven up side by side about ten feet apart, and the horses unhitched and hobbled. A spare canvas was drawn over the tops of the two wagons to make shade for the dinner party. Clifford, who acted as cook on camping-out occasions, dug a hole in the sand, filled it with dowegie roots and started his fire, and in what seemed an incredibly short time to the visitors from Milton, a hearty meal was ready. The Indians and their helpers squatted around on rugs within the circle, Mr. Masters asked grace in a delightful tone of genuine thanksgiving, and added a few words in Navajo in which Peshlekietsetti and the young Indians joined.

"This is what I call the real thing," said Paul, as he helped himself to his fourth sandwich and passed his cup for the third time for coffee.

"Yes, these are real sandwiches all right," said Clifford as he turned over some pancakes which were cooking on a flat stone. "Anyone else want a hot one made by the slab artist?"

Walter expressed a desire for one, and politely handed it over to Miss Gray. Clifford looked at him a moment, and then at Miss Gray, who was smiling her thanks.

"How's the batter?" he said to Walter.

"Good," said Walter, who seemed in unusual spirits. "It's equal to a home run with the bases all full."

"Do you think it needs to be any thicker?"

"No. It's thick enough," said Walter with his eyes on Miss Gray.

"Yes, what did I tell you," muttered Clifford to Bauer, when an hour later he and the German student were alone and out of ear-shot from the rest of the campers. Bauer had offered to help Clifford wash the dishes at a water-hole some hundred yards from the camp. "What did I tell you? It's just as I said. Miss Gray has 'em all going. Cowboys, Indian traders, missionaries, visitors, everybody. Now it's your friend Douglas. He's a goner so soon. You watch when the wagons load up if he don't manage to sit with Miss Gray. He's lost and there's no use sending out an expedition to find him. He doesn't want to be found. And the mystery of it is Miss Gray never tries. She just simply looks at you, and it's all over."

Bauer was amused and perplexed at Clifford's absolutely frank confidence. There was nothing flippant about it, either. It was the simple expression of a nature that had nothing to conceal. There was not even a hint of gossip about it, nor of ill-nature. In a land where there were no newspapers, telegraphs, telephones, railroads, or neighbors, it seemed like the expression of a confidence which had in it neither malice nor impertinent coarseness. And yet Bauer was puzzled to know what Clifford's real feeling was toward Miss Gray even after Clifford's own open statement made to him that day while they were sitting on the old cottonwood by the river.

When the party started on again after a two hours' rest, Clifford nudged Bauer to call attention to the fact that Walter and Miss Gray were in the back seat of the chuck wagon in front of them. But he never mentioned the matter again during the day, and until they reached the night camping place, he was alive with stories and information about the desert, the Indians, the habits of the horses, the work of the Mission, and the coming snake dance.

The place chosen for the first night's camp was the Red Stone Tanks. This consisted of a pool of tepid water and a few rocks, from the crevices of which a straggling fringe of desert cedars was trying to grow.

(To be continued.)

Share your happiness with others, but keep your troubles to yourself.—Patrick Flynn.

Church Life

RESIGNATIONS.

R. E. McKnight, Coalinga, Calif.
N. J. Nicholson, Moulton, Ia.

CALLS.

Lovell D. Hammond, Coshocton, O., to Independent Church, Buckland, O.

J. R. Fife, Fairmont, to Lisbon, Ind.

EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Melborne, Australia; C. R. Scoville and party, 1,300. Perth, Australia; 400.

Sapulpha, Okla.; Orcor Ingold; 112.

Geary, Okla.; J. E. Gorton; 17; continuing. W. G. Friend, pastor.

Campbellsburg, Ky.; Fife brothers; 40; continuing.

Lodoga, Ind.; W. T. Brooks; W. H. Newlin, pastor; continuing.

Wilson's Mills, N. C.; C. L. Organ; 63.

Winona, Minn.; The Hill and Ritchie Company; O. H. Loomis, pastor.

Salisbury, Md.; H. F. Lutz; 40; under direction of American Missionary Society.

Dr. H. O. Breeden's pastorate at Fresno, Calif., starts off with forty additions in two months.

Robert Graham Frank, pastor at Liberty, Mo., with his family is spending the vacation period in Virgina.

President R. H. Crossfield makes a wise diagnosis when he says that the need of the church "is not now so much a matter of making converts as of making converters."

Buenaventura P. Garcia, who has been appropriately styled the "prince of Filipino evangelists," is very ill, and it is doubtful, says Leslie Wolfe, that he will recover.

Professor Egbert R. Cockrell of Texas Christian University supplied the pulpit of First Church, El Paso, Tex., this summer during the absence of Pastor Perry J. Rice.

A contract has been let by Chesterfield Church, Des Moines, Ia., for a new house of worship to replace the one burned a year ago. The new house will be larger and more modern.

Percy M. Kendall, well-known evangelistic song leader, has accepted the position of musical director of Canton, O., church, and the Phillips Bible Institute, located at Canton.

The fund to establish a Moninger memorial chair at Bethany College has now reached the sum of $5,348.91. H. Newton Miller, of Ohio, has taken the field for the purpose of raising the full $25,000.

E. F. Daugherty, of Vincennes, Ind., is delivering a strong lecture on "The Tyranny of Truth" on the chautauqua platform this summer. At his boyhood home, Madison, Ind., the chautauqua people are planning for a large attendance for him on Aug. 16.

H. Elliott Ward, who for twenty years has been one of our most energetic and successful preachers in southern California, is planning to spend August, September and October in the east, mostly in Ohio, his native state. He has been pastor of a number of our prominent churches on the coast and has held many successful evangelistic meetings. He was secretary of the state board for five years.

Dean Martin L. Pierce, of Canton, Ohio, preached at Clearcreek in Ashland County, Sunday, Aug. 4. Several churches in northern and central Ohio are arranging to have pulpits filled with ministers who will be in attendance this year at the Phillips Bible Institute of Canton.

This department was misinformed as to the acceptance by C. C. Wilson, recently of Milwaukee, of a call to Ashtabula, O. Mr. Wilson is still in the country near Malvern, O., on vacation. He preached at Broad Street Church, Columbus, and at Alliance, O., on recent Sundays.

Reassuring word has been received as to the condition of Dr. T. P. Halley, who underwent an operation recently in Kansas City. He seems to be resting easily, although the nature of his affliction, a malignant growth, will prevent complete recovery, the doctors say.

The department of religious education of Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, has issued an illustrated booklet on Sunday-school work, also outlining the courses of study pursued in the department. The work of this department is attracting much attention. The booklet will be sent free to anyone interested.

At the close of "Preachers' Week" at Bethany Assembly in Indiana; a resolution was presented by G. I. Hoover of Tipton, expressing appreciation of the good program and pledging those present to work for a larger attendance next year. W. J. Lhamon, S. S. Lappin, R. P. Shepherd and Dean W. C. Morro were the lecturers for the week.

Enjoyable and Fruitful Supply Service.

J. K. Shellenberger, who has been supplying Magnolia Avenue pulpit during the six months' absence abroad of the pastor, J. P. McKnight, reports an active, harmonious and hospitable church, a delightful fellowship and some twenty accessions during his stay. He has not decided upon his permanent location after Mr. McKnight's return, Sept. 1.

Ten Years a Pastor's Assistant.

Miss Katherine E. Staub, who for ten years, has been pastoral helper in First Church, Canton, Ohio., of which P. H. Welsteiner is pastor, has been compelled to resign, owing to the continued illness of her mother. Miss Staub has been at home near Lancaster, N. Y., helping to take care of her mother since last March. Canton church releases her from its work with much regret.

Sunday-schools and American Missions.

The total offering of the Sunday-schools for American Missions from October 1, 1911, to July 31, 1912, amounts to $28,421.35. This is over $6,000 more than the Sunday-schools gave during the whole year of 1910-11 for this purpose. It is even more significant that 2,193 Bible schools have contributed, the largest number recorded in the history of the American Society, being a gain of eighty-one over the record, 2,112, of last year.

Old Church Regretfully Abandoned.

First Church, Wheeling, W. Va., is building a new house of worship. The last service in the old house, which has stood for thirty-seven years, was made the occasion by the pastor, W. H. Fields, of an impressive recital of the main events in the history of the Disciples with an interpretation of their plea for unity. At the close of the service a young man was ordained to the First Church for seven years.

(Continued on page 13.)

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison.

Mrs. Harrison will be glad to receive communications from any of her readers offering suggestions concerning woman's welfare, criticisms of articles or inquiries concerning any matters relevant to her department. She should be addressed directly at 530 Elm Tree Lane, Lexington, Ky.

THE AUGUST GARDEN

In our floral year we usually place May and June on a pinnacle—and well they deserve it!—and relegate August and September to an inferior plane.

It is true the rapture of bird song is lacking now, except at infrequent intervals. Those gallant little lovers—the brown thrush, the cat-bird, the mocking-bird, the oriole, that pound out their hearts in melodious measures at mating and nesting time, are now too full of the cares of family life to play the troubadour; the gaping little mouths must be fed, the prowling enemies must be watched and scared away. And the coming migration southward is already beginning to cast its shadow of responsibility over them and banishing the spirit of minstrelsy from their eloquent throats. But the wrens and the Kentucky cardinals that stay with us all the year still give us matin and vesper songs, and the blackbirds, the jaybirds, the sparrows, keep up a cheerful chatter.

No Race Suicide Among Birds.

If you are on intimate terms with your birds, as everyone should be who aspires to be a true gardener, mid-summer is the accepted time to see the young families introduced to the world. I watched an anxious father and mother wren teaching their little brood to fly in the grape arbor the other day, and seldom have seen a pleasanter sight; so intent were they on their hapy task that they paid no attention to their delighted spectator. First, they coaxed the little ones out of the box where their nest was, then beguiled them to short flights from branch to branch with encouraging chirps, which sounded like "sweet, sweet"—then to longer ascents until they finally flew to the roof of my neighbor's house and were formally launched on their own career in the great, wide world. In the past few weeks I have seen broods of young robins, flickers, jaybirds, and catbirds make their appearance in my yard, all fresh and glistening in their new plumage, and feel that there is no occasion for raising the alarm of race suicide among the birds.

The Charm of August.

But though this disparaged month is not a time of melody, yet it has its peculiar charm, like the proud seasons of iris and peonies and roses—and this August is the most perfect that I can remember. At this writing (the first week in the month) we have missed our usual mid-summer drought; the whole season has been one of alternate sun and shower, the grass is as green as in June, and every condition for perfect growth obtains. The "Woman's Page" garden is as rich in bloom and beauty now as when spring and early summer set their magic touch on it.

Generally at this time the sweet peas have passed before the fierce beams of the July sun, but the abundant rains and a favorable location on the eastern side of a grape trellis have given them the conditions they love, so we still gather a daily bowl to deck our house.

The season that has retarded the decay of the sweet peas has hastened the blooming of the dahlias; both the single and double varieties have been in full flower for two weeks, and they will continue to gladden us with their beauty till frost lays them low.

If you have not kept pace with the new varieties of dahlias, with their wonderful range of form and color, you have no conception of the possibilities that lurked in this once stiff and little-cultivated flower. No up-to-date garden is now complete without a generous number of them.

A Month of Lilies.

The mid-summer lilies are in their glory now. The queen of them all, the lilium auratum, looking like some rare exotic from the tropics in its sumptuous beauty, is in full bloom, and the rubrum and roseum varieties are still making glad the garden walks. The old-fashioned tiger lilies are passing, but a few still linger, and the August day lily is doing its best to distance all former records, though it is but the "lily of a day," opening its blossoms in the evening and fading and falling off before the sun is hot next day; yet in its brief life it is indeed "the plant and flower of light", both for beauty and fragrance. A bowl of them for the breakfast table, fringed with delicate ferns, is indeed a dish fit to set before a king. While the gladiolas and the canna are not exactly members of this elect class, yet they might be called near-lilies; they are adding their quota of stately beauty to our August garden.

Time of Year for Flowering Annuals.

Surely, this is the season of seasons for flowering annuals. The nasturtium, the petunia, the verbena, the zinnia, the mangold, are in perfect blossom; the red sage is at the zenith of its scarlet glory, and the pink and purple asters are not only beginning to show their welcome faces, but are bringing the promise of the great white ones that are yet to come.

And it has its distinctive hardy perennials, too. The hardy phlox make a feast of color in pink and red and white, the ageratum adds its rare shade of blue, and the golden glow, the artichoke, and the dwarf sunflower are like patches of golden sunshine along the fence rows. The crimson mallow is flowering with such unusual splendor that passers-by stop to ask about it. And the hardy hydrangea, without a peer among summer blooming shrubs, is weighed down with its heavy white blossoms.

The beloved baby of the family was in the garden today, and we decorated her little carriage with flowers till it looked like a triumphal chariot bearing our queen of hearts. While we were all flower worshipers, yet with one accord we proclaimed her the sweetest flower in the garden.

No Rest for the Gardener.

While August is a month of fruition, yet notes of preparation and practical work are not lacking. Keep your eye open for the aster bug, otherwise those superb blossoms you are looking forward to will be eaten up before they have unfolded their ebauties to your adoring gaze. As far as I know, there is no poison that has terrors for this shiny, black abomination. They thrive on insecticides and laugh Paris-green to scorn. Hand-picking is the only remedy. Of course, you have hardy chrysanthemums in your garden; give them attention now, breaking off feeble shoots, pinching imperfect buds, and tying the plants to stout stakes. The cosmos, most brittle of bushes, also needs support or you will fail to reap their delicately lovely flowers next month. I will not insult any gardener by advising her to keep her beds and walks free from weeds; that goes without saying.

And there is a little transplanting that is best done in August. The general rule is, always transplant when the plant is dormant. This is the rust period with peonies and candidum lilies. If you wish to divide the roots of these, or change their location, the next few weeks is the accepted time.

I. W. H.

Woman's Doings

—A local London tradesman, the windows of whose store were smashed in one of the suffragette riots, has been awarded $75 damages and costs. The suit was brought against Mr. and Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, joint editors of Votes for Women, and Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, as officers of the society which organized the disturbance. This was the first of a large number of suits which an insurance company has instituted against the defendants, and if the county court judge's decision be upheld by the higher court, the defendants will be mulcted in enormous damages.

—Senator La Follette's daughter, Fola, who recently married George Middleton, the playwright, is campaigning for female suffrage in Wisconsin. Mr. Middleton is at home taking care of the cats and other household accessories in addition to looking over some of his new plays. Somebody has to stay at home these days.

—Miss Salome Tarr of Jersey City, N. J., an eighteen-year-old girl, is some stenographer. From his own shorthand notes, Governor Wilson last week Tuesday, dictated his speech of acceptance of 6,500 words to this girl in less than one hour and a half. She has won half a dozen speed records in contests with the best shorthand writers in the country. At Buffalo last year Miss Tarr, in competition with fifty or more expert stenographers at the convention of the National Shorthand Writers' Association, made a record of 230 words a minute on court matter, and 190 words a minute on solid matter.

—Mrs. Thomas Marshall, the wife of Indiana's governor and democratic candidate for the vice-presidency, was formerly Miss Lois Kinsey, the daughter of the county clerk of Steuben county, Ind., and a clerk in her father's office. She met the future governor when he tried a number of cases in Steuben county.

—Mary Josephine Melvin, sixty-four years a resident of California and eighty-one years old, born in Ireland, tottered into a San Francisco court last week and filed her first papers to become a citizen. "I have lived to see the dawn of freedom for women throughout the world," she said, "and I want to vote before I die."

—A directory of the plutocrats of Hamburg, Bremen, and Lubeck, just published, shows that the fortune of Bertha Krupp von Bohlen, the richest woman in Germany, has increased in three years from $45,000,000 to $70,000,000.

—Miss Leonore Cawker has been appointed poundkeeper by the Milwaukee health department. She is said to have expressed a desire to have the post as a matter of personal assurance that dogs will be handled humanely. She has for years conducted at her own expense kennels where she has cared for stray dogs and cats.

Church Life

(Continued from page 11.)

County Churches Take Annual Outing.

The churches of Stark County, Ohio, held their annual outing at Meyers Lake, Canton, Friday, Aug. 2. All the churches of the county were represented. There were also several present from churches in adjacent counties. The chief address was delivered by Dean Martin L. Pierce, of the Phillips Bible Institute. He spoke on the "Social Value of the Plea of the Disciples." The address is said to have been of a high order and enthusiastically received by the audience that heard it.

A Wholesome Admonition.

F. N. Calvin, whose ministry in Warren, O., soon terminates, calls the attention of his congregation to the peculiarly beautiful union sentiment obtaining among all the churches of the city and urges the pastoral committee to be mindful of this fact in calling their new pastor. He says, "It would be exceedingly unfortunate should we get a narrow sectarian spirit in any of the pulpits of the city." This is surely a wholesome admonition. But it seems a pity that among ministers of the Disciples of Christ there could be any such danger as this.

Nebraska Preachers in Politics.

A number of Nebraska preachers are taking active part in political affairs. Chancellor Oeschger, of Cotner University, was a delegate in the Republican state convention from Lancaster county; H. J. Kirschstein of Omaha was in the progressive delegation that was seated from Douglas county; H. H. Harmon, of Lincoln, was a delegate to the Democratic convention at Grand Island. It will be hard for ministers to keep out of politics this year. The issues are of such profound ethical significance, bearing so directly upon human well-being and the Kingdom of God that the religious leader naturally feels like throwing his hat into the ring with all the other hats.

Southern California Likes Dr. Powell.

Dr. E. L. Powell of First Church, Louisville, captivated the Southern California convention held at Long Beach. He made an address each day of the convention. The report of Secretary Clubb showed that there are seventy-six Disciple churches in Southern California owning property valued at $1,040,000. The total membership of the churches is more than 16,000, an increase of 216 in the past year. The southern California churches gave $20,000 to foreign missions and raised $240,000 for all church purposes. Nine new churches have been built since the last report was made, and the treasury has a balance of $200.

Beautiful Church Building Damaged.

The property of Central Church, Des Moines, Ia., has been greatly damaged by the lowering of the level of the street on which it stands. A compensation for these damages was tentatively agreed upon before the work was begun, but the cost of putting the house in good condition, it is now seen, will be much greater than was at first estimated. An adjustment can be made only by taking the matter into court. Meantime, temporary approaches have had to be built across the open moat in front of the church building. Much inconvenience has been endured by the congregation during the long-drawn-out period of excavation and repaving.

Vital Sermon on Borrowing.

George Darsie preached in his Terre Haute, Ind., pulpit recently on "Personal Religion," from the parable of the ten virgins, five of whom wished to borrow oil from the five who were already prepared. "Oil here represents religion, and the great point to be noted is that religion is a personal thing. One must have his own. He cannot lend to another. As one cannot have a physical disease for another, neither can a man have religion for another. Each must have his own. He must go to them that sell and buy for himself. He must believe for himself, repent for himself, obey for himself. He must do all his own giving, living, toiling, fighting, and wrestling. He must work out his own salvation with fear and trembling."

Franklin Circle Church Flourishing.

The Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, O., W. F. Rothenburger, pastor, has just closed a contract with Miss Jennie Jenkinson, of Bellefontaine, O., to serve as pastor's assistant for the next year, to begin in September. The celebration of the seventieth anniversary of the establishment of the church will take place in the fall, with a program in keeping with the occasion. The church will emphasize evangelism at the evening services during the year. During the pastor's vacation the pulpit is being supplied by the following: A. J. Williamson, of Columbus; A. E. Dubber, of Bedford, Ind.; Frank Brown, of Warren, Ohio, and it is hoped that Edgar D. Jones, a former pastor, will also preach. There were ten additions during the month.

Kansas City Edifice to be Completed.

Just before leaving for his vacation which he is spending in a long lake trip extending through the St. Lawrence River to Quebec in company with his son, L. J. Marshall told his congregation at Wabash Avenue, Kansas City, that Mr. R. A. Long had volunteered a gift of $5,000 toward the cost of building the church superstructure. The condition Mr. Long imposes is that an additional $5,000 be raised among people not directly identified with the congregation. "We can meet that requirement," said Dr. R. M. Seibel, chairman of the official board, "and we will get busy at once." The congregation of Wabash Avenue Church numbers 700, of which 500 are active in the work of the church. Services have been held in the basement for the past two years. It is proposed to build a superstructure to cost about $50,000.

Faithful and Telling Service.

C. G. Brelos has resigned his work with the Galveston, Tex., church, where he has ministered for three and a half years. The work there has been a hard struggle, and has grown very little, but Mr. Brelos has strengthened the cause by identifying himself and his people with the strongest religious element of the city, being found in the van of every aggressive movement that tended to the uplift of the community. Besides being indefatigable about the work of his own church, he was prominent in the councils of the ministerial association, active in the Sunday-school work of the county, and took a deep interest in whatever tended to the betterment of religious conditions in Galveston. Mr. Brelos has been in an evangelistic meeting with the church at Arcadia, and will, it is understood, give them a part of his time as pastor.

Untoward Incident Turned to Good Account.

J. Walter Reynolds, pastor First Church, Macon, Ga., was recently arraigned in police court charged with violating the speed limit with his automobile. He was declared not guilty. The newspapers having made something of a sensation of his arraignment, the pastor chose as his pulpit theme on the following Sunday night, "Exceeding the Speed Limit." He began by heartily exonerating the police for their part in his own experience, saying that he had no grievance whatever. "I try to obey all laws and I think that the law which limits the speed of automobiles to fifteen miles an hour is a just law and should be enforced." Mr. Reynolds then led his hearers into the ethical sphere where wholesome limits have been placed by society and conscience, and declared that these limits are being wantonly exceeded by modern men and women. He dealt with gambling, intemperance, and social vice. He invaded the field of amusements and attacked the looseness of life indulged by many at summer resorts. It is a fast age in which we live, he said. "The time has come to put on the brakes and slow down." This was turning an untoward incident to good account.

Northern California Secretary Reports Gains.

The annual report of the state board of northern California, presented at the Santa Cruz convention by Secretary Geo. T. Meeker, showed that there are 83 churches in northern California, with an aggregate membership of about 12,000. The secretary held three meetings, one at Santa Clara, one at Pacific Grove and one at Galt. About $5,785 passed through the secretary's hands. Fifty-six churches reported 828 baptisms and 1,076 otherwise added. During the year four new houses of worship were erected, and some four others will soon be built. The mission church at Coalinga, R. E. McKnight, pastor, reported money in the bank for a new building. During the year the state board assisted eight churches in all; about $1,000 was spent in improvements on the Tabernacle at Garfield Park, and Secretary Meeker saved two valuable pieces of church property to the church Secretary Meeker's report showed that there are twenty-five county seats in California which have no churches of Disciples. There are twenty-two whole counties in which the Disciples have no congregation. The convention was greatly impressed with the magnitude of the unoccupied field, since there are only fifty-eight counties in the state. It was proposed to raise $6,000 next year for evangelistic purposes.

A Layman to His Departing Pastor.

At the departure of Dr. Willis A. Parker from the church at Everett, Mass., to accept the professorship of philosophy in Pomona College, Calif., the congregation gave a reception for him which was largely attended. Among other interesting features of the reception was an address to the retiring pastor by Mr. R. H. Bolton, a Boston lawyer who resides in Everett and is connected with the church. He expressed on behalf of the congregation its appreciation of the pastor's singular "felicity and aptness of speech, suited to each occasion," and declared that "the church had been very proud of its representative whenever you have been called upon to address other gatherings in the city. We have heartily enjoyed your good-fellowship and joviality, and those of us who have been in bereavement or perplexity have found in you a warm-hearted and helpful friend." It was, however, as a teacher that Dr. Parker was most appreciated, said the parishioner. "You have taught us something of the largeness of the religious life. We have often heard that Christianity is larger than churchianity, so-called, but the meaning of that idea you have impressed upon us with much directness and particularity. Many of your members have imbibed your marked enthusiasm for social betterment, which reaches far beyond the usual routine of church work; and with it a higher estimate of the real importance of the church as, at least potentially, the chief agency through which genuine social betterment may be promoted." An observation of a general nature occurring in the body of Mr. Bolton's address is so clear and pertinent that we reproduce it also: "There is a maxim of much apparent wisdom, that a minister should keep his doubts in his study. And it is a wise rule so long as his departure from the accepted views amounts ony to doubts. But what if it amounts to positive, clearly defined convictions? Can he keep his convictions in his study? I do not see how that is possible if he be honest."

American Mission Notes

Frank Maples, pastor of South Side Church, Billings, Mont., writes: "We have broken ground for our new chuch, and will be ready for dedication about the first of October."

John A. Stevens, Baton Rouge, La., gives notice: "We will be ready for dedication September 1st. Our location is the best in this city, and we will have the finest church accommodations for the people."

"The American Mission problem grows on me, and at times appalls me;" so writes Lowell C. McPherson, New England evangelist.

The Harrisburg (Penna.) Church, which has been passing through troubled waters, is now prospering greatly under the wise leadership of F. J. Stinson. The opposition mission, recently organized, has voluntarily disbanded, and the members returned to the fold of the mother church. Receipts for the month were $391.58. The pastor writes: "Most of our debts are paid until October 1st, when we expect to reduce the indebtedness against the building. Twenty-one have been receivd into fellowship since May 1." Such news fill be heart-ease to many friends of our work at the capital of Pennsylvania.

Albert T. Fitts has increased the Sunday-school at Kingsville, Texas, in the past few weeks, from 34 to 5, secured pledges amounting to $435 for the beginning of a new church, and the donation of two lots valued at $860. We will hear of a new church being erected there soon.

Good news comes from the Southeastern and Southwestern Passenger Associations, relative to the Louisville Convention. One fare and a third will be granted delegates, and by depositing tickets and on payment of one dollar, extension of time for returning home will be given to November 11th, 1912. Such concession by the railroads will give large numbers of people, who once lived in Kentucky or adjacent states, the opportunity to visit friends and attend the convention.

Total receipts to the home board for July show an increase of $1422.29, but in the number of contributing churches there is a loss of 16 over the same period last year. Brethren! only six weeks remain in which contributions to American Missions can be counted this year. Our books close September 30th. Please see to it that offerings from every church, Sunday-school, Endeavor Society, Ladies' Aid and individual be forwarded promptly. If we are to make gains over last year and meet the obligations of the society, all must have fellowship in this important enterprise.

I. N. McCash, Secretary.

Foreign Society's Receipts

The receipts of the Foreign Society for the month of July ran up to $46,643.03, a gain of $17,492.15. The Sunday-schools were the chief givers. Their offerings reached the splendid sum of $26,805.33, a agin over the corresponding month one year ago of $10,-302.81. The number of schools contributing was 1197, a gain of 290. The individual gifts reached $7,164.55, a gain of $3,650.83. The churches, as churches, gave $7,359.01, a gain of $1,160.53. The annuity gifts amounted to $4.650, a gain of $2,452. Altogether, it was a good month.

Ten months of the missionary year had passed when these figures were made up. For the ten months the total receipts amounted to $242,312.02, a gain of $4,292.-84. The gain in the general fund amounted to $18,507.54. The loss in annuity receipts is $14,875.97.

We have only two more months before the books close for the year. We believe the friends will make it a great month. Last year the receipts in September amounted to $109,755.39. It was the geratest month in the history of the Foreign Society. We are hoping for still gerater things during September this year. By all means let us put our hearts and purses together and make a creditable gain. It would be great if we could show a gain from every source of receipts at the close of the year. A good report always insures an enthusiastic national convention. A good report will cheer the loyal missionary friends and pelase our Lord who expects us t do more in sounding his word to the lost.

A. McLean, President.
S. J. Corey, Secretary.

Illinois

Rockford Church, W. B. Clemmer, pastor, has adopted plans for a new house of worship.

Hurst Church is being assisted in an evangelistic campaign by J. E. Stout and son.

An evangelistic meeting will be held at Adrian in October. Evangelists Bloom and Warren will conduct it.

Evangelist E. E. Violett concluded a brief revival meeting at Grayville in which there were 33 additions. The pastor is W. H. Kern.

"He drives the truth clear through and clinches it on the other side," says a local newspaper of Charles W. Ross, pastor at Litchfield.

Solicitation of funds for a new church at Mason City has begun. The new structure will be erected upon the location of the old building.

Elkville is to be led in revival services this month by John B. Dickson, who has recently become secretary and treasurer of the eighth district.

Allenville Church observed its annual basket meeting recently. Major Griffiths is pastor. He was assisted in the services by several from near-by towns.

The county Sunday-school picnic held at Sullivan recently was addressed by H. H. Peters of Eureka on "Seven Essentials of a Successful Bible-school."

I. W. Lohman of Granite City Church ordained to the ministry Elmore E. Turner, whose home is in St. Louis. The service was held in Granite City Church.

The officers of the seventh and eighth districts are considering a joint offort whereby two evangelists will be put to work continuously in these districts.

Lovington Church of which Gilbert Jones is pastor will have the leadership of Evangelists Sword and Kay in a revival meeting beginning near the first of September.

J. W. Larimore, who resides in Springfield and has been preaching at Riverton, has resigned his ministry, which has lasted through a period of three years. Mr. Larimore has not decided where his next pastorate will be.

Dr. Barton O. Aylesworth, pastor of Chandlerville Church, was a delegate from Cass County to the state progressive party convention in Chicago. In addition to the honor of presenting the successful candidate for governor, Mr. Frank Funk, to the convention, he was elected one of Illinois' delegates to the national convention held two days later.

The state convention date is September 2-5. It will be held at Centralia. The hospitality of the church there should be enjoyed by many, and large numbers should assemble to acquaint themselves with Illinois' needs and plan for the kingdom's promotion through the entire commonwealth. Note the program appearing elsewhere, and send pastor A. L. Huff a card to notify him of your coming. Lodging and breakfast will be furnished for seventy-five cents. Other meals at popular prices.

Program of Illinois State Convention

Centralia, September 2-5, 1912.

Monday evening—Devotional, Mrs. Minnie

Bible College
OF MISSOURI

LOCATION: At Columbia, within 30 miles of the center of the State.
Just across the street from the main building of the State University.

EQUIPMENT: Plant worth $50,000, with an endowment of $150,000; three full paid professors who devote their whole time to teaching Biblical and religious subjects.
Full access to all the academic advantages of the State University with its plant worth $3,250,000, an annual income of over $600,000, and with over 200 teachers.

OWNERSHIP: The Bible College belongs to the Christian Church. The State University belongs to the citizenship of Missouri.

TUITIONS: Bible College: Free.
University: Free to Missourians. Students from other States, $20 per year.

PURPOSE OF BIBLE COLLEGE:
To train students for the Christian ministry, missionary work, and social service.
To supply Biblical and religious instruction to students of the State University.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS:
A young institution, but already has eight of its students on the foreign field, two more sail this month, and another is under appointment to go next year.
Has sent out more than 50 preachers to home churches.
Has instructed hundreds of University students.

EDUCATIONAL STANDING:
Interchange of credits with the State University.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES FOR MINISTERIAL STUDENTS:
Intimate contact with instructors and fellow students in the college family.
Close association with students of Journalism, Law, Medicine, Agriculture, etc., in the State University.
Remarkable opportunities for self help. 150 churches within easy reach of Columbia, are able to supply.
eight trains in and out daily.

For catalogue or further information, write
G. D. EDWARDS, Acting Dean, Columbia, Mo.

M. Dailey, Olney; address, Miss Florence Miller, Indianapolis, Ind.

Tuesday morning—Devotional, Miss Mary Cardinal, Petersburg; reports of young people's department, Miss Effie Gaddis, Griggsville; treasurer, Miss Henrietta Clark, Jacksonville; corresponding secretary, Miss Lura V. Thompson, Carthage; president, Mrs. Carrie F. Zeller, Petersburg. Reports of committees: Nominating, watchword and aim, literature, resolutions; missionary social unions, Mrs. Anna Colegrove, Taylorville.

Tuesday afternoon—Devotional, Miss Lura V. Thompson; address, "Our Work Among the Colored People," Mrs. A. T. Ross, Eureka; address, "Chicago Russians," Basil S. Keusseff, Chicago.

Tuesday evening—Song, scripture and prayer; president's address, Silas Jones, Eureka; secretary's message, J. Fred Jones, Bloomington; appointment of committees.

Wednesday morning—Prayer; "The Vision and the Task," Austin Hunter, Chicago; "The Cost of Inefficiency," Joel T. Davis, St. Joseph; "The Challenge of the Church to the Men of Our Times," E. W. Allen, Decatur; meditation and prayer, C. W. Marlow, Flora; "The Buried Beatitude," W. W. Denham, Carthage; platform meeting—introduction of state workers, J. Fred Jones.

EDUCATIONAL SECTION.

Wednesday afternoon—Devotional service; "A Graded Bible-school at Work," Miss Lillie Farris, Cincinnati, O.; "Holding the Big Boy," Clyde Darsie, Jacksonville; "Equipment for Christian Service," Chas. W. Ross, Litchfield; "The Old Bible Ways," J. H. Bryan, Kansas City, Mo.; discussion led by Clarence L. De Pew, Jacksonville; Bible-school luncheon.

Wednesday evening—Devotional; "Strengthening Our Bible-school Work," Hugh Cork, general secretary Illinois Sunday-school Association, Chicago; Front Rank Recognition Service, Clarence L. De Pew; "The Church College and the Educational Situation," President Underwood, Eureka College.

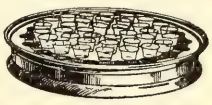
Thursday morning—Conference with district officers and ministers; "The Scriptural Administration of the Church Life," I. J. Spencer, Lexington, Ky.; "The True Mission of the I. C. M. S.," W. W. Weedon, Mt. Carmel; Meditation and Prayer, Meade E. Dutt, East St. Louis; reports of state officers: J. Fred Jones, field secretary; W. D. Deweese, office secretary and treasurer; J. P. Darst, treasurer permanent fund and students' aid fund; Clarence L. De Pew, Bible-school superintendent; Nellis H. Crain, assistant to Bible-school superintendent; business session.

Thursday afternoon—Prospectus: "The History of the Disciples of Christ in Illinois," N. S. Haynes, Decatur; "In Memoriam," J. H. Smart, Decatur; "The Christian Benevolence," Fred Kline, Illiopolis; "American Missions," I. N. McCash, Cincinnati, O.; song service, W. E. M. Hackleman, Indianapolis, Ind.; "Christian Statesmanship," L. O. Lehman, Gibson City.

BROTHERHOOD HOUR.

Address, E. E. Elliott, national secretary, Kansas City, Mo.; conference conducted by J. A. Barnett, chairman State Brotherhood Committee, Galesburg; brotherhood luncheon.

Thursday evening—Song service, W. E. M. Hackleman; meditation; "Enriching the Church Life," Edgar DeWitt Jones, Bloomington; prayer and song; address, "Church Life and Efficiency," I. J. Spencer.



THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
OUR SPECIAL SELF-COLLECTING Cushioned Tray has no equal. NOISELESS, DUST PROOF, INTERLOCKING. Best for pew or altar communion. Uses short, shallow cup, glass or aluminum (indestructible) no tipping of head. Saves ONE-FOURTH cost other services. Over 12,000 churches use. Send for catalog and "Special Introductory Offer." Thomas Communion Service Co., Box 120 Lima, Ohio

How About Attending College This Year?

We want the name of every young man and every young woman who is considering this most important question. We believe we can show them that

DRAKE UNIVERSITY

Offers Great Advantages

It is located in the best residence district in Des Moines—the best city in the West. Surroundings clean and wholesome. Good influences surround the boy or girl who attends Drake University.

Courses of Study: Liberal Arts (including Courses for Primary, Kindergarten, Grade and High School Teachers and Students in Domestic Science), Law, Medicine, Dentistry, Bible, Music, Painting and Drawing, Dramatic Art, Etc. Thoroughly prepared teachers in all departments. The best of equipment. The Drake Stadium, one of the finest athletic fields in the country.

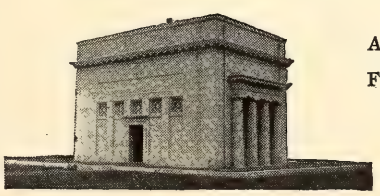
Write for catalogue and full particulars. Any question you may desire to ask will be answered cheerfully.

HILL M. BELL, President,

Drake University. Des Moines, Iowa

This is Where The Lincoln Cabin Rests In "My Old Kentucky Home"



The Lincoln Memorial near Hogdenville, Ky.

And Thousands are Going to Visit This Famous Spot While in Attendance at the Great

International Convention of the Disciples of Christ

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, OCTOBER 15 - 22

Write me for full particulars as to all the side trips and "Meet us in our Old Kentucky Home."

Geo. H. Jones, Secretary, Care First Christian Church, Louisville, Ky.

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL — Sweet Tone, Far Sounding, Durable. Catalogue Free. AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

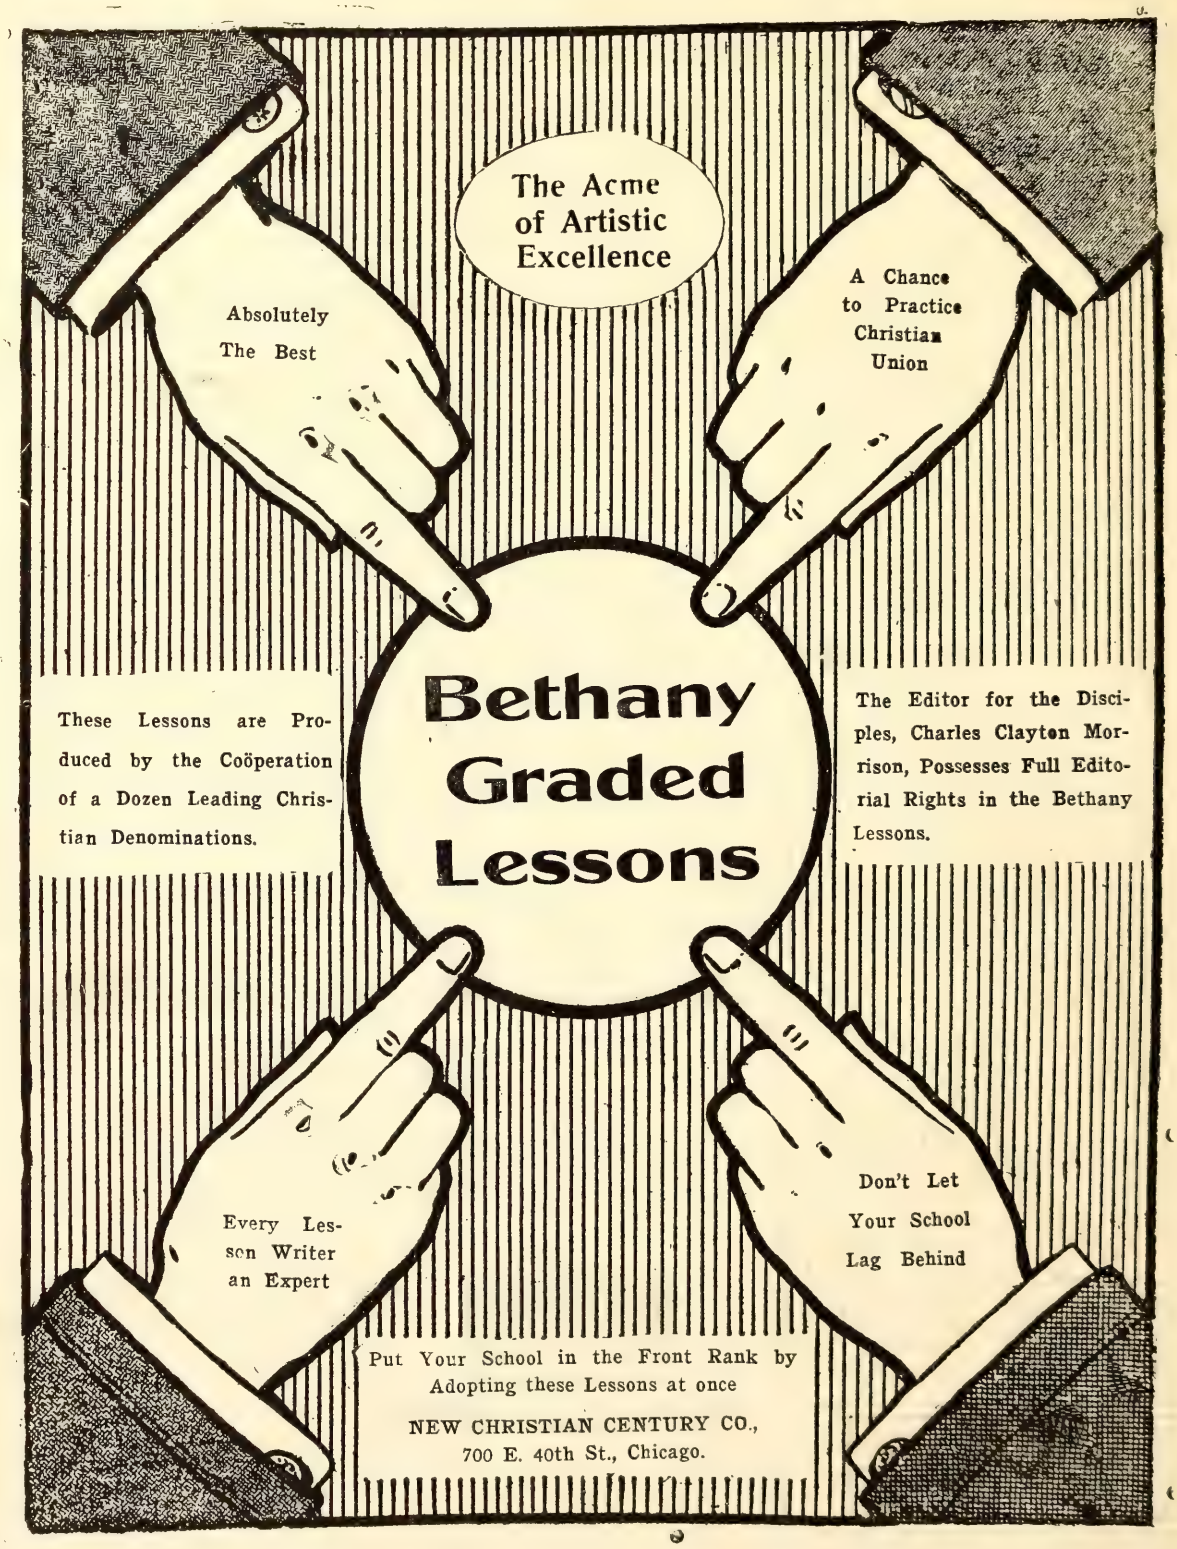
CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 27
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.

NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business

FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet

THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.
1109 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, U. S. A.



The Acme of Artistic Excellence
Absolutely The Best
A Chance to Practice Christian Union
Bethany Graded Lessons
These Lessons are Produced by the Coöperation of a Dozen Leading Christian Denominations.
The Editor for the Disciples, Charles Clayton Morrison, Possesses Full Editorial Rights in the Bethany Lessons.
Every Lesson Writer an Expert
Don't Let Your School Lag Behind
Put Your School in the Front Rank by Adopting these Lessons at once
NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.,
700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Presidential Number

WILSON'S DECLARATIONS.

Trusts fostered by tariff fix prices, set aside economic laws and look upon government as legitimate source of special privileges.

Powerful minorities, political and industrial, have taken upon themselves the function of judging what the people shall do.

Necessities of life advance in price in disproportionate degree relative to increases in earnings of the people.

Resources of nation squandered through spendthrift policy regarding natural resources.

Sherman anti-trust law declared to "roar like any sucking dove" against evils of industrial combinations.

Mere "bigness" of business should not be attacked by law, when such business is not upheld by special favors granted by government through tariff or other legislation.

Civil and criminal statutes should define clearly business practices which are unjust and productive of oppressive conditions.

"Confederacies" of capital, loose organizations which touch banking, manufacture and transportation, are at present unregulated by law, but should be regulated.

Tariff should be revised not so as to disturb legitimate business but by a nonpartisan commission seeking to get facts and reduce duties which have built up oppressive combinations of capital.

Legislation improving conditions of labor should be enacted and should not be considered as class legislation.

Tendency of arraying class against class disappearing and chance has arisen to apply principles of justice and rght through government toward capital and labor alike.

Energetic building of Panama Canal gives promise of better things for American merchant marine, which is now grossly inadequate.

ROOSEVELT'S POLITICAL CREED.

Direct presidential primaries.

Election of United States senators by popular vote.

A short ballot.

Comprehensive corrupt practices act.

Publicity of campaign contributions, to be obtained during contest.

Initiative, referendum and recall in the states.

Recall of judicial decisions of both state and federal courts.

An eight-hour day for women workers.

Minimum wage commissions.

Woman suffrage.

Workmen's compensation.

Improvement of farm conditions.

Government control of big business without its elimination.

Placing industrial conditions within the scope of government action and control.

Industrial commissions to aid in handling the trust problem.

Prevention of human waste.

A six-day working week and an eight-hour day in continuous industries.

Child labor reforms.

Adaptation of the German system of old-age pensions and insurance.

Standardization of mine and factory inspection.

Government aid to help industrial tool users to become tool owners.

Prohibition of night labor for women and children.

Measures to relieve the high cost of living, including elimination of middlemen, regulation of speculation, assisttance to the farmer by the government, improved business methods.

Revision of the tariff by a permanent nonpartisan commission.

Equal treatment of deep water vessels of all nations, including those of the United States, in the Panama Canal.

(SEE PAGE 4)

Vol. XXIX. August 22, 1912 No. 34

Topics of the Times

The sun has been smiling down upon fields of grain and crops of various kinds well watered by many rains this summer, and now the mid-August predictions are that we are going to have this year more than a billion and a half bushels of food and fodder crops than we had last year. That portion of the agricultural department not taken up with politics has been doing some figuring with the following results: The country's corn crop, estimated at 2,811,000,000 bushels, will be the largest in the nation's history, with the exception of the years 1906 and 1910, the former being the banner year, with 2,927,000,000 bushels. As for the wheat crop, estimated at 680,000,000 bushels, that will rank fifth in size during the past twenty years. The oats crop will be the largest the country has gathered, surpassing by 21,000,000 bushels that of 1910, the previous record. In barley, too, this year will establish a new record, the estimated yield of 202,000,000 being 24,000,000 bushels greater than that of 1906, the previous best year. The yield of rye, 35,000,000 bushels, will equal that of 1910, the former record year. Of potatoes, which will amount this year to 371,000,000 bushels, only 1909, with its 389,000,000 bushels, produced a larger yield. The hay crop is estimated at 73,000,000 tons, the largest ever grown in the United States, and compares with 47,444,000 tons produced last year. If this advance prediction from Uncle Sam's dope book comes out at the right place, on Thanksgiving day the country at large, regardless of early November election results, will have cause to offer a gigantic thank you.

There is another beef inquiry on in Chicago. The Department of Commerce and Labor at Washinton have sent out their agents who have begun an exhaustive study of the conditions in the Chicago cattle market with a view of solving the impending problem in the shortage of beef cattle. The principal issue facing the investigators is how the law of supply and demand works in the cattle market. The agents will gather information of current receipts to determine whether the world's record of $10.40 per hundred pounds for beef on the hoof recently paid at the local yards is justified by the supply. Stockyards men say this is the first acknowledgment of the government of the influence of the law of supply and demand in the beef market and hail this new step of the Department of Commerce and Labor as one in the right direction.

The New York committee appointed to investigate the cost of living, reports that the annual food supply of the Greater New York costs at the transportation terminals $350,000,000 or over, and that it costs in the consumers' kitchens $500,000,000 or over. Testimony taken at the hearings, the committee thinks, shows that this addition of about 45 per cent to the price is chiefly made by cost of handling and not by profits. In fact, the evidence showed that the smaller retailers are barely making wages, the corner groceries being generally a mere means of gaining a family livelihood. The suggested substitution of large unit retail stores capable of supplying 25,000 to 50,000 people, each equipped with cold and general storage facilities, would, the committee finds, bring about a system of food distribution at a cost of 15 per cent without delivery and 20 per cent with delivery, as against a cost of 25 to 30 per cent for the present separate wholesale and retail systems without delivery, and a cost of 35 to 40 per cent with delivery. By the establishment of large central markets, the committee estimates that a saving of $60,000,000 a year, or 12 per cent on present prices, would be effected.

Its high standards and efficient service has won the good will of thousands

Parents, our attractive offer makes the education of your daughter possible.

William Woods College

Girls, our college features make going to school delightful — you should come.

FULTON, MO. The Successful School for Young Women 23rd YEAR

Accredited thorough courses. Choice faculty. European trained teachers in Music and Expression. Department of Modern Languages under Fraulein Luise Bucher, from Munich, Germany. Unusual advantages in Art, Domestic Science, etc. Buildings modern and equipped. Beautiful shaded campus of ample proportions; situation high and salubrious. Gymnasium—outdoor sports. Cultured, happy home school life. Attractive features of the best colleges. The more you learn about W. W. C. the more you will want to come.

School open for reservation of rooms. Fall Semester begins September 18

Write for full information. Address President Joseph L. Garvin, Desk "Y."

1869 — HAMILTON COLLEGE FOR WOMEN — 1912

LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.

HUBERT GIBSON SHEARIN, A. M., Ph. D. (Yale), President.

Standardized Junior College courses under a faculty of twenty-nine, all graduates of leading American and European institutions. Faculty of seven for Music, Expression and Art.

Five modern buildings. Complete gymnasium, laboratories and libraries. Home care. Delightful dormitories. Cultural surroundings and scholarly ideals.

The forty-fourth session begins September 9, 1911. For catalogue address THE SECRETARY.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

An Up-to-Date College for Young Women
CAMDEN POINT, MISSOURI

COURSES:
College Preparatory Bible
Normal, Music
Elocution
Physical Culture

COMMODIOUS BUILDING:
New Addition to Building
New Gymnasium
Steam Heated, Acetylene Lighted, Large Campus

TUITION REASONABLE AND RIGHT—SEND FOR CATALOGUE

Sixty-fourth Year Opens in September FRANK G. RICHARD, President

An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women SIXTY-SECOND YEAR

Christian College

Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $36,000 building, completed. 25 College-trained, experienced teachers. Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior college course leads to an A. B. degree. College-preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character-training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field. Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern colleges. For illustrated catalogue address

MRS. LUELLA W. ST. CLAIR-MOSS, President, COLUMBIA, MO.

Next Session begins September 17th.

How About Attending College This Year?

We want the name of every young man and every young woman who is considering this most important question. We believe we can show them that

DRAKE UNIVERSITY

Offers Great Advantages

It is located in the best residence district in Des Moines—the best city in the West. Surroundings clean and wholesome. Good influences surround the boy or girl who attends Drake University.

Courses of Study: Liberal Arts (including Courses for Primary, Kindergarten, Grade and High School Teachers and Students in Domestic Science), Law, Medicine, Dentistry, Bible, Music, Painting and Drawing, Dramatic Art, Etc. Thoroughly prepared teachers in all departments. The best of equipment. The Drake Stadium, one of the finest athletic fields in the country.

Write for catalogue and full particulars. Any question you may desire to ask will be answered cheerfully.

HILL M. BELL, President,

Drake University. Des Moines, Iowa

The Christian Century

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT . . . . . EDITORS

Making Religion Untechnical

THE PERSONAL RELIGION OF JESUS was the simplest thing in the world. It could be expressed in small words, the common words of daily experience. No technical vocabulary was needed to transmit it. No subtle doctrines were requisite to the faithful practice of it. No elaborate organization was needed to furnish a channel for it. The child was the embodiment and best illustration of it, and a pure heart was the simple condition of its chiefest blessing.

For centuries, however, the religion that goes with Christ's name has been inextricably connected with long words, hard doctrines and a close-knit organization. The assumption prevails that Christianity cannot be expressed in any save these hard terms of historic theology and that the divine grace is limited to the channels of the conventional organization. Therefore many there are who call themselves unbelievers or agnostics who have the root of faith in them, simply because they do not find themselves able to use the accepted vocabulary of religion. This is a sad fact and accounts for the separation of many genuine Christian-minded people from the church. To them, we speak a foreign language. To us, they speak only in "secular" speech.

And all the time their real meanings may be identical with Christ's meaning and with our own. Still we insist that "shibboleth" must not be pronounced "sibboleth," and the penalty for speaking it that way is not altogether unlike that meted out to the luckless Ephraimites of old.

After all, our unity among ourselves and with others must be found on the basis of common meanings not on a common vocabulary. No formula of the creeds, nor even of the New Testament, taken simply as a formula, is a guarantee of agreement even when all subscribe to it. It is a costly mistake to try to run religious thought and life into any fixed mould of words. The world has lost immeasurably just because the words of Scripture, especially Paul's words, have been crystallized into a technical norm for the expression of all Christian experience. The holy Scriptures are the highest and richest formulation of Christian experience that the world contains, but they are used at the best purpose not simply when they are learned by memory, but when they are allowed to fertilize the mind so that it can bring forth from its own treasury new words, new formulas, original interpretations of the capacious life within the soul.

Christian vocabulary has not yet reached its limit. The "sound words" which the authorized version makes Paul exhort Timothy to "hold fast" are correctly rendered "sound teaching" in the modern translation. Paul never dreamed that from his letters would be extracted the normative vocabulary of Christian theology. He was engaged at the task of emancipating Jewish Christians from Judaism, and the technique of his thinking was conditioned by this concrete problem. He must offer Christianity to the Jew in such terms that it will mean truth to him, that it will satisfy the questions his Jewish heart is concerned with. Under other circumstances we find Paul using a different form of speech, a different argument, as when he faced a non-Jewish audience at Athens.

In John's gospel the typical concepts of Paul do not occur. John seems to be viewing Christ's life from the standpoint of eternity. He is, therefore, less technical, more universal, in his concepts and vocabulary. He uses the great-big little words, such as "life," "light," "spirit," "truth," "death," "see," "know," with unique frequency and richness. The Pauline concepts of "justification," "redemption," "Adamic sin," "adoption," "righteousness by faith versus righteousness by law," "the covenants," and such like do not appear in his gospel.

Christianity has been unfortunately limited and even distorted by the fact that for centuries theologians have gone to Paul's writings almost exclusively for the stuff out of which their systems have been made. The assumption has prevailed that the problem Paul faced is a perennial problem, persisting ever in the same form, and therefore solvable by the same arguments he used. But this is not so. To men of modern times religion knows no such problem as apostolic Judaism present. To force the vocabulary of Paul's argument upon us is, therefore, not only to weight religion down with irrelevances and to make it difficult and unreal, but to miss the essential meaning of Paul's words.

We are not for a moment suggesting that Paul's argument is not true. It was not only true, but masterfully true. It is ours, however, not to copy his vocabulary merely, or his concepts, but, discerning his point of vision, and catching his spirit, to turn our faces toward our problems, as he met his.

This way of looking at religion makes it a broader, more real and simpler matter than we usually assume. It is not a form of words that we are to learn, but a spirit, an attitude, a temper with respect to our life that it is important for us to adopt. A gentleman was the other day describing a new acquaintance he had just made. "He is a most interesting man and we talked until midnight," he said. "Did you talk about religion?" he was asked. "No, I don't think he knows much about religion; we talked about life," was the reply. What a pity! What a pity that religion has been separated by its technical vocabulary from the realities of life so that intelligent men, responsive to the great interests of life, do not know that true life and religion are one.

This, at least, is what Jesus said he came to do for men, not to found a new religion, nor to teach a new form of words, nor to establish a more effective organization, but simply to give "life more abundantly."

The Struggle for the Presidency

Presidents Taft's Defense

Tells What the Party Has Achieved and What His Administration Has Done.

In his speech of acceptance, President Taft earnestly defended his Republican party, and set forth the accomplishments of his administration. This part of his address appears below:

By the victory at Chicago, the Republican party was saved for future usefulness. It has been the party through which substantially all the progress and development in our country's history in the last fifty years has been finally effected. It carried the country through the war which saved the Union, and through the greenback and silver crazes to a sound gold basis, which saved the country's honor and credit. It fought the Spanish war and successfully solved the new problems of our island possessions. It met the incidental evils of the enormous trade expansion and extended combinations of capital from 1897 until now by a successful crusade against the attempt of concentrated wealth to control the country's politics and its trade. It enacted regulatory legislation to make the railroads the servants and not the masters of the people. It has enforced the anti-trust laws until those who were not content with anything but monopolistic control of various branches of industry are now acquiescent in any plan which shall give them scope for legitimate expansion and assure them immunity from reckless prosecution.

Alive to Modern Change.

The Republican party has been alive to the modern change in the view of the duty of government toward the people. Time was when the least government was thought the best, and the policy which left all to the individual, unmolested and unaided by government, was deemed the wisest. Now the duty of government by positive law to further equality of opportunity in respect of the weaker classes in their dealings with the stronger and more powerful is clearly recognized. It is in this direction that real progress toward the greater human happiness is being made. It has been suggested that under our constitution such tendency to so-called paternalism was impossible. Nothing is further from the fact. The power of the federal government to tax and expend for the general welfare has long been exercised, and the admiration one feels for our constitution is increased when we perceive how readily that instrument lends itself to wider governmental functions in the promotion of the comfort of the people.

List of Good Deeds.

The list of legislative enactments for the uplifting of those of our people suffering a disadvantage in their social and economic relation to others enacted by the Republican party in this and previous administrations is a long one, and shows the party sensitive to the needs of the people under the new view of governmental responsibility. Thus there was the pure food law and the meat inspection law to hold those who dealt with the food of millions to a strict accountability for its healthful condition. The frightful loss of life and limb to railway employes in times past has now been greatly reduced by statutes requiring safety appliances and proper inspection, of which two important ones were passed in this administration. The dreadful mining disasters in which thousands of miners met their death have led to a federal mining bureau and generous appropriations to further discovery of methods for reducing explosions and other dangers in mining.

Infants and Veterans.

The statistics as to infant mortality and as to the too early employment of children in factories have prompted the creation of a children's bureau, by which the whole public can be made aware of actual conditions in the states and the best methods of reforming them for the saving and betterment of the coming generation. The passage of time has brought the burdens and helplessness of old age to many of those veterans of the civil war, who exposed their lives in the supreme struggle to save the nation, and recognizing this, Congress has added to previous provision which patriotic gratitude had prompted, a substantial allowance, which may be properly characterized as an old men's pension.

Against White Slave Traffic.

By the white slave act we have sought to save unfortunates from their own degradation, and have forbidden the use of interstate commerce in promoting vice. In the making of the contract between a railway employe and the company, the two do not stand on an equality, and the terms of the contract which the common law implied were unfair to the employe. Congress, in the exercise of its control over interstate commerce, has reformed the contract to be implied and has made it more favorable to the employe. Indeed, a more radical bill, which I fully approve, has passed the Senate and is now pending in the House, which requires interstate railways in effect to insure the lives of their employes and to make provision for prompt settlement of the amount due under the law after death or injury has occurred.

The Railroads.

By the railroad legislation of this administration shippers have been placed much nearer an equality with the railroads whose lines they use, than ever before. Rates cannot be increased except after the interstate commerce commission shall hold the increase reasonable. Orders against railways which under previous acts might be stayed by judicial injunction that involved a delay of two years can now be examined and finally passed on by the commerce court in about six months. Patrons of express, telegraph, and telephone companies may now secure reasonable rates by complaint to the commission.

The Farmer.

Many millions are spent annually by the agricultural department to investigate the best methods of treating the soil and carrying on agriculture and of publishing the result. We are now looking into the question of the best system for securing such credit for the farmer at reasonable rates as will enable him better to equip his farm and to follow the rules of good farming, which we must encourage. Our platform, I am glad to say, specifies this as a reform to which the party is pledged. The necessity for stimulating greater production of foodstuffs per acre becomes imperative as the vacant lands available for the extension of acreage are filling up and the supply of foodstuffs as compared with the demand is growing less each year.

Labor.

Congress has sought to encourage the movement toward eight hours a day for all manual labor by the recent enactment of a new law on the subject more stringent in its provisions regarding works on government contracts. One of the great defects in our present system of government is the delay and expense of litigation, which of course works against the poor litigant. The supreme court is now engaged in a revision of the equity rules to accomplish this purpose as to half our federal litigation. The workmen's compensation act will relieve our courts of law of a very heavy part of the present dockets on the law side of the court and give the court more opportunity to speed the remaining causes. The last Congress codified the federal court provisions, and we may look for, and should insist upon, a reform in the law procedure so as to promote dispatch of business and reduction in costs.

Postal Savings Banks and Parcels Post.

We have adopted in this administration, after very considerable opposition, the postal savings banks, which work directly in the promotion of thrift among the people. By payment of only 2 per cent interest on deposits, they do not compete with the savings banks. But they do attract those who fear banks and are unwilling to trust their funds except to a governmental agency. Experience, however, leads depositors to a knowledge of the importance of interest, and

(Continued on page 8.)

The Christian World

A Page for Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Congregational Statistics

It would be a difficult matter to account for the present somewhat discouraging standing of the historic Congregational body as shown by the statistical report. It ought to be among the rapidly growing denominations in America. When the Disciples and Congregationalists unite—and may God speed the day!—we shall impart to them the evangelistic spirit which we think they need greatly, and they will help us educationally and in many other ways. The Congregationalist thus sets forth the important figures:

If statistics were the only measure of denominational vigor and influence, we should dislike to have our present denominational status estimated by the latest figures which Secretary Asher Anderson has compiled for the forthcoming annual Year Book. The net gain of fifteen churches does not indicate a tremendous amount of home missionary activity, though it must be remembered that undue zeal on the part of all denominations in the past prompted the starting of many churches which have either ceased to be, or are now living at a dying rate. We would far rather have our home missionary leaders and pioneers plan their advances in accordance with the growing spirit of Christian unity and coöperation than to have them push forward without due consideration any purely denominational propaganda. When it comes to the total net gain in church members, the small number —3,178, as over against 4,484 last year—reflects no more on the missionary churches than on the old established ones. In the field of the Sunday-school, however, there is a gratifying showing compared with last year, when the net loss in membership was 31,434, while this year the net loss is but 344. The membership of the young people's societies shows a net loss of 4,566, as over against a net loss last year of 14,747. Here is another sign of an upward tendency. But when it comes to strictly Congregational gifts we are surprised to find a net decrease of $406,232.

Some Educational Items

Some of our exchanges at this season are urging the interests of education by beautifully printed issues and superb material. If the denominations represented by the great journals do not do their duty in supporting their own educational institutions, it will not be through any fault of their editorial leadership.

Incidentally, it is interesting to note the increasing number of schools for girls and boys which are being widely advertised in many of the church weeklies. In one paper we counted twenty-nine schools for boys and fifty-two for girls. The denominational schools are not overlooked by those who believe in the efficacy of the advertising columns.

Gifts amounting to nearly $1,000,000 have been announced at New York by the General Education Board, founded by John D. Rockefeller. The following colleges and causes are benefited: Peabody College for Teachers, Nashville, Tenn., for the establishment of the Seaman A. Knapp School of Country Life, $250,000; Beloit College, Beloit, Wis., $100,000; Coe College, Cedar Rapids, Ia., $100,000; McAlester College, St. Paul, Minn., $50,000; University of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y., $200,000; administrative work in agriculture in the southern states for professors of secondary education in southern state universities and to aid negro education work, $210,100; for supervision of negro rural schools in Kentucky, North Carolina and Virginia, $9,000; for three negro schools—Hampton Institute, Tuskegee Institute and Spelman Seminary, Atlanta, Ga., $35,000; for professors of secondary education in several southern state universities, $331,000. The college gifts are conditioned upon an equal sum being raised by the respective institutions.

Christ and Theology

The Presbyterian Advance in an illuminating editorial says many excellent things concerning the acceptance of Christ and the acceptance of a creed, among which is the following:

"There is undoubted value to the religious teacher in being acquainted with the numerous and ever changing systems of theology which have been adhered to by the body or by the bodies of Christians at various times, and it is almost an intellectual necessity that a thinking man and a student of Christianity have a systematic theology which he may call his own. Moreover, a church in the sense of a denomination, or group of Christian people, must of necessity have certain articles of faith which are held in common by its leaders and for the propagation for which it exists; otherwise organized Christian effort would be practically impossible. But the recognized value of creeds and systems of theology do not make them essential to the Christian life, though, of course, the articles of our faith, that is, not the creeds which we outwardly profess, but the things which we actually believe, shape the development of the life which comes from personal union with the great Life-Giver, Jesus Christ."

Continuing, the distinction between Christ and the creed is emphasized as follows:

"The acceptance of a creed and the acceptance of Christ are acts as widely divergent as any two acts can be. The one is of the head, the other of the heart. To believe the statements of faith upon the authority of a teacher is one thing; to surrender the life to the direction and control of the Son of God is something entirely different. One may believe and zealously contend for the whole of any given creed without having any personal and experimental knowledge of the power of Christ Jesus in his life; yes, and one may truly be a Christian, having surrendered the self to Christ, without having the slightest acquaintance with a single article of any system of theology. The world is not suffering seriously for a lack of theologians; but the world's great need is the need of men and women who possess and who live the life that was in Jesus, and the greatest work before those of us who are Christians is not to sustain or to overthrow some theological system, but to bring people into personal touch with Him who came that they might have life and have it more abundantly.

As to Preacherless Churches

Wide publicity is being given to the statement that fifty per cent of the Disciples' churches are without preachers. Is that a fact? What are the sources of information and how were they obtained? We should like to know these things. We are in need of more men in the ministry, but we must not try to secure them through erroneous statements, no matter how fully men who make them may be convinced of their accuracy. If there is such a dearth as is asserted it forms one of the most acute problems now confronting us. We doubt the correctness of these figures. We have many good men in mind who are compelled to be idle, according to their own statements, because of a surplus of ministers. They say that the woods are full of preachers; that wherever they turn they are met by men in similar circumstances with themselves. The applicants for vacant pulpits that pay a living salary tread upon each other's heels. That couldn't be possible if half of our churches were preacherless. And what is true of one section is true of all. We believe that an investigation would show that causes other than the scarcity of preachers will account for the vacant pulpits.

It would probably be found that the vacant pulpits, in many instances, can be accounted for by a lack of interest on the part of those who carry the burdens of the church. If there is a deficit in the treasury, time will be taken to make that up before a pastor is called; or there may be a disposition to take things easy for a time after a strenuous pastor has gone to another parish, and months will elapse before a call is extended to his successor; or in the weak and struggling churches, the skeletons of churches, the pulpits will be chronically vacant, even if a dozen preachers were knocking at their doors for admission, because they cannot support a preacher, and self-denial on his part does not mean suicide. Such pulpits have preaching, but it is the preaching of pilgrims who are always on the march. Facts like these should be taken into account in making up statistics regarding the supply of preachers.

Protestant Churches Still Crowded Out

It is said that there are more than four million dollars' worth of church property for sale in New York city alone, and nearly all of it Protestant. The fact is accounted for by the shifting of residences from older districts to the suburban. This is the misfortune of our civilization for which the mission church offers the only remedy. It is that change which marks the difference between the period when the people went to church, and that wherein the church goes to the people.

—The signs promise that Labor Sunday will be widely observed. The Federal Council Commission on the Church and Social Service (215 Fourth Avenue, New York) reports that already about 20,000 pastors have taken up the observance of Labor Sunday September 1, or in some cases, a later Sunday, and that the subject of Seven Day Labor will be presented with an appeal for One-Day-In-Seven for Industrial Workers. The commission supplies a leaflet of suggestions and a printed program for the day, on application.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—SILAS JONES, IDA WITHERS HARRISON, OBVIS F. JORDAN, ELLIS B. BARNES.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy, 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

United Religious Press Building
700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

The House of God

Shrines, temples, synagogues, and churches are aids to the devout life. They did not create religion; religion created them. It may exist on earth long after they have ceased to be useful. At the present the house of worship is an important means of supporting and increasing faith. We may judge the state of religion in a community by the kind of building it has erected for the worship of God and the condition in which the building is kept. We may justly conclude that the people whose church house is ugly and dirty are indifferent to religion. An attractive, well kept house is a testimony to the faith of somebody.

Religion modifies its place of worship. There was once use for the altar of burnt offering. This altar was intimately associated in the minds of devout persons with the thought of God. Religion today has no need for burnt offerings. They would suggest to the modern mind the slaughter house and not the temple of God. Priestly, aristocratic religion has its style of architecture. Democracy modifies what it inherits from aristrocracy. Its house is or will be a place for the expression of every sort of religious experience by the persons that have the experience.

The house of God is a place of prayer. Are we forgetting this? Is church attendance a comfort and an inspiriation to us or is it a burden we would discharge if we thought it would be respectable to be without it? Do we select for our minister one who can pray or do we fix attention wholly upon the sermon? If we are looking for great thoughts and fine expression, we can get these in books and by attending the public reading of great pieces of literature given by artists. The latest pronouncements of science can be had for a small price. We err greatly if we select a man because he has specialized in literature, science, or philosophy. Let us have one who can pray so that the people will say, "Truly, God is with us in our joys and in our sorrows." Such a man will make the little chapel or the great cathedral the very house of God.

The joy of the house of God is the joy of right human relations. In true worship we discard false notions of human worth. Artificial barriers that separate man from man are removed. In daily work we necessarily take account of differences in ability and fidelity. Before God all men are needy. The pride that is fostered by superior skill and knowledge is humbled by the thought of the distance between man and God. We cry out for the living God and we recognize the right of every soul to seek and find God. The sense of a common need enables those who are really strong to help the weak. We ask, then, that the hymns, prayers, and sermons of the sanctuary be means of revealing to us a God so great that our human differences shall not be the cause of foolish pride and jealousy.

Religion has been an inspiration to the educator. It has built and maintained schools. That the state is giving much of the instruction once offered by the church alone is no indication that the church has nothing further to do with education. It is still the province of religious teachers to interpret life. The instruction now given by the church should be instruction in righteousness. The state sees to it that its children are taught how to read and write and it endeavors to give them the scientific view of nature. Its work is an aid to religion. Science is the death of superstition. The whole life is the proper study of the church but it is life as understood by the religious mind. Our delight in the house of God ought to be due in part to the knowledge that in it we have been helped by wise men and women to put together the seeming contradictions of life so as to form a unified experience.

The building of a church may be a means of grace or a cause of confusion. When the people of a community co-operate gladly to erect a house of worship, they are all benefitted spiritually. When one man demands the privilege of deciding on all the plans and of being excused from assuming any financial obligation, the building of a church is about as advantageous as the opening of a saloon. It is a means of grace to a religious body to provide money for the erection of houses of worship wherever they are needed. It is hard to discover the gain in putting up a new house in a community that already has more than it needs. Fortunately, a general building fund will be used where it will do the most good. Local pride is restrained for the good of the entire church. [Midweek Service, Aug. 28. I Kings 5:1-5; Ps. 122.] S. J.

The Condition of Berkeley Seminary

To the Editors of The Christian Century: The board of trustees of Berkeley Bible Seminary wishes to correct certain misstatements which appear in an editorial of The Christian Century of July 11, 1912.

The first correction is concerning Dr. H. O. Breeden and Brother W. P. Bentley. These men were not affected by the resolution to which The Christian Century refers.

Dr. Breeden has been catalogued and regarded as a lecturer in the seminary; and Brother Bentley as an instructor, each for special work. These men have been specially engaged from year to year only as there seemed to be demand for their particular work, and each for a small compensation.

Furthermore, the services of both of these brethren had been finished during the first term of the seminary last fall; while the resolution referred to was passed on May 23rd of this year. The resolution had absolutely no reference either to Dr. Breeden or to Brother Bentley, and this full statement is made in justice to these brethren.

A second correction which the board wishes to make is concerning the use of some of the endowment for the current expenses of the seminary. The impression of the writer of the editorial seems to have been that the endowment, so used, has been dissipated. On the contrary, it was only loaned temporarily to the General Fund; and, at the same time, bona fide notes of the General Fund were set aside as collateral security for the repayment of the amount thus borrowed. These General Fund notes, collectible by law, were given by subscribers, who, as a class, rank among the best of our California brethren.

All transfers of money from the Endowment Fund to the General Fund were especially arranged for and formally authorized by the board in regular session, and under the counsel and sanction of the attorney of the board, and never by the Executive Committee or any one else.

It has always been the intention of the board that the money thus temporarily borrowed from the endowment shall be repaid, and this is still its intention and unalterable decision. All collections made on such collateral are applied on the endowment loan.

Concerning public knowledge of the fact that the board has been loaning endowment money temporarily to the General Fund, let it be stated that the conventions of Northern and Southern California, meeting annually at Santa Cruz and Long Beach, respectively, have been given this information through the regular annual reports of the seminary trustees to these conventions.

The resources of the seminary are over $100,000, but the difficulty has been that much of this has not been productive. The liabilities of the seminary aggregate less than $5,000.

The seminary board wishes to believe that if The Christian Century had known these facts, it would not have done the great injustice to all parties concerned that it has. It is sincerely hoped that The Christian Century will give as much prominence to this statement as it gave to its editorial criticisms.

Done, by order of the board of trustees at its regular annual meeting, held on July 27, 1912.

E. A. BRIDGFORD, President Board of Trustees.
S. STURGES, Secretary Board of Trustees.

All the information which formed the basis and occasion of The Christian Century's strictures on the policy of the trustees of Berkeley Seminary was taken from an editorial in the Christian Evangelist of June 4, 1912. If there was an error in including the names of Drs. Breeden and Bentley it was due to the appearance of their names in the Christian Evangelist's editorial as among those "affected by" the trustees' action, although not "directly affected." However, on the face of the resolution discontinuing the services of the entire faculty excepting the president, we believe that our contemporary was justified in including the names of Drs. Breeden and Bentley who regularly appear in the official roster as members of the Seminary's faculty. The fact that a special contract obtained in their case was not known to the public.

With respect to the financial condition and policy of the seminary The Christian Evangelist said:

> Friends of the institution have heretofore supposed it was in pretty fair condition financially; but now it appears it has been running behind for years. During the past three years pledges and subscriptions aggregating about $20,000 have been secured, but so far only about $1,000 cash has actually been realized on them.
>
> The institution has an endowment, exclusive of these pledges, aggregating thirty or forty thousand dollars. But the income from the endowment is nowhere near sufficient to defray the expenses of operation, and for the past three years very little cash has been received in pledges.
>
> In view of this growing deficit it has been necessary to use about $13,000 of the endowment funds for operating expenses during the past three years. The salaries of members of the faculty, as well as that of President McAneney, have been paid regularly and in full; but to do this it has been necessary to use a goodly part of the regular endowment funds, which it is hoped to restore if the pledges aggregating something like $20,000 are collected.

On the basis of such information, which we believed to be especially trustworthy in view of the Evangelist's managing editor's intimate acquaintance with Disciple affairs on the Pacific Coast, we published a criticism of the board of trustees for using "a goodly part of the regular endowment funds" which they "hoped to restore if the pledges . . . are collected." Our criticism was aimed quite as directly at the Christian Evangelist for ingenuously publishing such alleged facts without apparently discerning their moral implications as at the board of trustees for administering the seminary's affairs in that fashion.

Our strictures did not state nor suggest that the policy under criticism had been practiced secretly by the executive committee or that it was unknown to the brotherhood of the state of California. Our perfect confidence in the moral integrity of every man on the board would have inhibited such a construction if it could have occurred to us. We were striking at a more or less general practice in the administration of endowment trusts of which, upon the basis of the supposedly correct information in hand, the Berkeley policy seemed to furnish a typical illustration.

The Christian Century is not disposed to analyze the statement of the seminary trustees printed above. We accept it at its face value, and take pleasure in the discovery that the fiscal affairs of the institution are in so much better condition than either our St. Louis contemporary or we understood. We might suggest that the resources of over $100,000 should be made "productive" immediately. We might further suggest that there were better ways to realize on the uncollected notes belonging to the General Fund than to use the principal of the Endowment Fund. But we prefer to take the trustees' statement as an occasion for correcting our own statement and for congratulating the friends of Berkeley Bible Seminary on the security of its foundation. We believe the Christian Evangelist will heartily join us both in the correction and the congratulation, and we ask it so to do.

[We note, after the above is in the form, that the trustees' correction appears in last week's Christian Evangelist.]

Our Readers' Opinons on Politics

True to The Christian Century's policy of giving liberty to its department editors to express the true convictions of their souls Mr. Jordan's splendid interpretation of the Progressive party movement and espousal of its cause went through last week without a touch of the editorial blue-pencil. No reader should miss reading his trenchant and illuminating treatment. The political situation involves issues of such intense moral significance at this time that it is the purpose of the editors to open our columns to our readers also, that they may give a reason for the political faith that is in them. We ask only three things with respect to these contributions of our readers: that they be courteous, that they be brief (300 words is a good limit) and that they conform to the general standard of intelligence found in our other contributions. We believe such an expression will make interesting and instructive reading during the campaign. Turn back to the Social Survey page of last week's issue, read Mr. Jordan's article and then if your soul is stirred with any thoughts set them down and send them in.

The Pew to the Pulpit

From the layman in the pews this silent appeal rises to the minister in the pulpit: he that hath ears to hear let him hear!

What we want from you, sir, is but one thing—yourself.

If you preach Christ, it does us no good, unless you preach him in terms of your own personal life. The historic Christ and the doctrinal and tabulated Christ we, as well as you, can get from books.

We want no words from you except those that are red with your blood.

We do not want the Word, but the Word made Flesh.

We do not want you to arouse our emotions; we want to see you gripped by your own.

We do not want argument; we do not want anything proved to us; for where you lay one doubt you raise twenty.

We do not want information; all its sources are open to us as well as to you. We do not want science, history, or philosophy; we want of you what we want of the one great neighbor—heart.

Please go through your sermon before you bring it to us, and cut out every platitude, every fine-sounding phrase, everything that you will say just because you think your church requires it, or because it is your duty to say it. Give us only what you cannot help saying.

We ask you to compete with novels and stories in one thing—human interest.

We ask you to compete with poets in just one thing—vision.

We ask you to compete with men of science in just one thing—absolute honesty.

We ask you to compete with those who make us bad in just one thing—in that you like us.

We do not need your guidance; we need your confession—that shall most truly guide us.

Do not berate us; we know how bad we are. Do not dictate to us; for the soul leaps to truth and not authority. Do not urge us; for souls that can see need no urging. Simply show us one who is in the clutch of some reality; then we shall be shamed and smitten, reborn and set on the right way.

Do not entertain us. You cannot compete with the actor. Strip your soul naked to us and show us what no man can simulate—life in its pure motion.

Speak low. The things you should have to say are secrets. Every man's religion is utterly modest; it is his most shrinking and sensitive vital spot.

Remember that we are interested in the ultimate things—love, life, God and death. Whenever you mention one of these things we are anxious to hear if you have any light. Remember that the spirit of this age is not as the spirit of former ages. Learn these words of Griggs: "Our interest everywhere these days is in the distinctively personal. If one can tell openly and clearly the story of his own life, there are many who will find deep interest in this. Literature is becoming more and more autobiographical. It all means the deepening consciousness of the absolute significance of the human soul."

It is not doctrines any more we want. It is not theorems and saving formulas. We want doctrines incarnated, theorems shining through souls, formulas that are the aureoles of experience.

Holy church has become a trysting place for our souls with yours.

We do not want to believe; we want to see.

We do not want gold any more, but the gold mine; not money, but the bank and mint; not the law, but the lawgiver; not the botany of Christ, but the rose of Christ; not the sermon, but the human being behind it. We, too, "seek not yours, but you!"

—Frank Crane.

The Struggle for the Presidency

(Continued from page 4.)

then seeking a higher rate they transfer their accounts to the savings banks. In this way the savings bank deposits, instead of being reduced, are increased, and there is thus available a much larger fund for general investment.

For some years the administration has been recommending the parcels post, and now I am glad to say a measure will probably be adopted by Congress authorizing the government to avail itself of the existing machinery of the postoffice department to carry parcels at a reasonably low rate. This must contribute greatly to a reduction in the cost and comfort of living.

Popular Unrest.

In the work of rousing the people to the danger that threatened our civilization from the abuses of concentrated wealth and the power it was likely to exercise, the public imagination was wrought upon and a reign of sensational journalism and unjust and unprincipled muckraking has followed, in which much injustice has been done to honest men. In so far as inequality of condition can be lessened and equality of opportunity can be promoted by improvement of our educational system, the betterment of the laws to insure the quick administration of justice, and by the prevention of the acquisition of privilege without just compensation, in so far as the adoption of the legislation above recited and laws of a similar character may aid the less fortunate in their struggle with the hardships of life, all are in sympathy with a continued effort to remedy injustice and to aid the weak, and I venture to say that there is no national administration in which more real steps of such progress have been taken than in the present one. But in so far as the propaganda for the satisfaction of unrest involves the promise of a millennium, a condition in which the rich are to be made reasonably poor and the poor reasonably rich by law, we are chasing a phantom; we are holding out to those whose unrest we fear a prospect and a dream, a vision of the impossible.

Political Notes

—Champ Clark's nomination for Congress is the ninth.

—State Senator Funk, progressive candidate for governor of Illinois, is the richest farmer in the state; he is a multi-millionaire.

—Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler is for Taft, but all the minor professors of Columbia, according to the New York Post, are solidly for Wilson.

—Nelson Aldrich of Rhode Island, says there is nothing in the report that he is going to return to the senate. "I have permanently retired and am now a farmer," he says.

—Senator Robert L. Owen was renominated for United States senator by the Oklahoma Democrats in the state primary, defeating former Governor Charles N. Haskell. Haskell is the man who caused the big row in the campaign of 1908.

—Hiram W. Johnson, whom the Progressive party made Roosevelt's running mate, is the governor of California. He was born at Sacramento September 2, 1866. He is a son of Grove L. Johnson, former representative in Congress. Hiram was educated in the State University of California, where he pitched on the college team and edited the college paper. He eloped from the university in his junior year and was wedded, studied law, and was admitted to the bar at the age of twenty-one. He immediately began to practice at Sacramento. He removed to San Francisco after a time and became noted as a criminal lawyer. He did things to the Southern Pacific Railroad and was one of the men who sent Abe Ruef, a warm Roosevelt rooter at the convention of 1904, to prison. If the Johnsons alone should vote for him, he would poll an immense vote.

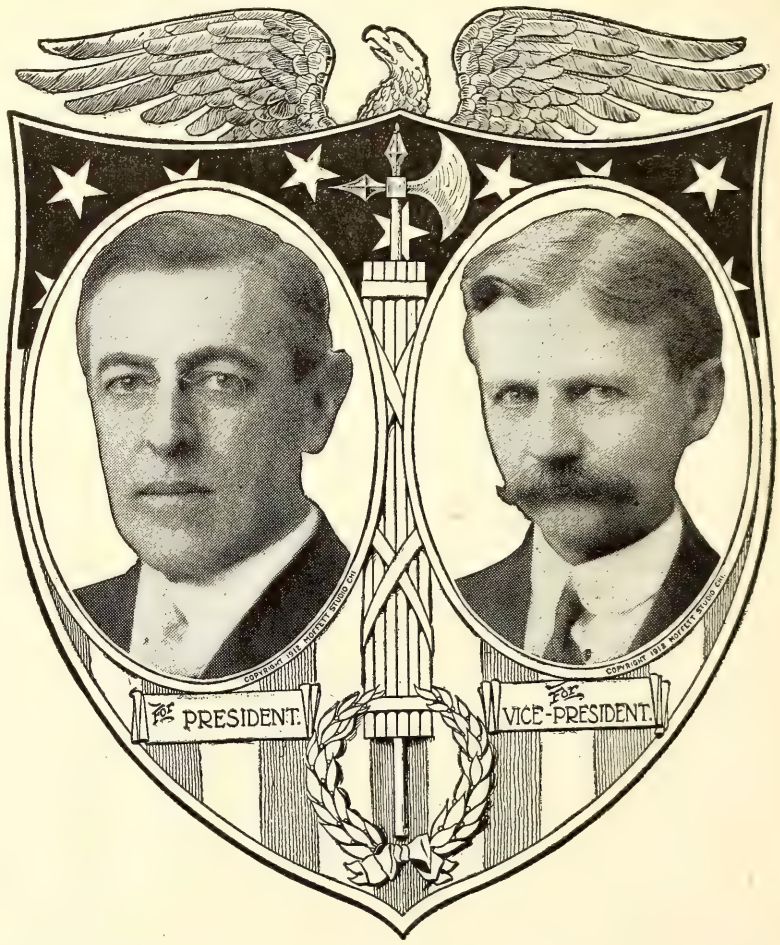
WILSON'S SPEECH OF ACCEPTANCE

The Head and the Heart of It—Tariff and Trusts.

Below is given the introduction of the speech of acceptance made by Governor Woodrow Wilson when notified by the committee of the democratic convention of his nomination, and also the important part of his discussion of the tariff and trust questions, which are the chief features of his doctrinal statement.

Introduction—The People Aroused.

We cannot intelligently talk politics unless we know to whom we are talking and in what circumstances. The present circumstances are clearly unusual. No previous political campaign in our time has disclosed anything like them. The audience we address is in no ordinary temper. It is no audience of partisans. Citizens of every class and party and prepossession sit together, a single people, to learn whether we understand their life and know how to afford them the counsel and guidance they are now keenly aware that they stand in need of. We must speak, not to catch votes, but to satisfy the thought and conscience of a people deeply stirred by the conviction that they have come to a critical turning point in their moral and political development.



We stand in the presence of an awakened nation, impatient of partisan make-believe. The public man who does not realize the fact and feel its stimulation must be singularly unsusceptible to the influences that stir in every quarter about him. The nation has awakened to a sense of neglected ideals and neglected duties; to a consciousness that the rank and file of her people find life very hard to sustain, that her young men find opportunity embarrassed, and that her older men find business difficult to renew and maintain because of circumstances of privilege and private advantage which have interlaced their subtle threads throughout almost every part of the framework of our present law.

Lost Liberties.

She has awakened to the knowledge that she has lost certain cherished liberties and wasted priceless resources which she had solemnly undertaken to hold in trust for posterity and for all mankind, and to the conviction that she stands confronted with an occasion for constructive statesmanship such as has not arisen since the great days in which her government was set up.

Plainly it is a new age. The tonic of such a time is very exhilarating. It requires self-restraint not to attempt too much, and yet it would be cowardly to attempt too little. The path of duty soberly and bravely trod is the way to service and distinction, and many adventurous feet seek to set out upon it.

There was never a time when impatience and suspicion were more keenly aroused by private power selfishly employed; when jealousy of everything concealed or touched with any purpose not linked with general good, or inconsistent with it, more sharply or immediately displayed itself.

Nor was the country ever more susceptible to unselfish appeals or to the high arguments of sincere justice. These are the unmistakable symptoms of an awakening. There is the more need for wise counsel because the people are so ready to heed counsel if it be given honestly and in their interest.

The Tariff Question.

The tariff question, as dealt with in our time, has not been business. It has been politics. Tariff schedules have been made up for the purpose of keeping as large a number as possible of the rich and influential manufacturers of the country in a good humor with the republican party, which desired their constant financial support. The tariff has become a system of favors which the phraseology of the schedule was often deliberately contrived to conceal.

Who, when you come down to the hard facts of the matter, have been represented in recent years when our tariff schedules were being discussed and determined, not on the floor of Congress, for that is not where they have been determined, but in the committee-rooms and conferences? That is the heart of the whole affair. Will you, can you bring the whole people into the partnership or not? No one is discontented with representative government; it falls under question only when it ceases to be representative. It is at bottom a question of good faith and morals.

Foster Privilege.

Tariff duties, as they have employed them, have not been a means of setting up an equitable system of protection. They have been, on the contrary, a method of fostering special privilege. They have made it easy to establish monopoly in our domestic markets. Trusts have owed their origin and their secure power to them. The economic freedom of our people, our prosperity in trade, our untrammeled energy in manufacture depend upon their reconsideration from top to bottom in an entirely different spirit.

We do not ignore the fact that the business of a country like ours is exceedingly sensitive to changes in legislation of this kind. It has been built up, however, ill-advisedly upon tariff schedules written in the way I have indicated, and its foundations must not be too radically or too suddenly disturbed.

Must Be Cautious.

When we act we should act with caution and prudence, like men who know what they are about, and not like those in love with a theory.

It is obvious that the changes we make should be made only at such a rate and in such a way as will least interfere with the normal and healthful course of commerce and manufacture. But we shall not on that account act with timidity, as if we did not know our own minds, for we are certain of our ground and of our object. There should be an immediate revision, and it should be downward, unhesitatingly and steadily downward.

Where to Begin.

It should begin with the schedules which have been most obviously used to kill competition and to raise prices in the United States arbitrarily and without regard to the prices pertaining elsewhere in the markets of the world, and it should, before it is finished or intermitted, be extended to every item in every schedule which affords any opportunity for monopoly, for special advantage to limited groups of beneficiaries or for subsidized control of any kind in the markets or the enterprises of the country; until special favors of every sort shall have been absolutely withdrawn and every part of our laws of taxation shall have been transformed from a system of governmental patronage into a system of just and reasonable charges which shall fall where they will create the least burden.

A Demoralizer.

There has been no more demoralizing influence in our politics in our time than the influence of tariff legislation, the influence of the idea that the government was the grand dispenser of favors, the maker and unmaker of fortunes, and of opportunities such as certain men have sought in order to control the movement of trade and industry throughout the continent.

It has made the government a prize to be captured and parties the means of effecting the capture. It has made the business men of one of the most virile and enterprising nations in the world timid, fretful, full of alarms; has robbed them of self-confidence and manly force, until they have cried out that they could do nothing without the assistance of the government at Washington. It has made them feel that their lives depended upon the ways and means committee of the House and the finance committee of the Senate (in these later years particularly the finance committee of the Senate). They have insisted very anxiously that these committees should be made up only of their "friends"; until the country in its turn grew suspicious and wondered how those committees were being guided and controlled, by what influences and plans of personal advantage.

Making High Prices.

Moreover, we begin to perceive some things about the movement of prices that concern us very deeply, and fix our attention upon the tariff schedules with a more definite determination than ever to get to the bottom of this matter. We know that prices are not fixed by the competitions of the market or by the ancient law of supply and demand, which is to be found stated in all the primers of economics, but by private arrangements with regard to what the supply should be and agreements among the producers themselves. Those who buy are not even represented by counsel. The high cost of living is arranged by private understanding.

Up to a certain point (and only up to a certain point) great combinations effect great economies in administration, and increase efficiency by simplifying and perfecting organization; but whether they effect economies or not, they can very easily determine prices by intimate agreement as soon as they come to control a sufficient percentage of the product in any great line of business; and we now know that they do.

Not Infant Industries.

The trusts do not belong to the period of infant industries. They are not the products of the time, that old laborious time when the great continent we live on was undeveloped, the young nation struggling to find itself and get upon its feet amidst older and more experienced competitors. They belong to a very recent and very sophisticated age, when men knew what they wanted and knew how to get it by the favor of the government. It is another chapter in the natural history of power and of "governing classes." The next chapter will set us free again.

There will be no flavor of tragedy in it. It will be a chapter of readjustment, not of pain and rough disturbance. It will witness a turning back from what is abnormal to what is normal. It will see a restoration of the laws of trade, which are the laws of competition and of unhampered opportunity, under which men of every sort are set free and encouraged to enrich the nation.

Big Business.

I am not afraid of anything that is normal. I dare say we shall never return to the old order of individual competition, and that the organization of business upon a great scale of co-operation is, up to a certain point, itself normal and inevitable.

Power in the hands of great business men does not make me apprehensive unless it springs out of advantages which they have not created for themselves. Big business is not dangerous because it is big, but because its bigness is an unwholesome inflation created by privileges and exemptions which it ought not to enjoy. While competition cannot be created by statutory enactment, it can in large measure be revived by changing the laws and forbidding the practices that killed it, and by enacting laws that will give it heart and occasion again.

We Can Stop Monopoly.

We can arrest and prevent monopoly. It has assumed new shapes and adopted new processes in our time, but these are now being disclosed and can be dealt with.

The general terms of the present federal anti-trust law, forbidding "combinations in restraint of trade," have apparently proved ineffectual. Trusts have grown up under its ban very luxuriantly, and have pursued the methods by which so many of them have established virtual monopolies without serious let or hindrance.

It has roared against them like any sucking dove. I am not assessing the responsibility. I am merely stating the fact. But the means and methods by which trusts have established monopolies have now become known. It will be necessary to supplement the present law with such laws, both civil and criminal, as will effectually punish and prevent those methods, adding such other laws as may be necessary to provide suitable and adequate judicial processes, whether civil or criminal, to disclose them and follow them to final verdict and judgment.

Not Seeking Destruction.

Let me say again, that what we are seeking is not destruction of any kind, nor the disruption of any sound or honest thing, but merely the rule of right and of the common advantage. I am happy to say that a new spirit has begun to show itself in the last year or two among influential men of business, and what is perhaps even more significant, among the lawyers who are their expert advisers; and that this spirit has displayed itself very notably in the last few months in an effort to return, in some degree at any rate, to the practices of genuine competition.

A Change of Sentiment.

Only a very little while ago our men of business were united in resisting every proposal of change and reform as an attack on business, an embarrassment to all large enterprise, an intimation that settled ideas of property were to be set aside and a new and strange order of things created out of hand. While they thought in that way progress seemed impossible without hot contest and a bitter clash between interests, almost a war of classes.

It is a happy omen that their attitude has changed. They see that what is right can hurt no man; that a new adjustment of interests is inevitable and desirable, is in the interest of everybody; that their own honor, their own intelligence, their own practical comprehension of affairs are involved. They are beginning to adjust their business to the new standards. Their hand is no longer against the nation; they are part of it; their interests are bound up with its interests. This is not true of all of them, but it is true of enough of them to show what the new age is to be, and how the anxieties of statesmen are to be eased, if the light that is dawning broadens into day.

Affects the Labor Question.

If I am right about this, it is going to be easier to act in accordance with the rule of right and justice in dealing with the labor question. The so-called labor question is a question only because we have not yet found the rule of right in adjusting the interests of labor and capital. We shall never get very far in the settlement of these vital matters so long as we regard everything done for the workingman, by law or by private agreement, as a concession yielded to keep him from agitation and a disturbance of our peace.

Here again the sense of universal partnership must come into play if we are to act like statesmen, as those who serve, not a class, but a nation.

The working people of America—if they must be distinguished from the minority that constitutes the rest of it—are, of course, the backbone of the nation. No law that safeguards their life, that improves the physical and moral conditions under which they live, that makes their hours of labor rational and tolerable, that gives them freedom to act in their own interest, and that protects them where they cannot protect themselves, can properly be regarded as class legislation or as anything but as a measure taken in the interest of the whole people.

ROOSEVELT'S DECLARATION OF FAITH

Recall and Referendum—The Tariff—The Trusts—The Laborer—Women's Rights—High Cost of Living.

The speech delivered by Colonel Roosevelt before the Chicago convention was called his "Confession of Faith." It was a long address, but the more important of the ex-president's utterances will be found in the extracts which appear below:

Introduction.

To you, men and women who have come here to this great city of this great state formally to launch a new party, a party of the people of the whole Union, the National Progressive Party, I extend my hearty greeting. You are taking a bold and a greatly needed step for the service of our beloved country.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT

FROM A PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN LAST FRIDAY IN THE OUTLOOK OFFICE

COPYRIGHT 1912: BY THE AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION

This new movement is a movement of truth, sincerity, and wisdom, a movement which proposes to put at the service of all our people the collective power of the people, through their governmental agencies, alike in the nation and in the several states. We propose to raise aloft a standard to which all honest men can repair, and under which all can fight, no matter what their past political differences, if they are content to face the future and no longer to dwell among the dead issues of the past.

We propose to put forth a platform which shall not be a platform of the ordinary and insincere kind, but shall be a contract with the people; and if the people accept this contract by putting us in power, we shall hold ourselves under honorable obligation to fulfill every promise it contains as loyally as if it were actually enforceable under the penalties of the law.

The prime need today is to face the fact that we are now in the midst of a great economic evolution. There is urgent necessity of applying both common sense and the highest ethical standard to this movement for better economic conditions among the mass of our people if we are to make it one of healthy evolution and not one of revolution.

It is, from the standpoint of our country, wicked as well as foolish longer to refuse to face the real issues of the day.

Initiative, Referendum, and Recall.

I do not attempt to dogmatize as to the machinery by which this end should be achieved. In each community it must be shaped so as to correspond not merely with the needs but with the customs and ways of thought of that community, and no community has a right to dictate to any other in this matter. But wherever representative government has in actual fact become non-representative, there the people should secure to themselves the initiative, the referendum, and the recall, doing it in such fashion as to make it evident that they do not intend to use these instrumentalities wantonly or frequently, but to hold them ready for use in order to correct the misdeeds or failures of the public servants when it has become evident that these misdeeds and failures cannot be corrected in ordinary and normal fashion.

The administrative officer should be given full power, for otherwise he cannot do well the people's work; and the people should be given full power over him.

The People and the Courts.

The American people and not the courts are to determine their own fundamental policies. The people should have power to deal with the effect of the acts of all their governmental agencies. This must be extended to include the effects of judicial acts as well as the acts of the executive and legislative representatives of the people.

Where the judge merely does justice as between man and man, not dealing with constitutional questions, then the interest of the public is only to see that he is a wise and upright judge.

Means should be devised for making it easier than at present to get rid of an incompetent judge; means should be devised by the bar and the bench acting in conjunction with the various legislative bodies to make justice far more expeditious and more certain than at present.

Too Much Legalism.

The stick-in-the-bark legalism, the legalism that subordinates equity to technicalities, should be recognized as a potent enemy of justice. But this is not the matter of most concern at the moment. Our prime concern is that in dealing with the fundamental law of the land, in assuming finally to interpret it, and therefore finally to make it, the acts of the courts should be subject to and not above the final control of the people as a whole.

I deny that the American people have surrendered to any set of men, no matter what their position or their character, the final right to determine those fundamental questions upon which free self-government ultimately depends.

Whenever in our constitutional system of government there exist general prohibitions that, as interpreted by the courts, nullify, or may be used to nullify, specific laws passed, and admittedly passed, in the interest of social justice, we are for such immediate laws or amendment to the Constitution, if that be necessary, as will thereafter permit a reference to the people of the public effect of such decision, under forms securing full deliberation, to the end that the specific act of the legislative branch of the government thus judicially nullified and such amendments thereof as come within its scope and purpose may constitutionally be excepted by vote of the people from the general prohibitions, the same as if that particular act had been expressly excepted when the prohibition was adopted.

This will necessitate the establishment of machinery for making much easier of amendment both the national and the several state constitutions, especially with the view of prompt action on certain judicial decisions—action as specific and limited as that taken by the passage of the eleventh amendment to the national constitution.

Our Human Resources.

I especially challenge the attention of the people to the need of dealing in far-reaching fashion with our human resources, and therefore our labor power.

With England striving to make good the human wreckage to which a scrap-heap scheme of industrialism has relegated her, with Germany putting the painstaking resources of an empire at the work of developing her crafts and industrial sciences; with the far East placing in the hands of its millions the tools invented and fashioned by western civilization, it behooves Americans to keep abreast of the great industrial changes and to show that the people themselves, through popular self-government, can meet an age of crisis with wisdom and strength.

Preventing Wreckage.

The dead weight of orphanage and depleted craftsmanship, of crippled workers, and workers suffering from trade diseases, of casual labor, of insecure old age, and of household depletion due to industrial conditions are, like our depleted soils, our gashed mountain sides and flooded river bottoms, so many strains upon the national structure, draining the reserve strength of all industries and showing beyond all peradventure the public element and public concern in industrial health.

Ultimately we desire to use the government to aid, as far as can safely be done, in helping the industrial tool-users to become in part tool-owners, just as our farmers now are.

It is abnormal for any industry to throw back upon the community the human wreckage due to its wear and tear, and the hazards of sickness, accident, invalidism, involuntary unemployment, and old age should be provided for through insurance.

A Word for Women.

Workingwomen have the same need to combine for protection that workingmen have; the ballot is as necessary for one class as for the other; we do not believe that with the two sexes there is identity of function; but we do believe that there should be equality of right; and therefore we favor woman suffrage.

Therefore we favor woman suffrage, showing if women could vote they would strengthen the hands of those who are endeavoring to deal in efficient fashion with evils such as the white slave traffic; evils which can in part be dealt with nationally, but which in large part can be reached only by determined local action, such as insisting on the widespread publication of the names of the owners, the landlords, of houses used for immoral purposes.

A Farmer's Commission.

There is no body of our people whose interests are more inextricably interwoven with the interests of all the people than is the case with the farmers. The country life commission should be revived with greatly increased powers; its abandonment was a severe blow to the interests of our people.

In this movement the lead must be taken by the farmers themselves; but our people as a whole, through their governmental agencies, should back the farmers. Everything possible should be done to better the economic condition of the farmer, and also to increase the social value of the life of the farmer, the farmer's wife, and their children.

The burdens of labor and loneliness bear heavily on the women in the country; their welfare should be the especial concern of all of us. Everything possible should be done to make life in the country profitable so as to be attractive from the economic standpoint, and also to give an outlet among farming people for those forms of activity which now tend to make life in the cities especially desirable for ambitious men and women.

Controlling the Trusts.

The only effective way in which to regulate the trusts is through the exercise of the collective power of our people as a whole through the governmental agencies established by the constitution for this very purpose.

It is utterly hopeless to attempt to control the trusts merely by the anti-trust law or by any law the same in principle no matter what the modifications may be in detail. In the first place, these great corporations cannot possibly be controlled merely by a succession of lawsuits. The administrative branch of the government must exercise such control.

The preposterous failure of the commerce court has shown that only damage comes from the effort to substitute judicial for administrative control of great corporations. In the next place, a loosely drawn law which promises to do everything would reduce business to complete ruin if it were not also so drawn as to accomplish almost nothing.

Regulated Like Transportation.

What is needed is the application to all industrial concerns and all co-operating interests engaged in interstate commerce in which there is either monopoly or control of the market of the principles on which we have gone in regulating transportation concerns engaged in such commerce.

The anti-trust law should be kept on the statute books and strengthened so as to make it genuinely and thoroughly effective against every big concern tending to monopoly or guilty of anti-social practices.

At the same time a national industrial commission should be created which should have complete power to regulate and control all the great industrial concerns engaged in interstate business—which practically means all of them in this country.

This commission should exercise over these industrial concerns like powers to those exercised over the railways by the interstate commerce commission, and over the national banks by the comptroller of the currency, and additional powers if found necessary.

The Tariff.

The practice of undertaking a general revision of all the schedules at one time and of securing information as to conditions in the different industries and as to rates of duty desired chiefly from those engaged in the industries, who themselves benefit directly from the rates they propose, has been demonstrated to be not only iniquitous but futile.

The first step should be the creation of a permanent commission of non-partisan experts whose business shall be to study scientifically all phases of tariff making and of tariff effects. This commission should be large enough to cover all the different and widely varying branches of American industry. It should have ample powers to enable it to secure exact and reliable information.

This commission would be wholly different from the present unsatisfactory tariff board, which was created under a provision of law which failed to give it the powers indispensable if it was to do the work it should do.

It will be well for us to study the experience of Germany in considering this question. The German tariff commission has proved conclusively the efficiency and wisdom of this method of handling tariff questions. The reports of a permanent, expert, and non-partisan tariff commission would at once strike a most powerful blow against the chief iniquity of the old log-rolling method of tariff making.

Would Stop Log-rolling.

As a further means of disrupting the old crooked, log-rolling method of tariff making, all future revisions of the tariff should be made schedule by schedule as changing conditions may require. Thus a great obstacle will be thrown in the way of the trading of votes which has marked so scandalously the enactment of every tariff bill of recent years.

It should not be the purpose in creating a tariff commission to take anything away from this power of Congress, but rather to afford a wise means of giving to Congress the widest and most scientific assistance possible, and of furnishing it and the public with the fullest disinterested information.

Only by this means can the tariff be taken out of politics. The creation of such a permanent tariff commission and the adoption of the policy of schedule by schedule revision will do more to accomplish this highly desired object than any other means yet devised.

Cost of Living.

The cost of living in this country has risen during the last few years out of all proportion to the increase in the rate of most salaries and wages; the same situation confronts alike the majority of wage workers, small business men, small professional men, the clerks, the doctors and clergymen.

There must be legislation which will bring about a closer business relationship between the farmer and the consumer. Recently experts in the agricultural department have figured that nearly 50 per cent of the price for agricultural products paid by the consumer goes into the pockets, not of the farmer, but of various middlemen; and it is probable that over half of what is thus paid to middlemen is needless, can be saved by wise business methods (introduced through both law and custom) and can therefore be returned to the farmer and the consumer.

Industrial Commission.

Through the proposed interstate industrial commission we can effectively do away with any arbitrary control by combinations of the necessities of life. Furthermore, the governments of the nation and of the several states must combine in doing everything they can to make the farmer's business profitable, so that he shall get more out of the soil and enjoy better business facilities for marketing what he thus gets.

In this manner his return will be increased while the price to the consumer is diminished.

EUGENE WILDER CHAFIN

Mr. Chafin, who with Dr. Watkins now holds the distinction, with one exception, of being the only candidates ever chosen twice in succession by a minority party, will be sixty-one years of age November first next.

He was born at East Troy, Wisconsin, educated in the public schools of the Badger State, earned his LL. B. degree at the University of Wisconsin, where he was a classmate of Senator LaFollette, and was admitted to the bar in 1875. In 1909, he was admitted to practice before the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. Chafin was married to Miss Carrie A. Hunkins in 1881, and they have one daughter. In 1902-1904 he was superintendent of the Washingtonian home in Chicago, and from that time resided in Chicago until 1909, when he removed to Tucson, Arizona.

He has been conspicuous in the extension and organization of Good Templary and the Prohibition Party for many years. From 1886-1890, he was Grand Chief Templar of Wisconsin and held the same office in Illinois in 1904-1905.

In 1882, he was a Prohibition Party candidate for Congress from Wisconsin; in 1902, in Chicago; in 1886 and 1900, he was nominated for Attorney-General, and in 1898 for Governor of Wisconsin; in 1904, he was the party's choice for Attorney-General of Illinois; and in 1908, was named the Presidential standard bearer at the national convention at Columbus.

He is an author of repute, a traveler of distinction. A man of tremendous strength, he is without a peer as a campaign speaker in his party.

AARON SHERMAN WATKINS

Aaron Sherman Watkins is of stanch Quaker ancestry. Born in Rushsylvania, O., November 29, 1863, he is in his forty-ninth year. During the past five years he has addressed hosts of Prohibition workers in practically every state of the union. Dr. Watkins has a distinguished record as an educator, lecturer and writer on allied subjects. After completing school and college work at Ohio Northern University, and taking four years' further study and apprenticeship, Dr. Watkins was admitted to the bar, at Ada, O., in 1886, taught in the public schools 1880-1883, 1890-1893; entered the Methodist Episcopal ministry in 1893; was ordained in 1895; held pastorates in Ohio, 1893-1895; was Professor of Literature and Philosophy at Ohio Northern University in 1907-1909; vice-president of same in 1907-1909; president of Asbury College, Kentucky, 1910-1911.

Dr. Watkins is an orator of great logical power and convincingness. In both 1905 and 1908 he was the choice of Ohio Prohibitionists for Governor, and was enthusiastically chosen as the colleague of Mr. Chafin upon the national ticket in 1908. His home is at Ada, O. He was married, at Middleburg, O., November 8, 1890, to Emma L. Davis. They have one son.

THE HIGH CALLING

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS."

Copyright 1911, George H. Doran Co.

CHAPTER XIII. (Continued.)

Camp was made here by pitching one of the big tents for the women. A big fire of roots was started after the supper had been eaten, and when they were all seated in the circle about the fire, Mr. Masters began a story.

Gradually as he went on with the old, old story of the lost sheep, figures stole up around the fire. Paul, who with Esther and all the rest was simply fascinated with the entire surroundings, although he did not understand a word Masters was speaking, was startled as he looked around and saw a dozen dark faces of young men and boys. They had risen out of the desert barrenness and gloom, the sudden twilight, and silently appeared. When the camp was chosen, there was not a hogon or a living creature anywhere in sight. But all of these quiet visitors knew that the mission party was on the way to Oraibi and some of them had been riding all day to meet Mr. and Mrs. Masters at this point.

When the story was finished, Miss Gray started a hymn, "The Ninety and Nine." She sang with a low, soft voice, almost talking the words, but old Peshlekietsetti sitting by Mr. Clifford bent over his knees gravely watching the singer's face and listening intently for every word, and when she was through, he asked a question of Mr. Masters.

"The old man wants to know," said Masters after one or two more questions had been asked, "how it happened that the sheep got lost, and if it was its own fault or the fault of someone who should have been looking after it. That isn't a bad question to come from the old fellow. His theology isn't half so much at fault as that of some theological seminary professors I know, who teach that sin is nothing but a disease and that nobody in particular is to blame for it. If he had to live out here a while instead of in his little upholstered study at the seminary, he would change his definition."

The evening was spent about the fire with songs and conversation, largely between Paul and Mr. Masters concerning the Navajo characteristics. The last thing Bauer could remember as he lay under his rug looking up at the stars, was the sight of old Peshlekietsetti throwing a handful of dry roots on the fire as he sat bowed over his knees, the fire flame gleaming red on his grave and dignified face.

He wakened early, as he had of late been doing, and sat up, noting the sleeping figures in a circle about the ashes of the fire, and as his look traveled on past them, he noted out by the edge of the Black Gorge through which they were to travel that day, a solitary figure sitting on one of the curious rocks that framed a sort of gateway to the diminutive canon. Even at that distance he could distinguish the form of Elijah Clifford, although he had already noticed that Clifford's rug and rubber blanket, which had been spread out by his own, had been folded up and tied ready for the day's trip.

Before the rest of the sleepers had stirred, Clifford came back to the spot and began with the noiseless rapidity of an Indian to build the fire in the sand preparatory to the breakfast, talking in a soft voice to Bauer, as if Bauer had asked him a question, although Bauer had not said a word, except "Good-morning," when Clifford cheerfully greeted him.

"You see, I used to work on a daily paper in Kansas City before I was converted, and it seems to me now that I spend most of my time trying to catch up with the day after tomorrow. I never had any leisure, never went to church, never opened a Bible, and never talked with myself. Since I came out here, I've had the time of my life in not only talking with myself, but—" He glanced at Bauer wistfully, as he put some stones around the hole and set his coffee pot down on the sand, "but I never saw such a place as a desert to find God. It seems as if this was the place to find him. You know Moses and Elijah and David and Paul and John and lots of men found God in the wilderness. I suppose you could find him while working for a daily paper, but he didn't seem to have much to do with the one I was on. At any rate, I never found him there. That's the reason I like to get up early. There's a time in the morning between four and five out here, when it appears to me God has more time to tend to individuals. Most everybody is asleep soundest about that time, and he can pay attention better to the comparatively few folks that don't need so much rest"—Elijah said it as if to apologize for the habits of the rest of the party, and Bauer could not help smiling at his note of evident haste not to take too much credit to himself for early rising. "I thought maybe you might kind of wonder at my ways, and think maybe I got up to write poetry or some such stuff. I believe you understand, eh?"

"I believe I do," said Bauer, gravely. "And I appreciate your confidence. I know what it means to try to find God in a crowd. I think that is one reason Jesus had to leave the multitude and go out into the desert places."

"Yes," said Clifford, sitting down on the sand and putting his coffee pot on a stone. "I didn't mention him. I thought you would remember that yourself."

This little glimpse into Elijah Clifford's personality did Bauer a world of good, and strengthened a growing liking for him which led in the process of time, as this story goes on, to some very important results in Bauer's life.

The day promised to be unusually hot, and it was Masters' plan to get through the Black Gorge Canon early, as it was famous for its stifling heat and dust storms later in the day. So camp was broken immediately after breakfast, and the wagons were soon loaded with the bedding and dishes, and the journey resumed in the same order, so far as the travelers were concerned, as before. Mr. Masters, who knew the trail at the other end of the gorge better than anyone else, went first with Mrs. Masters, Miss Clifford, Miss Gray, and Walter and Clifford with Mr. Douglas, Mrs. Douglas, Helen and Bauer followed, Peshlekietsetti and the heavy wagon trailing along in the rear.

Just as they were entering the gorge, Clifford turned and looked back towards the camp. Out across the Red Rock elevation he pointed out three black specks. Looking at them through the mission field glass, a former gift from Mr. Douglas, he announced them to be probably three wagons with tourists from Canon Diablo bound for the snake dance.

"Maybe your friend from Pittsburg, Van Shaw, is in that outfit," he said to Bauer.

Bauer did not reply. He hoped Van Shaw would not meet Walter or any of their party. There was no reason why he should, but every time he thought of Van Shaw he felt uncomfortable, something in him rose up set near to a feeling of hate and disgust he had ever known.

Clifford faced around and resumed the driving. He noted as he turned into the opening that Peshlekietsetti had stopped just outside to strap on one of the water barrels more securely, but seeing that he did not ask for any help he drove on into the gorge.

The gorge was weirdly irregular and the windings of the road were so many that very soon the wagons were all separated from veiw of one another.

In this volcanic land one could not account for the fantastic and even monstrous shapes of cliff and ledge and overhanging rock masses without calling up some gigantic upheaval of all nature's vast play of forces; earthquakes, fire, volcano, flood, wind, and spouts of enormous height and velocity, one after the other all these elemental storms must have rocked and heaved and rent and tortured the earth and after all had passed by, the hurricane of volcanic fire and missiles must have scattered the débris of high mountains twisted into lumps of matter, varying in size from skyscraper to a comma.

It began and ended abruptly, as if in a freak of the upheaval a tornado had picked up the end of a cannon somewhere, turned it over several times in transit and finally dropped it bottom side up on the desert, breaking it open when it fell and letting the fragments bump around like a pounded rock in a concrete mixer.

In among these boulders Elijah Clifford guided the team, exercising all his skill, for one of the horses was partly mustang, full of unused energy, and Mr. Masters had chosen the trip to Oraibi to give the animal some necessary training, trusting in Clifford's love of horses and his special characteristic of carefulness to avoid any accidents. And all would have gone well if the unforeseen and unavoidable had not occurred.

They were almost out of the gorge and Clifford had started to reply to a question of Paul's concerning the nature of the rocks which were different in color on one side of the canon from the other, when the mustang shied in a perfectly excusable manner at a cedar stump which hung out from a ledge so close that it almost scraped the frightened animal. Before Clifford could get the team back into the narrow road the front wheel struck a big stone. The jolt flung the pole with a jerk against the mustang. He reared up and slewed around, unhitching one of his tugs. Even then Clifford might have saved the situation if one of the reins had not broken.

(To be continued.)

Church Life

RESIGNATIONS.

F. M. Stambaugh, Cowden, Ill.

T. L. Noblett, McAlister, Okla., to enter the medical profession.

Olin E. Fox, Paola, Kan.

Percy Davis, Altoona, Pa.

CALLS.

C. H. Cowgill, Washington, D. C., to Middletown, O. Accepts.

B. H. Hayden, London, Ont., to a West Virginia church. Undecided.

R. H. Ingram to Scranton, Ia. Accepts.

ACCESSIONS TO THE CHURCHES.

Viroqua, Wis., 2. I. H. Beckholt, pastor.

Cincinnati, O., Central, Claire L. Waite, pastor; 53 since Jan. 1.

Atchison, Kan., 34 in July; Jesse Boder, pastor.

Tazewell, Va., 110; Mr. Bullard, pastor; Herbert Yeuell, evangelist.

Union Star, Mo., 8; G. N. Harness, pastor; J. E. Stout, evangelist.

Nocona, Tex., 65; F. W. Strong, pastor; Nathaniel Jacks and son, evangelists.

Lake Creek, Tex., 34; F. M. Trimble, evangelist.

Greensburg, Kan., 62 during the year; D. F. Cross, pastor.

Lobelville, Tenn., 35; J. T. McKissick, evangelist.

Mitchell, Ind., 146; H. A. Mingard, pastor; R. W. Abberley, evangelist.

Logansport, Ind., 5 during July; J. H. Craig, pastor.

Chicago, Jackson Boulevard, 172 during the year with no evangelistic meeting; Austin Hunter, pastor.

Roque L. Handley of Kalamazoo and S. O. Ladis of Bloomingdale, Mich., exchanged pulpits recently.

University Church, Champaign, will receive a $500 bequest from the estate of a citizen of that community who recently died.

Evangelist Herbert Yeuell is supplying the pulpit of East End Church, Pittsburg, while John R. Ewers, the pastor, is enjoying his vacation at Bethany Beach, Del.

The annual convention of the churches of eastern Pennsylvania will be held at Lancaster, Sept. 10-12. A good program has been arranged. Each church should be represented by one or more delegates.

F. M. Rogers, whose church at Long Beach, Calif., entertains the state convention each year, will be sent by the convention to the national convention in Louisville in October. This is a gracious token of appreciation of Mr. Rogers' services.

E. T. McFarland gave final refusal to the urgent request of the congregation of Memorial Church, Rock Island, Ill., that he withdraw his resignation. He said that he felt truly called to his new field and must go. He will remove to St. Louis and do evangelistic work under the direction of the American Missionary Society.

Two more well-known ministers have recently resigned to go into business. P. Y. Pendleton of New Castle, Pa., will engage in the real estate business with A. M. Harvout, of Cincinnati, formerly pastor of Central Church of that city. Lindley Gordon, pastor of Clifton Church, Louisville, Ky., and chairman of the executive committee of the Louisville convention, has resigned the ministry to study law. The problem of supplying the church with a ministry does not consist alone in making more ministers but in maintaining those already made.

Yet Another College to be Founded.

Southern California Disciples will establish an educational institution in their part of the state, if plans matured at the state convention and backed by a generous offer of Mr. C. C. Chapman of Fullerton are carried through. On an initial endowment fund of $250,000 Mr. Chapman announced that he would give $50,000. When this fund is completed, the city to be chosen for the location of the new school will no doubt add a large amount to it. There is some likelihood that Berkeley Bible Seminary at the state university will be moved and attached to the projected institution.

A Novel Supply Preacher.

When the committee on pulpit supply for the Sundays on which T. Alfred Fleming was absent from Miles Avenue Church, Cleveland, O., had done their best, they reported that every Sunday was arranged for some one, and for that one there was no apparent provision. "I have a talking machine that is a good one," suggested the Sunday-school superintendent. "A good idea!" exclaimed the others. Whereupon on Sunday evening the phonograph appeared in the pulpit and following the devotional exercises reproduced W. J. Bryan's address on "Immortality," which recently appeared in The Christian Century. Afterward when "I Need Thee Every Hour" was played by the phonograph, the congregation stood and joined in the song.

Working at the Problem of County Cooperation.

The Christian churches of Tipton County, Ind., held their eighteenth annual county meeting in Carr's grove, five miles west of Tipton, on last Sunday, ten congregations merging their morning and afternoon services in the union gathering. Dr. R. H. Crossfield, president of Transylvania University, was the preacher for the occasion. He showed himself a master of a popular assembly of this character. There were probably three thousand people in attendance. These annual gatherings have served most helpfully. They have made for unity, intelligent conviction and good fellowship among the churches. They have steadily developed in their power to attract great bodies of people for Christian worship and have popularized the presentation of the gospel made by the Disciples of Christ. The churches of the county join this year in the support of a regular ministry with the church at Curtisville, a recently organized congregation. There is now a Christian congregation in practically every center of population in the county except one. There are two annual gatherings of these churches. One, the popular assembly reported above, is held regularly the first Sunday in August, and an annual conference of the churches held early in February constituted by representatives from the several congregations and devoted to a consideration of the problems of the churches in relation to their local work and to their coöperation with denominational and interdenominational enterprises. The definite aim of these annual conferences is the promotion of church efficiency. The second of these conferences will be held with the church at Hobbs early in February.

Actual Step Toward Unity.

What looks like a practical step toward unity is about to be taken by Disciples and Congregationalists of Iowa City, Ia. These two congregations have had a joint committee at work on the problem for several months past. This committee has made its report, outlining a plan quite similar to that approved by the commissions on unity of the two bodies—an account of which was furnished our readers some weeks ago. The arrangement is to hold for one year, beginning Oct. 1, 1912. Sunday services and prayer-meetings are to be held in union; both pastors to be retained and the salary of each to be provided by the congregations separately; pastors to alternate in the preaching; morning services to be held in Congregational, evening in Christian church; joint expenses to be provided for through a financial committee of six, three from each congregation, auxiliary organizations to work together whenever possible; union communion service to be held bi-monthly; a standing committee on church union consisting of five from each congregation to study the problem of union, encourage united efforts among the cor-

Self Heating Iron

NEW "STANDARD" Makes and contains its own Heat. Works while it is heating, heats while it is working, saves miles of walking.

Saves Its Cost Every Month. Economical, safe, convenient. The "Standard" is stove, fuel, heat—all in one. Fire is inside. Carry it about, go where you please. Don't stay in hot kitchen; iron any place, any room, on porch or under shade tree. Go right along, one thing after another. All kinds of clothes ironed better in half the time. No waiting, no stopping to change irons. Right heat. Easily regulated. No time wasted. Iron on table all the time, one hand on the iron, the other to turn and fold the clothes. The "Standard" is neat, durable and compact; all parts within radius of iron and handle. No tanks nor fittings standing out at sides or ends to hinder or be in the way. No wires or hose attached to bother. Right size, right shape, right weight. Cheapest fuel, two cents does ordinary family ironing. Every iron tested before shipping. Ready for use when received. Price low—$4.50. Sent anywhere.

AGENTS MAKE MONEY. Men or Women. Quick, easy, sure. All year business. Experience not necessary. Sells on merit—sells itself. They buy on sight. Every home a prospect. Every woman needs it. Price low—all can afford it. HOW THEY DO SELL—Even 2 or 3 a day gives $27 to $40 a week profit; 6 sales a day is fair for an agent; some will sell a dozen in one day. Show 10 families—sell 8. Not sold in stores. Send no money. Write postal today for full description, agents' selling plan. How to get FREE SAMPLE. C. BROWN MFG. CO., 485 Brown Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

"Standard"

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL

Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 27

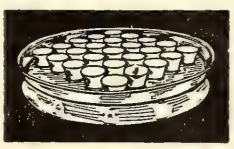
ESTABLISHED 1858

THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE INDIVIDUAL

"Noiseless"

CUSHIONED TRAYS



4 Different Features

WHY?

1st—"Noiseless"—As all cup holes are cushioned.
2nd—Dust-proof—The Trays interlock.
3rd—A short glass—no need of tipping back the head.
4th—Automatic Filler—Fills rapidly and evenly.
Does not mar the sacredness of the service.
Write for booklet. Outfit sent on trial.

DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 E. Randolph St., Dept. T., Chicago.

responding societies, and to draft a plan of permanent union to be submitted to both organizations at the end of the experimental year; an advisory committee of both pastors and six members from each congregation to direct the affairs of the joint organizations. This plan recommended by the committee will be submitted to the members of both congregations for a ballot vote closing Aug. 30. The result of this ballot will be announced on the first Sunday in September. Two questions are submitted to each member. (a) Are you in favor of this plan? (b) If a majority of your congregation are in favor of it will you support it? In both congregations there naturally appeared some opposition to union. But this has gradually disappeared through correspondence with the national commissions of the respective bodies whose specific recommendations and general literature have been used to reassure the weak-hearted or doubtful ones. Iowa City has a population of 10,000 persons, one-half of whom are Roman Catholic. The state university is located there. There has been for many years a strong sentiment among the Protestant groups for united action. The spirit of unity is already there. The Disciples' church is vigorous, numerous and substantial, perhaps somewhat stronger than the Congregational. The latter has a considerable following in the university, the membership of the former is mainly drawn from the business life of the city, although it numbers among its leading workers several professors and many students. Carlos C. Rowlison has been pastor there nearly five years. He has wrought a splendid work, building up the church in its external and internal resources. The experiment of the next year will be watched with great interest. And the hearts of many will join in the prayer that the experiment may pass into a permanent arrangement.

Minnesota News

Our people are rejoicing in a new state evangelist. C. B. Osgood, formerly of Mankato, has been appointed to this position and assumed his duties Aug. 1. His first task was the organization of a congregation at International Falls, where Evangelists Arthur Long and Hugh Cooper of Iowa held a three weeks' meeting.

The evangelist is now busy planning district conventions. The first one will be that of the Mankato District, held at Madelia, Sept. 9-10. After that will follow the conventions of the Rochester, Twin City and Wadena Districts. C. F. Martin, state Sunday-school superintendent, will also attend these conventions, and probably Miss Forster, state organizer for C. W. B. M.

The Lewisville Church has called E. C. Sarchett, formerly at Center Point, Ia., to be their minister for full time.

The Portland Ave. Church at Minneapolis will welcome their new pastor, S. G. Fisher of Trenton, Mo., Aug. 30.

The Winona Church, where O. H. Loomis ministers, is making a heroic effort to double its membership by an evangelistic meeting. The Hill, Ritchey and Rethemeyer evangelistic company of Nebraska began there July 30. About twenty additions have been reported at this office at this writing. The church built a tabernacle seating 1,000 people and are bending all their energy upon this effort. The Winona field is difficult, but it is an important city.

A committee from the state board is actively engaged in making plans for the First Annual Summer Institute to be held in connection with our 1913 state convention. This eight days' institute, brethren, will fill a long-left need and will do much to make our work effective.

H. D. Kitson, Cor. Secy.
501 Northwestern Bldg., Minneapolis.

Foreign Society Notes

The receipts of the foreign society for the first fourteen days of August amounted to $9,187, a gain over the corresponding time first year of $3,141. The churches, as churches, show a gain of $2,079. The personal gifts gained $2,264. The Sunday-schools show a small loss.

Total receipts of the year to August 14th amount to $251,499, a gain over last year of $7,433.84.

Leslie Wolfe, Manila, P. I. reports eight baptisms at the Central Congregational recently. He says a week rarely passes without several baptisms at this chapel. He states also that the Bible College was opened in June with fifteen enrolled and that they could enroll a larger number if they had room for them. Also the school at Vigan, P. I., opened with thirty-five in attendance. The brethren in the Philippines are greatly encouraged over the prospect of a new Bible College. It will be remembered that a sister provides $25,000 for this special purpose, a direct gift.

W. R. Hunt reports fourteen baptisms at Chuchow, China, upon confession of their faith in Christ. This makes a total of 144 baptized within the last few months. The Tisdale Chapel is crowded and a view of the communion service each Lord's Day morning would send a thrill of joy throughout our churches. F. M. Rains, Sec'y.

Illinois

George R. Southgate will continue in the pastorate at Colfax another year in response to the solicitations of his congregation.

Evangelist J. E. Stout's revival meeting at Hurst has concluded and is reported to have been of invaluable aid to the church though without many immediate additions.

W. O. S. Cliffe, who has served the church at Christopher, as pastor, has concluded his ministry after a residence of one year. His intention is to locate in the far west, probably California.

Sumner church is rejoicing over the liquidation of the entire indebtedness on the edifice erected two years ago. The original cost of the building was $15,000. A service celebrating the achievement was held with mortgage note burning and appropriate exercises. The pastor is J. A. Battenfield.

Petersburg church has unanimously recalled its pastor, A. I. Zeller for another year. The church here is showing marked progress under his leadership. There are frequent additions to the membership. During two recent successive Sundays there were nine additions, six or more being upon profession of faith.

Oak Grove church is a new addition to the Disciple brotherhood. It was formerly affiliated with the Christian Connection, but under the ministry of C. Stewart Linkletter has become definitely associated with the Disciples' movement. Mr. Linkletter also preaches at New Hope where fruitful results are attending his ministry.

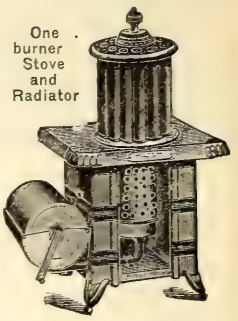
The revival meeting at Centralia in which Lew D. Hill assisted the pastor, A. L. Huff, was concluded after seventeen additions had resulted. The meeting was held on the east side of the city, hoping to reach the unchurched in that comunity.

The churches should be solicitous for the presence of their ministers at the state convention. A pastor attending conventions is doing so always on behalf of the congregation to which he ministers. Were it not for his church most pastors would not feel justified in spending the money required to attend. This being the case, and it is true that every pastor should be present for his church's sake, obviously the congregation should be thoughtful enough to defray his expenses. Let the preachers inform the churches about the state convention and let the churches see that the pastors are present without expense to the minister. This has reference to the state convention at Centralia, September 2 to 5 and the national convention at Louisville in October.

PORTABLE STOVE

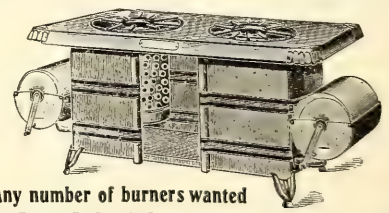
Combined Heating and Cooking

The Portable Stove will boil, bake, fry, roast—cook anything. Ideal for quick meals, washing, ironing, hot water, canning fruit, camping. Winter or summer stove. Oil automatically turned into gas furnishes a steady, intense heat, passed into radiator and distributed throughout the room; or condensed under cooking vessels the heat is absorbed by articles being cooked. Heat under control. Not Dangerous Like Gasolene. No valves, no wicks — nothing to clog, close up or get out of order. Heats rooms—slow fire or fast fire. No flues or chimneys. Light—pick it up, set it anywhere. Many Thousands of the Portable Oil Gas Stoves sent to families in all parts of the world. Men and women enthusiastic over its comfort, convenience and economy.



WHAT USERS SAY "It is so convenient and economical." Rev. P. V. Hawkins, Ohio. "It is clean, convenient, no trouble, burns steadily; perfect baking." Henry Schilling, Ill. "For Baking it has no equal." V. E. Bostwick, O. "Bakes pies, cakes, bread; never saw nicer baking done." Mrs. O. Thompson, O. "Never cooked meals so quick and easy." James Newark, Mich. "Baked, cooked, washed, ironed—can do anything my range does." Mrs. M. E. King, Ky. "Cooked for a family of 6 for 5 days with 3 quarts of oil; they are great time and fuel savers." H. M. Irey, Ia. "Heated a room when the temperature was 10 degrees below zero with one radiator." Wm. Baering, Ind. "With the radiator it soon warms up our dining room." J. F. Lisson, Calif. "We are using it to heat our office." McPherson Co., R. I. "Only used a half a gallon of oil last week for cooking, baking and ironing." E. N. Helwig, Ont. CAN YOU DO WITHOUT the Portable Oil Gas Stove? Save time, trouble, anxiety, annoyance, expense, drudgery, fuel bills. Get rid of kindling, coal, wood, dirt, ashes—all the nuisances. ALWAYS READY FOR USE. Practical invention, simple, durable. Lasts for years.

PRICE IS LOW $3.25 and up; any number of burners. Give it a trial. Not sold in stores. Send no money. Write today for full description.



Any number of burners wanted

AGENTS MAKE MONEY QUICK. Easy. Sure. Show Stove MAKING GAS—people stop, look, excited—want it—buy. B. L. Huested, Mich. "Was out one day, sold 11 stoves." W. E. Baird, S. C. "You have the best stove on market; sold 9 in 2 hours! I do not fear competition." (first ordered 1—200 since.) Chas. P. Schroeder, Conn., bought 40 stoves one order. Head & Frazer, Tex., write: "Sell like hot cakes; sold 50 stoves in our town." J. W. Hunter, Ala., secured 1—tested it—ordered 200 since. J. G. R. Gauthreaux, La., ordered 1; 155 since. So they go. These men make money. You have the same chance. You should make from $10 to $15 a day. Write for our selling plan. Do it today. Send no money.

The World Mfg. Co., 1665 World Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

Secretary's Letter.

First Church, East St. Louis, is prospering so well under the leadership of Meade E. Dutt that they have extended him an indefinite call to remain with them, and he has accepted. Their Sunday-school is flour-

$20 to $50 and Expenses Weekly.

NO EXPERIENCE REQUIRED. NO CAPITAL.

$1,000 to $2,500 Annual Income WRITE US TODAY

COSTS NOTHING TO INVESTIGATE. WRITE US FOR OUR PROPOSITION ANYWAY.

Let Us Start You. Big Profits.

To Show You What Others Are Doing We Quote the Expressions of a Few Who Have Made Money in the Plating Business:

Mr. Reed, Ohio, made $83.16 THE FIRST 3 DAYS. Mr. Cox, Illinois, writes: "GET ALL I CAN DO;" plate 30 sets a day. Elegant business: Customers happy. "Mr. Woodward earns $170.00 a month." M. L. Smith, Pennsylvania, says, "GOT $301.27 plating in 2 weeks." (used small outfit). Geo. P. Crawford writes: "Made $7 a day." J. S. Mills, a farmer, writes: "EASILY MADE $5 A DAY PLATING." Thos. Baker, school teacher, 21 years, writes: "I made $9.80 profit one day, $9.35 another." Albert McWethy, N. Y., "EARNED EVENINGS OVER $20, with no soliciting." H. H. Ward, Tenn., "EARNED $5.00 A DAY spare hours from my printing business." Chas. Branther: "I made IN ONE DAY, $17.85 PROFIT." Sam Brown, Me.: "Plating ODD HOURS, MADE $37 profit in a week." E. B. Woodbury, old soldier: "Plated 1800 pieces table ware, AVERAGING $6 PER DAY PROFIT." E. L. Gracier, teacher Philippine Islands: "I make $3 daily, besides teaching." R. T. Bartlett: "I made $2 per hour spare time." D. F. Fuller: "$5.25 first day." W. H. Davis, writes: "I get all the plating I can do." B. G. Vaughn, S. C.: "I conscientiously recommend the Royal Plater—do splendid work—average $5 per day." J. H Carrier, N. Y.: "I made $6 IN 3 HOURS spare time." J. Anderson N. D.: "You can get plating to do at every house." H. H. Bender, Mich.: "There is a great demand for replating." R. R. Howard, Mo.: "HAVE MORE WORK THAN I CAN DO." H. H. Ward, Tenn.: "Gray & Co.. are thoroughly reliable and all who patronize them will receive fair treatment." Geo. E. Wilson, N. Y.: "Am now making nice living in the evenings. I make some weeks $20."

H. E. Woodward, of Pa., writes: "I have all the work I can do. I have two solicitors. It is very easy to learn to do plating. I have done from $8 to $10 worth of work per day. I can do more as I gain in practice. I thank you for the gentlemanly way in which you have treated me since I commenced to deal with you."

SHOP OUTFIT FOR GOLD, SILVER AND NICKEL PLATING.

WHAT IS THE USE OF YOUR SLAVING LONGER FOR SOME ONE ELSE?

Why not start a business for yourself, reap all the profits and get a standing in your locality?

If you are in some one else's employ, remember he will continue to pay you a salary only so long as he can make profit out of your labor.

In this era every bright man is looking to own a business, to employ help, and to make money.

It is just as easy to make money for yourself as it is to coin money for some grasping employer, who pays you a small salary each week.

If you are making less than $30 weekly it will pay you to read this announcement, for it will not appear again in this paper.

If you read it and take advantage of the opportunity offered, you will never regret it. To own a business yourself is certainly your ambition.

We start you in a profitable business. Teach you absolutely free how to conduct it.

It is no trouble to make $5 to $15 a day at home or traveling, taking orders, using, selling and appointing agents for PROF. GRAY'S Latest Improved, Guaranteed Plating Machines and Outfits. It is a practical, complete, scientific outfit for doing the finest plating on WATCHES, JEWELRY, KNIVES, FORKS, SPOONS, CASTORS, TABLEWARE OF ALL KINDS, BICYCLES, SEWING MACHINES, SWORDS, REVOLVERS, HARNESS AND BUGGY TRIMMINGS, metal specialties; in fact all kinds of metal goods. HEAVY THICK PLATE EVERY TIME. GUARANTEED TO WEAR FOR YEARS. No experience necessary.

There is really a wonderful demand for replating. You can do business at nearly every house, store, office or factory. Almost every family has from $2 to $10 worth of tableware to be plated, besides watches, jewelry, bicycles, etc.

Every boarding house, hotel, restaurant, college or public institution has from $5 to $75 worth of work to be plated.

Plate some articles for your friends and neighbors by Prof. Gray's Process and it quickly proves to them its genuineness and merit, and that your plating is much thicker, will wear better and longer than a large percentage of the new goods. Your trade is then established, and within a short time you will have all the goods you can plate.

THE ROYAL OUTFIT.

Prof. Gray's Famous Discovery.

THE NEW DIPPING PROCESS is the latest, quickest, easiest method known. Tableware plated by dipping, taken out instantly, with a fine, brilliant, beautiful surface. All ready to deliver to customers. THICK PLATE EVERY TIME, WEARS 5 to 10 YEARS. A BOY PLATES 100 to 300 pieces of tableware daily, from $10 to $30 worth of work. Profits almost 1000 per cent. Goods come out finely finished. No polishing, grinding or work necessary, either before or after plating.

ROYAL OUTFIT IN OPERATION.

YOU CAN DO PLATING SO CHEAP.

The best part of the plating business is that it increases fast and is permanent, and every person can afford to have their goods plated.

You will not need to canvass. Agents write they have all the goods they can plate. People bring it for miles around. You can hire boys cheap to do your plating, the same as we do, and solicitors to gather work for a small per cent. Put a small advertisement or two in your local paper and you will have all the plating you can do. The plating business is honest and legitimate. Plating on our machines gives perfect satisfaction. Wears for years: customers are always delighted and recommend you and your work.

We teach you everything, furnish all receipts, formulas and trade secrets free, so that failure should be impossible, and any one who follows our directions and teachings can do fine plating with a little practice, and become a money maker.

We are an old established firm, have been in business 20 years, know exactly what is required, furnish complete outfits, the same as we ourselves use, and customers always have the benefit of our experience. We are responsible and guarantee everything. Reader, here is the chance of a life time to go in business for yourself. We Start you. Now is the time to make money.

WE SEND SAMPLE PLATING FREE

together with our new plan and proposition, also valuable information how plating is done. Write for FREE sample anyway.

GRAY & CO., Plating Works, 1249 Gray Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

ishing and one of their young men will study for the ministry. A large number of men are being actively enlisted in the church and Sunday-school work.

Walnut Grove church in Coles county has been reorganized and considerably revived. It is still very weak but wide awake. If a good pastor-evangelist could hold them a meeting for the offerings he would be doing a fine service. What church will loan its preacher and keep up his salary as a missionary investment? Address Chas. Nixon, Charleston, Ill.

J. W. Robbing, of Boston, Mass., formerly of Illinois, has located with the church at New Bedford.

C. Lee Stauffer, of Dallas City, will locate at Stronghurst September 1.

Frank L. Moore has decided to remain with the church at Abingdon. He could not leave in the face of their urgent appeals for him to stay, and they will spend about $5,000 in extensive improvements on their house.

The time for the gathering of the Illinois hosts in their sixty-second annual convention is drawing near. The date is September 2-5, and the place is Centralia, in Marion county. The splendid program was published last week. Read it over again.

If your church was a contributor to State and District Missions this year, since August 17, 1911, you are entitled to one delegate for each 100 members or fraction thereof. Be sure to appoint and send them, and all the visitors you can besides.

And don't forget to send the dollar from your church for convention expenses. We do not take missionary money for this expense but ask each church for one dollar. Send it to our treasurer—a bill or your personal check—or take it with you to the convention, hand it to the registration committee and take a receipt.

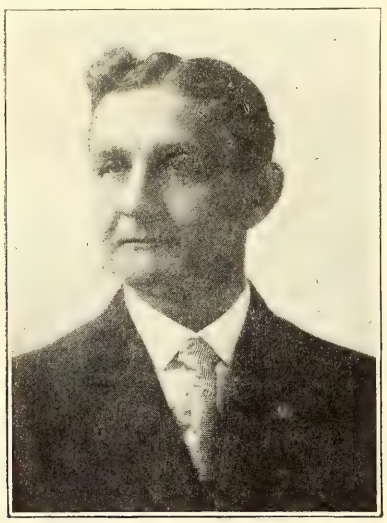
Quite a number of our good churches are neglecting their May offering for Home Missions. This ought not to be. Take it soon as possible. Send it to the American Christian Missionary Society, Carew Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

J. Fred Jones, Field Secretary.
W. D. Dewesse, Office Sec'y-Treas.
Bloomington, Ill.

In Sight of the Million

The race for one million dollars for the Church Extension Fund is getting more interesting every day as the time for closing the books draws nigh. Gifts from individuals for the first ten months amount to $61,427.70, a gain of $20,260.19 over the corresponding period of the preceding year. From churches the gifts amount to $11,027.25, a gain of $1,684.05, making a total offering for the first ten months of $72,454.95 and a total gain of $30,884.24. On August 10, $35,500 was needed to push the fund over the million mark. The largest offering the churches ever made in a single year was a little over $30,000 to Church Extension. If the churches will make a $5,000 gain in the coming September offering, the million mark will be reached by September 30. Use the best day in September for your offering, and remember books close Sept. 30. Order supplies now from G. W. Muckley, 603 New England Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.



George W. Muckley, Secretary Church Extension Society.

A-t-t-e-n-t-i-o-n Disciples

While in attendance at your

International Convention

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 15-22

Col. C. W. Fowler will give you a great military treat on the drill-grounds of the famous

Kentucky Military Institute

where boys are trained in the open for strong, quick-brained, red-blooded, four-square men—just outside the limits at Lyndon, Kentucky.

WRITE ME NOW WHETHER YOU ARE COMING

GEORGE A. JONES, Secretary.

Care First Christian Church, Louisville, Ky.

Ten Big Reason[illegible] Why

Sharp Rev C M Dec12
5522 Kimbark Ave

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are [illegible] adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—a dozen leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

EVERY QUARTER ADDS TO THE NUMBER OF SCHOOLS INTRODUCING THESE LESSONS.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Sharp Rev C M Dec12
5522 Kimbark Ave

Vol. XXIX August 27, 1912 Number 35

THE WEDDING CEREMONY
BY WILLIAM E. BARTON

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI
BY IDA WITHERS HARRISON

FOUR HYPOTHETICAL QUESTIONS ANSWERED IN AN EDITORIAL

CHICAGO

Foreign Society Notes

The good steamship Nile, sailing from San Francisco, September 7th, will bear D. L. Kline and wife and two children, T. A. Young and wife, Miss Mary Kelly, Miss Minnie Vautrin and O. F. Barcus. Miss Kelly, Miss Vautrin and O. F. Barcus go to China, Dr. Kline and wife go to the Philippines, T. A. Young and wife go to Japan.

Guy W. Sarvis, writing from Nanking, China, concerning the famine, says that one of the most promising methods of relief in that section has been undertaken in the form of a colonization scheme. All over that part of China the hills are uncultivated and produce nothing save grass and scrub which is never alloyed to grow into trees. Professor Bailie of the University of Nanking has secured the co-operation of the government and is starting a colony and teaching the people to cultivate the hills. His idea is to settle poor families on this waste land and develop agriculture and live stock. It is believed that the experiment will lead to great benefit both to the poor and to the farmers in general.

Miss Kate V. Johnson, missionary at Tokyo, Japan, writes as follows: "I have twelve girls now in my home, three of them very little ones, and our work prospers. We had five baptisms recently."

The splendid church at Winchester, Ky., J. H. MacNeill, minister, and J. Harry Allen, superintendent of missions, sent $850 for Foreign Missions.

Our Brother Alexander, Los Angeles, Cal., a manufacturer, donates a hospital outfit for Africa at the value of $600. We appreciate this gift very much and express our sincere thanks on behalf of the needy workers on the Congo.

Benevolent Association News

The Association has just received another good annuity gift. This gift came from an unexpected source. It was given by a good man who wants a part of his money to be used finally for the benefit of the "Lord's poor," but who wants to protect his daughter while she lives. He puts his money, therefore, where he feels that it will be safe, and on terms which will make it easy and safe to the Association and his daughter. He has invested safely and generously.

The Christian Orphan's Home of St. Louis, has a number of very attractive boys that are in need of good family homes. Among them is a very attractive boy less than one year old. "Our John" is bright, healthy and full of promise. He needs the blessing of a good home and would bestow a blessing in return.

Not many days ago a letter was received from one of our old preachers asking for a home. He is one of the choicest of our "Old Guard." At one time he occupied the front rank in our ministerial force. He served the best churches and was in demand on our convention programs. He is now an old man and absolutely dependent, with no member of his family able to take care of him. He is certainly deserving of a good home at the hands of churches and brethren who have been blessed by his sacrifice. The Association will receive him. Brethren, will you help it support him?

Word comes from a Kansas church to the effect that "dear old Aunt Becky is in the county house." She has been a life-long member of the church. The little church to which she belongs is unable to support her. She begs to be taken from the "county house." The church is not able to raise even the little admission fee of $100. Surely the Association will be approved if it takes her into one of its Homes for the Aged without the admission fee. Where is it to come from if the brethren do not supply it?

Charles Medbury, the popular minister of the University Place Church, Des Moines, is to be the Association's speaker at Louisville. His heart responds warmly to the holy ministry in which the Association is engaged. He will doubtless make a great speech.

JAS. H. MOHORTER.

—Descendants of John and Priscilla Alden —the pilgrim lovers immortalized by Longfellow—held their twelfth annual reunion at Duxbury, Mass., last week at the old family homestead. The family is planning a memorial to John and Priscilla in the form of a building to be erected close to their old homestead. There are now 3,000 members of this branch of the Aldens in this country.

Its high standards and efficient service has won the good will of thousands

Parents, our attractive offer makes the education of your daughter possible.

William Woods College

Girls, our college features make going to school delightful — you should come.

FULTON, MO. The Successful School for Young Women 23rd YEAR

Accredited thorough courses. Choice faculty. European trained teachers in Music and Expression. Department of Modern Languages under Fraulein Luise Bucher, from Munich, Germany. Unusual advantages in Art, Domestic Science, etc. Buildings modern and equipped. Beautiful shaded campus of ample proportions; situation high and salubrious. Gymnasium—outdoor sports. Cultured, happy home school life. Attractive features of the best colleges. The more you learn about W. W. C. the more you will want to come.

School open for reservation of rooms. Fall Semester begins September 18

Write for full information. Address President Joseph L. Garvin, Desk "Y."

1869 — HAMILTON COLLEGE FOR WOMEN — 1912

LEXINGTON, KENTUCKY.

HUBERT GIBSON SHEARIN, A. M., Ph. D. (Yale), President.

Standardized Junior College courses under a faculty of twenty-nine, all graduates of leading American and European institutions. Faculty of seven for Music, Expression and Art.

Five modern buildings. Complete gymnasium, laboratories and libraries. Home care. Delightful dormitories. Cultural surroundings and scholarly ideals.

The forty-fourth session begins September 9, 1911. For catalogue address THE SECRETARY.

An Ideal School for Girls and Young Women SIXTY-SECOND YEAR

Christian College

Historic old College with five large, modern buildings. Dorsey Memorial Hall, a $36,000 building, completed. 25 College-trained, experienced teachers. Schools of Music, Art, Oratory, Business, Domestic Science. A Junior college course leads to an A. B. degree. College-preparatory and Special Courses are offered. Careful attention to health and to character-training. Twenty-acre campus and athletic field. Home care. Best patronage. Certificate admits to Eastern colleges. For illustrated catalogue address

MRS. LUELLA W. ST. CLAIR-MOSS, President, COLUMBIA, MO.

Next Session begins September 17th.

How About Attending College This Year?

We want the name of every young man and every young woman who is considering this most important question. We believe we can show them that

DRAKE UNIVERSITY

Offers Great Advantages

It is located in the best residence district in Des Moines—the best city in the West. Surroundings clean and wholesome. Good influences surround the boy or girl who attends Drake University.

Courses of Study: Liberal Arts (including Courses for Primary, Kindergarten, Grade and High School Teachers and Students in Domestic Science), Law, Medicine, Dentistry, Bible, Music, Painting and Drawing, Dramatic Art, Etc. Thoroughly prepared teachers in all departments. The best of equipment. The Drake Stadium, one of the finest athletic fields in the country.

Write for catalogue and full particulars. Any question you may desire to ask will be answered cheerfully.

HILL M. BELL, President,

Drake University. Des Moines, Iowa

The Christian Century
CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT . . . . . EDITORS

Christina Rossetti

STERM'S FAMOUS CHAPTER ON SNAKES in Ireland consists of one sentence, and that is, "There are no snakes in Ireland."

An equally brief essay might be written on Woman in Literature, for in a sense, there is no such thing as woman in literature—there should be neither male nor female there. As an illustration of that, we are happy to note that the words "authoress" and "poetess" are well nigh extinct. It is said that Christina Rossetti was the first woman who earned the title poet from the English world of letters—before that every woman who versified was put in a class apart as a poetess.

Her death, near the close of the past century, is too recent to characterize her calmly. She was the youngest child in possibly the most gifted family that London ever knew. She was favored both by heredity and environment. Her grandfather, Dr. Polidori, translated Milton into Italian; her father, Gabriel Rossetti, was a patriot, a poet and an interpreter of Dante to his generation; her brother, Dante Gabriel Rossetti, was one of the most rarely gifted men of this or any age—the leader and inspirer of the Pre-Raphaelite school of art, and a poet of the poets. It is an epoch in one's life to read his "Blessed Damozel" and his wonderful sonnets.

Her face is seen in many of her brother's paintings; in his famous "Girlhood of Mary Virgin" it is idealized; but in others her ripe, full beauty is shown at its prime. She was the queen of the Pre-Raphaelites, and had the men whose names have since become famous at her feet; but homage and praise affected her but little. She dwelt in an atmosphere of her own creating, and had a religion as exalted as a saint's. She lived with two maiden aunts, one of whom served as a nurse in the Crimean War. These gentle old ladies lived to be over eighty and were devotedly tended by their niece till their death.

She published her first book, "The Goblin Market," in 1866, the same year that Swinburne's "Poems and Ballads" came out. Was it a mere coincidence that the sweet, mystical singing was heard against the pagan passion of his poetry? That rare and subtle book, "The Prince's Progress," came next; then "Sing-Song, a Pageant," and a number of devotional works.

I cannot adequately convey the spell her poetry casts over one. In her longer poems, where she tells some deep truth in the form of a story, she is a symbolist; in the "Goblin Market" she tells the old, old story of tasting the forbidden fruit, but in her exquisite narrative the goblins tempt a young girl, instead of the serpent tempting Mother Eve. In "The Prince's Progress" she tells of the soul "meaning well but of purpose weak," who starts on his journey to his waiting and watching bride, but who is betrayed into wanderings after unworthy things, and when at last he reaches his princess, it is when she is borne from her palace,

> "With covered face, the feet before,
> This that coming takes his breath!
> The Bride not seen, to be seen no more,
> Save of Bridegroom, Death.
> Veiled figures carrying her,
> Sweep slowly by, yet make no stir;
> There is a smell of spice and myrrh,
> A bride chant, burdened with her name."

The lovely "Bride Chant" is too long to quote here, but the whole poem is set in that indefinable, mystical atmosphere that we feel in her brother's painting and poetry. Her writings are full of maiden figures—sometimes a princess, sometimes a lady in her castle, sometimes a "wave-haired" milkmaid, sometimes the girls in the cornfield—but always having an aroma of grace and beauty and dreamful sadness.

Her songs have the genuine lyric touch that makes them all but sing themselves. I wish I could quote "My Heart Is Like a Singing Bird," and "O Roses for the Flush of Youth," but space forbids. I will give one which is characteristic, for she dwells much on love and death:

> "When I am dead, my dearest,
> Sing no sad songs for me;
> Plant thou no roses at my head,
> Nor shady cypress tree.
> Be the green grass above me,
> With showers and dewdrops wet;
> And if thou wilt, remember,
> And if thou wilt, forget."

Her devotional poetry has a sincerity, a yearning, an intensity that sometimes is almost startling—it seems as though she laid bare the experiences of her own heart for our helping. Here is an example:

> Love and love not; Lord, it breaks my heart
> To love and not to love.
> Thou veiled within thy glory, gone apart
> Into thy shrine, which is above,
> Dost thou not love me, Lord, or care
> For this mine ill?
> I love thee, here or there,
> I will accept thy broken heart,—lie still!
>
> Lord, it was well with me in time gone by
> That cometh not again,
> When I was fresh and cheerful, who but I?
> I fresh, I cheerful! worn with pain,
> Now out of sight, and out of heart;
> O Lord, how long!
> I watch thee as thou art,
> I will accept thy fainting heart,—be strong!
>
> "Lie still," "be strong" today, but, Lord, tomorrow!
> What of tomorrow, Lord?
> Shall there be rest from toil, be truce from sorrow?
> Be living green upon the sward,
> Now but a barren grove to me,
> Be joy or sorrow?
> Did I not die for thee?
> Do I not live for thee? Leave me tomorrow!

Christina Rossetti's reputation is growing year by year; once she was known to but a limited few as the sister of Dante Gabriel Rossetti. Now she has a widening circle of readers and admirers, who prize her for her own exalted mind and rare gift of musical expression.

I. W. H.

Social Survey

Snap-shot of Congressional Situation

Play to party politics seems to be running rife in Congress. Juggling with big issues for the purpose of making political capital has checked almost all progress, even in such important matters as appropriation bills. The legislative bill, which carried the appropriation for the ordinary maintenance of the legislative, judicial and executive departments of the government, is still held up and the government functions are carried on by temporary continuances of the appropriations of the last session. The legislative bill was once passed, but received the Presidential veto because of two provisions, one abolishing the recently created Commerce Court, and the other fixing a seven year tenure of office for government employés under the civil service. Congress attempted to pass the bill over the veto, but failed, and now proposes to slice off the seven year tenure of office clause and send it back to the President. It is unlikely Mr. Taft will agree to the abolition of the Commerce Court, which is a pet of his own creation, and the bill is likely again to be vetoed. Upon the tariff question the President and congress seem to be at the widest divergence. Bills revising several of the schedules of the Aldrich tariff have been passed by both houses and either have or will receive the chief executive's veto. Mr. Taft bases his action on the fact that the reductions in the tariff are unscientific, not having been made through an investigation of the tariff commission. He says the reductions, in many cases, are such as will do injury to our business. The lower house, however, took the bull by the horns and passed the revision of the iron and steel schedule and the wool schedule over the veto of the President. The naval appropriation bill is still held up, but there is prospect that it will soon be taken care of. For many weeks the Democrats in the house held out for their "no battleship" program, while the upper house as firmly contended for the usual two battleships. Both houses recently agreed in caucus to accept the one battleship compromise which will release the appropriation bill. The question of free passage of vessels of American entry is still blocking the way of the Panama canal bill. Both houses appear to favor free passage of certain classes of American vessels and feel that such action would not be in violation of the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty. But the questions of whether railroad controlled vessels, trust controlled vessels, vessels engaged in commerce with our insular possessions, and those engaged in our foreign commerce shall be beneficiaries of free passage or not, has proved a knotty problem to solve and as a result the administration bill for the canal zone is still under hot discussion.

Success of Parcels Post Legislation

The incredible has happened! On Aug. 16 the house of representatives voiced its approval of a parcels post plan by an almost unanimous vote, to be exact, 218 to 4. For years the great express companies, which are an example of about as complete a monopoly as the nation's business affords, have prevented parcels post legislation from even serious likelihood of passage. But public demand triumphed, and it is almost certain that the country will soon have the coveted service. The senate recently passed a bill providing for a parcels post with what is known as the Bourne-Bristow zone system of charges. That bill was criticized in the lower house in part because it limited the weight of parcels to eleven pounds, because it does not provide for insurance and indemnification, and because it failed to provide for a collect on delivery system, both of carriage charges and the value of the article shipped. The house bill contains the Lewis plan for parcels post, which is similar to the Bourne plan in some ways. But it corrected the above faults as seen by the house. In brief the Lewis plan is: Parcels not exceeding fifteen pounds in weight shall be carried in the mails at the following rates: To any point in a county, or to a point in a contiguous county not over 100 miles distant, 5 cents for the first pound and 1 cent for each additional pound. To any point outside of this local zone, 6 cents for the first and 2 cents for each additional pound for the first 150 miles from point of consignment to destination, and an additional 1 cent a pound for each additional 150 miles. No charge for any distance shall exceed 12 cents a pound, and the present rate for four ounces or less shall be retained. Packages may be sent with the price of article and postage to be collected on delivery by the postmaster. In all except the local zone, distances shall be computed from county seat to county seat. Board of three transportation experts is to direct operation of the system. Joint committee of three senators and three representatives is directed to investigate further the facility of a general parcels post, or postal express, and report at the next session of congress. Loss or injury of shipments shall be indemnified by insurance. The bill is now in conference of the two houses to adjust the differences, but will doubtless be returned and passed finally within a few days. The President has practically signified approval of the measure.

Suppression of the Bubonic Plague

A new and striking example of the efficiency of medical science to repel one of the most deadly forms of disease plague from our shores has been afforded for several weeks. The strict measures taken by the public health service have successfully prevented the bubonic plague, which has broken out in Cuba and Porto Rico, from spreading to our mainland. As is nearly always the case, the plague started in China—its practically inexhaustible storehouse. The officials in the health service have carefully watched its progress across the Pacific and around the lower end of South America, jumping from island to island and port to port. Its sudden appearance in the West Indies was the signal for prompt action. No incoming vessel is now allowed to land until it has been thoroughly fumigated to rid it of rats, which are the principal carriers of the disease germs. All vessels lying at anchor at any pier are required to have large rat shields on all hawsers and to keep guards at gang planks to prevent rats from landing. At the same time, war on rats has been declared in all coast cities, and a tremendous slaughter of rodents is the result in addition to keeping off the much-dreaded disease. Fifty cases of bubonic plague were discovered in the islands to the south of us, but so far as is known not a single case has broken out in the United States. This record is, to say the least, wonderful. The plague has not even caused any considerable alarm in this country, while but a few years ago the discovery of the disease in such close proximity would have filled the country with apprehension. The disease was then little understood. Its methods of communication were unknown, and it broke out in the most unexpected places, filling whole nations with terror. Then came a series of wonderful discoveries in the medical world in which the micro-germ which causes the disease was discovered and positively identified as germs carried in the bodies of rat-fleas. Rats, then, are responsible for spreading the disease, and again and again it has been proven that where rats are systematically killed or driven out, the plague cannot go. Thanks to that discovery, our eastern coast is today free both from the disease and the fear of it.

Labor Sunday in the Churches

Labor is the chief program of life. Its problems are related not only to commercial but social and religious interests. All questions affecting the rights and duties of labor fall within the legitimate province of the church for solution. In the new outlook which the church has had in recent years from the standpoint of social service, all labor movements have taken on a new meaning and awakened a practical religious interest. One of the most commendable things done to unify the labor interests with the aims of the church was the movement inaugurated seven years ago to institute a labor Sunday preceding Labor Day observance. Now the Federal Council Commission of the Church and Social Service recommends that churches of every name everywhere observe such a Sunday in the interest of the common cause of the kingdom. Already some 20,000 pastors have taken up the matter and will observe the day. This year, Sept. 1 will be the day observed. The whole movement is grounded in the thought that Labor Day should mean more to the nation than any celebration by the organized crafts. The church as a central fact in the community life has a part to do in dignifying labor and showing its relation to every man's social and spiritual welfare. The day observed by the church should be made much of and every legitimate means used to bring labor interests and the church into cordial sympathy. Every interest of labor should have some practical share in the program of the day and demonstrate to the community that religion and service are one and mutually dependent one upon the other. A helpful leaflet giving suggestions and subjects for the day is issued by the commission and may be had by writing to the secretary, Rev. C. S. Macfarland, 215 Fourth Ave., New York City. So great an influence as this for the good of both the church and organized labor should be taken advantage of by every minister, if not on the day indicated, as soon thereafter as possible.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT.
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—SILAS JONES, IDA WITHERS HARRISON, ORVIS F. JORDAN, ELLIS B. BARNES.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy, 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance (unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

United Religious Press Building
700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

The Dignity of Labor

The true epic of our times is not "arms and the man," but "tools and the man," an infinitely wider kind of epic. The glory of the warrior is passing. His code of honor is being discredited. His idea of national greatness is becoming absurd. The producer is taking the place of the destroyer.

By labor a man earns the right to look the world in the face and demand protection for his person and his property. The idler lives by the grace of society. The laborer has something to give in return for what he asks. He helps to make available for all the bounty of nature.

Labor makes possible gratitude to God and to man. The laborer and the laborer alone is able to value aright the gifts of God. He takes the raw material and converts it into something useful for man. He learns that good work requires good material. The idler has no conception of the cost of civilization. He cannot understand that the output of mine and factory is something more than dead matter, that it represents human life.

Idleness is the mother of ignorance. The idle man may be shrewd; wisdom is denied him. Sydney Smith said with truth: "There are many ways of being frivolous, only one way of being intellectually great; that is honest labor." True, certain kinds of toil have seemed to be incompatible with intellectual vigor. Overwork leaves the laborer without ambition or strength for mental culture. That some of the world's work is done with small intellectual expenditure and that many persons are overworked cannot change the fact that work is at the basis of intelligence.

Labor builds character. The idler may be good-natured and free from vicious habits; he cannot be a good man. Goodness is more than agreeableness and the absence of gross sin. It is the habit of doing what is needed to promote individual and social welfares. "Avoid idleness," says Jeremy Taylor, "and fill all the spaces of thy time with severe and useful employment; for lust easily creeps in at those emptinesses where the soul is unemployed and the body is at ease; for no easy, healthful, idle person was ever chaste if he could be tempted; but of all employments bodily labor is the most useful, and the greatest benefit for driving away the devil."

That labor may reach its full dignity, the laborer must be trained for his task. Work poorly done is disgraceful to the man who does it and to the state that has allowed him to grow up without trained hands and cultivated mind. The prosperity of a nation depends upon the ability of its workers to use its natural resources to advantage. Ignorant, low-priced labor is the most expensive. The wares produced by ignorance are not in demand. The free man is he who does his work so well that the world cannot do without him. The free man produces the free, strong nation.

"Two men I honor and no third," says Thomas Carlyle. "First, the toil-worn craftsman that with earth-made implements conquers the earth and makes her man's. Venerable to me is the hard hand, crooked, coarse, wherein, notwithstanding, lies a cunning virtue, indefeasibly royal, as of the scepter of this planet. Venerable, too, is the rugged face, all weather-tanned, besoiled, with its rude intelligence; for it is the face of a man living manlike.

"A second man I honor, and still more highly: him who is seen toiling for the spiritually indispensable; not only bread, but the bread of life. Is not he too in his duty, endeavoring towards inward harmony, revealing this by act or by word through all his outward endeavors, be they high or low? Highest of all, when his outward and his inward endeavor are one; when we can name him artist; not earthly craftsman only, but inspired thinker, who with heaven-made implements conquers heaven for us!

"Unspeakably touching it is, however, when I find both dignities united; and he that must toil outwardly for the lowest of man's wants is also toiling inwardly for his highest. Sublimer in this world know I nothing than a peasant saint, could such now anywhere be met with. Such a one will take thee back to Nazareth itself; thou wilt see the splendor of heaven spring forth from the humblest depths of earth, like a light shining in great darkness."

Great as are these words of Carlyle, the disciple of Jesus has something greater to offer in praise of labor, and that is the example of the Master. Jesus was a worker. He chose as his disciples workers. Where he is appreciated, the man who works is honored. His missionaries are apostles of labor. [Midweek service, Sept. 4. Gen. 3:19; Lev. 19:13; Ecc. 5:12; Jas. 5:1-6.]

S. J.

Some Hypothetical Questions

SUBMITTED TO THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY.

I. If you had been present as an apostle on the day of Pentecost and had preached as the apostles preached: "Repent and be baptized every one of you, etc.," and if there had been one who asked you the question: "What do you mean by 'baptized?'" what would you have answered him?

II. If, on one of the "days" thereafter, when the Lord was adding to the "church" daily those who were being saved, one had been found to have only been "sprinkled," but had believed and was penitent, would you have counted him as a member of the church in Jerusalem?

III. If you had lived at the same time, and had been associated with Alexander Campbell, what reformation would you have urged and in what respects would you have claimed there was need of reform seeing that the members of the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Congregational churches were already Christians and their churches were churches of Christ?

IV. Suppose I am preaching for a Christian church of forty members, and I get them to agree to admit "pious unimmersed"; shortly thereafter sixty such are admitted to membership; the unimmersed are then in the majority; for some reason I resign; the question of my successor is discussed and the name of a Methodist preacher is proposed and he is elected. He begins his work and in a short time proposes that the church be attached to the Methodist conference and be known as the First Methodist Church. This also is carried. Would this procedure be "all right" in your opinion?

I believe these questions are pertinent and fair. They can be answered briefly. I presume you will have no hesitancy in doing so.

Corona, Cal. J. D. HOUSTON.

I.

The Christian Century would have explained to such an inquirer that to be baptized meant to be inducted or initiated into the Church of Christ, the community of those who believed in Christ and who thus constituted His "body." Peter's exhortation might just as well have been worded thus: "Repent and be initiated into the Church of Christ, every one of you, for the remission of your sins and you too shall receive the gift of the holy spirit."

II.

This hypothesis is conceivable only by a strain of the imagination. It is highly improbable that a convert at that time would have been sprinkled. Custom had so well established immersion as the form by which initiation into a religious community was administered that it would occur neither to candidate nor apostle to administer the rite in any other way. The very name "baptism" by which this sacramental initiation was denoted had been taken over from the form by which it was traditionally performed. The root meaning of the word "baptize" was "immerse." Its use in the sense of "initiate" or "induct" was an instance of the sign giving its own name to the thing signified—a not uncommon phenomenon in the development of language.

So that when, in the opening days of the church, the converts were being baptized, it is unlikely that any variation in the formality of administration would have been adopted. We would naturally have suspected, therefore, that deception or indirection of some sort was being practiced if one should claim that his initiation into the Church had been solemnized by sprinkling. And we would naturally insist upon his baptism being made regular before counting him a member.

Fortunately in the circumstances of that day he would himself be even more desirous to make his initiation regular than would the Church that he do so.

It should be made clear that the hypothetical person described in the question is in an entirely different situation from unimmersed Christians of today. A historic departure from the primitive manner of initiation has since then been made. A great majority of Christians are taught to regard sprinkling as regular. Much confusion and uncertainty prevail with respect to the primitive form, both as to the question of fact and as to the importance of the fact.

Besides, the status of modern unimmersed Methodists, Presbyterians and the rest is not a subject of doubt. They are members of the Church of Christ, recognized by us all as such.

III.

If we had lived in Alexander Campbell's time we would have urged the same great reform that we urge today and that he and his father, Thomas Campbell, urged in their day.

We would have declared, as did they, that the divided condition of the Church of Christ is a scandal to the cause of Christ; that it betokens a misconception of the gospel and a certain disloyalty to the Church's Head.

We would have pointed out, as did they, how impotent a divided Church is to bring in the Kingdom of God in the world.

We would have made it clear, as did they, that in the great essentials of Christianity the divided churches of Christ are in agreement; that the things over which they differ are non-essentials.

We would have made a plea, as did they, for unity upon the basis of these essential evangelical agreements, allowing freedom to individual opinion on the non-vital things over which the Church is divided.

We would have pointed out two methods, as did they, by which these essentials could be determined: First, an examination of the basis of unity upon which rested the Church described in the New Testament; and, secondly, an examination of the fundamental unities of the living Church of Christ.

We should have been perfectly confident, as were they, that if we followed either of these methods without error we would reach the same conclusion, because the living Church of Christ is the New Testament Church—if it were not it could not be the Church of Christ; and we would use both methods of finding the true basis of unity so that the results of each method would reveal and check our errors in the use of the other.

We should have found, precisely as did they, that the ground of unity in both the New Testament Church and the living Church was common, personal faith in and loyalty to the Person, Jesus Christ, and we should have declared, as did they, that it was a sin against Him for those who accepted Him and whom He had received to refuse to receive one another.

We would have traced the whole sectarian order, therefore, as did they, back to the single root of disloyalty to Christ.

We should have felt, as did they, that to participate in this sectarian order was to participate, in our degree, in the disloyalty in which it was rooted.

We would, therefore, have striven to establish congregations, as did they, which should have no part nor lot with sectarianism, union churches, which, as Alexander Campbell said of the first church his father established, would receive into fellowship "all whom God would receive into heaven."

In establishing such congregations we would have striven earnestly, as did they, to abandon every vestige of the denominational order: like them, we would have abandoned denominational creeds, denominational names, denominational ecclesiasticism, denominational devices and inventions, denominational communion, denominational forms of baptism, denominational terms of fellowship; in short we would have striven to restore the essential New Testament Church, the primitive Church of the Word and the living Church in the world, which lay under the denominational order like the common denominator of many fractions.

Had we been contemporary with the Campbells we should have made mistakes in so great a reform, as did they. Our mistakes would no doubt have been much more numerous and serious than were theirs. But, living a century later than the Campbells, it reflects no great credit upon us nor discredit upon them to indulge the fancy that had we lived contemporaneously with them we should have avoided at least two of their mistakes. One of these was an intellectual mistake, the other was a mistake in practice.

The intellectual mistake was in Alexander Campbell's conception of baptism. To him it was equivalent to immersion, a physical act. To him the word "baptize" in the New Testament meant "immerse." To be immersed in water, therefore, was a command of Christ, a condition of forgiveness of sin, a prerequisite to membership in the Church of Christ. In this Mr. Campbell was in error. Immersion is not baptism—it is the form by which baptism was administered in the early Church and ought to be administered in the modern Church. Immersion was not commanded by Christ. It is not a condition of pardon nor a prerequisite to membership in the Church. We call this an intellectual or academic error because the practical consequence of this conception, namely, the practice of immersion only, in the administration of baptism, finds abundant sanction apart from this legalistic theory. The fundamental purpose to practice Christian union leads to the exclusive practice of immersion whether Mr. Campbell's theory of baptism be accepted or not.

The other error of Mr. Campbell was an error of practice, and has wrought serious injury upon the character of the movement which his father inaugurated. This was the mistake of enforcing a denominational test of membership in churches that by their fundamental purpose were striving to abandon all denominational tests of membership. Those who though not immersed were members of the Church of Christ, never denied by Alexander Campbell to be such and explicitly affirmed by his father to be such, Mr. Campbell refused to receive into the churches he was establishing unless they submitted to immersion. He thus made it more difficult to gain admittance into the churches he was establishing than to gain admittance into the Church of Christ. This was the very essence of sectarianism. It was tantamount to enforcing a human creed, and, as conceived by Mr. Campbell, an erroneous creed at that. But whether erroneous or correct as a creed, it was a violation of the fundamental purpose to practice Christian union. No matter what theory of baptism an undenominational church may hold, it cannot refuse to receive into its fellowship any Christian, any member of the Church of Christ, without thereby forfeiting its undenominational character.

From this statement of our views we believe our inquirer will be able to infer easily enough what we would have done if the suggestion in his question were more than a mere hypothesis.

IV.

We do not know whom Mr. Houston refers to by the term "pious unimmersed." A Buddhist is a pious, unimmersed person. A Unitarian is pious and usually unimmersed. If, as seems probable from the context of the inquiry, Mr. Houston refers to those who are not now generally admitted, but whom The Christian Century would heartily admit to full fellowship in Disciples' churches, we shall have to substitute "unimmersed Christians" or "unimmersed members of the Church of Christ" for his non-committal term.

The Christian Century favors receiving no one into church fellowship who is not a member of the Church of Christ. And, like Thomas Campbell and the apostle Paul, it favors receiving all whom Christ has received. The fact that many of those whom Christ has received have not been immersed gives us absolutely no warrant for withholding from them our fellowship. Our reason for extending them our fellowship is that we may aid in answering our Lord's prayer that all his followers may be one, and in obedience to the apostle's admonition, "that there be no schism among you." If, actuated by this motive, Mr. Houston received sixty unimmersed Christians into a congregation of forty immersed Christians and the union church under the vote of the majority decided to become a Methodist church, several things would need to be said:

(a) It should be pointed out that this church was playing the part of a parasite. Its growth was attained not by evangelism but by proselytism. It lived on the life-blood of already existing churches of Christ and neglected the primary function of a church of Christ, namely, to make disciples and to baptize them.

(b) If it should be suggested that the majority of unimmersed Christians over the immersed might have been brought about not by receiving members one at a time but by receiving an entire congregation of sixty members, then it should be said that such a union could better have been accomplished by a frank mutual understanding between the two congregations, as congregations, providing not only for the basis of union and the procedure of the united church, but setting forth the controlling motives for such union. If this were plainly done the outcome described in the hypothetical question would be highly improbable.

(c) In either case, it would be clear that Mr. Houston, the pastor of this union church, failed to do his duty effectively. In failing to make disciples and to baptize them he lost many an opportunity to impress upon the unimmersed the singular beauty of immersion, and thus without argument or dogma to create in many of them the desire to be immersed. Had he done this the ratio of the immersed to the unimmersed would have been materially changed, the increase of the immersed by evangelism being reinforced by the decrease of the unimmersed by rebaptism. Besides, the pastor failed to do his duty in interpreting to his people the high ideal of Christian unity. Had they been instructed, the unimmersed members of the church would have been quite as unwilling as the immersed members to forfeit their union character.

(d) It is extremely unlikely and certainly inadvisable that a church committed consciously to the ideal of practicing Christian union should call as pastor a man who is not heart and soul consecrated to that ideal. The hypothetical Methodist preacher in the inquiry was manifestly a sectarian-minded man, consulting from the very beginning the interests of his denomination rather than the interests of the Kingdom of God in that community.

(e) It is extremely unlikely that a movement to transform the union congregation into a Methodist church could be pushed far without resulting in division. Those who could not conscientiously adopt Methodist practices would probably continue to maintain a church, howsoever weak and struggling, upon a New Testament basis.

(f) But all this aside, if we accept the hypothesis literally there is but one judgment that can be pronounced upon that church: It departed from its ideals; it was disobedient to the heavenly vision; it abandoned the practice of Christian union and went back into the practice of sectarianism. It thus ceased to be a part of that movement making for the reunion of the divided body of Christ. No Christian movement can guarantee the perpetual loyalty of its congregations to its ideals. A movement to practice Christian unity is no less secure against such losses than any other Christian movement.

Neither Unprejudiced nor True

The Christian Evangelist announced in a recent issue that it had received from A. C. Smither, its managing editor who was traveling in Californa, an "unprejudiced" report on the situation at Berkeley, Calif., and that this report would appear in the forthcoming issue.

Readers of our St. Louis contemporary have had this report in their hands several weeks. It has been copied by other papers and commented upon significantly. To those who have taken Mr. Smither's report at its face value The Christian Century is impelled by facts in its possession and in justice to the church and pastor at Berkeley to say plainly that the report is neither unprejudiced nor true.

That it is not unprejudiced any discerning reader can detect. It reeks with prejudice. The managing editor's wish is obviously father to the alleged facts embodied in his report.

But the more serious aspect of the report is that it is not true. Mr Smither says four things:

1 That in the three months since the church voted to practice Christian union the attendance has greatly decreased.

2. That the finances are running behind.

3. That the pastor and his ardent supporters had claimed, before the resolution was adopted, that "a very large number of unimmersed persons were waiting to be added to his church."

4. That not a single unimmersed Christian has been added to the membership since the resolution was adopted.

We do not hesitate to call these statements untrue because they ignore vital facts in the situation which, when taken into account, show an entirely different picture. Mr. Smither did not explain that he made his visit to Berkeley in the summer vacation time; that the university is closed, its students and faculty gone, and that the church membershp, including the pastor himself, is on vacation. The facts are that up to the time of the summer hegira Mr. Loken's congregations were as large and sometimes larger than he had ever enjoyed.

The unfair attitude of mind in which Mr. Smither conceived his report is indicated by the adroit praise he bestows upon Mr. Loken's ministry before "he became infected with the open-membership bacteria." He says:

> Soon after his acceptance of the pastorate of the Berkeley church that congregation began to take on new life. The congregations filled the house, the Sunday-school grew and every department of the church thrilled with renewed zeal and energy. There was a feeling of great satisfaction throughout the entire state over the success of his work and many believed that his ministry in that important center would become monumental and historic.

But now

> The attendance at both church and Sunday-school has greatly decreased. Whereas a few months ago great throngs were in attendance upon Pastor Loken's ministry, today his audiences are said to be pathetically small.

Mr. Loken's congregation was never large enough to be described as a "throng." His church, while stronger under his leadership than ever before, has never been so vigorous and substantial as the above description implies. And certainly its summer congregation is "pathetically small" only as the shrunken congregation of any church during the vacation season is pathetic.

As to the finances, we are informed by an officer of the church that there has never been a year in its history when there was not a considerable deficit during the vacation time, and that often money had to be borrowed with which to pay the bills. The deficit this summer is smaller than usual, and gives not an iota of warrant for Mr. Smither's representation.

That the pastor had claimed that a "very large number of unimmersed Christians were waiting for the opportunity to unite with the church" is flatly denied. Mr. Loken made no such representation, nor was he under any such illusion. It is unthinkable that the doors of any church should be besieged by those against whose admittance the church made explicit provision. The conclusion that Mr. Smither and other writers draw from the fact that there is no such pleading multitude awaiting the opening of the doors is puerile. He asks, Why then open the doors? But every clear-headed reader of Mr. Smither's logic must have asked himself, How can Disciples expect other churches to be clamorous to practice Christian unity with us when we decline to practice it with them? Is it not first our duty to put our churches on an undenominational basis, frankly and heartily, confessing our desire and purpose to practice Christian unity? This, we are sure, was the conception entertained by the Berkeley church and pastor in opening their doors to receive all whom Christ had received.

Three reasons may be given why no unimmersed Christian has been received into membership since the doors were opened. The first is found in the vacation season, during which time all churches under ordinary conditions receive but few accessions. The second is that any such prospective member would hesitate to cast in his lot with the church until it was made plain beyond peradventure that he was wanted, and that he would not be an occasion for contention; he could with difficulty be assured of this so long as there existed a minority hostile to receiving him. The third reason is that the pastor, out of Christian consideration for the minority and in a humble spirit of conciliation, determined not to further agitate the congregation at this time by proceeding to act under the resolution so overwhelmingly adopted. This attitude on Mr. Loken's part deserved praise instead of caricature from Mr. Smither. The half-dozen persons who have expressed a desire to unite with the church and whom the pastor might have received were advised to wait until time and further thought should bring the minority and the majority into Christian harmony again. What Mr. Smither calls the "great patience and forbearance" of the minority is admirable indeed, but it is fully matched by the patience and self-restraint of the majority. And both stand in sharp contrast to the ungodly counsel proffered editorially by Mr. Smither when he advised less than one-third of the congregation to start a lawsuit against their brethren for possession of the church property. Certainly the reason the Berkeley church is not divided today is due to the Christian forbearance and love of the members and pastor of the church itself and not to any influence of our St. Louis contemporary which has from the start done its utmost to cause division.

—Some one has named as the seven wonders of the modern missionary world: (1) Large gifts of money. (2) Spread of English language. (3) Modern travel. (4) Mingling of races. (5) Growth of education. (6) Progress of religion. (7) Regeneration of the individual.

EDITORIAL TABLE TALK

Social Evangelism

The Methodist Federation for Social Service has recently developed a somewhat new type of evangelistic campaign. The Rev. Harry F. Ward, secretary of the federation, was able to put both his theoretical training and his practical experience to the test in some interesting experiments in the state of Indiana. At Elkhart, a railroad town of 20,000, some socialists attending a district conference, requested a meeting on some aspect of social Christianity. Mr. Ward was invited and held meetings for two nights, with the socialists taking a collection and paying the expenses of the meetings. In Terre Haute, a manufacturing town of 50,000, he held a labor parliament under a joint committee of ministers and representatives of the Central Labor Union. The union paid for 10,000 cards of invitation and distributed them in factories. Meetings were held in three downtown churches, concluding a four weeks' campaign by the Ministerial Association. At Muncie, a factory town of 25,000, meetings were held for five nights in the courthouse, again under the united auspices of the Ministerial Association and the Central Labor Union. All elements were represented. The meetings in these various towns were extensively treated in the local press, editorials, headlines, and front-page space, bringing them to many beside those in attendance. The results were most interesting. Many men were at the meetings who had not been to church for years. The preachers were put in touch with these men and with the industrial workers generally. They took a new attitude toward the church and religion, some saying that they would go back and work in the church. Several Jews and men who call themselves atheists said, "If this is Christianity, we will be Christians."

"More Room for Games"

On our table lies the prospectus of one of our popular schools for the coming year. It is a work of art, most attractive to the eye and undeniably "taking" in its exhibit of beautiful grounds and handsome buildings. But what first caught the eye was a picture of a former building in process of demolition, underneath which was the notice that its removal would provide "more room for games." As ten of the fifteen full-page photogravures shown had to do with athletics we could not repress a smile. Remembering the old regime, when splitting the kindling, filling the wood-box, riding the colt and going fishing once a week constituted our "athletics," we found it difficult to realize modern pedagogic conditions when they have to pull down the school to make "more room for games."

Murder and Gambling

It is said, upon what appears to be good authority, that the men who shot the gambler Rosenthal to death because he exposed their partnership with the municipal police, went immediately to a gambling-house known to them all and spent five days there at roulette. When that term was concluded every one of them was "broke," and "the house" had the $5,000 which was the price of blood. In his famous series of "Lectures to Young Men," delivered by Henry Ward Beecher when he was in his first pastoral charge, he preached a sermon upon the hardening effects of gambling, taking as a text the soldiers' casting of lots for the garment of Christ. What an illustration of that theme we have in the case of these gamblers of to-day, who can shoot down one of their own intimates for a stipulated sum and immediately stake that sum upon the spinning of a wheel!

Stranded Actors

The unemployed ministers may be a large company but think of fifteen hundred players stranded in Chicago with nothing before them but debt and want. The secretary of the allied theaters reported one week that within the preceding thirty days forty theatrical companies had been blown on the rocks and all their members were applying to him for employment or financial aid. The stage offers glittering prizes to its favorites. The pulpit offers none. Many a prima donna gets as much for two songs as the average minister for fifty-two sermons. But there are more blanks in the actors' hat than in the ministers'. The worst case of stage-madness would be cured were the victim of this folly to spend twenty-four hours in Chicago during the coming season in the company of these entertainers-out-of-a-job, unemployed, in what they expected to be their best season.

Mistaken Views of Great Men

An enterprising book firm in the east has been for some time issuing a series of "true" biographies. It has dealt with such careers as those of Washington, Jefferson, Webster, Lincoln and others. The fact is that it is easier to get a true view of a candle than of the sun. Effulgence is as blinding as darkness. All successful men are more or less apotheosized after death. It would be some gain to the courage of to-day if the defects of yesterday were better understood and more frankly acknowledged. The history of the church has not been one continuous revival in America, and many a man has gone forth as a revivalist because he was a spent force in his own pulpit. Samuel Hopkins, the great preacher of Newport, R. I., during the revolutionary period, failed to receive a member to his church on confession of faith for the last three years of his ministry, and Jonathan Edwards, saint and philosopher as he was, received no accessions by confession or certificate for a longer period. The wonderful thing about the Bible is that it tells us of David's sin, Solomon's fall, Peter's denial, Thomas' doubt and Paul's lack of success in certain cities. But we have not so written the lives of their successors. The more is the pity.

"La Gaule fait des Gaulois"

The French proverb tells us that "France makes men Frenchmen." The saying is as philosophical as pithy. The customs, institutions, ideals of Paris, for example, will remold the immigrant who becomes a resident. It is our hope that America will do as much by her incoming millions. But America can only make Americans of them if they break out of "little Italy," "little Poland" and all the other "little" places into which America is divided. Put them into a common "melting pot" and they will combine, but not otherwise. In the same way, one may say, the church makes Christians. It does not make Christians of those who never enter it, never mingle with its citizens, never breathe its air. The chosen means of grace is "the communion of the saints." The church member who associates wholly with worldly companions will show less of the Christian spirit than the man, professedly of the world, who chooses his friends from and makes his home among those who love the Lord.

Pure Milk for Chicago

By a vote of 49 to 9 the Chicago city council has adopted an ordinance which means cleaner and purer milk for the city. There has been a feeling for some time that the Chicago public has not been getting the kind of milk that it should have. It is to be hoped that the ordinance in part as follows will work some reform. Every bottle must be plainly marked "inspected" or "pasteurized" to show to which grade it belongs. Inspected milk may be produced only in dairies inspected by the health department and receiving a department permit subject to the condition that every case of contagious disease in connection with the dairy shall be reported at once. Permits will be issued only to dairies to which department inspectors give scores of 65 or more points out of a possible 100 on equipment and methods. Before June 30, 1913, the producers must file certificates showing their cows have been inspected by a competent veterinarian and are free from tuberculosis and other infectious diseases. Rules are prescribed for equipment and methods as a basis for the scoring. Milk produced in conformity with standards slightly lower than these from dairies scoring at least 55 points and under less stringent regulations must be pasteurized. The efficiency of the pasteurizer must be approved and in case of dispute this question is left to arbitration between the owner or operator and the department. All milk coming into Chicago must be kept at a temperature at least as low as 60 degrees, and after June 1, 1914, at a temperature not higher than 55 degrees. No milk failing to meet the requirements of one of these two grades will be permitted on sale in Chicago.

Pension Bill Passed

The U. S. Senate recently passed the big pension and the army bill. The Senate yielded to the demands of the house for the abolition of the pension agencies throughout the United States and passed the $150,000,000 pension appropriation bill, with a provision for the abolishment of the agencies Jan. 31, 1913. The Senate passed the army appropration bill carrying $94,000,000, a bill replacing the one originally passed which was vetoed by President Taft. The amendment made to the Senate pensions bill in regard to the abolishment of the agencies will end a dispute which has held up the payment of over $9,000,000 of pension payments due Civil War veterans on Aug. 4, and has thrown the financial operations of the pension bureau into chaos. Under the amendment the payment of all pensions will, after the date named, be made directly from the pension bureau at Washington. At present the bureau has nothing to do with the actual payment to veterans, the checks going out through the hands of the eighteen district pension agents. The change will abolish eighteen $4,000 jobs, and result in the retirement or the removal to Washington of several hundred district clerks. A saving of about $250,000 in administration of the pension laws is expected to follow. Old soldiers and present ones will now get the pay for which they have been waiting some time.

Parcels Post

The Senate has passed the post-office appropriation bill carrying in the neighborhood of $160,000,000. The bill has established a parcels post and also permits employes of the post-office to organize, provided they do not affiliate with any outside labor organization. The only change made in the bill after it was reported to the Senate was an amendment providing that whenever post-office employes work overtime they shall be paid in time instead of money. The bill provides a flat rate of 12 cents a pound for parcels regardless of the distance carried. The Sen ate in its bill divided the country into eight zones with a graduated rate of from 5 to 12 cents a pound, the limit of weight of packages to be eleven pounds. For rural routes and city delivery the rate is 5 cents for the first and 1 cent for each additional pound up to the limit permitted. The differences between the two houses are vital and it will require time and patience to reconcile them.

Boxing at the Berlin Olympics

We knew it was coming. There are sportsmen and there are "sports." The second do not care a rap for any contest into which the brutal does not enter. Golf offers sufficient pleasant excitement by its natural hazards for a gentleman but not for a gambler. He must see "a dollar-a-hole" or the result has no charm for him. The Olympic games have begun to attract the attention of the class who care nothing for feats of strength or endurance unless somebody "draws blood." So the question whether at the next meet, that is at Berlin in 1916, boxing shall constitute a part of the program has been "referred to a committee." The decision of that committee will mean that these sports are to be continued under the direction of gentlemen or surrendered to the bruisers. Despite all fine-spun theories as to what boxing "might be," it always is brutal, always has been brutal, from the days of the Trojan bully, Dares, to the last ring-fight of the black bully, Jack Johnson. The admission of boxing to the list of legalized games means the eventual and rapid suppression of the games themselves.

Temperance in India

Temperance has done wonders for India, says Gen. Lawson of the British Army. Drink is hard on a man any place but owing to the climate alcohol means death to the man who uses it in India. Twenty-five years ago a clergyman started the idea of a temperance association in India, and this work had surprising results. There were very few teetotalers in the old days, but now nearly half the army in India are teetotalers. In 1889 1,174 soldiers died in India and in 1910 only 310 died. It was, the speaker thought, due to the temperance movement. In 1889 no fewer than 1,800 men were invalided from India; in 1910 the number was only 400. In 1889 there were on 1,300 total abstainers in India; in 1902 there were 32,000. In the army, as in civilian life, the great bulk of crime was due to drink. In 1902 there were 15,000 court-martials in the army. In 1910 there were 6,400 court-martials. Fines for drunkenness in the army in 1904 amounted to 24,000 pounds ($120,000); in 1910 it amounted to only 17,000 pounds ($85,000). Good conduct medals were issued to soldiers who had served a certain number of years and had no bad entries in their defaulters' sheets and had not been drunk. The number of good conduct medals in 1904 was 2,200, and in 1910 it was 4,580, which showed again that the temperance movement in the army was having its effect.

Demonstration Against Vice

There will be a large parade in Chicago as a demonstration against vice on September 28th. There will be banners, floats and the paraphernalia necessary to make a big success of the affair. The paraders will be divided into sections for the men, the women, the boys and small children. The Catholic temperance cadets and the various churches will participate in the march, as likewise will other organizations representing churches, societies and all sorts of reform bodies. Thirty thousand persons are expected to march, as the indications are that a much greater number will participate than in the temperance parade of three years ago, when 20,000 people marched.

Mr. Lorimer's Expenses

It is expensive business ousting United States senators. It is found that the expenses of the last investigation of Mr. Lorimer to the government will exceed $100,000. The committee decided to recommend the government counsel in the case, John J. Healy and John H. Marble, be paid $10,000 each for their services. At a meeting it developed that Mr. Lorimer's expenses were in the neighborhood of $130,000. He submitted a bill for Judge Hanecy for legal services of $75,000. Mr. Healy, of counsel for the committee, put in a bill for $30,000 for his services, Mr. Marble, his associate, leaving the amount of his compensation to the discretion of the committee. It was thought by members of the committee that the bill submitted by Mr. Lorimer would be reduced materially, and that the committee would not recommend a larger appropriation for him than $50,000. At the conclusion of his first trial, a bill to compensate him for expenses incurred was introduced, but it did not pass the Senate. In view of the fact that he was forced to defend himself twice, certain senators argued that he should receive an allowance from the government. At the last, however, his friends on the committee declined to present a claim for him.

Europe Interested

European countries have expressed a widespread determination to participate in the Panama-Pacific exposition to be held in San Francisco in 1915, according to Dr. Frederick J. V. Skiff, head of the Field Columbian Museum, who has just returned from a three months' sojourn across the ocean. Dr. Skiff is also director-in-chief of the Panama Exposition. While in Europe, where he went on a purely personal mission, he visited the capitals of many of the larger countries, inspecting many of the representative museums in foreign lands. In speaking of the Panama Exposition, Dr. Skiff said: "I learned with a great deal of satisfaction that a great number of the foreign countries have determined to participate in our exposition which is to be held in San Francisco in 1915, in commemoration of the opening of the canal across the Isthmus of Panama. Many of the lands have signified their intention by written word of representation, both by exhibits and by other methods, and many representatives of foreign countries assured me personally of their intention to participate. The feeling seems to be general throughout all of the European countries."

Suffragettes Sentenced

Mary Leigh, the suffragette who was tried last week on the charge of wounding John E. Redmond, leader of the Irish parliamentary party, with a hatchet she had thrown at Premier Asquith's carriage on July 19, was sentenced to five years' imprisonment. Gladys Evans, whose sentence was reserved, after she had been found guilty of setting fire on July 18 to the Theater Royal in which Mr. Asquith was scheduled to speak the following day on home rule, also was sentenced to a term of five years. Lizzie Baker, charged with being an accomplice of Gladys Evans, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to seven months' imprisonment.

—A report comes from St. Louis that in an effort to offset the demoralizing effect of Sunday automobile "joy riders," the St. Louis Y. M. C. A. has engaged an automobile clergyman and a cornet soloist for use Sunday afternoons. Every Sunday afternoon the automobile will proceed slowly along the thoroughfares most used by "joy riders." The cornetist will attract the crowd with his music. When a sufficient crowd has been collected the minister will preach on Sabbath observance. The plan is to reach both the automobile parties and the crowds that usually line the streets to see the gay parties whiz past. A good idea. Carry religion to the automobilist and those who envy him if they will not come to you.

—Rev. P. S. Henson, for years the great and popular pastor of the First Baptist Church in Chicago, has returned to again make this locality his home after being away many years. He will reside in Evanston. Doctor Henson for almost twenty years was pastor of the First Baptist Church of Chicago. Doctor Henson was born in Fluvana county, Va., on Dec. 7, 1831. He was educated at Richmond College and the University of Virginia. He studied law, entered the ministry, and became pastor of the Broad Street Baptist Church in Philadelphia before the Civil War. He resigned from the ministry in 1908. Since then he has been active in literary and missionary work.

—Infantile paralysis in Los Angeles has so alarmed the city health officials that they have distributed 45,000 circulars giving its history and symptoms. The city health commissioner has asked the council for $5,000 with which to prepare a quarantine station for the children attacked by the scourge. 173 cases of the disease, thirty-three of which resulted in death, have been reported to the authorities. The council has issued an edict excluding all children under ten years of age from all public playgrounds. It also has ordered that no child under 15 be permitted to enter places of entertainment or Sunday-schools.

—Hungarian suffragettes are rejoicing at the unexpected prospect of the admission of a large body of women to the right to vote. The draft of the new parliamentary franchise bill, which has been submitted to the cabinet for approval, provides for giving votes to women who have passed certain state examinations and to those managing their own estates or who are otherwise economically independent. The first category would include an army of postal, telegraph and telephone employes and school teachers. Probably 150,000 women would be enfranchised under the proposed law.

—How fascinating to watch the development of an idea. Between the ox cart and the automobile—a thousand years. Between the row-boat and the ocean steamer—a thousand years. Between the stage coach and the railroad train—a thousand years. Between the bow and arrow and the revolver—a thousand years. Between the country store and the departmental store—a thousand years. Between the cave and the cathedral—a thousand years.

The Wedding Ceremony

By William E. Barton

About so often in the year comes a timid knock at the pastor's door, and there stand without two blushing young people asking if the minister has an engagement for some particular evening. They have the unimpeded right-of-way to the study; for them are put aside profound sermons and deep meditations, while the minister hears their plans for the prettiest, most original, and dearest little wedding that ever has occurred. I have looked upon this procession of young people for something over twenty-five years, and still it has the charm of endless novelty. All the world is interested in weddings, and so I venture to chat with my brethren in the ministry concerning those that are to occur in the days to come.

A Civil Contract.

Marriage in the United States is a civil contract between one man and one woman. No minister is legally necessary. The function of solemnizing a marriage belongs to an officer of the court, as to a judge, or justice of the peace, and if a minister accepts the responsibility he does it as an officer of the court, and under the license issued by the authority of the state. In England, where church and state are one, a minister of the Established Church must marry a couple who come to him with the required legal authority. In this country his position is not mandatory, and he is at liberty to decline to solemnize a marriage for good reason. At the same time the minister is to receive a license as presumptive evidence that a marriage ought to be performed and is not to treat it cavalierly, as if the state had no share in the responsibility. Here, as everywhere else, the minister should render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and be punctilious about filing his own certificate with the duly constituted authority. Most ministers are careful about this, but once in a long time a minister is found who is careless in the legal aspects of his work in solemnizing marriages.

A Simple Wedding.

For a simple home wedding no rehearsal ought to be necessary. The young people can be told the few things which they need to bear in mind. The minister arriving a few minutes early can make the preliminary survey of the rooms and be sure that everything is in readiness so far as he is concerned. Theoretically he is not in charge of any part of the proceedings, excepting the religious ceremony itself. Where there is a master of ceremonies, the minister is to respect his office and communicate through him with the musicians when he is ready for the service to begin. Often however, in home weddings there is no master of ceremonies and the minister will be relied upon to see that everything goes well. He should do this without being officious, or too much tip-toeing around and squeaking of his boots, but having ascertained that all is in readiness he will indicate to the musicians the time for the beginning of the wedding march, see that the young girls who are to stretch the ribbons are in place and ready, and generally be sure that the few preliminary matters are quietly and tactfully arranged. After the wedding he will have very little to do, but there are a few simple details before the wedding which someone needs to see to, and while they are not the minister's responsibility he should have them in mind and without very much moving about or giving of orders be sure that they are attended to.

A Rehearsal.

A church wedding nearly always requires a rehearsal and the rehearsal is very nearly as formidable as the wedding and often much more trying. The young people come to it singly or in couples and often some of them come late, and frequently they come romping or giggling and with the idea that the rehearsal is something of a lark. The minister has not much to do until all of them are there; then he should speak a few pleasant but firm and dignified words concerning the rehearsal itself as a preparation for the wedding and ask them to be attentive and forego their fun so that all the details of the preparation may be carefully arranged. It is not his business to drill them in the wedding march, nor to match the couples in the bridal party, nor tell them where to stand. There should be a master of ceremonies who does this. Yet the minister should know how to do it and in almost every wedding his judgment will be needed at one point or another. If he needs to change or over-rule an arrangement he should do it tactfully, not interfering with little whims of the young people, excepting for good reason, but still keeping the service free from solecisms and pranks.

A Nightmare.

The wedding march is a nightmare to many a minister and to most bridal parties. If the tempo were not so frightfully slow it would be very simple and easy, but it is very hard to keep step to such slow music and even after a minister has done it so many times that he can keep step to the wedding march in his sleep, he will find it difficult to teach young people to do so the first time they try it. He who has the responsibility for training young people in the step will often make it easier for them in the beginning if he sings the melody of the wedding march to the words, Left—and Right—and Left—and Right—and so on.

The Ring.

The young people need some instructions in the matter of the ring. If the ring passes from the best man to the bridegroom and to the minister and they hand it with gloved fingers there is an excellent chance of losing it. All danger of this is avoided if the ring is always dropped into the palm of the hand and no attempt is made to hand it from one set of fingers to another. I have officiated at many weddings and never have experienced the loss of a ring.

The minister sometimes faces an awkward question in closing the wedding rehearsal. He must be careful not to pronounce them husband and wife. He may say, "If you shall repeat these covenants tomorrow I will then pronounce you husband and wife."

Shall there be a prayer at the rehearsal? Yes, always, and let it come in the regular place for the prayer in the service. Let the young people kneel for the prayer. It is in every way better than for them to stand. Let the prayer be a simple, earnest prayer that the intervening hours may be hours of blessing, filled with their own sweet, expectant joy, and that the wedding itself may fulfill the hopes of the young people and their friends. My experience is that the prayer at the rehearsal is often one of the most beautiful, impressive and helpful features of the wedding festivity.

Informality.

Some ministers like what they call "a delightful informality" in their wedding services. Informality is well in its place, but a wedding is no place for flippancy, or carelessness, or foolish experiments. It is better to have a simple, dignified form and adhere to it, not stiffly nor rigidly, but with sufficient precision to avoid carelessness or induce mistakes. I have seen some otherwise beautiful weddings spoiled by the slatternly way in which the minister did his part.

I have said that the minister has little to do after the service is over, yet sometimes he can exert a quiet influence that is of great value here. He should discourage the throwing of rice. It is unpleasant and dangerous, but the throwing of confetti and the general merriment, even if it tends to innocent boistrousness, need not give him any particular concern, nor call for words of reproof. A minister whose people know him and love him and trust him can make his influence felt in all ways where it is really needed and most ministers are tactful and helpful. Few people know how much ministers really do to save weddings from embarrassing and unpleasant incidents. In this article I am suggesting only a few of the many ways in which thoughtful ministers are constantly helping their people in what is properly an experience of great interest not only to the contracting parties themselves, but to their friends and to the community.

Notes

—Rev. Len G. Broughton, the Baptist clergyman announces plans for the remaking on American lines of the London church to which he was recently called—Christ Congregational Church, made famous by the late Rev. Dr. Newman Hall, and well known to Americans. The former Atlanta pastor now proposes to establish at Christ Church a nursing and dispensary work which may develop, he hopes, into a hospital. He would also found a training school for Christian workers and send them out to mission lands. Finally he would grade his Sunday-school on the American plan. He asks $55,000 and states that Christ Church people have subscribed $12,000 of it. His appeal is now made to London and all England. Dr. Broughton has issued a handsome brochure, illustrated, entitled "The Future of Christ Church."

—The report comes from Salt Lake that moving pictures presenting the history of the Mormon church in as favorable light as possible are being prepared at a cost of about $50,000. Under the direction of Mormon leaders a scenario is being prepared by theatrical men and Mormon historians, and soon a company of about 50 fine actors will be brought there from the Pacific Coast to take leading parts in the performance that is to be caught by the machines. They will be reinforced by several hundred Mormons, among whom will be some of the pioneers who came to the Salt Lake valley with Brigham Young. A Los Angeles firm is doing the work but the indications are that the church is back of the enterprise.

—The saddest hour in the history of the race is that hour when a great soul fails to respond to the voice of destiny. Thackeray affirmed that every time he thought of Dean Swift it made him think of a falling empire.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison.

Mrs. Harrison will be glad to receive communications from any of her readers offering suggestions concerning woman's welfare, criticisms of articles or inquiries concerning any matters relevant to her department. She should be addressed directly at 530 Elm Tree Lane, Lexington, Ky.

Do Women Like Figures?

"It is extraordinarily difficult to find a woman ready to stand alone or to take financial responsibility," said Lady St. Davids at the conference the other day of the Association of Women Clerks and Secretaries, when a committee was formed to start a society for women clerks and secretaries under the insurance act. "Oh, no, nothing to do with money," they will say. "Anything but that."

Much the same opinion is held by Mrs. Ayres Purdie, the well-known accountant, and the first lady to be admitted to the membership of the London Association of Accountants. "When I was first admitted to this body," she said, "there was some trepidation among the members of the council lest the innovation might result in a whole army of women seeking admission. So far, these fears have proved groundless. This is one of the few professions for women that are not overcrowded. My own experience is, that the majority of women do not like responsibility or figures or work on their own initiative. One girl who came to me with the idea of becoming an articled pupil, suddenly changed her mind and said she thought she would like embroidery better. Another recoiled with horror (and she was a university graduate, too) when she found she would have to sign a three years' agreement. 'Oh, I couldn't do that,' she said. 'I might want to marry before then; but I would not mind tying myself up for eighteen months.'

"Of course, a girl who has one eye (and that the best one) concentrated on marriage and the other one on business, is not likely to succeed in a profession like ours, which needs all a girl's faculties and attention.

"I don't think accountant's work sounds romantic enough for the average girl," said Mrs. Purdie with a laugh. "She likes something more sentimental. She thinks figures dry and uninteresting."

"And do you find them so?"

"Not at all. I love the life. It is full of variety and interest, and brings one in contact with all kinds of people. It develops initiative and resource. For a girl with a love of mathematics and a legal type of mind, it is full of possibilities.—London News.

Women and the Presidency

While the campaign managers are confining their arguments and appeals to the male voting population of the nation and will continue to do so until the polls are closed in November, it should not be forgotten the women are going to cut a very important figure in the selection of a president of the United States this year. It is quite possible that they may decide the election.

It is estimated that abount 1,250,000 women will be entitled to vote in the presidential election of this year. This is about one-fourteenth of the probable vote for all the candidates. Women vote in California, Idaho, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and Washington, states having thirty-seven votes in the Electoral College. Neither of these states is pivotal by any means, but all of them are debatable, and it is conceivable that in closely contested election their votes may decide the issue. California alone has 672,000 women entitled to vote. In that state the fair sex predominates by a large majority, a peculiar fact in the face of the general impression that women are scarce in the far west.

There is a prospect, too, that three other states may be added to the list of those in which women may vote before the Ides of November. Oregon, Wisconsin and Kansas will vote on equal suffrage amendments in September with a healthy prospect that all three states will vote for the enlargement of the franchise. These states have twenty-seven electoral votes, which added to the thirty-seven in the five western states would make a total of sixty-four votes in the college of 531 electors, or more than one-ninth. Presidents have been elected by very narrow margins in the Electoral College and it would seem that the campaign managers might do well to devote a little special attention to the woman vote this year.

Woman's Doings

—Virginia Christian, a negro, and the first woman to be put to death in the electric chair in Virginia, was executed early last Friday. Governor Mann refused to yield to the entreaties for clemency by several Chicagoans. The murder she committed was a brutal one, nevertheless if she had been white she would not have been put to death in Virginia or any other state.

—Mdlle. Clotilde Luisi, doctor of law of the University of Montevideo, has been appointed minister from Uruguay to the court of Brussels. She has presented her credentials to King Albert and will now rank at court with other ministers of foreign powers.

—Mrs. Margaret Deland is spending the summer in or near London and is reported to be greatly pleased by the popularity of her books among the English people. Mrs. Deland has finished a new Dr. Lavendar story, the title of which will soon be announced.

—Miss Jane Addams is to be the chief organizer of women for the Roosevelt-Johnson campaign. Miss Addams also is to be one of the principal speakers for the Roosevelt-Johnson campaign. It is the purpose of the Roosevelt managers to have Miss Addams as the principal speaker in the states where women vote.

—Mrs. Kate Ferrell, of Cheswick, widow of John Ferrell, a rescue worker of the United States Bureau of Mines, has received from Washinton a check for $1,080 granted by special act of Congress. When the Cherry valley mine took fire and the escape of scores of men was shut off by flames, Ferrell went into the mine, led the imprisoned men to an unblocked chamber, through which they escaped, and then died of asphyxiation.

—Mrs. Robert La Follette and Mrs. Champ Clark have come out strongly in opposition to the death penalty. "I am opposed to capital punishment on general principles," said Mrs. La Follette." "I am unalterably opposed to capital punishment," said Mrs. Champ Clark. "The seven executions recently by New York state are a striking example of the social inefficiency of the death penalty."

—Mrs. Leander Stone, pioneer Chicagoan, organizer of several charitable institutions and widely known for her philanthropic work of fifty years, died last week. She was 81 years old. Her first active charity work was the formation of the "Mitten Society" in 1861, which sent clothing to union soldiers during the war. She was the first woman admitted as a member of the Humane society and she was the organizer of the charitable organization society, the Floating Cholera Hospital association, and the benevolent band of South Side women who aided the distressed in the winter following the great fire of '71. For twenty-three years she was president of the Young Women's Christian Association, establishing the Travelers' Aid for the protection of girls, and was at one time vice-president for Illinois of the International Board of Women's Christian Associations. She served on the board of managers for the Columbian exposition.

An Outline of Work for Women

The following are some of the things which the National Federation of Women's Clubs hopes to accomplish during the two years that Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker will serve as president:

Secure legislation for the betterment of defective children.

Aid in bringing about the abolishment of prison contract labor.

Secure the appointment of women police in the larger cities of the country.

Aid in bringing about the establishment of higher ideals in the drama and on the professional stage.

Appointment of experts by the state educational boards to place sex hygiene in the curriculum of every normal school.

Aid in the establishment by the government of national parks.

Aid in the enforcement of pure food and quarantine laws.

Aid in the fight against the white slave traffic and enforcement of the laws against that crime.

Aid in bringing about the uniform marriage and divorce laws.

Aid in securing accurate registration of births and deaths.

Aid in the plans for medical inspection in schools, for school nurses and for out-of-doors schools.

Aid in bringing about the study of Bible literature and the placing of Bible study upon the programme of literary clubs.

Appointment of clubs to co-operate with agriculaural colleges and economic organizations for the study of economics.

Aid in bringing about conservation of natural resources and the prevention of the curtailment of the forest preserves.

Aid in the furtherance of the good roads movement and the construction of a great national highway to be known as the Lincoln highway.

Aid in co-operation with the government in erecting a monument at Panama in commemoration of the completion of the Panama canal.

Aid in the plan for studying political science as a preparation for citizenship in clubs.

The federation also went on record at its recent biennial convention as protesting against the comic supplements of the Sunday newspapers. It also registered a protest against imposing any legal disability on women that is not imposed on men.

THE HIGH CALLING

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON

AUTHOR OF "IN HIS STEPS."

Copyright 1911, George H. Doran Co.

CHAPTER XIII. (Continued.)

But when that snapper it was a hopeless task. Before any of the party knew what to do the now maddened team was thrashing up the gorge. The result was only a question of the law, if there is any, of accidents. Nobody ever knew just what did happen in detail. Paul and Esther said afterwards that they jumped, although they had always said they never would jump out of a runaway wagon. Helen clung terrified to her seat until the hind wheel on her side of the wagon was splintered and the wagon box fell down and she found herself flung up against the bank. Clifford jumped for one of the horse's backs, hoping to stop them by reaching their bridles, but his foot caught on the dashboard and he fell, just missing the wheels as he rolled down the trail. Bauer was the only one to remain in the wagon. Just as Clifford made his unsuccessful leap the tongue snapped. The horses tore themselves loose from the wrecked wagon and swept in a frenzy of fear through the gorge, banging the fragments of tongue, whiffletrees and harness about them, and what was left of the wagon came to a stop between two big boulders, with Bauer clinging to the front seat with white strained face wondering if the rest of them were all killed.

Clifford picked himself up and came limping along to where Paul and Esther were sitting. He was all right himself excepting a few minor bruises and was overjoyed to find that Mr. and Mrs. Douglas had escaped serious injury. But when the three of them came to Helen they found her almost in a swoon.

"I think I sprained my ankle," she said with a faint attempt at a smile.

"Thank God we are not all killed!" exclaimed Esther, but before she could say another word Helen had fainted. Her father and mother were busy over her, Bauer had run up with a water canteen and Clifford was ruefully regarding the wreck of the wagon when the sound of wheels was heard.

"There's Peshlekietsetti," he said. "We'll have to put Miss Helen in the chuck wagon. But how on earth are we going to get to Oraibi now?"

A large wagon turned the bend and the driver pulled up sharply. It was not Peshlekietsetti, but the tourist party from Canon Diablo. Bauer, as he anxiously stood by Mrs. Douglas trying to restore Helen, was conscious that a group of astonished and interested tourists had climbed down from the wagon and had come up to the scene of the accident. As he looked up he saw Van Shaw and heard him say, "Why, hello, Bauer! Didn't expect to see you here. Had bad accident, haven't you? Anything we can do to help?"

CHAPTER XIV.

"Its very kind of you, and——" Mr. Douglas began. It is astonishing how commonplace most people are in moments of accident. Paul had never seen Van Shaw, did not know him in the least and simply saw a good looking young man dressed in a serviceable camping suit, who had appeared at a moment when help of some kind was imperatively needed. "You seem to be acquainted, Felix. One of your classmates at Burrton? Oh, you're the Pittsburg party?"

Felix hesitated and Van Shaw saved him the trouble of an introduction.

"Yes, I'm Van Shaw, you know. Our outfit can take care of everything without any trouble. Mr. Douglas of Milton? You're with the Tolchaco party, aren't you? Yes, we'll be glad to be of service."

Van Shaw's glance travelled to Helen, who, after a brave effort to keep from fainting again, had finally succumbed and lay back against the bank. Her mother was calm, and although this was the first time in all Helen's life that she had ever shown any such physical yielding to pain, Esther accepted the situation, and with Paul's help did the only thing obvious and soon had the girl resting, after the fainting spell, in one of the chuck wagons belonging to Van Shaw's party.

After that, events seemed to follow in a natural sequence that could not reasonably have occurred in any other way. The frightened horses soon overtook and ran into the wagon in front. Masters and Walter caught them and as soon as possible came running back up the gorge, panting and fearful. Their surprise and relief when they learned that no one was seriously injured were great. The broken wagon was, however, such a wreck, that not even Elijah Clifford's ingenuity could repair it sufficiently for use, and, with the exception of a few serviceable pieces, it was left behind. The two parties, brought together by the quick process of accident, at last continued the journey in company, but for Felix Bauer a cloud had come up over the clear sky of his pleasure. He had never been able to endure Van Shaw, and it was exasperating to him and annoying to Walter to be under any obligations to one who, back in the old school, had moved in another circle and lived according to other moral codes.

Van Shaw on meeting Walter had simply said, "Hello, Douglas! Great place this old desert, hey?" He did not wait for Walter to say anything but rattled on. "This snake dance we're going to is said to be a corker. It's a beastly old distance to come to see it. I don't mind. But the camp grub gets the mater pretty bad."

The other members in the Pittsburg party were Van Shaw's mother, just referred to as "mater," his aunt, a Mrs. Waldron, two young men, friends of Van Shaw, Mrs. Waldron's two nieces and a cook and three drivers. They had fitted out at Canon Diablo and crossed the Little Colorado at the upper ford several hours after the Tolchaco party had passed, but owing to better equipment in the matter of horses and wagons they had overtaken the latter just as Touchiniteel and his two Indians had entered the gorge.

By noon the wagons were all out of the gorge and in full view of the Crested Buttes. Helen was resting as well as could be expected but was evidently in great pain. Masters, who was something of a doctor and surgeon, did the best he could with the simple remedies he carried, but declared the sprain to be a very serious one, and, at a little consultation held at lunch time, the feasibility of abandoning the trip and turning back to Tolchaco on account of Helen's condition was discussed.

When Helen heard of it she emphatically objected.

"I don't feel sure of that. It seems very comfortable. I don't want the rest of you to lose the enjoyment of the trip on my account. The only thing that worries me is the fear I am causing trouble to these other people."

The "other people," represented by Van Shaw and the young men friends, were near the chuck wagon when Helen made this last remark. Van Shaw hastened to assure her that no one was put out in the least by her presence there.

"I don't feel sure of that. It seems to me that more than one person must have been 'put out' of here when I was put in. I take up a great deal of room and I am sure there were some seats in this wagon."

Van Shaw protested that his party had two extra saddle horses and that as for himself he preferred to walk. He needed the exercise.

The other young men joined in gallantly. Miss Douglas was free to ride in any or all of the wagons as long as she chose.

Helen smiled at all of them impartially and expressed her thanks to Van Shaw in particular. Felix Bauer, who with Walter was standing in the group with the rest during this little conversation, wondered for the first time in his life if Helen Douglas was a coquette. If she knew Van Shaw as well as he and Walter knew him would she smile so sweetly at him, and on such brief acquaintance? To Felix Bauer the whole thing was incomprehensible. Even allowing something for the swiftness with which acquaintances can be made in the desert during a camping experience, especially under circumstances favored by such an accident as had occurred, it still was not seemly that a girl like Helen Douglas should even in the slightest degree encourage the attention of fellows like Van Shaw.

Felix was so disturbed by his own feelings over the affair that during the whole of the afternoon he avoided the wagon where Helen was. Once, however, as he looked back, to his indignant surprise he noted Van Shaw driving the team and turning about from time to time as if to converse with Helen, who was lying on a camp bed under the canopy cover which had been pulled back on account of the heat, so as to allow Helen a glance now and then of some passing point of interest. Once Felix was sure he heard her laugh at some remark made by Van Shaw in comment perhaps on Touchiniteel's curious sailor made costume.

As soon as he could get a chance to speak to Walter, Felix gave voice to his feelings, for the time being entirely forgetful of the very important fact that up to this time he had never by word or look betrayed to Walter his feeling for his sister.

"Do you see that?" he spoke to Walter as they walked along together a little distance from the wagons. The men had nearly all got down to walk over a piece of particularly hard going for the teams.

Walter looked over in the direction of Helen where Bauer was looking as he spoke, and shrugged his shoulders.

"Yes, but what of it?"

"You know Van Shaw?"

"Well, I don't like it, of course, but Helen is old enough to look out for herself."

"Do you mean that you are willing to have her become friendly with him?" said Felix, his simple clean mind horrified at the apparent indifference of Walter to Van Shaw's general looseness of moral habits as they knew him in Burrton.

"Well, what can I do?" said Walter with some show of irritation. "Do you want me to go back there, politely ask Van Shaw to stop the team, and say to Helen in his hearing: Dear Sister, the young man who is amusing you so finely this afternoon is the son of the greatest and most notorious railroad wrecker in America. He himself is known in the school at Burrton as the fastest and most vulgar youth in the institution. He drinks, he gambles, he is famous for the number of indecent stories he can tell, he has his rooms adorned with pictures of variety actresses, he has no high aims in life and never earned a cent since he was born, although he spends several thousands of dollars every year which his father makes for him by ruining other people. In short, sister, he is the last young man in all the universe with whom I, your brother, would desire you to become acquainted. Therefore, I am going to ask Mr. Van Shaw to wait until, with the help of Mr. Bauer who knows all these facts about Mr. Van Shaw as well as I do, we transfer you from this wagon to one of ours, although owing to our comparative poverty as measured by this Pittsburg outfit our wagons are not at all fitted to carry beautiful young ladies who have sustained severe ankle sprains.' Do you want me to go over to Van Shaw and get off a speech like that in order to save Helen?"

Bauer stared at Walter in solemn surprise. Then to Walter's surprise he said curtly:

"Every word of it is true."

"Yes, but you can't always say everything that's true. I wish for the life of me that Van Shaw had never put in an appearance. It has spoiled the trip for me. Besides, you never can tell what a girl will do. They're all romantic and, above all, unreasonable. Van Shaw is good looking and he's got money coming to him like the sand of this desert. And I don't forget a story Clifford was telling us this morning. It was about some American girl very much like Helen, in a book, who said to another girl that all she wanted of a husband in New York was a man to go down town in the morning to earn enough money for her to spend up town in the afternoon."

"You don't mean to say that your sister has any such ambition as that, do you?" asked Felix even slower than usual.

Walter looked at him curiously.

"You don't know Helen very well. She is very ambitious, and she has great respect for wealth. She thinks money can do most anything in this old world. There's no telling what Helen will do when it comes to marrying. I can't imagine her marrying a poor man."

"I would rather see her married to Touchiniteel than to Van Shaw!" said Bauer with a savage outburst that accelerated his speech and changed his entire countenance.

Walter looked at Felix again, with the same curious regard.

"You seem to be a good deal disturbed over the matter, old man. What difference does it make to you whether Helen marries Van Shaw of Touchiniteel?"

Buaer turned his face toward Walter with a look Walter never forgot. They were walking near one of the ruins of an abandoned village. Pieces of broken pottery and grinders were littered over the ground. Felix motioned to Walter to go farther up into the mound where these ruins were scattered.

"We can catch up with the teams. The folks will think we are looking for specimens," he said. Walter anticipated Bauer's story as he sat down by him and, in the midst of an ancient cliff dweller's century old debris of a home, heard his chum's simple story. After it was told in Bauer's slow but in this case intense manner, Walter said:

"I'm awfully sorry, old man; but I don't believe you stand a ghost of a chance with Helen."

"I don't suppose I do," assented Bauer humbly. "But you can see now why I feel as I do and what it means to me to see a fellow like Van Shaw with her. It is not only torture to me. I think some one ought to tell her."

"Tell her what?"

"About Van Shaw. Such men have no business to make love to pure girls like Helen."

Walter remonstrated.

"It's absurd, Felix. He isn't making love to her. Nonsense."

"He is!" said Bauer with a passionate burst that astonished Walter. "You do not know him as well as I do. I am acquainted with Van Shaw's history through the Raines-Bracken affair. You were not at Burrton when that happened. Nothing but the fear of losing some of old Van Shaw's legacies to the school prevented young Van Shaw's expulsion at the time. I can't go into the affair, Walter, but it gave me a loathing for Van Shaw that I never can overcome. It isn't because I feel holier than thou or anything like that; God knows I am in need of his great forgiveness; but it seems as wrong for us to leave your sister unacquainted with the real character of Van Shaw as it would to let her play with one of these rattlesnakes we are going to see in Oraibi the day after to-morrow, not knowing how deadly they were."

"Who'll tell her? Will you?"

"I? How can I do it? No. But it would seem quite the thing for you or your mother——"

"Mother doesn't know him," Walter interrupted somewhat curtly. "I don't see how I can say anything." Walter went on, with the caution many schoolboys feel about telling on others. "I really believe Helen is capable of protecting herself. And one of the quickest ways to get a girl interested in a man is to hint that he is not as good as he might be."

"That's your philosophy imbibed from your six best sellers," retorted Felix. Walter was a constant novel reader. "I am going to have a talk with your mother about the whole affair. She will know what to do."

"Will you tell her how you feel about Helen?"

Felix winced.

"She knows already."

"Oh, you have told her."

"No, she knows without my telling."

"Have you spoken to Helen?"

The color swept up over Bauer's face.

"No, and I never will."

"Does she know?" Walter persisted.

"I looked at her once," faltered Bauer, and for the soul of him Walter could not help roaring out at him.

As they rose to make their way to the wagons which had halted in a group to wait for them and others who had fallen behind, Walter smote Bauer on the back.

"Courage, old man. The case is not all hopeless. If you have got as far as a look, that's progress. What did Helen do?"

But Bauer drew into his reserve at this point and gravely refused to talk any more, and Walter did not venture to insist. Only, as they were going to their wagons Bauer simply said, "I shall tell your mother. It would not be right not to let her know."

"I don't know what mother can do about it," Walter replied dubiously.

"Mrs. Douglas is very wise," said Bauer. To that Walter made no answer, and they joined the rest of the party without further words.

That night the two camps were pitched close together, and two fires burned like red specks in the holes dug for the sagebrush and cedar roots. The chuck wagon in which Helen had been riding was left standing close by the tent pitched for her mother and Mrs. Masters. She seemed unusually cheerful and in answer to many inquiries assured all that she was resting easily and was nearly free from pain.

After the camp meal was over and the desert grey of the soft night had begun to wrap itself like an enveloping cloak about the two camps, as quietly and without warning of their presence natives of that weird tract of earth began to appear. When the camp was made there was not a hogon or any form of human habitation to be seen. But as Paul came back to the fire circle after helping Masters pitch the last of the tents he was astonished to see a dozen Indians, mostly young men, sitting on the sand close by. Masters spoke a word to them when he came up to the fire and one of the men answered briefly.

"They have come all the way from Leupp," he said to Paul. "Walked the entire distance of sixty-seven miles since sunrise."

"Do you know any of them?" Paul asked curiously.

"Yes, I have met one of the young men at Shungapavi. They are all going up to see the snake dance. It's the only feature about the Hopi that appeals to them."

Miss Gray began to sing; it seemed to Walter who was sitting on the Navajo blanket near her that he had never heard a voice of just that particular quality. It fitted into the surroundings wonderfully. The dusky faces with the inevitable headcloth of red or white were intent on hers, and when the song ceased and Walter looked up and around he saw the members of the other camp had come over and were standing or sitting about. Among the faces that were most noticeable to Walter was Van Shaw's. He was standing almost directly opposite Miss Gray, staring at her with a strange look as if he were in doubt of the reality of Miss Gray's presence in this group. It seemed to Walter that he was about to ask a question, but Masters, who at campfire was always intent on bringing his Gospel message to the miscellaneous audience he might not see again in many months, began to speak softly and affectionately.

The visitors from the outside world, including the party from Pittsburg, could not understand one word. It was not that that moved them. But Masters was gifted with a splendid voice in full control. After he had been speaking ten minutes the figures about the little fire crept closer up and narrowed the circle. Master's face was eloquent. Tears rolled down his cheeks.

(To be continued.)

Church Life

RESIGNATIONS.

A. R. Adams, Lansdowne Church, East St. Louis, Ill., takes effect Oct. 15.

CALLS.

Paul Preston, Corydon, Ia., to First, Ft. Smith, Ark. Accepts and begins work Oct. 1.

George W. Watson, Lima, O., to Lafayette, Ind. Accepts.

L. N. D. Wells, East Orange, N. J., to High Street, Akron, O. Undecided.

E. E. Kneedy, Watertown, to Aberdeen, S. D. Accepts.

H. C. Armstrong, Yale Divinity school, to Harlem Avenue, Baltimore.

C. E. Jackson ,Dublin, Ga., to Bailey Avenue, Chattanooga, Tenn. Accepts.

I. W. Lowman, to Granite City, Ill. Accepts.

EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Prosser, Me., Lee Ferguson, pastor; A. L. Crim and his company, evangelists.

Salina, Kan., C. L. Organ and four assistants are engaged to begin a meeting in November.

Nocona, Tex., F. W. Strong, pastor; Nathaniel Jacks and sons, evangelists; 81.

Union Star, Mo., J. E. Stout, evangelist; 23.

Ladoga, Ind., W. H. Newlin, pastor; W. T. Brooks, evangelist; 50.

Adelaide, Australia, C. R. Scoville and party, evangelists; 130 first day, 337 in eight day, 2,625 since tour was begun.

Hammett Place Church, St. Louis, C. C. Garrigues, pastor, has decided to build a twenty thousand dollar edifice.

Transylvania University has decided to remit all tuition fees of the sons and daughters of ministers who study there.

H. H. Peters spoke on American Missions at Sullivan, Ill., Sunday, Aug. 19. The Sullivan Church is looking for a preacher.

The new edifice built by Houston Heights congregation, Houston, Tex., was dedicated August 11. O. M. Pennock is pastor. He also organized the church.

British churches are enjoying an evangelistic campaign by James Small of Kansas City. Mr. Small is a Britisher himself having been baptized by Dr. W. T. Moore when the latter was preaching in London.

Dean Sherman Kirk, of Drake University, has been supplying the pulpit of First Church, Ft. Smith, Ark., during the summer. He will return to Des Moines by the middle of September.

Bethany College is made beneficiary of Texas farm land worth from $35,000 to $50,000 by the will of William R. Carle of Wapello, Ill., a former resident of West Virginia. The property consists of 14,000 acres, most of it in timber.

Oklahoma Christian University has changed its name to Phillips Christian University in honor of the late T. W. Phillips who gave somewhat generously to its endowment. It is understood the heirs of Mr. Phillips will continue their father's benefactions to the western institution.

President Joseph L. Garvin, of William Woods College, Missouri, writes enthusiastically about the prospect for next year's attendance. Many pupils are being enrolled. Mr. Garvin says, "We believe advertising pays and hope to do more of it in the future than in the past." We venture to say that the policy of advertising upon which the school embarked this year has brought the college to the attention of the brotherhood as never before and will bear fruit in all the coming years.

Secretary McCash informs us that regular two-cent fares to Louisville with obtain in the Western and Central Passenger Associations, but that the Southeastern and Southwestern Associations, including all the territory south of the Ohio river and southwest of the border of New Mexico and Colorado, gill give one and one-third fare; and by the deposit of the tickets at Louisville for validation and the payment of one dollar the time limit will be extended to Nov. 11.

W. D. Endres, pastor at Kirksville, Mo., says that there are more than 2,000 students in the state normal school and the Osteopathic College there. He requests parents and pastors to send him the names of students belonging to the Christian church. He will gladly look them up and render any pastoral or friendly assistance within his power. Mr. Endres believes young people should be advised when leaving for college to take their church letters with them and to become active members in the church in the college town.

County meetings in the sixth district of Missouri, are now being held. The superintendent of the district, Ralph E. Alexander writes of the good gatherings of Callaway and Shelby counties. Other meetings will be held as follows: Ralls County, at Perry, August 21 and 22; Randolph County, at Higbee, August 27 and 28; Boone County, Sept. 2 and 3; Marion County, at Hannibal, Sept. 10 and 11; Lincoln County, at Elsberry, Sept. 12 and 13; Pike County, at Frankford, Sept. 16, 17 and 18; Scotland County, at Memphis, fifth Sunday in September.

F. E. Smith, pastor of Second Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., writes a hearty report of the Cedar Rapids Summer Bible Conference, just closed. An attendance of more than 150 registered. President J. A. Marquis of Coe College has been the moving spirit in the conference, and, with others, has plans to make it, for this section, what Northfield and Winona are in theirs. The speakers were worthy of an ambitious institution. From three to five lectures were given by such men as Bishop Lewis of China, Dr. Snowden of Pittsburg, Dr. Griffis, author and student of the East, Shailer Mathews, Dr. Ross of Union Theological Seminary, Dr. Coburn of Meadville Seminary, and Dr. Cope, secretary of the Religious Education Association. These, with others, provided a program worthy of any assembly. Plans have been made to reach many more ministers and workers next year. The time will be the last week in July.

Plain Words on a Plain Evil.

Many ministers are speaking strong words these days in condemnation of the present styles of women's dress. One of the most discriminating and effective was that of Finis Idleman in Central Church, Des Moines, Ia., who declared that while the wearer might have no such intention, it was clearly the conscious purpose of the original designers of such garments to accentuate the sensuous lines of woman's figure. Earle Wilfley of Washington, D. C., says that present feminine fashions with respect to tight-fitting skirts are so immodest that they make men wonder if the wearer is not purposely trying to attract attention. Young women clad in more decorous garb than the so-called tube skirt rarely if ever are troubled by the masher.

Transcript From a Minister's Autobiography.

An Ohio minister about to move to another field publishes the following in his parish paper. It, no doubt, is a transcript of his autobiography: "What interesting experiences a minister sometimes has. He gets a call to a church. He breaks up, sells what he can, ships the remainder, pays railroad fare for his family, reaches the new place, drifts about for a time boarding wherever he can get board, or where he can afford to pay the price, finally moves into his new home. He finds that his furniture does not fit, and that things needed most in the new place are the very things he hasn't got. He takes what little money he has left, or writes back to some former friend and borrows enough to furnish the new place. After a few years, moving time comes 'round again. He gets a packer to come 'round and give an estimate on loading his goods. In the meantime he finds out the railroad rates. By this time he decides that he cannot afford to move the goods and pay his fare out of town on what he has saved during that pastorate, so he decides to sell. By the time he gets through with this he is ready to order his coffin, provided he has been able to get enough for his furniture to pay for one. Articles for which he paid fifty dollars must be sold for fifteen. Articles that cost thirty scarcely bring twelve, and so on down or up, until he wonders why he did not give it to the packer and mover and railroad, and go off and hide and save the bother. Ministers ought to have shares in every moving van, packing house and railroad in the United States, for they certainly bear their part in keeping them up. And yet there are people in the church who, in their prayers assure the Lord if he will only keep the minister humble, they will keep him poor. They certainly have a great many interests ready to help them out."

A Thrilling Report

The following stirring reports from Secretary Stephen J. Corey will thrill the hearts of the whole brotherhood:

"Steamship Oregon, Congo River, Irebu, Africa, July 3. Dear Brethren: We expect to reach Bolenge day after tolmorrow. We go into Ikoko to-day, the station of American Baptists on Lake Tumba. We have had a most delightful voyage. The Oregon is a splendid boat—nothing excels it on the river. Dr. and Mrs. Jaggard are in charge on this trip. The crew of fifteen or twenty are nearly all Bolenge Christians. Have visited five stations on way up river. A splendid work is being done among these poor people. The American and English Baptists speak of our work as the most successful on the Congo. The missionaries have planned a full program for me, which will take all my time up to date of sailing from Matadi.

"Jaggards are to go to Monieka with one of the new men. The other goes to Lotumbe with Herbert Smith, and stays there with Hedges when he returns. 901 baptisms this year. Will have conference of all missionaries and go over all problems."

Four days later he writes again. This is the greatest report we have ever received from the mission fields:

"Bolenge, Congo Free State, Africa, July 7th. We arrived safely Friday morning. All are well here and very busy. The July conference, just closed, has been quite remarkable. 209 were baptized yesterday. There are about 65 evangelists and their wives in. They brought with them over 600 from the villages. Some came six days' journey. The work is indeed wonderful. Every one down river told me that our mission was the marvel of the Congo, and it is so. The people are very poor, but they show great love for God in their simple way. They are happy in giving. Of course, there are problems. The elders and deacons here and the native congregation are severe in discipline. They withdraw fellowship for the use of tobacco or the arranging of the women's hair in the heathen fashion, but the people come back in penitence. 1,247 in Sunday-school.

"This is a wonderful work. Services began with prayer-meeting at five o'clock this morning, and did not close until nine tonight. At 8:30 this morning Hensey, Jaggard, Holder, Hobgood, Mark Njoji, Bufe and I baptized 209 in the mighty Congo. There were 1,247 at Sunday-school and 1,400 at church. I had the privilege of preaching to the people on "The Christian Life a New Life." Hensey interpreted. These are simple people, many of them from the back villages, with little clothing on, but they love the Lord. At the roll-call and thank-offering Friday night, with over 1,000 present, they filed two bath-tubs, six offering baskets, and the corner of a room. There were rods, money, chickens, ducks, bows and arrows, skirts, cloth, food, fruit, dishes, mats, and much else. All had a share. A boy who had walked six days wearing a loin cloth gave a shirt. 800 at Endeavor meeting. God is with these people. We are expecting great things at Longa, Lotumbe, and Monieka also. Stephen J. Corey.

We suggest that these communications be read in all the churches and Sunday-schools next Sunday. They will instruct and inspire the people.

A. McLean, President.

$10,000 For Ministerial Relief

September is the closing month of the missionary year, and has always been a good month for receipts to our ministerial relief work. We want it to be better than ever this year, for the very good reason that the needs of the work are annually increasing. And certainly the care and support of these old soldier-saints involve the church in a responsibility that a Christian conscience cannot ignore. This is one of the church's first duties, involving the essential principles of our Christianity. We may neglect some things without serious injury either to others or to ourselves, but, building as we are upon the service and sacrifice of our now aged and disabled ministers, we cannot neglect their needs without allowing them to suffer and thereby to bring discredit upon ourselves. Because of the needs and principles thus involved, we want ten thousand dollars for this work within the next thirty days, that is by September 30. This $10,000 will secure an additional $4,000, and this will bring the total receipts for the year to about the minimum of the necessity. And brethren, there should be no failure in these receipts. We cannot afford it. This is our last opportunity to call your attention to this matter before the close of the year and we hope you will give it your immediate and sympathetic consideration. Interest yourself to see that your church sends an offering before September 30th. If this cannot be, then send your own personal offering without fail. If you could realize how much suffering is daily endured by some of our good old people because of indifference to this ministry, you would answer this appeal with promptness and with liberality. We hope we meet in every reader of this appeal an open and responsive Christian heart. Make your exchange payable to Board of Ministerial Relief, and address 120 East Market Street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

A. L. Orcutt, President of the Board.

Illinois

Evangelist Lew D. Hill is in a meeting at Donahoe Prairie.

A new house of worship is being proposed for Sterling where Charles Stevens ministers.

D. H. Shanklin who preaches at Athens is in a promising revival meeting at Cornland, begun the middle of August.

J. W. Robbins, formerly of Massachusetts, is the new pastor of New Bedford Church, one of the strongest of Illinois' country churches.

Kimmundy Church enjoyed the ministry of Mrs. Lew D. Hill on a recent Sunday. Mrs. Hill is engaged in evangelistic work with her husband.

The congregation at Thomson is joining with other churches of the community in a union revival meeting held in a tent. The pastor is G. E. Scheerer.

Dixon Church is loaning its minister, S. Elwood Fisher, for a revival meeting at Pine Creek in September—the second held by Mr. Fisher for this church.

Rock Falls Church is to be housed in a new edifice built of concrete. The old building will be placed at the rear of the new auditorium. The work is already progressing. Roy A. Miller is the pastor.

Winona Assembly in Indiana is becoming popular location for Disciple pastors in recent years. Among those attending this year from Illinois are John R. Golden and F. W. Burnham of Springfield and Stephen E. Fisher of Champaign.

Pittwood Church, of which S. H. Kuntz is pastor, has reorganized its official board and is now revising its membership record. If this were done in many churches the membership might not sound so large, but it might sound nearer the truth.

This is the last opportunity to announce the state convention at Centralia, September 2nd to 5th. If your notification has not been sent to the local committtee it should be forwarded to Pastor A. L. Huff as early as possible. You should also make sure your church sends its one dollar to defray the convention expenses.

In accord with a custom dating back many years Vermont Church, where George B. McKee preaches, held its annual roll-call. The church is reported in the best of condition, a fine feeling prevailing. Recently the pastor's salary was increased, and this too unsolicited.

Rockford Church is progressing with its building movement. The selection of an architect fell on George W. Kramer of New York. Only about $2,000 of the $10,000 sought on the original canvass is yet to be subscribed. The plan is to erect an auditorium of brick which will appropriately combine with the incomplete structure in which the church has been meeting for several years. W. B. Clemmer, the pastor, is leading in the enterprise.

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 27
ESTABLISHED 1858
THE C. S. BELL CO. HILLSBORO, OHIO

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

WE READ and clip for you daily everything printed in the current country and city press of America pertaining to the subject of particular interest to you.
NEWSPAPERS contain many items daily which would inform you exclusively of where you can secure new business, an order or a contract; where a new store has been started, a new firm incorporated or a contract is to be let. A daily press clipping service means more business
FOR YOU. Send Stamp for Booklet
THE CONSOLIDATED PRESS CLIPPING CO.
1109 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, U. S. A.

A-t-t-e-n-t-i-o-n Disciples
While in attendance at your
International Convention
Louisville, Ky., Oct. 15-22
Col. C. W. Fowler will give you a great military treat on the drill-grounds of the famous Kentucky Military Institute
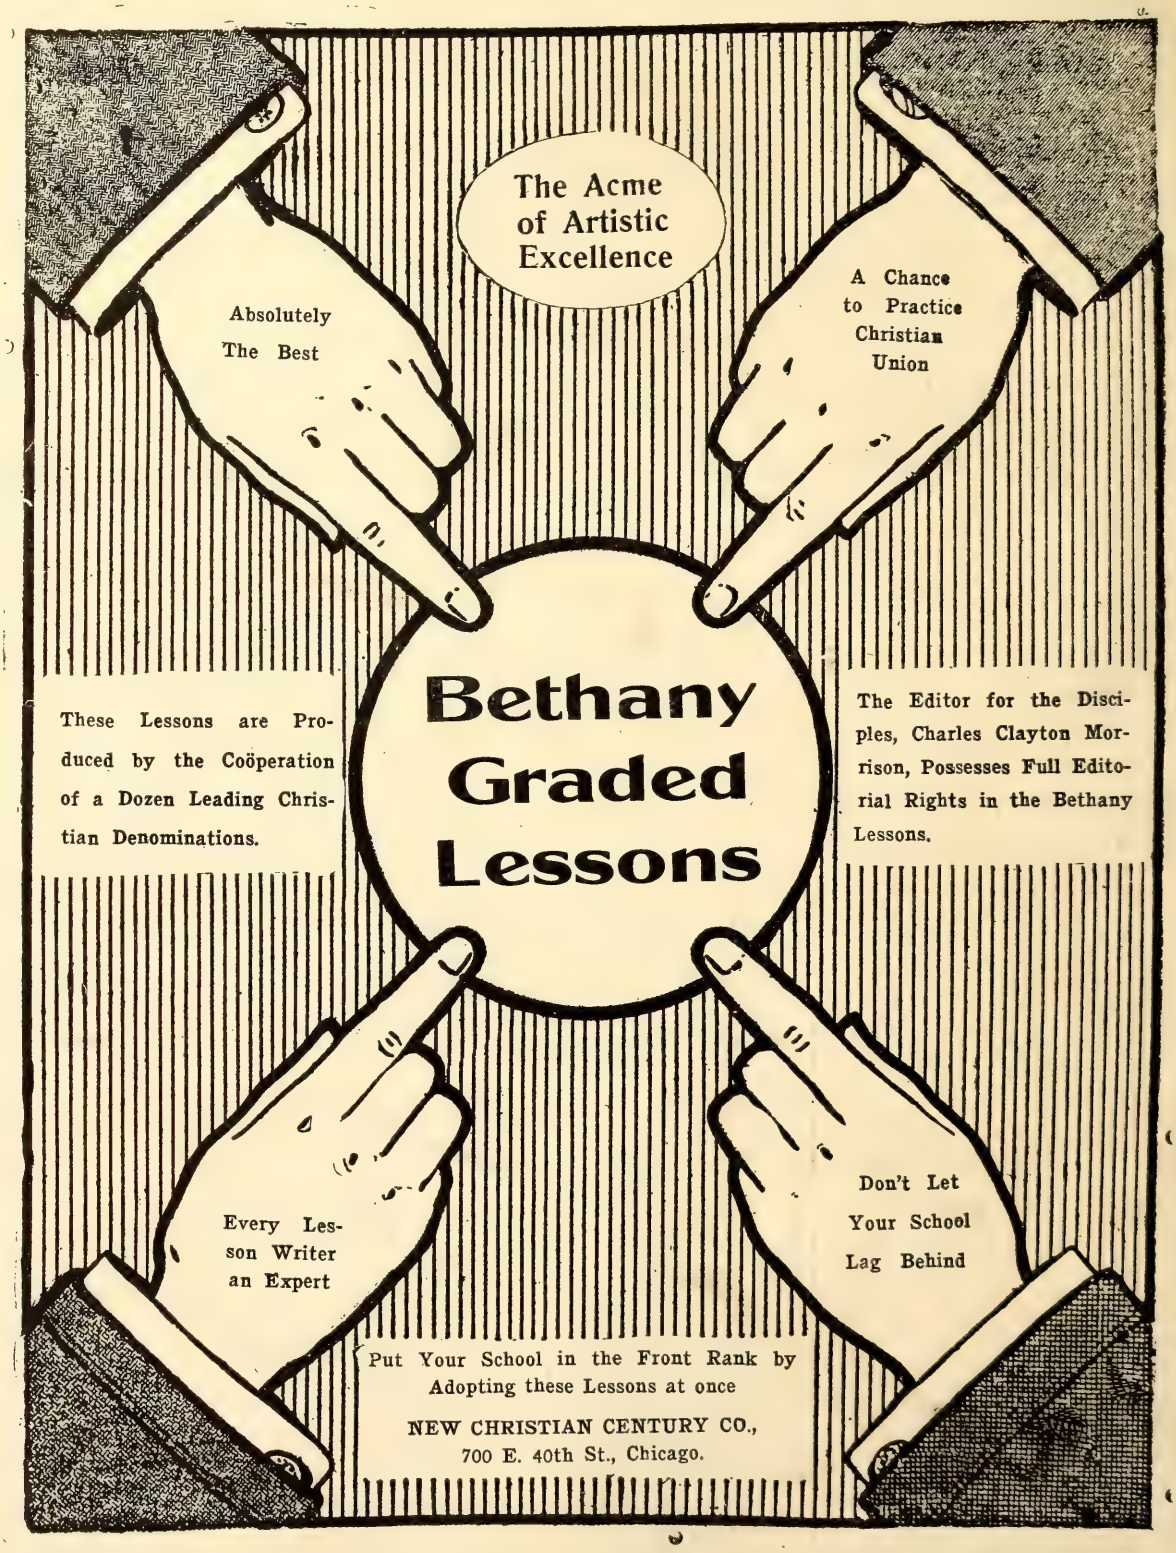
where boys are trained in the open for strong, quick-brained, red-blooded, four-square men—just outside the limits at Lyndon, Kentucky.
WRITE ME NOW WHETHER YOU ARE COMING
GEORGE A. JONES, Secretary.
Care First Christian Church, Louisville, Ky.



The Acme of Artistic Excellence
Absolutely The Best
A Chance to Practice Christian Union
Bethany Graded Lessons
These Lessons are Produced by the Coöperation of a Dozen Leading Christian Denominations.
The Editor for the Disciples, Charles Clayton Morrison, Possesses Full Editorial Rights in the Bethany Lessons.
Every Lesson Writer an Expert
Don't Let Your School Lag Behind
Put Your School in the Front Rank by Adopting these Lessons at once
NEW CHRISTIAN CENTURY CO.,
700 E. 40th St., Chicago.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Sharp Rev C M Dec12
5522 Kimbark Ave

Vol. XXIX. September 5, 1912 Number 36

GENERAL BOOTH
IN EDITORIAL TABLE TALK

AFTER VACATION
TWO ARTICLES: ONE BY WILLIAM E. BARTON, THE OTHER THE OPENING EDITORIAL

ITALY'S MOST BEAUTIFUL LAKE
BY GRACE DICKERSON

CHICAGO

OUR READERS' OPINIONS

The New Party

The present situation of political parties is more compelling than any since the days of the war and reconstruction.

The liquor power in our land has had its way up to the present time in its own program that there never shall be a political party in this land which a liquor vendor can not vote with and feel at home in and call his own. To this program the old political parties have given consent and ninety per cent of church members consent to it and no instance is shown where men lost their church membership by continuing to uphold the license system.

Now that a new party has come upon the field it is a sight for men and angels to see whether it will take any action that would alienate the liquor people and open the door for Christian men to enter and be free from their taint. But as there is already a party in which no liquor dealer was ever found and as the Christian people also have quite generally avoided it there is no proper motive for a new party to take up the cause of a sober nation against the aggressions of the law defying rum interests.

Is it not strange that Christian men are blinded and have forgotten the words of Lincoln that there never could be a slave dealer in an anti-slavery party and its vast importance now that there never can be a liquor dealer in an anti-liquor party. It compels thinking.

Some have supposed that an anti-saloon movement of some kind would answer without the need of a national party for the purpose, but since the supreme court at Washington decided on last January 20, that liquor may be shipped into any state, county, township, or home in all the land, so that the white maps which were used to show prohibition territory were all turned black on that day, it leaves not one rod of prohibition territory under the stars and stripes. Our president even made friends of these evil doers by sending a cabinet officer to preside at the last Brewers' congress.

Now, as never before, the Christian man and the Christian Church have come to the forks of the road, and God's voice is saying "choose you this day whom you will serve."

Holland, Mich. JOSEPH S. HUGHES.

A Progressive for Taft

I am a Republican. I am for Taft. I am a progressive, and believe that the Republican party and candidate are the best instrument at present for the passage of the best progressive measures. I hold that the Roosevelt party is a superfluity and the Democracy an impracticability.

Delphi, Ind. CLARIS YEUELL.

From a Methodist Point of View

Editors The Christian Century:

Allow me to congratulate you and your paper on the stand you are taking for true Christian unity. We of the other Christian denominations are of the belief that if we ever attain the end for which the Christian world is working now, it will be through tolerance of the conscientious scruples of one another, rather than through bigoted fanaticism along some particular line

Now, I grant every man the right to be baptized according to the form which his reason and conscience tells him is right. If he believes that immersion in the name of the Trinity is baptism, so be it. He would be doing wrong to be baptized in any other way. But I do not grant any man the right to tell me that my baptism, which happened to be by affusion, and which I have taken to myself since reaching the age of accountability, for I was baptized in infancy, was not genuine baptism. In quibbling over the particular form of baptism are we not going back to the old Jewish phariseeism? Sticklers for form to the detriment of the true spirit of the Gospel. When Christ was conversing with the woman of Samaria he said that which might well be applied to our present day. The woman said that their people claimed that that mountain was the place to worship, but the Jews contended that the temple at Jerusalem was the place, but Christ answered that "God is a Spirit and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

If our ordinance of Christian baptism was adopted by the early church as a means of induction into the church, in obedience to the injunction, "Go ye into all the world, and make Disciples of all nations," why is it a vital matter even though the particular form of administering that baptism has changed? Are our church edifices the same now as they were in the early church? Are our musical instruments the same as were used in that time? Do we go to church in the same kind of vehicles today as we did then? A thousand and one things have changed with the ages, and it is right that they should change, so long as they do not undermine the great fundamental—our faith in Jesus Christ as the only Saviour of the world, and hence our personal Saviour if we will accept him. This is an age of progress. Thank God, I believe it is an age when the various regiments of God's great army on earth are getting closer together than ever before. I can not believe that the majority of Disciples hold the bigoted view as set forth from week to week in some of their papers. I have known a number of preachers of that church and many adherents, numbering them among my very closest and warmest friends, and I believe it to be a fact that there is even now a great internal surging in the church in protest. I congratulate you for your courage in leading out in this great fight for tolerance and true Christian unity. Rest assured that you have the well wishes of the true Christians in all evangelical churches throughout the land, and these are after all the true members of God's Church. Our prayers are with you. Keep the good work going.

Viroqua, Wis. RAY WILLING SMITH,
Pastor Methodist Episcopal Church.

Motormaniac: "What do you think is the most difficult thing for a beginner to learn about an automobile?"

Frankenstein: "To keep from talking about it all the time."—Toledo Blade.

William Woods College

Has enrolled the seventh daughter of one family this year, and has received a letter from a mother stating that she intends sending her seventh daughter for 1912-13. The six sisters of both girls were educated in William Woods College. How is this for confidence in a good school?

Only two short weeks now until the 23rd successful year will open. September 18th is the day. Room for a few more girls. Reserve your room at once.

Write President Joseph L. Garvin, Desk "Y," Fulton, Mo.

How About Attending College This Year?

We want the name of every young man and every young woman who is considering this most important question. We believe we can show them that

DRAKE UNIVERSITY

Offers Great Advantages

It is located in the best residence district in Des Moines—the best city in the West. Surroundings clean and wholesome. Good influences surround the boy or girl who attends Drake University.

Courses of Study: Liberal Arts (including Courses for Primary, Kindergarten, Grade and High School Teachers and Students in Domestic Science), Law, Medicine, Dentistry, Bible, Music, Painting and Drawing, Dramatic Art, Etc. Thoroughly prepared teachers in all departments. The best of equipment. The Drake Stadium, one of the finest athletic fields in the country.

Write for catalogue and full particulars. Any question you may desire to ask will be answered cheerfully.

HILL M. BELL, President,

Drake University. Des Moines, Iowa

The Christian Century

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT . . . . . EDITORS

The Master Workman

THE REAL NEW YEAR'S DAY FOR THE church comes in September, not in January The sense of a fresh start in all the work of the church comes with the passing of the hot weather, the return of the members from their vacations and the settling down of life to a more regular schedule of activities. The pastor, too, comes from his vacation with a new sense of power. The little vexations of the year have quite faded out and the feeling of victory is in his heart.

Reviewing the past year not many of us have the sense of thoroughness in what we undertook to do for Christ. Most of us are humbled with the fact that our work in the church has not measured up to our ability and our light. There is with us the clear sense of at least partial failure, the knowledge that our past year is unfinished, that its arrears follow us into the present moment.

* * *

Our failures are ever with us.

They may be explained variously. Perhaps we have not worked well for Christ because we did not conceive and project for ourselves a task that was worthy to call out the best that is in us. Perhaps the work we did was mechanically done, not for love of souls nor of God, but for pride or love of the mere institution.

But with most of us our sense of partial failure in the Lord's work is accompanied with the haunting sense of an unsurrendered will. The second best things of life distracted our wills from the doing of the first best things. We never fully got our hearts' consent to do just "this one thing." Our interests were divided between God and mammon. Consequently our work was unfruitful, and as we have reviewed it in the detachment of our vacation it caused us shame.

Before beginning a new year it is well for us to face our failures, and with humility of heart bring them all into the presence of Christ our Master Workman. He came to do the will of God and declared with no self-deception at the close of his life, "I have finished the work Thou gavest me to do." It will do us good to observe him at his work and learn of him.

* * *

First of all, we are impressed with the busy-ness of his life. No critic of Jesus has ever called him an idler. There are the signs of strenuousness and vigor upon every page of his biography. At the early age of twelve he assured his mother that he must be "about his Father's business." Leaving the carpenter shop where he labored with his hands he passed into his public ministry. Here we find him busy all the time. Crowds surrounded him. They pressed at the door of the house where he was preaching. They came early in the morning with their sick to be healed. Intending to evade the multitude for a day that he might rest and talk quietly with his disciples, the crowd followed him around the lake into the desert place. Only at night had he leisure to pray. Likely he was aged prematurely by his strenuous toiling, for some guessed him to be fifty years old when he was but thirty-two. No loitering, leisurely ministry is here. His task was serious. The time was short. The will of God drove him on.

* * *

But we cannot fail to observe the calm orderliness of Christ at his wrk. Each day seemed complete. He betrays no distractions due to unfinished tasks. With a poise that marks him as one of the sanest men he moves easily among his duties and keeps his work before him. There are no arrears from day to day. Sleep came to him easily, as when he lay in the boat and slept through the tempest. He did not worry. His heart was clear. His will was lost in the Father's will.

As Christian workers we have no more important lesson to learn from our Master than this. Our church temper is anxious. The outsider is impressed with our uneasiness. We are fearful concerning financial support, concerning attendance, concerning the enlistment of more workers. It is thus that we lose in power. Real strength is in repose. But we cannot find repose in our work except as we find it in a cleear conscience, a consciousness that what is given us to do has been done with scruple and earnestness. After that the outcome rests with God and then our hearts may be calm.

* * *

Just here, therefore, is the third characteristic of the model Workman—that he moved ever in the sense of the companionship and partnership of God. The clear perception of this fact brought the values of his work home to his soul. Otherwise his work must have seemed an utter failure. Speaking from a purely human point of view, no man ever failed more abjectly than Jesus. But within his soul there was a sustaining sense of something that his disciples had not yet learned to reckon on. That was God. Under the apparent failure of the work of Jesus lay the working of God.

And God could not fail.

What God had been waiting for for centuries was not some great man who should succeed, but some faithful man who should fail for the sake of the truth. God's purpose did not require that his Servant should be great or picturesque, but only that he should faithfully do the plain will of the Father till the end of the day. Such a life failure God could use. From such a seed God could bring a vast harvest of souls.

It is immensely important for us as workers for God to see just this truth. We are really workers with God. The victory, the success, is not ours, but His. We may seem so unworthy. Our work may seem to count for so little. We spend our lives in a humble corner. But God is our partner. His power is underneath our puny efforts. His success is underneath our failure.

* * *

This new year let us watch the Master closely. Like him let us work hard, and let us work calmly. And like Him let us count God in, so that our hearts may have the sense of the dignity of the humble things we do and the assurance of ultimate success.

Social Survey

Muck-Raking the Newspapers

The various professions have come in for their share of criticism in recent years as being non-progressive and but ill adapted to modern conditions. It is now the turn of the newspaper man to submit to this useful kind of examination.

The first National Newspaper Conference was held at Madison, Wisconsin, this summer. At this conference, the various counts against the modern newspaper were enumerated. It was charged that the modern newspaper, in spite of its wonderful news gathering machinery, fails to do just what it blatantly professes to do, publish the news. This is due to the pressure of the advertisers who bear the major portion of the expense of getting out the newspaper, and to those corrupt influences which buy up editorial opinions at so much an inch. There were four remedies proposed.

Professor Ross, author of "Changing America," proposes that we shall have a privately endowed press. This would make the paper independent of the advertiser and yet not introduce the complicated kind of control that would come from a municipal newspaper.

Livy S. Richard, editor of the Boston Common, proposes that we shall have a public newspaper owned by the municipality. Since the newspaper is a public utility, it is argued that it should be put on the same basis that we are putting many other similar enterprises.

A. M. Simons, editor of the Coming Nation (Socialist), urges the abolution of the capitalist system, which would involve, of course, the abolution of the privately owned newspaper.

A still further suggestion was that of William Ellis of the Searchlight, who advocated the enactment of laws like the pure food laws that would penalize the publication of things untrue or hurtful to public morals.

The stand-patter was also there who insisted that the press was now pure and high-minded and that no reforms were necessary. That the newspaper as now conducted needs the muck-raker, few will deny.

The Parcels Post Coming at Last

Regard for the sensitive gentlemen who hold stock in the various express companies, has long held back in the United States a form of postal service to be found everywhere else in the civilized world. These gentlemen of the express companies have had such winning ways about the lobbies of Congress, that the people were never heard. At last we have a parcels post bill before Congress which seems likely to pass.

The bill was prepared by the democrats of the House but was amended in the Senate to provide for rates adjusted to certain zones. The democrats of the House have magnanimously decided to accept the republican amendments, and it seems that the bill will likely pass.

More Senators in the Limelight

The expulsion of Senator Lorimer from the higher branch of our national legislature has not appeased the public in its demand for clean senatorial elections. At the close of the present session of Congress, charges were brought against four senators, showing that corrupt influences had helped procure their election. Against one of these the charges were of such serious nature that the Senate has voted to investigate, and Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania, one of the right hand men of the Taft administration, must stand trial. It is not any wonder that the gentleman in question should be engaged just now in diverting public attention by yelling at Theodore Roosevelt, "Stop thief!"

The Problem of Missions in Japan

The gospel has made great advances in progressive Japan but it is far too much to say that the Christian religion is sufficiently established there to need no further help. Though Christians are now prominent in public life, the program of the empire is still in considerable measure anti-Christian.

Especially is this true of the religious and educational programs. Education has been projected in Japan upon a secular basis and the department of education has seemed to operate upon the theory that the future welfare of Japan demanded the emancipation of the nation from all religions which are looked upon as being alike superstitious. Other departments of the government, however, have been concerned to further the advances of Shintoism, the national religion, believing the success of Christianity or any foreign religion would make for a decline of patriotism.

Roosevelt and Standard Oil

A single day serves to change the situation in politics. The recent charges brought against Theodore Roosevelt by Senator Penrose and John D. Archbold before the Senate committee are the latest sensation. Roosevelt promptly denied the charge that he had sanctioned accepting a campaign contribution from the Standard Oil Company and asked of the Senate that he be allowed to testify.

This demand has not been complied with. Archbold's proof is a reputed conversation with a dead man. His statement is immediately followed by a trip to Europe. It will require more than such flimsy charges ever to convince the majority of the American citizens. Such tactics were once effective in politics but we are optimistic enough to believe they have ceased to be so.

Taking the Gospel to People

This season many of the churches have been trying the out-door service again. Last year even ritualistic Episcopal clergymen were to be found in the ranks of those who would take the gospel to the people.

The out-door service has many difficulties, of course. It is easily subject to interruption. Sometimes the people move on and hear only part of the service or drop in after it has well progressed. The audience is likely to be so varied in character that the preacher is hard put to it to find a theme so universal as to reach them all. There is always the temptation in the unwonted surroundings for the preacher to drop some of the dignity which has usually characterized his pulpit efforts. In spite, however, of these manifest handicaps, we are convinced that there is a type of open-air preaching which will do effective work for the kingdom.

The Y. M. C. A. of Evanston, a suburb of Chicago, is now having meetings every Sunday afternoon on the lake shore in a little park and those who have gone to the lake for air and exercise are drawn into a service, and with a virile message by the preacher, they are, for the most part, held to the close. Such work as this is genuinely missionary, for many of the people that go to the lake on Sunday are not regular churchgoers anywhere. Jesus was not tempted to depart from serious discussion of high things in his open-air meetings and if we shall know how to take our opportunity seriously and give our best message, in a language the people undestand, we shall not lack a hearing and much good seed will be sown for the kingdom.

The Russians of Chicago

The Russian colony in Chicago is one of the newer groups of foreigners in this city. Ten years ago, but few of them were here. We now have nearly twenty thousand pure Russians and many thousands more who speak the Russian language. There are Russian Jews and Russian Poles. Many other racial groups understand Russian, and especially the Bulgarians who speak a language very closely allied to Russian and employ the Russian character in writing. The Roman Catholics have displayed great enterprise in Chicago in taking care of their people, but the Greek Catholics are not so energetic.

There are but two or three Orthodox churches in Chicago for the vast population of Russians and Greeks that require such a church. Even these churches do not get a very great grip upon their people, a Servian editor insisting that their priest hold himself in readiness to perform the weddings and conduct the funerals, but that he should not trouble the people with further religious services. The whole Slavic problem, so urgent in the steel country in Pennsylvania, is now upon Chicago for a solution. The Disciples of Christ opened a Russian mission with a native worker a little over a year ago. Plans are maturing through the coöperation of the American Missionary Society to erect a fifteen thousand dollar plant for the work in the near future.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

Published Weekly by

The New Christian Century Co.

EDITORS—CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON AND HERBERT L. WILLETT
CONTRIBUTING EDITORS—SILAS JONES, IDA WITHERS HARRISON, ORVIS F. JORDAN, ELLIS B. BARNES.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Feb. 28, 1902, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, Under Act of March 3, 1879.

SUBSCRIPTIONS—Subscription price $2.00. If paid strictly in advance $1.50 will be accepted. To ministers if paid strictly in advance, $1.00 per year. Single copy, 5 cents.

EXPIRATIONS—The label on the paper shows the month to which subscription is paid. List is revised monthly. Change of date on label is a receipt for remittance on subscription account.

DISCONTINUANCES—In order that subscribers may not be annoyed by failure to receive the paper, it is not discontinued at expiration of time paid in advance unless so ordered), but is continued pending instruction from the subscriber. If discontinuance is desired, prompt notice should be sent and all arrearages paid.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS—In ordering change of address give the old as well as the new. If the paper does not reach you regularly, notify us at once.

REMITTANCES—Should be sent by draft or money order payable to The New Christian Century Company. IF LOCAL CHECK IS SENT ADD TEN CENTS FOR EXCHANGE.

United Religious Press Building

700-714 EAST FORTIETH ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

The Great Example

"Live with wolves, and you will learn to howl," say the Spaniards. Seneca wrote, "Noble examples stir us up to noble actions, and the very history of large and public souls inspires a man with generous thoughts." "And let me tell you," says Izaak Walton, "good company and good discourse are the very sinews of virtue." "You know the power of example; and I know what the poet says in the like case, which is worthy to be noted by all parents and people of civility:

> Many a one
> Owes to his country his religion;
> And in another, would as strongly grow,
> Had but his nurse or mother taught him so.

This is reason put into verse, and worthy the consideration of a wise man."

Precepts are good when they sum up our experience. We may learn from another what to do and what not to do. A fool with riches will teach us that wisdom is better than riches, unless we herd with the fools. The wrathful man enables us to understand the proverb that he that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city. But it is to the good that we look for help and not to the evil. A warning that we are on the wrong road is useful; it is far better to have a guide who knows the right road. Knowledge of the roads that lead us away from our destination will never of itself get us where we ought to be. If there is one road and only one that leads us home or to the place we wish to visit and we know that one, we have no reason to worry because we have knowledge of no other. If we have as our companions the good people of the world, we have ample opportunity to live up to the best there is in us.

A famous American educator said to one who inquired about his students that they were just as lazy as they dared to be. We are all as lazy spiritually as we dare to be. We must have constant stimulation or we fall below our proper level. We have to live where heavy demands are made upon us. For this reason we cannot afford to let a day pass without having before us the example of Jesus. An inferior example will not suffice. Of course, the effort of the weakest ought to be a spur to us. We cannot all live with saints. The notion that we ought not to expect much of ourselves while we lack the companionship of the great and good is fatal to the spiritual life. The words of Jesus, the picture of him given in the New Testament, and the influence he exerts upon very ordinary persons are sufficient to keep us alert, unless we are devoid of all spiritual discernment.

Jesus choose to suffer injustice rather than to inflict it. Therefore the world has been offended at him. It inclines to the view of David Harum that we should do unto the other fellow as he would do to us and do it first. If it fears deceit, it practices deceit. It too often answers fraud with fraud, hate with hate. The result is that evil is increased. The cure for injustice, ingratitude, lying, dishonesty, and hate is justice, gratitude, truthfulness, honesty, and love. We who think we are Christians have learned imperfectly the Master's method of curing the world of its sin. We try to drive men into goodness. This seems to be the easier way. To win them by victorious living we judge to be too hard for us.

The scoffers gathered about Jesus. He was too great to be understood by selfish men. Had he been a magician he would have been within the mental horizon of the men of his generation. Had he flattered the multitude and encouraged popular follies the mockers would have praised him. He ministered to human needs as a friend of man. He placed the final good of man above immediate satisfaction. He was uncompromising in his adherence to the right. It was therefore impossible for him to escape the mockery of disappointed selfishness. His religion is supported by those who endure bitter opposition. The world is not so good that it will witness without protest the elimination of its pagan notions and the destruction of its evil institutions. Progress within the church costs much. The man who demands a more consistent application of the principles of Jesus in the affairs of the church meets the ridicule of the majority, who identify custom with the will of God. The way of the cross is still the way of all those who would be disciples of Jesus. [Midweek Service, Sept. 11. Mark 15: 15-37.]

S. J.

"Unbaptized Christians"

One of the most interesting and amusing features in the current discussion of the practice of Christian union is the emergence of new words and phrases in the vocabulary of the Disciples. We have commented upon some of these terms previously. Here is a new one, however. Editor A. C. Smither in writing about the Berkeley, Calif., church, describes their recent forward step as a plan to receive "unbaptized Christians" into their membership.

This, it must be conceded, is incomparably better than the Christian Standard's phrase describing oriental Christians as "unbaptized heathen enrolled by denominational missionaries." Mr. Smither, at least, acknowledges that Presbyterians are Christians, members of the Church of Christ.

But the yoking together of these two words is a brand new heresy. The Christian Century is not omniscient, but it feels sure enough of its ground to affirm that nowhere in the Disciples' literature can a precedent be found for describing Presbyterians, Methodists and others as "unbaptized Christians." These two words have not been joined together in our characteristic thinking. The words are mutually contradictory. The Disciples have always taught that baptism was one of the "terms of pardon," that no one had the right to call himself a Christian, a member of the Church of Christ, who was not baptized. By what right, then, does Mr. Smither refer to a certain class of persons as "unbaptized Christians?"

Certainly not by the authority of the New Testament. There are no unbaptized Christians in the Book of Acts, nor are any such referred to in the Epistles. All apostolic Christians of whom we have any knowledge were baptized. Is Mr. Smither speaking "where the Scriptures speak" in this matter? Obviously not. The Scriptures would not tolerate his phrase, and the fact that the readers of the Christian Evangelist would tolerate it without objection only shows how far both from Scripture and our historic teaching a considerable body of the Disciples has wandered.

Or it may indicate what an eminent evangelist in a personal letter calls "mental paralysis due to great confusion of thought among us on the subject of baptism."

The Christian Century is determined to stand under the motto Thomas Campbell gave us, "Where the Scriptures speak we speak, and where the Scriptures are silent we are silent." The Scriptures give no authority for calling any unbaptized person a Christian or member of the Church of Christ, nor for calling any Christian person unbaptized.

The New Testament clearly teaches that baptism is the act of becoming a Christian, the conferment and acceptance of membership in the Church of Christ, the very act of incorporation into the body of Christ.

Like Mr. Smither, we joyfully agree that Presbyterians, though unimmersed, are Christians, members of the Church of Christ. Unlike him, we cannot say that they are unbaptized.

If he has used his new term advisedly and wishes to continue to use it, we have no doubt that readers of his words would be instructed if he should explain to them how any person becomes a Christian, a member of the Church of Christ, without baptism.

We predict that a convincing response to this request would revolutionize our evangelism!

EDITORIAL TABLE TALK

General Booth

William Booth rose from obscurity to world-wide distinction. How? By cultivating an unoccupied field, the neglected classes. The fierce competition which marked other spheres of effort did not hinder him. He had the very poor and down and out people mostly to himself. In "darkest England" there was nobody to elbow him off the right of way. His personal qualifications for the prosecution of the work in his chosen field can be summed up in two words, compassion and courage. He was moved with compassion for the poor, and he had the courage to break from the conventional way of doing church work. Other men may have had as much compassion, but less courage—they could not put off a frock coat and white necktie, and put on a red shirt and military blouse. Booth could do these things. He won half his battle by changing the style of his wearing apparel, and by persuading young women that they could do more service for the Lord in poke bonnets than in picture hats. It was the sharpest break with ecclesiastical conventionalism that the modern church has seen. It took great grit to make the break. William Booth had the grit.

The Late General Booth.

But to these two qualities we must also add genius for organization. The trouble with much work which is attempted among the neglected classes is lack of organization. A drunkard is reformed and let go; a down and outer is put on his feet and permitted to wander away; a woman is saved from the street and then left to herself. Booth did not make this mistake. He changed his title from minister to general and then took charge of everybody whom he conquered or converted. He lined them up and made them keep step with the music of fife and drum. People laughed, but it was a great game. It was the commander's way of keeping what he got instead of letting it wander away to the devil. It seemed arbitrary, almost despotic, but it was effective. A minor official who had been detailed to show the writer around the Salvation Army's posts in London remarked that surrender to higher authority was an absolute condition, that there was only one thing to do—obey. But it made an efficient army, and the number of redeemed men seen on that round of investigation seemed to justify the means.

General Booth understood human nature, and English human nature in particular. The processions of all secret societies show how men like signs of distinction, gold braid, feathers in their hats, and stripes down their pants. And the English people have been looking upon the signs of nobility and royalty for a thousand years; and for a thousand years battalions of soldiers have marched along their streets. Yearning for an outer sign is in the blood. General Booth took it all in, and succeeded. Perhaps the only mistake which can be charged against him is the poke bonnet. To overshadow the pretty faces of fair young women with a creation so ugly as a poke bonnet is an offense not easily forgiven. However the general had his defense when the more recent monstrosities of fashion began to appear on the heads of women. Those who wear them are not in a position to poke fun at the army lassies.

But General Booth did a great work. He fought poverty, grim, dreadful, desperate poverty. He fought it in the clutch of the demon of drink, in the degradation of rags, starvation and the last ditch, in the blackness and horror of London slums, poverty hanging over the bottomless pit of the submerged. He did not build a nice house and wait for it to come to the door and rap, but he went where it was. He took it by the hand, brothered it, sistered it, saved it. A greater friend of the poor than General Booth has not appeared since that day when Jesus Christ went about doing good. He had the two first ideas of the gospel at the bottom of his heart, that lost men can be saved, and that they are worth saving. His first conviction rested upon full faith in the saving power of the gospel, and the second was amply sustained and justified by his experience. "We find some rare jewels among these men," said the London guide to the editor as he gazed fondly at a group of them lining up for dinner. They made valuable additions to the army. For they had not only natural talent, but also an experience which made them confident that other lost men could be saved. It was a work which accumulated strength with numbers.

Another effect of General Booth's work is seen in its effect upon other religious organizations. All have felt it. There was inspiration in it, example in it. Men in the Established Church, buttoned in gowns up to the chins, were stirred by it, and nonconformity took on new courage in its efforts to reach the masses.

The world, therefore, has much reason for the praise which it is according to General William Booth, and the more so because he was a general who saved men instead of killing them.

Big Funeral for Mikado

The official programme for the funeral of Emperor Mutsuhito, who died July 30th, has been issued. The services are to begin at 6 a. m., September 13th, when Emperor Yoshihito and the Empress Dowager will be present. At 7 o'clock in the evening of the same day the elder statesmen, the peers, all the high officials and the foreign representatives, among whom will be Philander C. Knox, American Secretary of State, are to assemble at the palace from which the procession will start at 8 p. m.

Emperor Yoshihito will not join the procession, but will meet it on the Aoyama parade ground. The line of march, which will be long, is to be interspersed with musicians, torchbearers and officials carrying emblems. The coffin of the Emperor is to be drawn by a team of oxen. Immediately after the arrival of the procession at Aoyama the funeral service will begin and will include the imposing Shinto ritual. After the services the Emperor will read a tribute to the dead monarch, and this will be followed by another read by the Empress Dowager, who will be succeeded by the ministers of state and others. At the close of this service the imperial train is to leave for Kjoto, but Emperor Yoshihito and the Empress Dowager will not travel on it. The train is scheduled to arrive at the station, especially built at Momoyama, at 5:10 p. m., September 14, and a procession similar to that arranged from the palace to the Aoyama parade grounds will be held. Tributes to the Emperor's memory will be read beside the tomb. Further services are to be held September 15th.

Nearing the Million

As the Church Extension Society nears its million dollar goal the pulse of every loyal Disciple quickens its beat. The goal must be reached and passed by September 30. To do so will thrill the Louisville convention and inspire the entire brotherhood. The plea of church extension is a great plea. Its function is to conserve the results of our evangelism. There is no good in sowing seed unless one has determined to conserve the growing crop and the ripened harvest. A church house holds the young church together. It provides the condition within which the "family" feeling may grow. It is hard for a congregation to feel its own unity until it has its own home. The house is the symbol of spiritual values and purposes. It serves a useful purpose itself in protecting the congregation from cold and rain, but its function is not wholly nor mainly utilitarian. It is idealistic. It constantly suggests the spiritual life. Its steeple points the whole community to the skies. Its arches and windows subdue the soul to reverence and devotion. Its social appointments constantly prompt to new forms of service.

Of elemental importance is it therefore that our young churches be given a chance to build their church home as early and as easily as possible. Except in rare cases they ought not be compelled to erect a house unaided. The whole brotherhood should have fellowship with the new congregation in this enterprise. This fellowship is of a piece with the impulse that prompts the parent to build a modest home as his wedding gift to his son or daughter. The Church Extension Society is the means by which the whole brotherhood plays the paternalistic role toward the young congregation setting up for itself. Church Extension does not make a gift of a house to any congregation, but it provides a way by which many a congregation may secure a house for itself, which would else be compelled to struggle along in a hall or disband altogether.

The entire month of September belongs to this great cause. Its appeal is made to the churches at a disadvantageous time. Many pastors are away during August. Most memberships are more or less disintegrated in the summer. The season's work has hardly begun when the Church Extension call is made.

This, however, should only spur every minister to yet more than ordinary efforts to make a creditable offering for this important work. If the first Sunday is not convenient, let some other Sunday in September be chosen. By no means let this Church Extension month go by without collecting the gifts of the people for this work at once so business-like and so gracious.

Our Presbyterian Neighbors

The annual minutes of the Presbyterian Church (north) are out for the year April 1911-1912, and they show that the denomination has made a net gain in membership of 25,605. This is just below 2 per cent of their previous membership. While the increase is not large, it is larger than the growth of the population—which was slightly over 8 per cent for the ten years intervening between the census of 1900 and that of 1910. That the figures are not inflated may be proven by the fact that during the past year the clerks of the 10,030 churches "charged off" more non-resident members than ever before, and the number of "deceased" was also greater. The number received on confession of faith reached almost 80,000, the number joining by letter being about equal to those dismissed. It is a significant fact that the Presbyterians received during the year 118 ministers from other denominations, while dismissing to them only two. Probably most of those coming into the ministerial ranks of the strong church are individual members of smaller Presbyterian bodies who solve the question of reunion in their own way. Despite all we hear of the dearth of candidates we note that the Presbyterians have 1,130 candidates for the ministry to 9,274 ordained ministers, and that they ordained 245 men last year to replace the 160 that died. On the whole the figures indicate vigor and growth, which impression is further deepened by the fact that they raised $18,653,574 for congregational expenses during the same year and gave $7,165,041 to charities through their regular church channels. The latter figures would be swelled two million more if the interest of their invested funds were added. All of which reminds us of a talk we heard between two neighbors of ours, one a Christian Scientist and the other a Presbyterian. The former was speaking boastingly of the numbers and wealth of the Christian Scientists in the United States, when his Presbyterian friend replied: "The one branch of Presbyterians to which I belong receives more members every year than you have now, and we give more every year than all your investments are worth." Which seemed to us an extreme statement—but the figures of the minutes for 1912 go far to justify it.

Protected and Taxed

Mr. Underwood of Alabama, leader of the Democratic House of Representatives, who was not nominated for the presidency, sets forth as he sees it the situation before the American consumer under the present tariff system. Mr. Underwood is an expert on tariff matters and deserves a listening ear. He says among other things: "Under the present oppressive tariff law the laboring man returns at night from his toil clad in a woolen suit taxed 75 per cent, shoes taxed 12 per cent, stockings and underwear taxed 71 per cent, a cotton shirt taxed 50 per cent, a wool hat and woolen gloves taxed 78 per cent. He carries a dinner pail taxed 45 per cent and greets his wife as he looks through a window pane taxed 62 per cent, with a curtain taxed 42 per cent. After scraping his shoes on an iron scraper taxed 75 per cent, he wipes them on a mat taxed 50 per cent. He lifts the door latch taxed 45 per cent, steps on a carpet taxed 62 per cent, and kisses his wife, clad in a woolen dress taxed 75 per cent. She is mending an umbrella taxed 50 per cent with thread taxed 30 per cent. The house is made of brick taxed 25 per cent and lumber taxed 9 per cent, with paint taxed 32 per cent. He uses a knife and fork taxed 50 per cent in eating salt fish taxed 10 per cent, bread 20 per cent, potatoes 22 per cent, salt 33 per cent, butter 24 per cent, and rice 62 per cent. He proceeds to read a book taxed 25 per cent and at the close of the day reclines in an iron-frame bed taxed 45 per cent. He is taken ill and the doctor prescribes medicine taxed 25 per cent; this being ineffective, he passes from this active sphere of life and his remains are deposited in a coffin taxed 35 per cent, which is conveyed to a cemetery in a wagon taxed 35 per cent." Mr. Underwood thinks that the American laboring man is taxed as well as protected, and he is.

Cigarette Vice in China

The Anti-Cigarette League and other anti-tobacco movements which have done so much to put cigarettes out of the reach of young Americans will now have a chance to work on the Chinese if they care to invade that country. Opium, for centuries the curse of the Chinese empire, has given way before the insidious American cigarette, while in America the cigarette is leading to a more general use of opium, according to Professor Albert Schneider, in charge of the United States bureau of chemistry at San Francisco. Following the campaign against opium in China, the "tobacco trust," through its American and European branches, sent an army of men into the empire and distributed free more than $5,000,000 worth of cigarettes. Professor Schneider says boys and girls in China, many little more than able to walk without assistance, are confirmed cigarette "fiends." Professor Schneider said he had been told opium was put into the cigarettes now being sold in China.

"Religions One at the Root"

Nothing seems to fit the present indifference in religion better than the Bahaia's dictum that "All religions are one at the root." But the trouble is that we don't get our food from the root but from the tree. A walk through the grounds of any nurseryman would soon make that evident. The pomologist is looking for a hardy stock, and when he finds it he sets out hundreds of thousands, all alike. But by the time his scions are the size of a lead-pencil he grafts them with the fifty kinds of apples he means to put on the market. The root is the same but the branches are what he chooses. Christianity and Mohammedanism have the same monotheistic root, but one produces the home and the other the harem. Romanism and Protestantism have the same Nicene creed, but one produces the Inquisition and the other the Free School. Even the Babist head who has come to America to preach about the "oneness" of the root must perceive the difference in the fruit, since he preaches freely in the American parlor what in his own home landed him in a Mohammedan prison.

Chicago's School Census

Chicago is large and still growing, according to the school census estimates of this year. The population of the city is 2,381,700. The school census figures, which are given in the report on the biennial school census filed with the board of education, are based upon the number of minors in the city, a total of 882,516. This total multiplied by the commonly used ratio of 2.7 gives the new estimate of the city's population. The census shows a large increase in the number of persons below the age of 21 years. There are 443,854 males and 438,662 females, an increase of 68,401 minors in two years, the report of 1910 showing a total of 814,115. The census is the first taken since the ward reapportionment and cannot therefore form a basis of comparison with previous ward censuses. Among the features brought out in the report are: With a total of 187,976 babies under 4 years of age there is no race suicide in Chicago. The sixteenth ward, peopled largely by Poles, takes first honors in the city with 8,754 babies. There is an increase in the number of juveniles at work, possibly due to the high cost of living. Many alternate between work and school. The total of children whose parents are of foreign birth is 604,055, and of this number 50,791 are foreign born. The Germans lead among the foreigners as to the number of minors, with the Poles second. The Germans also lead in the number of marriages. Attendance at public and private schools of children between seven and fourteen years is the best within the city's history. There are 6,740 teachers in the public schools, 1,588 in the parochial schools and 1,347 in private schools other than parochial.

The Perrennial Struggle

The greatest struggle going on in the philosophical realm to-day is the discussion concerning old facts and new theories. Old rocks and new geology. Old stars and new astronomy. Old flowers and new botany. Old life and new biology. Old Scriptures and new interpretation. Old religion and new theology. Old truths and new applications. This is the perpetual battle, ever in progress, between the old and the new.

Whitlock's Latest Book

Brand Whitlock, humanitarian, newspaper reporter, lawyer, clever fictionist and mayor of Ohio's beautiful city Toledo for three or four times, has gotten out a new book of short stories called "The Fall Guy," published by Bobbs Merrill, Indianapolis. In the world of slang and queer expression the "fall guy" is the man who is caught when others get away; the man who is licked in a fight whether he deserves it or not; the man who is beaten in a race that perhaps he ought to have won. The "fall guy" in this book was a yeggman, "Curly," with a bit of tender sentiment that came forth from a far-away corner of his heart, and a smart, military stride that "even the lock-step had never quite worn out of his gait." He goes to prison to save a pal of the opposite sex, so we find him something of a hero and not a "fall guy" after all.

In the "Girl That's Down" we find another hardened character of the opposite sex, whom a strange new judge had just let go, starting the other way, the right way, when life had about closed its doors of opportunity to her with a companion just starting wrong whom she was going to help. Mr. Whitlock has a great sympathy for the under dog in life's battle, and his pen is wonderfully descriptive. His position that society is entirely responsible for its criminals is perhaps a strong one, but he entertains us and leaves us thinking; something that all writers do not do. We are always glad when he comes to the desk with his vivid description of "gay cats," "yeggs," "dips," "leather snatchers," "moll buzzers," "beaks," "bulls," life in "stir" and out of it and the world that this strange world comes in contact with. His "Turn of the Balance" was a great study in sociology by a great realist, and we want another one along the same line.

"Mountains lie round about it. Nestling at the base of the mountains are towns unmistakably Italian."

Italy's Most Beautiful Lake

Lake Garda—Little Known and Rarely Visited

By Grace Dickerson

Why is it that Garda, the most imposing and in some ways the most beautiful of the Italian lakes, should be comparatively unknown? Its beauties were appreciated by Catullus and Dante, but it is little visited by the modern tourist. Indeed, it is one of its greatest charms that it is not haunted by the ordinary sight-seer and the inevitable accompaniment of couriers, guides, vendors of souvenirs and sham antiques. It is an unspoiled paradise, as yet, for those who may alight on their journey from Milan to Venice at the little station of Desenzano, or at Mora on the way from Innsbruck to Verona to explore its blue waters. "Blue" is not sufficient to describe the luminous, brilliant color of Lake Garda. One wishes to intensify the adjective; for the blueness seems tangible and unchangeable, although full of variety in shades. Mountains lie round about it, bold and rocky on the north, more verdant and wooded toward the south. Vineyards are everywhere along the lower slopes and the vegetation is semi-tropical.

The upper end of the lake reminds one unexpectedly of a Norwegian fjord, for, from its waters, heights of rocky mountain rise precipitous and bare. They form striking, bold promontories and these shut off the view beyond as do the rocky mountain sides of Norway. Like those, too, the mountains are bare of vegetation, and of human habitation. But here the resemblance ceases, for the northern waters are a deep, dark green and the northern skies are not those of sunny Italy. Nestling at the base of the mountains along the water's edge, also, are towns unmistakably Italian. The Austrian flag may float over some of them, but no country but Italy could produce them. Such fascinating towns! Such a confusion of pink and blue and buff houses! Such towers and campanile, such castles crowning the rocks! At the north lie the twin towns Riva and Torboli, with the long, crouching form of Monte Brione between them. Torboli is a pale yellow and pink town, but its reflection is a deep rose because of the red sea-walls which rise from out the waters overtopped by gardens of oleander, cypress and poplar and overgrown with drooping vines. Dirty, pretty children play along the quay; dark-hued women kneel on the stones to wash their clothes and beat them in the clear water, while fishermen dry their nets, and boats with yellow and tawny sails swing lazily at their moorings Upon the hill rising straight above the quay is a fish-hatchery interesting to visit if the traveler has a mind to climb from one vine-covered terrace to another. He can there see the whole process of fish culture from the egg to the sturdy twenty-year-old fish. It is quite "the thing" to do, for Garda has been famous all through the centuries for her fish.

Within the town are dark, narrow streets, where pale children look out from the arched doorways of damp houses. There are fresh flowers below the Virgin's shrine on the wall, placed there by one who besought—what? and there up the steps of the church goes a baby to its christening. The mother walks proudly, as do mothers the world over, and looks resplendent in her long, red velvet cape edged with heavy white lace six inches deep. To and from the fountain in the square tall women carry their copper water-jars as women have carried them for generations past. No doubt Goethe watched their ancestors just so, as he looked out from his window over the way while he penned the lines of his "Iphegenia."

Even more picturesque than Torboli is buff-colored Riva, with its red roofs and massive gray towers. It is seen to great advantage from the new road which wends its white way along the cliffs, now disappearing through tunnels only to emerge more beautiful as it skirts another rocky promontory.

From here the town gleams bright against its purple background of hills, and its gardens make contrasts of dark green between the stucco buildings. Up and down ply little boats with gay-colored sails. The best way, perhaps, to enjoy the scene is from one of those very boats with a saffron sail, rowed by a pleasant boatman who stands, as do the gondoliers, and keeps a golden silence while you sit in the shade of the sail and look and dream. When the day grows too warm he lands you with many a bow and a "grazie, signorina" at one of the gardens. Oh, those gardens! deep in shade of sycamore, poplar and cypress, fragrant with box and rose, cool with the sound of water dripping into marble basins!

The traveler takes a quick admiring glance at the fine public buildings of this little town; but in the gardens he lingers and dreams. After all, it is the imagination that puts an edge to the enjoyment of present beauty, and it is Italy's greatest charm that her atmosphere makes us dream and conjure up the history and romance of by-gone ages.

The little town of Torboli takes on a new interest when we remember that it was from her shore that the fleet of galleys from Venice was, in 1438, launched upon the blue waters for the purpose of defeating the visconti who held the territory around Lake Garda. Then was seen the strange sight of vessels resting on a mountain-top as the huge galleys were somehow gotten over the heights of Monte Baldo and with great peril down its precipitous slopes to the harbor of Torboli. This was a tremendous feat of engineering performed in the fifteenth century.

So it is all along the shores of the lake—present beauty of color, of form, of sound, and fragrance, is everywhere enhanced by the imagination which revives old scenes and ages past.

The little steamer sails at noon-time from Riva, and plying back and forth across the lake, touches at the towns which cling to the narrow strip of land between the abrupt mountains and the water. Each has its own beauty or picturesqueness. Limone, looking at a distance like a huge empty honey-comb, appears, on near view, a town of glaring white posts covered with trellis against which are trained the lemon trees which furnish thousands of lemons for exportation. The crags above the town are rugged but they soften into the shimmery green of olive trees. Off the quay are anchored small government torpedo boats with electric search-lights to find out smugglers.

The steamer makes but a short stop and presently turns its prow across the lake again toward a rocky promontory crowned by the castle of Malcesine—a massive, brown castle, its machicolated bastions rising one above another surmounted by a square tall tower. Remnants of a machicolated wall show how the town which nestled near the castle was once protected. Three castles are the glory of Lake Garda; and there is none more splendid and romantic in all Italy. Malcesine commands the finest position of them all, on its lofty rock foundation rising sheer from out the lake and over-shadowed by the heights of Monte Baldo. It dates from the time of Charlemagne and was, no doubt, a fortress of great importance, since it commands one of the principal approaches to the Venetian provinces from Austria. It was, during many years when Venice held sway over the lake, the residence of the officers of the Venetian republic. Goethe had a curious adventure here during that period. It was long before the days of camera snap-shots, but a simple sketch of the fortress effected the same result—the arrest of the man who took it. Goethe was imprisoned within its walls on suspicion of being an Austrian spy and it took some time and pains to convince the authorities of his distinguished identity.

The traveler wishes he could remain and pore over the histories to discover all the incidents and romances of mediæval times which centered around the battlements of Malcesine. Meantime the steamer has put off and the traveler must stand at the stern to take a last look at the picture; the bold mountain background, the surrounding green of ancient olives (the finest in Italy), the imposing, massive pile of the castle on its promontory and the little boats with tawny sails which ride at anchor by the stone sea-wall.

Almost too rapidly it grows dim and the steamer is soon passing under the mountain of rock on the opposite side the lake, where Tremosine clings to its crags at the dizzy height of a thousand feet; then by Campione and its orange-colored cliffs, to Gargnano a more pretentious place with villas of white marble where prosperous inhabitants of Milan and Verona fleet the time gaily among their gardens. The humblest houses here are often decorated with porches and pillars of marble. Here begins the so-called Riviera di Salo, a district unsurpassed for beauty of scenery, climate and vegetation. This region is a favorite winter resort, because the climate is delightfully mild. Never but once in many centuries have the waters of Lake Garda been known to freeze, for they are fed by hot springs. The gardens grow even more luxurious with masses of oleander, brilliant hibiscus and salvia; varieties of cactus, the yucca gloriosa, the giant rosemary and other almost tropical growths.

Tuscolano, with its lemons and sentinel cypresses; Moderno, with its grapes like those of Escalon; Fazano and Gardone, with their villas and pergolas and entrancing gardens; all lure the traveler ashore and make him vow a speedy return to this land of beauty and romance.

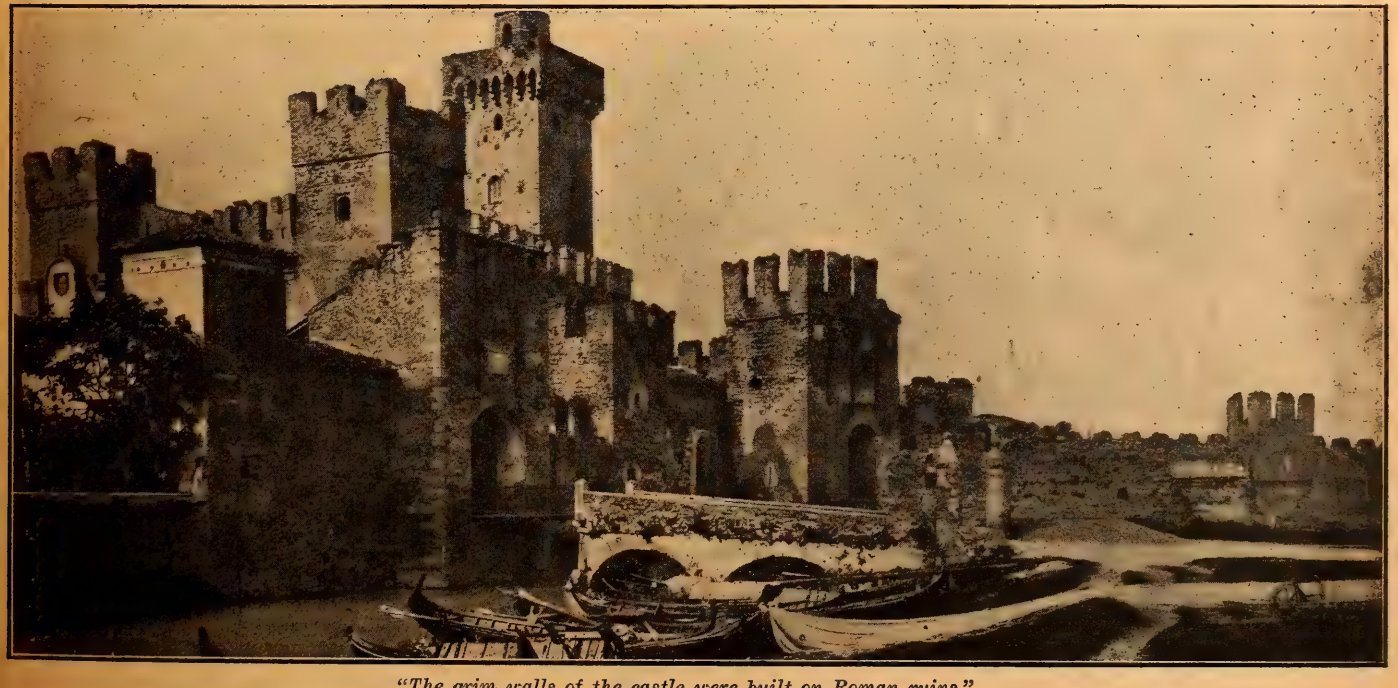
Across the lake, meanwhile, the lovely point of Vigilio and its long lines of bayonet-like cypress trees beckon, and the island where rise the ornate marble walls of the Borgese's villa. These things should be explored and admired at close range.

Suddenly the great mass of the fortress of Lazise appears, and this must be visited at once. It is a magnificent pile of feudal keep, walls and towers, a great square block, battlemented and imposing. It was a Scaliger stronghold, when the Scaligers were the tyrant princes of Verona, and its walls could tell of forays and sieges, of cruelty and wrong.

Lake Garda cannot offer anything further, the tourist thinks, yet there is still to come the city of Sato, once a Roman military station, with interesting buildings and a history all its own. Finally there is Sermione. The grim walls of this third castle, built on Roman ruins, rise on a long, low promontory near Desanzano, at the southern end of the lake. At sight of its battlements and stately towers the traveler longs to be a Sir Walter or a Marion Crawford, to be able to people it with the warlike Scaligers, who guarded the approaches to Verona, or with the "grave signors of Venice, ambassadors of the republic, pacing up and down in their furred robes, in earnest converse with the tyrants of Verona as to how best to check the arrogant pretensions of the Vatican in its perpetual struggle to extend its temporal dominions. He will see bands of trembling Waldensians seeking shelter from the barbarous tortures and cruel deaths of the future 'Saint' Count Charles Barromeo, cardinal, and secretary of state to the Vicar of Him who preached charity to all men!" He will hear the sound of the lute, perhaps, and of forgotten love-making which must have gone on in the summer nights beneath these battlements in spite of war and carnage. Perhaps he will see the form of Queen Adelaide, wife of Lothario, king of Italy, flit past the tiny window of the grotto where she was hidden for a time after Brother Martino had rescued her from the Torre di Garda, where she had been imprisoned by her husband's murderer, because she refused to marry him.

He will certainly see Dante's austere figure leaning over the parapet, for tradition says he was sheltered in Sermione on his exile way to the court of Verona. By and by the traveler who can dream will see French troops quartered in the castle and entrenched under its reddish-brown walls, while Napoleon looks down from its battlements as he lays siege to Peschiera.

Yes, there are almost countless scenes to conjure up, countless romances to dream as one walks about the mediæval walls of Sermione. And around about are the gray-green olive trees, gnarled and ancient; at one's feet lie the blue waters of the lake sparkling in the warm sunshine, encircled by mountains capped with Alpine snows. Alpine snows! Yet in this marvelous region each breeze is drenched in fragrance from gardens filled with tropic bloom.



"The grim walls of the castle were built on Roman ruins."

Lake Garda—The Castle of Sermione.

Working the Immigrant Child

How Industry Does Its Worst to Stunt Their Lives

By Charles B. Drake

Vice-President Disciples' Missionary Union, New York City.

During the year ending June, 1911, 736,642 immigrants entered the United States through the port of New York. The hope of this city is the children of the immigrants. At the present time, the New York Child Labor Committee states that these children from three to twelve years of age are working fifteen hours a day in their homes and in the sweat-shops.

If the reader of this article is a woman, I wish she would meditate on this fact when she puts on her hat trimmed with willow plumes. These plumes, as you know, are made of tiny ostrich feathers called "flues," each two to three inches long, and the handsome long plume is made by tying these flues together in a double knot. The willow plumes are almost all made by children and they are paid one cent for tying forty knots. Just think of it! Let the reader take forty pieces of string, each piece two inches long, and tie them together in double knots and see how long it takes, and then imagine receiving one cent as your wages. These children, from four to twelve years of age, working from six in the morning until nine at night, fifteen hours, by constant application can earn sixty cents a day.

The children of the immigrants also manufacture artificial flowers. These flowers have fourteen leaves and fourteen berries in a single spray, and three children working eleven hours a day are able to make sixty cents. These children from eight to ten years of age with an average work day of fifteen hours also manufacture garters, receiving five cents for one dozen pairs, the average daily output being five dozen pairs. Babies' crochet booties are made by children for which they are paid twenty cents a dozen pairs; possible output per hour, one pair; and the retail selling price of these booties is twenty-five cents a pair. Contrast these children as they labor day after day—and there are thousands of them—with your own children and their happiness and play time.

Not only do these long work-days bring about distressing conditions in the lives of these children, but also the home life and environment shorten very materially their lifetime. One block alone, bounded by Broadway, East Houston, Crosbey and Prince streets, contains seventy-seven factories and they employ 40,000 workers. The density of industry has created a congestion of population and traffic in nearby blocks unequaled anywhere. This part of New York City is the leading clothing-making center of the world, which accounts for the number of men and women and even little children constantly carrying large bundles of clothing through the streets of this section. The New York shop workers and home finishers alike feel that they must live close to the shops to save carfare. Hence hosts of them crowd the tenements of this section. In the single block designated one of every nine children born dies before it attains the age of five years. The death rate for all ages for the City of New York is 18.35 per thousand, and for those under five years it was 51.5 per thousand; but in this block it was 24.9 per thousand for all ages, and for those under five years it was 92.2 per thousand.

The seventeenth ward of Brooklyn, where the Greenpoint Church of Disciples is located, has a population of 89,000, with over 70 per cent foreigners, and the only hope of work in this section is through a well-equipped Institutional church building where the children of the immigrants may be taught sewing, dressmaking, domestic science and given an elementary education; and where the boys may be taught manual training and equipped for an honorable position in life. The American Christian Missionary Society has fully realized the needs of this work and launched a campaign for the raising of $60,000 to give the Greenpoint Mission an Institutional church equipment to meet the demand of this field, and to provide a suitable building for the Russian Mission which is now meeting in a rented basement.

Artificial flower-making at 20 cents a day. Youngest child working is five years old.

Getting There With the Message

An After-Vacation Determination

By William E. Barton

Sixteen years ago there came to Boston a company of Armenian refugees, fleeing from persecution. Among them was one family of patriarchial proportions—a father with five married daughters, their husbands and children. The daughters had married young, and their families were not small, and I am not sure how many there were altogether. The ship arrived Sunday morning, and one of my good members who was particularly interested in the Armenian massacres brought this family and others of their company to the church of which I was pastor. I think it was the very first building they entered on this side of the ocean. I remember how they looked that first morning, and how they participated in the service as best they could. I should think there were not less than forty of them, including this large family and their friends.

They united with that church. I remember their struggles in adjusting themselves to the new country, and they did well. They were honest, industrious, keen and alert, and they have thriven in their new country.

Among the grandchildren was a girl of five, who dimly remembers, but with affection, "my first minister." If you add together the five years which she saw in Turkey, and the sixteen since she came to America you can estimate her present age with reasonable accuracy. When you add to that the fact that she is a girl of pleasing face and pleasant disposition, that she has had the advantages of the Boston schools and speaks English quite as accurately as you do, and that Armenian young men are not blind, you may give a fairly good guess at the next thing I am about to tell you.

The pastor was away on his vacation. He is making a fine record in the church, and the people love him and are responding to his efforts. But he was away on his vacation, and the young people wanted to be married. And they sent for their "first minister," and he came in from his summer home and married them.

Perhaps you think it was a little home wedding. You may guess again. It was a church wedding, and not a small one. I have married many couples in that dear old church, and few if any of them with more of pomp and circumstance. The wedding was not in the vestry, but in the main auditorium, with the great organ booming the wedding march—Lohengrin for the processional and Mendelssohn for the recessional, just as it was when you were married. There were orange blossoms, and bridesmaids and ushers in evening dress, and a beautiful bride, and an embarrassed but resolute bridegroom, just as when you were married.

The Reception.

After it was over, there was a reception in the vestry. There were excellent refreshments, with just enough reminiscence of Turkey to be pleasant. There was an Armenian orchestra playing the Angel's Serenade, and that pretty thing from Pensutti, and playing them well. There was a soloist singing, "Then you'll remember me," and other airs from the Italian opera, and he was an Americanized Armenian like the rest.

This large family had been busy marrying. By the time they got together the relatives acquired in sixteen years of America and a thousand years in Turkey, there was no small crowd. And they were nice looking people.

The Smallest Flower-Girl.

